Here are 222 Members, whom for Eſtate the Earl of Clarendon aſſures us the King's Troop of Guards could buy. The King himſelf in all his Declarations upbraids them with the Paucity of their Number; whereas, allowing for Sickneſs and Abſence, here is a very great Majority of the Houſe of Commons, excluding the Deſerters and other great Offenders who had been regularly expell'd. Theſe all took the Covenant, which, ſays the Lord Clarendon, was illegal, wicked, and full of Perjury. And Mr. Archdeacon, who refines upon his Lordſhip, even in his Faults, adds, It ſhed more Blood than Henry VIII's ſix bloody Articles; it ruin'd Families infinitely beyond them; it deſtroy'd the Patrimony of the Church, and murder'd the King. I know very well the Reſpect that a Writer owes his Reader, and that he ought never to appear before him in Paſſion; but is it poſſible to write or read ſuch Traſh without Indignation? The Presbyterian Clergy, when the King was about to be try'd, proteſted againſt it, and urg'd the Obligation of this very Covenant, by which they were all ſworn to preſerve his Royal Perſon. Their Words are, It is contrary to the Solemn League and Covenant, from which Engagement we know not any Power on Earth able to abſolve us. We will now ſee what there was in this Covenant, which the King calls ſeditious, and the Oxford Men damnable, and which has been call'd more Names in Pulpits and Colleges than the Ribaldry of Billinſgate can furniſh one with.

The Preamble is the obligatory Part of the Oath, and it is then divided into ſix Articles.

The Firſt is, That the Covenanters will ſincerely, really and conſtantly, through the Grace of God, endeavour to preſerve the Reformation of Religion in England and Ireland in Doctrine, Worſhip, Diſcipline and Government, according to the Word of God, and the beſt Examples of the Reform'd Churches.

This is what the Earl of Clarendon terms Wickedneſs and Perjury.

The Second Article is, That they will in like manner, without Reſpect of Perſons, endeavour the Extirpation of Popery, of Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Chancellors, Commiſſaries, and all other Eccleſiaſtical Officers depending on the Hierarchy, and of all Superſtition, Hereſy, Schiſm, Profaneneſs,

A. D. 1643. faneneſs, and whatever ſhall be found to be contrary to ſound Doctrine and the Power of Godlineſs. More Perjury and Wickedneſs, according to Lord Clarendon.

The Third Article is, That they will with the ſame Zeal and Conſtancy endeavour with their Eſtates and Lives mutually to preſerve the Rights and Privileges of Parliaments, and the Liberties of the Kingdom, and to preſerve and defend the King's Majeſty's Perſon and Authority. Here the Wickedneſs and Perjury are intolerable, for they are ſo impious as to explain what they mean by the King's Authority, in the Preſervation and Defence of the True Religion and Liberties of the Kingdom. The Lord Clarendon and Mr. Archdeacon have not the leaſt Conception of any ſuch Authority; that the World may bear Witneſſes with our Conſciences of our Loyalty, and that we have no Thoughts or Intentions to diminiſh his Majeſty's juſt Power and Greatneſs. For the Power thoſe two Hiſtorians always intend is unjuſt and arbitrary.

The Fourth Article concerns one of thoſe Hiſtorians perſonally, That they will endeavour to bring all Malignants, Incendiaries and evil Counſellers to condign Puniſhment. The Parliament had declar'd Mr. Edward Hyde to be one of thoſe Malignants, and he could not therefore be much in Love with this Covenant, or think it any thing better than Perjury and Wickedneſs.

The Fifth Article is, To preſerve the Peace between England and Scotland, and puniſh all that oppoſe it.

The Sixth is a general Confirmation of all the reſt, And that they will never yield to a deteſtable Neutrality, but continue conſtant to their Covenant to their Lives End.

The King publiſh'd a Proclamation againſt taking the Covenant, but it was taken before that Proclamation came out by both Houſes of Parliament, the City of London, the Clergy, &c. And if they had not done it, one cannot ſuppoſe they would have been hinder'd by a Proclamation, which, like the Thunder of the Vatican, had of late loſt all Effect and Terror.

Soots. His Majeſty was very well inform'd of the Proceedings of the Scots towards aſſiſting the Parliament; and tho' he could not prevent the Meeting of the Eſtates at Edinburgh, yet when they were about raiſing an Army, he iſſu'd a Proclamation againſt it, and he might as ſoon have beaten the Army with a Proclamation as have hinder'd the raiſing it. He alſo permitted the Earl, whom he made Marquis of Montroſe, to invite the Marquis of Antrim, with 2000 Iriſh Rebels, into Scotland, and thoſe Papiſts under Calkito, Brother to Antrim, joining Montroſe, reacted the Maſſacre of Ireland, as the learned Lawyer informs us, by murdering Men, Women and Children, and added to the Cruelty the burning their Houſes and Habitations. Theſe Butchers were intended to make a Diverſion in that Kingdom as ſoon as the Scots Army enter'd England, and the King at the ſame Time drew off the beſt Engliſh Regiments from Ireland, as Sir William S. Leger's, Sir Michael Ernly's, Sir Richard Fleetwood's, Col. Myn's, Col. Monk's, Col. Warren's, by which Means the bloody-minded Rebels were left at Liberty to continue their horrid Butcherings, Burnings, Rapes and Robberies. We have mention'd the Care which the Parliament took of that Kingdom, by procuring Subſcriptions for vaſt Sums of Money for raiſing Forces to oppoſe thoſe Rebels, and relieve the Proteſtants; which Care of theirs had not the deſir'd Succeſs, by Reaſon of the Delays the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland met with in his Diſpatches from the Court, of which his Lordſhip complains in the Letter to the Earl of Northumberland; and it might well be ſo, when the Iriſh Rebels had Agents at Court, and a Ceſſation of Arms with them was in Treaty ſoon after the King ſet up his Standard. His Majeſty refus'd to paſs the Act to inforce the Payment of the Subſcription-Money for the Service of Ireland. That Act was ſent to him by Sir Robert King, William Jephſon, Eſq; and Arthur Hill, Eſq;. The Pretext was, that the Money would be employ'd againſt him. But the true Reaſon was probably that it would be employ'd againſt the Iriſh Papiſts then in Rebellion, tho' he would not allow them to be call'd Rebels; inſomuch that when Sir Edward Walker gave him his Manuſcript Memoirs, wherever the Term Rebels was us'd, he ſtruck it out, and with his own Hand wrote Iriſh, as A. Wood informs us. Mr. Jephſon ſeeing the Lord Dillon and the Lord Taaf, two Iriſh Papiſts, in high Favour with the Court at Oxford, told the Lord Falkland, Husb. p. then Secretary of State, " There were two Lords 247. " about the King, who to his Majeſty's great " Diſhonour, and the great Diſcouragement of " his good Subjects, did make uſe of his Ma- " jeſty's Name to encourage the Rebels; that " he had ſeen two Letters ſent by the Lord Dil- " lon and the Lord Taaf to the Lord Muskerry, " the chief Man in the Rebellion of Munſter, in- " timating, that tho' it did not ſtand with the " Conveniency of his Majeſty's Affairs to give " him publick Countenance, yet the King was " well pleas'd with what he had done, and " would in Time give him Thanks for it; which " Letters were alſo ſeen by the Lord Inchiqueen, " General of the Engliſh Forces in Munſter, and " by his Secretary, who took Copies of them;" which Mr. Jephſon ſaid ſhould be forthcoming, and my Lord Falkland cry'd, They deſerve to be hang'd. But the Matter was no further inquir'd into. On the contrary, their Negotiations in Favour of their Fellow-Rebels went on ſucceſsfully, as will be ſeen in the Sequel. Before we proceed in the Affairs of England, we will take a tranſient View of the Rebellion in Ireland, from its Beginning to this Time.

Ireland. The firſt Town the Rebels undertook to beſiege was Drogheda, which was bravely defended by the Governor Sir Henry Tichburn, the Lord Moore, young Sir John Borlace, and other gallant Officers; and after the Garriſon had been reduc'd to eat Horſes, Dogs, and Cats, the Lord Moore making a Sally with 400 Horſe, fell upon Sir Phelim Oneal, General of the Rebels, and put him to Flight; which ſo diſcourag'd the Iriſh, that they rais'd the Siege; after which Sir Henry Tichburn and the Lord Moore recover'd Dundalk. Sir Simon Harcourt, Colonel of the firſt Regiment that was ſent from England againſt the Iriſh Rebels, was kill'd before the Caſtle of Carrickmain, within four Miles of Dublin, as was alſo Major Bor; but their Men reveng'd their Death, ſtorm'd and enter'd the Caſtle, and put all the Iriſh to the Sword. In April 1642. the Marquis of Ormond march'd out of Dublin with 3000 Foot and 500 Horſe, moſt of them Troops ſent by the Parliament to the Aſſiſtance of the Proteſtants under Col. Monk, Sir Michael Ernly, Sir Richard Greenvile, and other good Officers. The Lord Ormond engag'd the Rebels at Kilruſh, and defeated them, tho' much above twice his Number, killing 700, among whom the Lord Dunboyn's Brother and the Lord Ikerin's Son were the Chief. Many Colonels and Captains fell on the Spot. In May Life Cromw. the Rebels held that great Council at Kilkenny, which Leti ſpeaks of and aſſerts that this Meeting

A. D. 1643. was with the King's Conſent. They took the Government of the Kingdom into their own Hands, as far as their Power extended, drawing up a Form of it, which was approv'd of by theſe Popiſh Biſhops; Hugh Archbiſhop of Armagh, David Biſhop of Oſſory, Emery Biſhop of Down and Connor, Thomas Archbiſhop of Caſhels, Boetius Biſhop of Elphin, John Biſhop of Clonfert, Malachy Archbiſhop of Tuam, Patrick Biſhop of Waterford, Roch Biſhop of Kildare, with ſome Deans, Abbots, Priors, and one Archdeacon John Bowick, who were all involv'd in the Rebellion and Maſſacre, and had the ſame Hands with which they abſolv'd and bleſs'd their Penitents, ſtain'd with the Blood of 200000 Innocents by Commiſſion, or Permiſſion; for the Pardon of which and all other Sins Pope Urban VIII. ſent them a Bull. The Delay of Relief to Ireland could not be avoided, by Reaſon of the Danger the Parliament was fallen into in England, which oblig'd them to provide for their own Defence in the firſt Place. If they could not defend themſelves, the Defence of the Proteſtants in Ireland muſt fall of courſe. They did however ſend them Supplies of Men, Money, Arms, and Ammunition, ſome of which Supplies were intercepted by the King's Forces, as particularly Arms and Clothes, which were ſeiz'd by them near Coventry. The Parliament in one of the Papers deliver'd by their Commiſſioners to the King's at Uxbridge, ſay, "Tho' the Com- "plaints from Ireland, and the great Extremi- "ties of the Proteſtants, have been procur'd and "increas'd by the Popiſh Party, yet earneſt En- "deavours have been us'd to lay the Blame and "Neglect therein upon the Two Houſes of Par- "liament, who have been ſo zealous for their Re- "lief, and whoſe only Care, under God, hath "been their Preſervation; and that in the Heat of "our miſerable Diſtractions, they have continu'd "their Supplies; and from their own great Want, "have not ſpar'd to afford our Brethren there "the Means of their Subſiſtence." Mr. Robert Goodwin and Mr. Robert Reynolds, two Members of the Houſe of Commons, were appointed to reſide at Dublin. With them went Colonel Tucker of London, afterwards kill'd at Newbury Fight. They carry'd over 20000 Pounds in Money, 300 Barrels of Powder, 10 Ton of Match, &c. The Lords Juſtices and Council receiv'd theſe Gentlemen with Reſpect, and they us'd their Endeavours to ſatisfy the Officers of the Army of the Care the Parliament took to make Proviſion of all Kinds for them. It is very obvious that the Reſidence of theſe two Deputies would be of good Uſe, not only to give the Two Houſes right Information of the State of Affairs in that Kingdom, but alſo to encourage the Officers and Soldiers by their Preſence. The King, who had other Service for the Army there, did not like this Deputation from the Parliament, and ſent Orders that the two Deputies ſhould not be admitted into the Council; ſo they return'd to England, and the Ceſſation with the Maſſacrers went on briskly.

Iriſh Biſhops in Rebellion.

The Marquis of Ormond, with 2500 Foot and 500 Horſe defeated an Army of the Rebels, 6000 Foot and 650 Horſe, in Roſs, kill'd 300, took Lieutenant-General Cullens and many Priſoners, with their Baggage and Ammunition; and ſoon after he receiv'd a Commiſſion from his Majeſty to treat with our Subjects who have taken Arms againſt us, and to agree with them upon a CESSATION. The rebellious Murderers are term'd Subjects, and ſpoken of with much Tenderneſs. The Lords and Commons, and the Proteſtant People of England, are Rebels, Traytors, and Devils, as far as the Malice and Inſolence of the Oxford Men could make them ſo. This pious Commiſſion was confirm'd a Week after by a ſecond Command, and follow'd with an Order to Sir John Borlace and Sir Henry Tichburn, Lords Juſtices, to agree to that Ceſſation, tho' contrary to the LAW OF THE LAND, THE KNOWN LAW OF THE LAND, to all LAWS of Nature and Nations, Divine and Humane. His Majeſty, ſays Mr. Acherley, laid aſide his Promiſes, to obſerve without Violation the LAWS paſſed in this Parliament, for by the Ceſſation with the REBELS the Security of the Adventurers was to be enervated and defeated. We have been often, and ſhall again and again be told he was fighting for the Laws, &c. There has not been, nor will be a Proclamation or Declaration but what is full of the LAWS, THE LAWS OF THE LAND, and the like Terms. The Council of Kilkenny appointed Nicholas Viſcount Gormanſton, Donnogh Viſcount Muskerry, Sir Lucas Dillon, Sir Robert Talbot, Tirlogh Oneale, Eſq; Geoffry Brown, Eſq; Ever Mac Gennis, Eſq; and John Walſh, Eſq; to treat with the Marquis of Ormond, who made no Scruple of entering into an Agreement with thoſe execrable Wretches, and concluded a Ceſſation the 15th of December, in the Articles of which thoſe deteſtable REBELS are ſtyl'd his Majeſty's Good Subjects. To make way for this wicked and infamous Treaty, Sir William Parſons, one of the Lords Juſtices, was turn'd out of his Place, as were alſo Sir John Temple Maſter of the Rolls, Sir Adam Loftus Under-Treaſurer of Ireland, and Sir Robert Meredith a Privy-Counſellor, for diſſwading the Ceſſation, as dangerous, ſcandalous and illegal. The Parliament of England publiſh'd a Declaration againſt it; the Proteſtants of Ireland oppoſed it with all the Vigour they were capable of; yet with the moſt confounding Confidence it is ſaid, the Ceſſation with the Maſſacrers was made for no other End than to ſave thoſe Proteſtants from Deſtruction; whereas in Truth it was made for no other End than to bring over the Forces the Parliament had rais'd and ſent to Ireland againſt the REBELS, and employ them againſt the Lords and Commons of England. This Deſign was ſo barefac'd, that it impos'd upon no Body, and only made the People ſhake their Heads in Pity of ſuch Counſels, which tending to the greateſt Evil, pretended to the greateſt Good. The Parliament ſay in their Declaration, "The Wants of the Army "were often repreſented and complain'd of, "whereby with much Craft a Ground was pre- "paring for the Pretext, wherewith they would "cover the Counſels of this Ceſſation, as if no- "thing had drawn it on but the extreme Wants "of their Armies; whereas it is evident that "the Reports of a Treaty have been in a great "Part the Cauſe of their Wants, for thereby the "Adventurers were diſhearten'd. Contributions "were ſtopp'd, and by the Admittance to Court "of the Negotiators of this Ceſſation, their "wicked Counſels have had that Influence as to "procure the Interceptions of much Proviſions "which were ſent for Ireland; and others com- "ing from thence with Commodities to exchange "for Victuals, have been taken not only by "Dunkirkers, having his Majeſty's Warrant, but "alſo by Engliſh Ships commanded by Sir John "Pennington under his Majeſty: The Parlia- "ment's Meſſengers, with Ordinances for Loans "and Contributions, have been taken and im- "priſon'd, their Money ſeiz'd, and not a Penny "either Contribution or Loan hath been ſuffer'd "to be ſent in for Ireland from thoſe Counties "which were under the Power of the King's "Army, Ceſſation with the REBELS.

A. D. 1643. " Army, while in the mean time the Houſes of " Parliament were ſtill procuring no contemptible " Aid and Relief for the diſtreſs'd Proteſtants in " that Kingdom." The Earl of Clarendon ſays, and Echard vouches for him that he is in the right, the Ceſſation was pious and juſt, and it is ſelf-evident that there is no Act of Injuſtice and Impiety to compare with it in all Story, the Blood of 200000 innocent Men, Women, and Children being ſacrific'd to it, and the Murderers were diſmiſs'd with Impunity.

Before this accurſt Treaty was concluded, St. Leger's and Myn's Regiments, already mention'd, were ſhipp'd for England, and landed at Briſtol, where the Lord Hopton receiv'd them under his Command, which, according to Acherley, proves that Ormond knew the REBELS would be obedient to the King's Inclinations. The other Regiments were ſent to Cheſter, and receiv'd and commanded by the Lord Byron. Before and after theſe came over, ſeveral Iriſh Rebels, Officers and Soldiers, as Lord Muskerry, Callagan o Callegan, and others, who were welcome to the Court at Oxford, in which City Ludlow ſaw ſome of them when he was there a Priſoner; and he informs us, they were ſent by the Papiſts in Rebellion to treat with the King about aſſiſting him againſt the Parliament.

Scots. The Committee of Eſtates in Scotland having ſummon'd all the Lords of the Council to take the Covenant, Duke Hamilton and ſome more refus'd it, for which their Goods were order'd to be ſeiz'd, their Rents to be gather'd, and their Perſons to be apprehended. The Duke and his Brother the Earl of Lanerick went to Oxford, where Montroſe had been before-hand, and reprenſented their temporiſing with the Covenanters as Treachery. The Deſign of the Hamiltonians, ſince they could not hinder the raiſing an Army for the Parliament, was to have as many Lords as would take Service in it be choſen from among the King's Friends, that when they were in England they might aſſume the Umpirage between both Parties, and join againſt that which would not conſent to an Accommodation. Theſe Counſels were condemn'd by Montroſe and the rigid Royaliſts as fraudulent; and the Queen hating Hamilton, ſo prepoſſeſs'd the King againſt him, that his Majeſty was deaf to his Reaſons. I know it will be thought to be taken from the ſcandalous Chronicle, but I have it from good and great Authority, that the Queen's Hatred to Hamilton was occaſion'd by his being a little too M. S. curious, and having made ſome ſuch Diſcovery as 'tis ſaid coſt Ovid a perpetual Baniſhment; that Hamilton had profeſs'd Gallantry at Court, where Jermin was preferr'd, and his Jealouſy making him very watchful, he ſaw what may be better imagin'd than expreſs'd. I know the Ground we walk on is ſlippery, and therefore leave it, tho' I do not want Supporters if I had Hamiltons a mind to go further. Neither of the Hamiltons were admitted to the King's Preſence. They were both impriſon'd as ſoon as they arriv'd, and ſeverely us'd. The Reſentment of the Court was puſh'd ſo far, that it was talk'd of trying them for their Lives. Lanerick's great Crime was the putting the King's Signet, of which he had the keeping as Secretary of State, to a Proclamation for a General Rendezvous of the Army that was to march into England. Thoſe Writers, M. S. as Echard and others of that Stamp, who ſpeak of Duke Hamilton's Correſpondence with the Kirk Men, had never Opportunities of informing themſelves of the Truth in doubtful Matters, or they might have known that the Duke was authoriz'd by King Charles I. to favour the Covenanters that he might find out their Deſigns, and he was now ſo treated, according to Echard, not for looking upon a Lady and her Lover, but for looking upon the Covenanters, and ſometimes ſitting with them. What he or his Originals ſpin ſo finely, as to the Duke's myſterious Conduct, is only one of thoſe Viſions with which their Heads are ſometimes giddy. Hamilton had been bred under a Mother, Lady Ann Cuningham, Daughter to the Earl of Glencairn, who was a zealous Presbyterian and Covenanter, and his Heart doubtleſs hung that Way, but his Ambition, and the Glory of being a Favourite, kept him from engaging further than conſiſted with the Character of a Courtier, and that was enough to render him ſuſpected, and Suſpicion enough to cauſe his Confinement, when the Court were ſo afraid of the Scots. The Marquis of Montroſe, and thoſe who came from Scotland, knew ſo much of his countenancing the Covenanters in Raiſing the Army intended for England, that it was reſolved to try him for High Treaſon. The Queen puſh'd on this Trial, and made ſo ſure of the Duke and the Earl of Lanerick's being found guilty, that when ſhe heard the latter had made his Eſcape, ſhe ſaid, Abercorn has miſt a Duke- Burnet. dom. The Lord Abercorn was a Papiſt, and next the two Brothers in Succeſſion to that Title. The Duke muſt have been try'd as Earl of Cambridge, and the Court found the Majority of their own Lords would not convict him, ſo they ſent him Priſoner to Pendennis, and afterwards to St. Michael's Mount in Cornwall, where he remain'd till that Place was ſurrender'd to the Parliament's Forces three Years after, and two Years after that he commanded an Army againſt the Parliament. The Matter of the Trial was puſh'd ſo far, that a Warrant was actually ſign'd by the King, and underſign'd by the King himſelf as a Secretary of State, for executing both Duke Hamilton and his Brother the Earl of Lanerick, which the Lords procur'd, and to have them try'd at a diſtance from Oxford, that if they were condemn'd Sentence might be executed before they could get a Pardon; for the Lords doubted not if they were pardoned they would have the King's Ear again, and then their Judges would have been infallibly ruin'd. The Lord Berkeley of Stratton ſhew'd Biſhop Burnet the original Warrant.

In the beginning of the Winter Prince Mau- Exeter taken for the King. rice came before Exeter with an Army, and laid Siege to it. The Earl of Stamford was in the City, but not with a ſufficient Strength to defend it a long Time. The Citizens, like the Inhabitants of other Cathedral Towns, being Enemies to thoſe who declar'd for the Proteſtant Religion, the Rights and Liberties of the People, and for bringing Delinquents to Juſtice. The Lord Stamford in the Articles of Surrender, committed a great Weakneſs and Error, by ſtipulating for a Pardon for himſelf, Sir George Chudleigh, Sir John Bampfield, Sir John Northcot, Sir Samuel Roberts, Sir Nicholas Martin, &c. Theſe Gentlemen could not be overſtock'd with Wiſdom, if they had been ſo long venturing their Lives and Fortunes in a Cauſe which they thought needed a Pardon. The Parliament was much diſguſted at it, and there was a Diſcourſe of Calling the Earl to an Account for that Article, and his whole Conduct in their Service, but nothing came of it.

The King having ſucceeded ſo ill in the Siege Digby's Plot againſt Glouceſter. of Glouceſter, an Attempt was made to get the City by Treaſon ſince it could not be got by Arms. The Lord Digby employ'd one Stamford, a Friend to Captain Backhouſe, who commanded a Company in Glouceſter, to enter into a Negotiation for betraying the Town. Backhouſe was offer'd 5000 Pounds, and actually received 200 Pounds. Several Letters paſt between

A. D. 1643. tween him and Stamford, which were all communicated to the Governor Colonel Maſſey by Backhouſe. A Cavalier Party of Horſe and Foot advanc'd as far as Laſſington Hill, in Expectation of hearing from Backhouſe that he was ready to admit them into the Place, but no News coming they miſtruſted Backhouſe had diſcover'd the Plot and retreated to Newent.

Col. Skippon takes Grafton. Major General Skippon with about 1000 Foot, a Party of Horſe, and four Pieces of Ordnance march'd from Newport Pagnel to Grafton Regis, where the King's Forces had a ſtrong Garriſon in a Houſe of the Lady Crane's. After three Days Siege the Governor Sir John Digby deſir'd a Parley, and agreed to ſurrender. The Garriſon were all made Priſoners, and among them Sir John Digby, Major Brookband, Captain Clarke, Captain Longfield, Captain Butler, 80 Troopers, 100 Foot, three Miniſters, and ſeveral Gentlemen that came thither Voluntiers. Major Brookband having formerly deſerted the Parliament's Service was try'd by a Council of War, condemn'd, and ſhot to Death about Chriſtmas.

Sir Alexander Carew's Deſign to betray Plymouth. The Parliament having received Information of a Correſpondence between Sir Alexander Carew, Governor of Plymouth, and Sir John Berkley, who commanded under Prince Maurice in Exeter, had taken Order for apprehending him, but the Soldiers of Plymouth Garriſon having Intimation of the Governor's Treachery ſeiz'd him, and ſent him up to London in September; when Colonel James Woodlace was appointed to command there in Chief: He embark'd at Portſmouth, together with Colonel Gould and 600 Soldiers to reinforce that Garriſon, and he had not been many Days at Plymouth before he ſurpriz'd the Royaliſts Guards at Howe, took Captain Slowly, an Enſign, and 52 Soldiers. The Garriſon had for ſome Time been blockt up by the Royaliſts, who took a Fort called Mount Stamford upon Articles. The Town was much ſtreighten'd and terrify'd by it. However, the Garriſon and Townſmen were ſo faithful to the Parliament that they all took an Oath to defend the Place to the utmoſt Extremity. The Gentlemen of the King's Party who lay before the Town ſent a Summons; which was ſign'd by John Digby, Thomas Baſſet, Peter Killegrew, John Wagſtaff, Jonathan Trelawny, R. Prideaux, John Arundel, Thomas Monk, William Arundel, John Downing, Thomas Stukely; with Offers of Pardon, and Security for Perſons and Eſtates, if the Mayor and Governor would ſurrender, but they return'd no Anſwer, and the Royaliſts continu'd the Siege, which was commanded by Prince Maurice, whoſe Forces took the Town Guard at Lazy Point, and in it 6 Pieces of Ordnance. There happen'd other Skirmiſhes, as that at Lypſon Work and Lare Point, in which 100 Cavaliers were driven into the Mud, and moſt of them either taken, ſtifled or drowned, though not without conſiderable Loſs to the Beſieg'd. The Batteries of the Beſiegers were ſo counterbatter'd from the Works that their Men could not ſtand to their Guns, and did little Execution, ſo that after a tedious, fruitleſs Siege, Prince Maurice was forc'd to abandon it. The Prince had taken Lyme and Dartmouth by the ſame Means as he hop'd to take Plymouth, the Treachery of thoſe that had the Keeping of them.

Mr. Pym's Death and Character. The greateſt Loſs the Parliament met with this Year, was by the Death of that great Senator and Patriot John Pym, Eſq; who for his eminent Qualities, Wiſdom, Courage, Learning, Zeal and Conſtancy, deſerv'd every Man's good Word. He had the Spirit of Cato, and the Eloquence of Tully. Curtius lov'd not his Country, nor Brutus Liberty better than Mr. Pym: He wore himſelf out in the Cauſe of both, and carry'd to his Grave, the Reſpect, Love and Eſteem of every good Engliſh Man, and good Proteſtant; yet the Picture the Earl of Clarendon has drawn of him is more ugly and deform'd than that of Cerberus. To crown it, he affirms Mr. Pym dy'd of the Lowſy Diſeaſe, which is well known to be as falſe as that he did die is true. Whitlocke tells us, The Multitude of Buſineſs and Cares ſo broke his Spirits, that it brought his Death. Ruſhworth ſpeaks of it thus, Whereas it is reported he died of that loathſome Diſeaſe, the ſame was not true, and for publick Satisfaction herein his Corpſe was expos'd to the View of many Hundreds. Ludlow ſays the ſame. And Echard owns, that the Abuſe on his Memory is not true, but the Lord Clarendon is poſitive in that falſe Abuſe againſt them all. A. D. 1643. Clarendon wrong.

We have mentioned the Ordinance for raiſing the general Contribution this Year, and there paſt another Ordinance for ſequeſtring the Eſtates of Delinquents, as were all who were then in Arms againſt the Parliament, againſt which the King, as uſual, publiſh'd a Proclamation, which had no more Effect than his offer of Pardon to the REBELS, now in Arms under the Earl of Eſſex, or any other Proclamations. There was one againſt the Oppreſſion of the Clergy, which was intended to prevent the Proceedings of the Committee for ejecting ſcandalous Miniſters; but they went on, and ſo did the Parliament notwithſtanding another Proclamation not to obey their Votes, Orders and Ordinances. This Proclamation had alſo an offer of Pardon in it, with the Exceptions already mention'd. Another Proclamation was publiſh'd at Oxford, forbidding People to trade with London, which had as much Effect as if it had forbidden them to eat and drink. Powerful Proclamations.

It is neceſſary for both Writer and Reader to diveſt themſelves of all Paſſions, and to write and read with the moſt determin'd Serenity of Mind, or 'tis impoſſible not to be ruffled at the following Incident, the moſt ſurprizing and terrifying they ever met with; though the bare telling it has theſe Effects, yet one cannot paſs it over without ſome Remark.

His Majeſty being ready to receive the Sacrament from the Hands of the Lord Archbiſhop Uſher, at Chriſt Church in Oxford, riſing up from his Knees, and beckoning to the Archbiſhop for a ſhort Forbearance, ſaid,

I thought to have remark'd on this aſtoniſhing Incident, but it will not bear it: There's the Fact; and the Reflection upon it is but too plain.

Judge Barkley fin'd.

In September this Year, that buſy Medler in the Ship Money Grievance, Judge Berkley, was fin'd 20,000 Pounds, to be incapacitated for Places and Honours, and impriſon'd in the Tower during Pleaſure. An Ordinance paſſed about the ſame Time for ſeizing the King and Queen's and Princes Revenues, and for appointing a Committee to raiſe Money for the Defence and Preſervation of the County of Northampton. King's Commiſſioners for Nottingham and Lincolnſhire.

As ſeveral Counties aſſociated for the Parliament, and had their Committees to manage the Affairs there: So did the King appoint Commiſſioners in thoſe Counties where his Power prevailed, as theſe for Nottinghamſhire and Lincolnſhire, out of which had been ſqueez'd 200000 Pounds by them, in little more than a Year. The Reader will better judge of it by comparing the Committee of the ſingle County of Northampton with the Commiſſioners of the two Counties of Lincoln and Nottingham.

Brook and Riley's Plot.

About the latter End of the Year there was diſcover'd a chimerical Deſign carry'd on by Sir Baſil Brook, Treaſurer for the Papiſts. One Read, an Officer among the Iriſh Rebels, taken Priſoner at Dublin, ſent to England and impriſon'd in the King's Bench, Thomas Vilet, a Goldſmith, his Fellow Priſoner, and Theophilus Riley, Scout Maſter General of the City Militia, by whoſe help Reed and Vilet got their Liberty by Exchange. The Deſign was to procure a Treaty between the King and the City, excluſive of the Parliament, the Preliminaries to ſecure the Proteſtant Religion, pay the publick Debts, and a general Pardon on both ſides. Digby, that eternal Contriver of fruitleſs Conſpiracies, manag'd this. Vilet, the broken Goldſmith, got to Oxford, and confer'd with the King; and when he return'd to London, diſcloſing the Matter to Sir David Watkins, the latter diſcover'd it to the Parliament, who order'd Brook and Riley to be committed cloſe Priſoners to the Tower, of which Iſaac Penington, Eſq; Lord Mayor, was appointed Governor, and Vilet to ſome other Priſon.

A. D. 1643.

I chuſe to begin the Year according to the common Computation, at the the firſt of January, for that it is not only more Hiſtorical, but is better known than the Computation from the 25th of March, which is more peculiar to Law and Traffick.

The Scots had all Things in Readineſs to enter England with the New Year. Their Army conſiſted of 18000 Foot, 3000 Horſe, and 600 Dragoons, commanded by Scots Army.

The Earl of Leven, General.
John Bayley, Lieutenant General.
David Leſley, Major General of the Horſe.
Sir Alexander Hamilton, General of the Artillery.

Colonels of Foot.

Earl of Caſſils, William Steuart, Earl of Lindſay, Sir Patrick Hepburne, Lord Cowper, Earl of Loudon, Lord Maitland, Sir David Home, Lord Levingſton, Earl of Buccleugh, James Rae, Earl of Dumfernlyn, Sir Alexander Hamilton, Lord Gask, Earl of Lothian, Douglas of Kelhead, Lord Dunhope, Maſter of Yeſter, Earl Marſhal, Arthur Eykin, Lord Sinclar.

Colonels of Horſe.

His Excellency the Earl of Leven, Major General David Leſley, Earl of Eglinton, Lord Kirkhubright, Earl of Dalhouſy, Lord Balcarras, Michael Welden, Lord Gordon, Marquiſs of Argyle.

Dragoons.

Colonel Freiſer.

Among the inferior Officers were ſeveral Perſons of Quality, as Sir George Douglas, Sir John Browne, Sir Robert Adaire, &c. The Army began their March in the Middle of January, when the Snow was Knee deep. The General was attended by Committees of the Engliſh and Scots Parliaments, and enter'd England the 19th of January, when the Committees wrote a Letter to Sir Thomas Glenham, Col. Gray, and the reſt of the Commanders and Gentlemen of the County of Northumberland, inviting them to concur with them in the Defence of the true reformed Religion, which was in danger by a Popiſh and Prelatical Faction. Sir Thomas Glenham, in his Anſwer declared, If they meant the Common Prayer, and the nine and thirty Articles by the true reform'd Religion, he and his Friends were ready to defend them with their Blood. How illuminated their Zeal was. Otherwiſe they would not ſuffer themſelves to be made Slaves without Oppoſition.

Newcaſtle ſummon'd.

On the 3d of February General Leven came before Newcaſtle, into which Place the Marquis of that Name had thrown himſelf; and the Committees ſent the Marquis of Argyle, and Sir William Armine, with a Summons to the Mayor and Aldermen, who anſwer'd, That the King's Governor being there, the Power was in him; but if he was not, they would venture their Lives and Fortunes for the King's Honour, to which they ſet their Names. John Morley, Mayor, Nicholas Cole, Thomas Lyddel, Lionel Maddiſon, Alexander Daviſon, Mark Milbank, Francis Bowes, Francis Anderſon, Henry Maddiſon, Ralph Cock, Leonard Carr, Robert Shaftoe, Cuthbert Car, Ralph Grey, John Emerſon, Dr. Rowcaſtle, Charles Clarke.

The Scots were not willing to waſte their Time before this Town: So they paſt the Tyne at

A. D. 1644. at Ovingham, Bydwell, and Altringham. From thence they march'd to the Darwent, and paſt that River at Ebcheſter. March the Second they paſt the River Weare near Lumley Caſtle, and on the Fourth enter'd Sunderland. The Marquis of Newcaſtle being join'd by Sir Marmaduke Langdale, Colonel Fenwick, and others, made up an Army of 14000 Horſe and Foot, with which he ſecur'd Durham. The Scots took South Shields, and Lieutenant Colonel Bellantine, of the General's Regiment, ſurpriz'd a Troop of the Marquiſſes Horſe at Cheſter on the Street, near which Place Newcaſtle drew up his Army, and the Scots did the like on a Hill towards the Sea: Both Armies fac'd each other, and there happen'd ſome Skirmiſhes with alternate Succeſs. The Marquis return'd to Durham, and the Scots march'd to Quarendon Hill within two Miles of it, where we muſt leave them awhile to ſee what paſſes at Oxford and Weſtminſter.

The Mongrel Parliament at Oxford. The King ſummon'd the Members of both Houſes of Parliament, as well thoſe who had been expell'd for Miſdemeanors as thoſe who out of Cowardice or Bigotry, had deſerted their Duty at Weſtminſter to meet him at Oxford, the 22d of January, to ſhew, as he ſaid in his Proclamation, how far the major Part of both Houſes were from approving of the Proceedings of the Lords and Commons at Weſtminſter, and in Order to this, there was a Meeting of 118 Members of the Houſe of Commons at Oxford, who were to let the World ſee they were the major Vote to 222, then aſſembled in St. Stephen's Chapel. The Lords at Oxford ſent a Letter to the Conſervators of the Peace in Scotland to proteſt againſt the Invitation made by the Parliament of England for the Scots Army to come to their Aſſiſtance, and the Conſervators of the Peace ſent them the ſolemn League and Covenant for an Anſwer.

Peers.

Prince Charles, Duke of York, Duke of Cumberland, Lord Littleton, C. S. Lord Cottington, L. H. T. Duke of Richmond, Marquis of Hertford, Earl of Lindſey, Earl of Dorſet, Earl of Shrewsbury, Earl of Bath, Earl of Southampton, Earl of Leiceſter, Earl of Carliſle, Earl of Briſtol, Earl of Berkſhire, Earl of Cleveland, Earl Rivers, Earl of Dover, Earl of Peterborough, Earl of Kingſton, Earl of Newport, Earl of Portland, Lord Viſcount Conway, Lord Digby, Lord Mowbray, Lord Went-worth, Lord Cromwel, Lord Rich, Lord Paget, Lord Chandos, Lord Howard of Charlton, Lord Lovelace, Lord Savile, Lord Mohun, Lord Dunſmore, Lord Piercy, Lord Seymour, Lord Wilmot, Lord Hatton, Lord Jermin, Lord Carrington.

I do not mention the other Members who were abſent in Service or with Leave, becauſe there were Members of the Houſe of Commons in the ſame Circumſtances on the Parliament ſide, and had all thoſe other Members been at Oxford, thoſe at Weſtminſter would have been a very great Majority. Some of the Oxford Members, as Digby, Jermyn, Piercy, lay under Impeachments of High Treaſon; very many of them had been regularly expell'd for Delinquency, or for Deſertion, or for being Monopolizers; and having no Seat in the other Senate, were glad to ſit in a Mongrel One. Had they been all together, they were but 175, and there were at Weſtminſter, as by our laſt Tale, 222; yet Echard, an admirable Teller, aſſures us the 175 were ſuperior in Number to the 222. It exceeded the other in Number. This Aſſembly conſiſting of upper and lower Houſes, had, with great Formality, their two Speakers; the Lord Littleton for the Lords, and Serjeant Evers for the Commons. The firſt Work they went upon, was to write a Letter to the Earl of Eſſex, to conjure him to procure a Treaty. But he excus'd himſelf, for that they had made no Addreſs to the two Houſes, whoſe Privileges he and his Army were reſolv'd to maintain at the Expence of their Blood. He alſo ſent them the ſolemn League and Covenant. They then got the Earl of Forth, the King's General, to write a Letter to the Earl of Eſſex, for a ſafe Conduct for two Gentlemen, whom the King would ſend to the Parliament concerning a Treaty. Eſſex anſwer'd, That when his Majeſty deſir'd a ſafe Conduct, he would ſhew his Willingneſs to further any Way that Happineſs which honeſt Men pray'd for; upon which, the King ſent a Meſſage to the two Houſes, with a Preamble that was ſure to render it ineffectual.

fectual, by the Advice of the Lords and Commons of Parliament aſſembled at Oxford, propoſing a Treaty; but the Parliament at Weſtminſter took Exceptions at his Majeſty's putting thoſe Deſerters, Delinquents, Monopolizers, and expell'd Men, on an equal Foot with themſelves; and if the Oxford Counſellers really intended Peace by this Step towards it, their Wiſdom did not appear much in ſtarting this Difficulty, which they could not but know, with a moderate Knowledge of Things, would never be gotten over. For the Parliament at Weſtminſter would as ſoon have treated with a Convocation as with the Aſſembly at Oxford, whoſe main Buſineſs was to raiſe Money if they could, tho' every Penny that was taken by Virtue of any Act of theirs was a downright Robbery. They endeavour'd to ſoften it by terming their Act a Letter, to which their two Speakers ſet their Hands. It was directed to ſuch Perſons as they thought were able and willing to lend a certain Sum mention'd in that Letter. They began with themſelves, and wrote Letters to one another, by which a conſiderable Sum of Money was collected, and 'tis certain the King had not without it been able to take the Field the next Campaign. They alſo laid an Exciſe upon Wine, Beer, Ale, Cyder, Perry, Grocery, Drugs, &c. as the Parliament had done by an Ordinance; which Exciſe was high enough, as

A. D. 1644.

I have not ſeen the Oxford Exciſe Act, but I ſuppoſe it to be very much like this, which the Cavaliers had exclaim'd againſt as a Burthen that in a Year or two would break all the Backs in England. The Mongrel Parliament voted alſo, that the Scots and all who aſſiſted them were TRAYTORS. They had got two Names amongſt them, REBELS and TRAYTORS, and they made the moſt they could of them. Tho' the King could not get them to vote that the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament at Weſtminſter were no Parliament, which he earneſtly preſs'd them to do; yet he got theſe Votes out of them, and the Reader will eaſily judge of what Uſe they were to him; That the Lords and Commons who conſented to the raiſing an Army under the Command of the Earl of Eſſex, are guilty of High Treaſon; That the Lords and Commons who conſented to the making of a new Great Seal are guilty of High Treaſon; That the Lords and Commons who invited in the Scots are guilty of High Treaſon; That the Lords and Commons ought to be proceeded againſt as TRAYTORS, and hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd; and, That all his Majeſty's Offers of Peace had been refus'd by them. The Two Houſes at Weſtminſter publiſh'd a Declaration, ſhewing why they could not accept of the Overtures made from Oxford for a Treaty, wherein they ſay, "As it hath always been and "ever ſhall be our earneſt and faithful Endea- "vours to put an End to the Troubles and dan- "gerous Diſtempers of this Kingdom, by a hap- "py and well-grounded Peace; ſo is it our ſet- "tled Reſolution, in Diſcharge of the Truſt re- "poſed in us, never to purchaſe it with the Loſs "and Ruin of our Religion and Liberty, having "before our Eyes the ſad Spectacle of that wo- "ful Kingdom of Ireland, which, after the ſpil- "ling of ſo much innocent Blood in Defence of "the Proteſtant Religion, is under the falſe "Gloſs of Peace, ſubjected and brought under "the Power of Popery and Superſtition; and "thoſe BLOODY REBELS having effected "their Ends in that Kingdom, are brought over "hither to bring us under the ſame Yoke, &c.

Iriſh Rebels come into England.

Some of thoſe bloody Rebels came from Ireland with Forces under Monk, who had engag'd in the Parliament Service againſt them, had now betray'd his Truſt, and brought over thoſe very Men he had commanded for the Parliament to fight againſt them. But we ſhall find that he betray'd every Power that employ'd him, except Cromwell. Monk made a Shew at firſt of being ſenſible of the Treachery of his quitting the Parliament's Service, and bringing over their own Soldiers to deſtroy them. The Marquis of Ormond was jealous of him, and put him in Priſon, but it was all Affectation. A ſhort Confinement conquer'd all his Scruples, and he with other Engliſh Officers, and 3 or 4000 Soldiers, landed at Cheſter, and join'd the Lord Byron's Army before Nantwich, which it had ſtorm'd in five ſeveral Places, but was beaten off with the Loſs of Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton and Captain Sandford, the Bully of Byron's Army, who ſent a Summons to the Townſmen, threatning Man, Woman and Child with Wounds and Death, Sword and Fire. The gallant Defence of the Town gave Sir Thomas Fairfax an Opportunity to come up to its Releaſe. On the 21ſt of January Sir Thomas began his March from Manchеſter with 2500 Foot and 1400 Horſe. The Enemy's Forces were about 3000 Foot and 1800 Horſe. Fairfax's Troops met a Party of theirs on Delamere Foreſt, and took 30 Priſoners. About ſix Miles further 200 of them maintain'd a Paſs, which Sir Thomas Fairfax's Men, commanded

As he was marching between Acton and Nantwyche, the Cavaliers paſs'd the River and fell upon his Rear, where were Col. Holland's and Col. Booth's Regiments, while another Body of the Enemy charg'd them in Front, and were oppos'd by Sir William Brereton and Col. Aſhton, who with Col. Lambert and Major Copley did very good Service. The Beſieg'd at the ſame Time made a Sally with 800 Men: The Horſe under Sir William Fairfax was expos'd to great Danger to encourage the Foot, tho' the Lanes were ſo narrow they could afford little Help. The Fight was very ſmart for above two Hours, and then the Royaliſts gave Ground. The Parliament's Forces drove their Foes to Acton Church, where they were caught as in a Trap, as Sir Thomas Fairfax wrote the Earl of Eſſex, and yielded themſelves Priſoners, with all their chief Officers, Arms, Colours, and Ammunition. Their Horſe retreated in better Order towards Cheſter without much Loſs. Of the Parliament's Forces not above 50 were ſlain; of the King's above 200; and the following Liſt of Priſoners was ſent to the Lord-General Eſſex: Major-General Gibſon, Sir Michael Ernley, Sir Richard Fleetwood, Col. Monk, Col. Warren, Sir Francis Butler Lieutenant-Colonel, Lieutenant-Colonel Gibbs an Iriſh REBEL, Major Hammond, 14 Captains, 20 Lieutenants, 26 Enſigns, 2 Cornets, 2 Muſter-Maſters, Sir Ralph Done, Mr. Sherlocke Chaplain to a Regiment, 41 Serjeants, 40 Drums, 4 Cannoneers, 22 Colours, 1500 Common Soldiers, 6 Pieces of Ordnance, whereof 5 Braſs, 20 Carriages, and ſeveral Waggons; 120 Women that follow'd the Camp, of whom many had long Knives, with which they were ſaid to have done Miſchief. Col. Monk and Col. Warren were ſent to Hull, and from thence to London, where they were impriſon'd in the Tower. Monk ſome Time after engag'd with the Parliament again, and after with Cromwell againſt them, and after that with the Parliament again, and after that with the King's Son againſt them, and had all this Treachery with as little Capacity as ever Man had who pretended to be a General and an Admiral.

More Iriſh Rebels in England.

Some of the Forces ſent from Ireland, with Iriſh Rebels among them, landed in the Weſt, and were order'd to reduce Warder Caſtle in Wiltſhire, where Major, afterwards General Ludlow commanded; but the Majority of theſe Forces had not forgot their Religion and their Country ſo ſhamefully as thoſe under Monk and others; for underſtanding that the Governor was a Proteſtant, and that his Government was to fall into the Hands of a Papiſt if the Caſtle was taken, they refus'd to be employ'd againſt it.

Langhorn Governor of Pembroke

Col. Rowland Langhorn, who was Governor of Pembroke for the Parliament, was very much ſtreighten'd by the Garriſons which the Earl of Carberry, his Majeſty's Lieutenant in that Part of South Wales, had put into Tenby and Haverford Weſt; but upon the Arrival of Capt. Swanley with a Squadron of Ships and Supplies of Ammunition, Langhorn taking with him 200 Seamen, ſally'd out of Pembroke, and took Stackpool Houſe, belonging to Mr. Lort, and garriſon'd it for the King. Some Days after he march'd to Treffloin, another garriſon'd Houſe, which he took, and in it about 40 Horſe and 150 Foot. He then paſs'd over to Rouſe Side, and attack'd the Fort at the Pill, in which he was aſſiſted by Capt. Swanley, upon the firing of whoſe Guns the Garriſon cry'd out Quarter. Here were taken Mr. John Barlow Maſter of the Ordnance, 5 Captains, 24 Pieces of Cannon, and 300 Common Soldiers. The Cloſe of this Expedition was merry, for Sir Henry Vaughan, who lay with 300 Horſe and Foot at Haverford Weſt, had order'd a ſtrict Watch for Intelligence if the Enemy approach'd nearer; and one Wheeler a Grazier having a Drove of Cattle feeding on the Hills, they happen'd in the Evening to graze ſomewhat nearer the Town, upon which the Strict Watch cry'd out The Roundheads are coming, and Sir Henry Vaughan and his Party immediately quitted the Town, leaving behind him 10 Pieces of Ordnance and Store of Proviſions, which Col. Langhorn took Poſſeſſion of, and a few Days after attack'd Tenby, which was bravely defended by Commiſſary Gwyn; but a great Part of the Town being beaten down by Langhorn's Battery, he ſtorm'd and took it, putting very few to the Sword; an Inſtance of Generoſity not to be met with on the Part of the Royaliſts in the whole Courſe of this unnatural War. Col. David Gwyn, High Sheriff of the County of Pembroke, and about 300 Soldiers, were made Priſoners, their Arms taken, and ſeveral Pieces of Ordnance. With the Reduction of this Town and Carew Caſtle, all Pembrokeſhire fell under the Command of the Parliament.

Colonel Haſtings in Leiceſterſhire carry'd on the War for the King with great Safety and Glory, for hearing that about 200 Miniſters, Church Wardens, and other Officers of that County, were repairing to Leiceſter to take the Covenant, he lay in wait for them about Ditton and Lutterworth, took near 100 of them, and carry'd them Priſoners to Hinckley, which the Garriſon of Leiceſter hearing of, a Party of them march'd away immediately, fell upon Haſtings's Quarters in the Night, routed his Soldiers, reſcu'd all the Miniſters and their Companions, took 50 of the Cavaliers, 150 Horſes, with ſome Arms and Ammunition. About the ſame Time, the latter end of March, there was an Action at Newark which was much for the King's Advantage. The Commiſſioners for Nottinghamſhire and Lincolnſhire before mention'd, ſent a Remonſtrance to Oxford of the Diſtreſs and Danger they and that Town were in, unleſs Relief was ſpeedily ſent them, who being Perſons of Condition, their Memorial had ſo much Weight as to procure Aſſiſtance under Prince Rupert, who came unexpectedly upon the Parliament's Forces before that Town, commanded by Sir John Meldrum, who had no Time to prepare to receive him, yet Colonel Roſiter, Major Lilburne, Captain Bethel and Captain Hunt, gallantly charg'd and routed the Prince's right Wing, led on by himſelf; others of Meldrum's Troops did not play their Parts ſo well, 500 of them deſerted the great Fort before they were aſſaulted, ſecur'd their Arms, and went away to Lincoln. Prince Rupert had double the Number of Meldrum's Men, and the latter could ill ſpare ſo great a Deſertion; by which Means his Highneſs became Maſter of that Fort, and of the Iſland, where he entrench'd himſelf, and cut off all Proviſions from coming to Meldrum, who had Newark Garriſon at his Back, and Prince Rupert's Army in Front. In this Extremity the brave Scot deſir'd a Parley, and Commiſſioners were appointed to treat on both ſides. For the Prince, Sir Richard Crane, and Sir William Neal: For Meldrum, Sir Michael Hubbard, and Sir John Palgrave, who agreed that all Cannon, Arms, and Ammunition, ſhould be deliver'd up, the Soldiers to march away with Swords, Colours and Drums; the Officers and their Servants with Arms, Bag and Baggage; but, contrary to the Articles, their Colours, Swords and Pikes were taken away, which is not worth taking Notice of: For thoſe who were fighting to enſlave their Country Men, could not ſcruple to plunder them. The Parliament loſt here 3000 Muskets, a great Quantity of Piſtols, 11 Braſs Guns, and two Mortar Pieces. In this little Victory there are two or three Falſities, as Mr. Archdeacon tells it. The Prince's Number was inferior to the Enemy's. Ruſhworth ſays, He had an Army of 7000 Men, and Meldrum not half that Number at the Time of raiſing the Siege. Meldrum's Men had Leave to lay down their Arms. The Officers and Servants had all their Arms. The Soldiers their Swords, Pikes, Colours and Drums. This Action, as great as it was, is much magnify'd by Echard, who ſeems to put it in Ballance with the two Victories obtain'd by Sir Thomas Fairfax, at Nantwyche and Selby, where Sir John Meldrum ſoon after reveng'd the Affront he met with at Newark.

Sir Thomas Fairfax defeats Col. Bellaſis at Selby.

Sir Thomas Fairfax having ſpent ſome Days before Latham Houſe in Lancaſhire, defended by the Counteſs of Derby, left Sir William Fairfax, Colonel Aſhton and Colonel Rigby, to carry on the Siege, and himſelf return'd to Yorkſhire to obſerve Colonel John Bellaſis, afterwards Lord Bellaſis, whom the Marquis of Newcaſtle had left to command in and about York, while himſelf attended the Motions of the Scots. After the Junction of Sir Thomas Fairfax's Troops with thoſe under the Lord Fairfax his Father, and ſome Forces brought him by Sir John Meldrum, they march'd to Selby, where they were inform'd Colonel Bellaſis lay with 1500 Horſe and 2000 Foot. The two Fairfax's had about the ſame Strength. Their forlorn Hope beat a Party of Bellaſis's Horſe, and follow'd them into Selby, and the next Day, April the 11th, the Lord Fairfax drew out his Army, and attack'd the Town in three Places, himſelf led one Diviſion, Sir John Meldrum a ſecond, about a Fortnight after his Retreat from Newark, and Lieutenant Colonel Needham the third, Sir Thomas Fairfax with the Horſe being ready to ſupport the Foot. The Cavaliers made a reſolute Defence for two Hours. At length the Lord Fairfax's Troops beat them from the Line, but could not advance further, becauſe of the Horſe within. Sir Thomas Fairfax got a Barricado open which let in his Horſe betwixt the Houſes and the River. Here he was encounter'd by the Enemy's Cavalry, who after one Charge fled over a Bridge of Boats to York, but another Party of Horſe came and charg'd Sir Thomas's Men again, himſelf was overthrown, being ſingle, a little before his Men, who preſently reliev'd him, and forc'd the Enemy back. Colonel Bellaſis was wounded and taken, and the Parliament's Foot entring now on all ſides, the Enemy was entirely defeated. As many as could do it ſav'd themſelves by flight, ſome towards Cawood, ſome towards Pontefract, and the reſt towards York. The Lord Fairfax's Troops purſu'd them every way, and that Lord ſent the Parliament the following Liſt of the Officers taken Priſoners; Colonel John Bellaſis, Sir John Ramſden, Colonel; Sir Thomas Strickland, Lieutenant Colonel Tyndal, Lieutenant Colonel Forbes, Major Hasketh, Major Wentworth, Major Sadlington, Major Rogers, Captain Horſefield, Captain Beverſham, Captain Waſhington, Captain Grimſton, Captain Cholmley, Captain Scudamore, Captain Williamſon, Captain Merrit, Captain Turner, Captain Skelton, Captain Briggs, Captain Waterhouſe, Captain Kirk, Captain Hardcaſtle, Captain Liſter, Captain Nevil, Captain Covers, Captain Lieutenant Salvyne, Captain Lieutenant Covers; Elias Walker, Maſter of the Magazine, Richard Ludlow, Provoſt Marſhal. Serjeants, Trumpets, Drums, four Braſs Ordnance, ſeven Barrels of Powder, 16 Bundles of Match, 2000 Arms, 1600 common Soldiers, many Ships and Boats in the River, all their Bag and Baggage. This Victory was a terrible Blow to the Marquis of Newcaſtle, who before was not ſtrong enough to make Head againſt the Scots, and being now apprehenſive that he might be ſhut up between the Scots Army, within two Miles of him, and the Fairfax's, he made haſte into York. The Earl of Leven fell on his Rear, kill'd ſeveral, and took 80 Priſoners. The Marquis arriv'd at York a Week after the Rout at Selby, and the next Day the Fairfax's join'd the Earl of Leven at Tadcaſter. But the Marquis having near 5000 Horſe with him, the two Armies when join'd were not ſufficient to inveſt the City of York on all Sides, and they durſt not divide themſelves, the Marquis of Newcaſtle's Horſe being ready to attack that part of them which ſhould be weakeſt on a Diviſion; Thus they were obliged to ſend for the Earl of Mancheſter and Lieutenant General Cromwel out of the aſſociated Counties. The Earl of Mancheſter in his March Northward took Lincoln by Storm, and in it Sir Francis Fane the Governor, Sir Charles Dallifon, Colonel Middlemore, Colonel Bandes, two Lieutenant Colonels, two Majors, 20 Captains, 700 private Soldiers, 100 Horſe, all their Arms and Ammunition, eight Pieces of Ordnance, with the Loſs only of eight Men. On the King's Side about 50 were kill'd, and the reſt crying out Quarter it was given them. Another generous Example, which was never given nor taken on the Part of the Enemy, whoſe Swords had never been drawn, had they been ſenſible of Principles truly generous, the Chief of which is, the Love of one's Country. The Earl of Mancheſter laid a Bridge of Boats over the River near Gainsborough, to hold Communication with the Lord Fairfax and General Leven, whom he join'd before York the 3d of June. The City being now inveſted, a Battery was rais'd near Walingate to play upon the Caſtle. On the 6th of June the Beſieg'd fir'd moſt Part of the Suburbs, and the Beſiegers endeavouring to quench the Fire a hot Skirmiſh enſu'd, but the latter ſucceeded not in it. There were daily ſuch Skirmiſhes between the Parties on both Sides. The Royaliſts were animated with Hopes of Relief, and the Parliament's Forces with Hopes of putting an End to the War in the North, if they could reduce York the Capital.

Prince Rupert after raiſing the Siege of Newark march'd into Shropſhire and took Longford Houſe, thence he came to Stopworth in Cheſhire, where the Parliament had a Garriſon, which he alſo reduc'd, and took ſome Hundreds of Priſoners, with their Arms and Ammunition. This Succeſs made the Beſiegers at Latham Houſe quit their Enterprize, and Prince Rupert with an Army of 10000 Men appear'd before Bolton, which Place he attack'd with his wonted Fury, and was repuls'd, but at a ſecond Attack a Party of his Horſe entring the Town at a Place call'd the private Akers, which Paſſage is ſuppos'd to have been betray'd to them, every one within the Town began to ſhift for himſelf, and the Prince's Troops ruſh'd in on all Quarters. By what follows out of Ruſhworth the Reader will ſee in what Manner the Cavaliers made War in Defence of the LAWS OF THE LAND, THE KNOWN LAWS OF THE LAND, &c. "They put about 1200 to the Sword, purſuing their Victory not only in the Town, but "ſome Miles round, in Out-houſes, Fields, "Highways and Woods, killing, deſtroying and "ſpoiling almoſt all they met, denying Quar-

" ter, and uſing other Violences, beſides totally " plundering the Town, and ſlaying four Mini- " ſters." This Maſſacre and Robbery were ſo infamous, that the Party who before was hated only, was now abhorr'd, and the Falſity with which Mr. Archdeacon excuſes this Butchery adds to the Guilt of it. The Garriſon had hang'd up one of the Prince's Captains. Mr. Ruſhworth inquir'd into this Matter, and ſays, As I find not this Captain's Name any where mention'd, ſo the other Party wholly deny'd that Part of the Story. Colonel Rigby, a Member of Parliament, who commanded in Bolton, eſcap'd with ſome ſcatter'd Forces to Bradford in Yorkſhire.

And Leverpool.

Prince Rupert advanc'd to Leverpool, where Colonel Moore was Governor, who finding it was not tenable againſt ſo great a Force, drew off his beſt Ordnance, Arms and Ammunition, and at laſt moſt Part of his Soldiers, and richeſt Goods in the Town, and ſafely conveyed them Aboard the Ships in the Poole, after which Prince Rupert's Men enter'd the Place, and being diſappointed of Plunder reveng'd themſelves upon the Inhabitants, and thoſe Soldiers who were left behind, whom they butcher'd. As the Prince march'd to Blackburn he was skirmiſh'd with by Colonel Shuttleworth, but his Power was too great for ſuch Oppoſition. His Army being increas'd to near 20000, with which he advanc'd to the Relief of the Marquis of Newcaſtle, who in the mean Time had amus'd the Parliament's Generals with a Treaty to ſurrender York upon Articles, till he had Advice of his Highneſs's Approach with ſo powerful an Army.

More Cruelty.

Commiſſioners were appointed on both Sides; for the Marquis of Newcaſtle were, the Lord Widdrington, Sir Thomas Glemham, Sir William Wentworth, Sir Richard Hutton, Sir Thomas Mottam, and Sir Robert Strickland. For General Leſley were appointed, the Earl of Lindſey, and the Lord Humbee. For the Lord Fairfax, were Sir William Fairfax, and Colonel White. For the Earl of Mancheſter, Colonel Ruſſel, and Colonel Hammond. A Ceſſation of Arms was agreed upon, and the Place of Treaty a Tent between two Forts. The Marquis's Commiſſioners would not accept of the Conditions offer'd by the Beſiegers, but behav'd with great Haughtineſs, and the Treaty was broken off. On the 16th of June Major General Crawford ſprung a Mine in the Earl of Leven's Attack, by which a Tower belonging to the Manor near Botham Bar was blown up, and in the Fall of it many Town's Men and Women kill'd; 200 Scots enter'd at the Breach and took the Manor, but the Garriſon taking the Alarm their Forces flock'd thither from all Parts and ſurrounded the Scots, who fought reſolutely as long as their Powder laſted, but were moſt of them kill'd or taken. There were only a few light Skirmiſhes afterwards, and on the firſt of July the three Generals drew off their Armies to meet and give Battle to Prince Rupert before his Conjunction with the Marquis and the Garriſon of York. Warwick, whoſe Invention is not ſo good as the Earl of Clarendon's, though his Will is, aſſures us they drew off, not with an Intention to fight him, but out of Fear, and to quit the Siege.

Battle of MARSTON Moor.

The Earls of Mancheſter and Leven, and the Lord Fairfax, march'd to Heſſam Moor, commonly call'd Marſton Moor, and drew up in Battalia, expecting the Prince would have made that his Way to York, but his Highneſs, intent on the Relief of the City, caus'd only a Party of his Horſe to face the Enemy on the Moor, near a Bridge, where they might at Pleaſure ſecure their Retreat, and in the mean Time himſelf, with about 200 Horſe march'd to York on the other Side of the River, but his Foot and Ordnance quarter'd that Night in the Foreſt of Gortrey, within five Miles of the City. The Parliamentarians finding themſelves diſappointed, and that the Prince had relieved York without fighting, quarter'd that Night at Long Marſton and the adjacent Towns, a great part of their Horſe ſtaying on the Moor. The next Day they reſolv'd to march to Tadcaſter, Cawood, and Selby, partly to poſſeſs the River, and thereby hinder him from furniſhing York with Proviſions out of the Eaſt Riding, and partly to obſtruct his March Southwards; his Highneſs having ſcarce any other Way left, the Earl of Denbigh, and the Lancaſhire Forces being advancing from the Weſt, whence he came.

A. D. 1644.

Accordingly on the 2d of July, the Parliament's Foot and Artillery were commanded to march towards Tadcaſter, the Scots in the Van, but before they were arriv'd within a Mile of that Town notice was given them, that the Prince with the Van of his Army was come upon Marſton Moor, and preſs'd cloſe upon their Rear as if his Reſolution was to draw on a Battle, upon which the Foot and Carriages were order'd back with all ſpeed. The Prince had poſſeſs'd himſelf of ſo much of the Moor, and advanc'd ſo near them, that they had not Room enough to draw up there, but were forc'd to do it in a large Field of Rye, which being a riſing Ground the Prince ſent a Party to hinder them of that Advantage, but they were beaten back, and the Corn Field poſſeſt by the Parliamentarians, whoſe Pioneers made way to get Ground whereon to extend the Wings of their Army, placing their right Wing juſt by Marſton Town ſide, the Town on their right Hand, fronting on the Eaſt, and as their Foot and Horſe came up form'd their Battalia and left Wing, endeavouring to gain as much of the left Point as they could; thus their Army at laſt fronted to the Moor, from Marſton to Topwith, a Mile and half in length. The Prince having part of his Foot behind Owſe, was as late as they before he had fully drawn up, but about three a Clock both Armies were pretty well form'd. When the Forces had join'd him out of York he had about 14000 Foot and 9000 Horſe, and 25 Pieces of Ordnance, himſelf led the right Wing, conſiſting of 100 Troops, in all 5000 Men; the left Wing of the Royaliſts was led by Sir Charles Lucas and Colonel Hurry, who had deſerted the Parliament's Service; their main Body was left to the Command of General Goring, Major General Porter, and Major General Tellier. The Marquis of Newcaſtle had no general Command, and it is certain he was againſt Fighting, as well as diſguſted at the Prince's coming, and Carriage towards him. He was of Opinion, not to give Battle till Colonel Clavering came up with 3000 Foot, which he expected every Day out of the North, but his Highneſs declar'd he had a Letter from the King, commanding him to fight the Enemy, and he would not miſs that Opportunity.

The Parliament's three Armies had been ſo diminiſh'd by Detachments into Lancaſhire, and other Counties, that when join'd they exceeded not the Prince's in Number, being about 24000 Men Horſe and Foot. The two Armies made near 50000 Men, and the Armies in the Weſt, the Midland Counties, the Forces in the Garriſons, and other Places, were at this Time computed to amount on both Sides to above 100000 Men. The right Wing of the Parliament's Horſe conſiſting of 80 Troops, was commanded

A. D. 1644. by Sir Thomas Fairfax, being his own, and part of the Scots Horſe; their Body was under the Command of the Earl of Leven and the Lord Fairfax, and their left Wing, conſiſting of about 70 Troops, was commanded by the Earl of Mancheſter and his Lieutenant General Cromwel. The Prince's Army extending farther in Front than the Parliament's, a Party of Scottiſh Dragoons were poſted there under the Command of Colonel Frizel. The Field Word given by the Prince was, God and the King; that of the Parliament's Army, God with us. The Connonading laſted two Hours without conſiderable Execution. About five a Clock there was a general Silence, each Side expecting who ſhould begin the Charge, there being a ſmall Ditch and a Bank between the two Armies, though their Wings were within Piſtol Shot. They continu'd ſo long in this Poſture that it was thought there would have been no Action that Night; but about ſeven a Clock the Parliament's Generals reſolv'd to fall on, and the Signal being given, the Earl of Mancheſter's Foot, and the Scots of the main Body advanc'd in a running March, ſoon made their way over the Ditch and Bank and gave a ſmart Charge. Prince Rupert with his Diviſion of Horſe advanc'd againſt that Diviſion of the Enemy where Cromwel was in Perſon, and put him hard to it, his Highneſs having with him his beſt Men, who charg'd Cromwel's both in Flank and Rear, and ſtood at Swords Point a pretty while hacking one another, but at laſt Cromwel broke through, and at the ſame Time the reſt of his Horſe of that Wing, and Major General Leſley's Regiments, which behav'd very well, had wholly broken all that right Wing of the Prince's, and were in Chaſe of them beyond their left Wing. Thus we ſee that it was not his Highneſs's too great Intrepidity and Precipitation here which loſt the Victory, as at Edge-hill and Naſeby. The Earl of Mancheſter's Foot on the right Hand of them went on by their Side almoſt as faſt as they, diſperſing and cutting down the Prince's Foot. The Marquis of Newcaſtle's Regiment of White Coats were almoſt wholly cut in pieces; they ſcorn'd to fly, and were ſlain in Rank and File. The reſt of that part of the Prince's Army which eſcap'd killing or being taken fled in Confuſion towards York.

But the Prince's left Wing under Colonel Hurry had better Succeſs, he did as much to the Parliament's Right, for though Sir Thomas Fairfax with 5 or 6 Troops charg'd through them, and went to their own left Wing, the reſt of his Forces were defeated; and the Lord Fairfax's Brigade being furiouſly attack'd, and at the ſame Time diſorder'd by ſome of Sir Thomas Fairfax's new rais'd Regiments, who wheel'd about, and being hotly purſu'd flying back upon them, and upon the Reſerve of the Scottiſh Foot, broke them wholly, and trod many of them under Foot. Thus their right Wing, and part of their main Body were routed, and fled out of the Field ſeveral Miles towards Tadcaſter and Cawood, giving out that all was loſt. The Royaliſts were purſuing, and juſt ready to ſeize all the Carriages, when Cromwel with his Horſe, and Mancheſter's Foot, came back from the Chace, and finding their Friends had in the mean Time been worſted, he advanc'd in good Order to a ſecond Charge with all the Prince's Horſe and Foot that had thus diſorder'd their right Wing and main Battle. The Royaliſts ſeeing them approach gave over the Purſuit, and prepar'd to receive them, both Sides not being a little ſurpriz'd to find they muſt fight the Battle over again, for a Victory which they each thought they had already gain'd; however, the Royaliſts march'd with great Reſolution down the Corn Field, the Face of the Fight being exactly chang'd, for now the King's Forces ſtood on the ſame Ground, and with the ſame Front which the Parliament's right Wing had before; and the Parliament's Forces on the ſame Ground, and with the ſame Front which the King's had before. The Fight being renew'd grew deſperate, but in fine, after the utmoſt Efforts of Strength and Courage on either Side, Victory wholly inclined to that of the Parliament, who before Night had clear'd the Field, and not only recover'd their Ordnance and Carriages, which were in ſo much Danger, but took all the Prince's Train of Artillery, and follow'd the Chaſe with great Slaughter within a Mile of York, into which City Prince Rupert got by the Goodneſs of his Horſe. Of the King's Forces above 4000 were ſlain, and 1500 taken Priſoners, among whom were Sir Charles Lucas, Major General Porter, Major General Tillier, Mr. Goring, Son to the Lord Goring, Colonel Ewre, Son to the Lord Ewre, Mr. Edward Talbot, Brother to the Earl of Shrewsbury, Major Vavaſor, the three latter Papiſts, and 100 other Officers, 10000 Arms, 100 Colours, and all their Bag and Baggage. Some of the Colours were ſent up to the Parliament by Captain Stewart, and among them were ſeveral with notable Devices and Motto's. I ſhall only mention one of them, to ſhew the good Will, good Senſe, and good Manners of the Cavaliers. In the middle of it was a Lion Couchant, and behind him a Maſtiff ſeeming to ſnatch at him; and in a Label from his Mouth was written KIMBOLTON, at his Feet little Beagles, and before their Mouths PYM, PYM, PYM, and out of the Lion's Mouth a Label with theſe Words, Quo uſque tandem abutere patientia noſtra. There was alſo taken the Marquis of Newcaſtle's Cabinet of Papers, where were found ſeveral Letters from Sir John Hotham, with the Marquis's Commiſſion of General, impowering him to raiſe Men and Money, and to make Knights. Of the Parliamentarians not above 300 were ſlain. This glorious Victory was owing chiefly to the Valour and Conduct of Lieutenant General Cromwel, who was wounded in the Neck, Sir Thomas Fairfax in the Face, Major Fairfax, of his own Regiment, received 30 Wounds, of which he died at York, and Sir Thomas's Brother, Mr. Charles Fairfax, being mortally wounded, died, and was bury'd at Marſton, Ætat. 23. Captain Micklewhaite, a very brave and honeſt Gentleman, was ſlain; as alſo a Lieutenant Colonel, whoſe Name is not remember'd, and a few other Officers. The very next Morning after the Battle the Marquis of Newcaſtle took a Reſolution to leave the Kingdom, as if he was afraid of that Liberty for which his Country Men were fighting. Having taken his Leave of Prince Rupert he was conducted by a Troop of Dragoons to Scarborough, where he embark'd aboard a Ship bound for Hamburgh, together with his two Sons, Charles Lord Viſcount Mansfield, Henry Lord Cavendiſh, Lord Falconbridge, Lord Widdrington, Earl of Elthyne, Earl of Carnwath, Sir Charles Cavendiſh his Brother, Dr. Bramhall, Biſhop of Londonderry, Sir William Carnaby, General King, Colonel Baſſet, Sir William Vavaſor, Sir Edward Widdrington, Sir Hugh Cholmley, Sir Francis Mackworth, Colonel Moxon, and about 80 other Perſons, who doubted not but that Battle was deciſive, and would put an End to the War, but the Earl of Eſſex's ill Succeſs in Cornwall continu'd it a Year longer, though the King's Condition grew every where worſe, and the Continuance of it only made more Sacrifices Marquis of Newcaſtle, and other Lords, leave England.

A. D. 1644. to Spiritual and Temporal Tyranny. Almoſt all the Accounts given of this Battle by the Earl of Clarendon, and the Writers on that Side are wrong, and a ſure Proof of it is, that they all differ from one another, and therefore cannot be right. The Earl of Clarendon, who is always foremoſt on thoſe Occaſions, ſays, the Scots General the Earl of Leven, ran away ſo far from the Place of Battle, that he was taken hold of by a Conſtable as if he had been a Vagabond. Orleans aſſures us, Prince Rupert, according to his uſual Cuſtom, purſu'd thoſe that fled too far, whereas Prince Rupert's Wing was the firſt part of the Royaliſt's Army that was routed and fled. Echard ſays, his Highneſs gave the Command of the right Wing to the Marquis of Newcaſtle, whereas he had no Command at all, but engag'd in the Battle as a Voluntier, if the Marquis's Wife, who wrote his Life, knew any Thing of the Matter, for ſhe tells us, His Friends advis'd him not to engage, the Command being taken from him. Salmonet ſays, He had no Command in the Army, and that after the Defeat Prince Rupert took away his Commiſſion. He is falſe as to the latter, for Newcaſtle refus'd to ſerve in England, and his Commiſſion was found in his Cabinet, and the Battle was actually begun before he came into the Field. Sanderſon affirms the Parliament Army had all the Choice of the Ground; and we have ſeen that they were ſo far from having ſuch Choice that they had no Ground at all till the Pioneers made it for them; but there is a Letter in Ruſhworth, written by a Gentleman Soldier on the ſame Side ſtill, which ſhews us what Sort of Accounts the Cavaliers gave of their Battles; 'tis from one Serjeant Francis, to his Father in Somerſetſhire.

Fol. 46.

Dear Father,

Ruſhw. p. 685. THESE are to ſignify unto you certain Occurrences here: Prince Rupert hath utterly defeated the bonny Scots and REBELS, that beſieged York; taken General Leſhley, and that ARCH-REBEL Sir Thomas Fairfax Priſoners; ſlain the Earl of Manchester, and taken 48 Pieces of Ordnance, and 10000 Arms, and not left them ſo much as a blue Bonnet. Time will not give me leave to ſend you the Particulars; but it is certify'd by an Expreſs, and under his Highneſs Prince Rupert's own Hand, and therefore you may credit it and make it known.

Yours, &c.

As wild as this Relation is, it is very common for their beſt Hiſtory Writers to aſſert Things on no better Authority, as I have prov'd and could further prove out of Clarendon and Echard.

Prince Rupert left Sir Thomas Glemham, Governor of York, and went to Burrough Bridge, where he rally'd his ſcatter'd Forces, join'd Col. Clavering, and thence march'd into Lancaſhire.

York ſurrender'd. The Parliament Army return'd to the Siege of York, July the 4th, and after having lain 11 Days before it, Sir Thomas Glemham ſurrender'd the City upon Articles. Then the Earl of Leven march'd with the Scots Army to Newcaſtle, which he took by Storm; and therein the Earl of Crawford, the Lord Maxwell, and Dr. Wiſhart, a Divine, who had been as reſolute as any one in Defence of the Town againſt the Parliament.

Earl of Manchester. The Lord Fairfax was made Governor of York, and the Earl of Mancheſter return'd to the aſſociated Counties, where he was commanded to recruit his Army. He ſent Lieut. Colonel Lilburn to take in Tickhill Caſtle, and Major General Crawford to reduce Sheffield Caſtle: Both which ſurrender'd on moderate Articles. Fretchville Houſe and Bolſover Caſtle follow'd their Example, as did alſo Wingfield Manor, and Welbeck Houſe, belonging to the Marquis of Newcaſtle. A. D. 1644.

Having taken a View of the War in the North, where the Diſpute is pretty well over, we muſt do the like by that in the South and Weſt.

Early in the Year the Earl of Forth and the Lord Hopton, with an Army of 13 or 14000 Men enter'd Hampſhire, with a Deſign to break the Strength of the Southern Aſſociation: This Army was met March the 29th, on Cheriton Down, near Allresford, by that of the Parliament, conſiſting of about 10000 Men under the Command of Sir William Waller, General, Sir William Balfour, Sir Arthur Haſlerigge, Sir Michael Liveſey, and Major General Browne. The Field Word of both Armies happen'd to be at firſt, the ſame, God with Us; which by ſome Accident being made known to Waller, he chang'd it on his Side to Jeſus help Us. Hopton's Forces for a while ſeem'd to have the better of it, but were afterwards totally routed. The Lord John Stuart, Brother to the Duke of Richmond, and Colonel Sandys were kill'd in the Fight, as were Sir John Smith, who recover'd the King's Standard at Edgehill, Colonel Richard Manning, Lieutenant Colonel Scot, Captain Rookwood, all Papiſts; Colonel Appleyard, Sir Edward Stawell, and Sir Henry Bard, lately come out of Ireland, were taken Priſoners; his Regiment and another newly come from that Kingdom were the firſt that ran away. The other Foot Regiments ſtood ſtoutly to it on both Sides, and came up to puſh of Pike. The London Regiments drove the Enemy from the Hedges, which they had lin'd with Musketeers, and gain'd the Paſſage to a Wood, which ſtood the Parliament's Forces in great ſtead. The Royaliſts were ſoon after put to an entire Rout, ſcarce ten of them being left together. Their General Forth, and the Lord Hopton fled to Baſing, Part of their Ordnance, their Arms, Bag and Baggage were left to the Parliament, 500 of them were ſlain in the Battle, and many more in the Purſuit, on the Parliament's Side about 100 were ſlain, Colonel Dalbier wounded, and Colonel Thompſon's Leg ſhot off. Amidſt the Rejoicings at Oxford for the raiſing the Siege of Newark, came Advice of this ſignal Defeat given the King's Forces, under his Captain General, which damp'd their Joy, and their glad Hearts became exceeding ſorrowful. Waller coming to Wincheſter had the Gates open'd to him: Sir William Balfour took Andover; and receiving Notice that the Lady Hopton was about Newbury, he ſent out a Party, who ſurpriz'd her, with two Coaches and 12 Horſes, and near 200 Perſons in Company. The Lady was diſmiſt, and ſent to Oxford, with her own Plate, Jewels and Baggage, but the reſt were made Prize.

Waller takes Wincheſter, and Lady Hopton.

On the 19th of April a Common Hall was holden in the City of London, to whom repair'd a Committee of both Houſes of Parliament, to ſtir up the City to contribute towards a ſpeedy recruiting the Armies. The Earl of Warwick ſaid, As you have been very forward and active in this Cauſe of God, and the publick Liberty, ſo you will not be wanting now in drawing your ſelves into the Field, with all our Armies, to defend God's Cauſe and the publick Liberty. The Cauſe againſt that of God and the publick Liberty, is that which has the Bleſſing of Mr. Archdeacon Echard, and the Panegyricks of the Earl of Clarendon. Sir Henry Vane told them, Their Troops had behav'd themſelves with ſo much Gallantry, that the Enemy apprehends no Forces like unto thoſe that were out of this City, being ing Perſons, who for Religion, for Faithfulneſs to the Cauſe, and for Publickneſs of Spirit to the Parliament, have ever ſhewn themſelves as firm and as forward as any whatſoever. The Earl of Eſſex, Lord General, ſaid, You have been inform'd of the Victory which God hath given Sir William Balfour and Sir William Waller. He put Sir William Balfour firſt, though Sir William Waller was General of that Army, and this is the beſt Proof we have of the Earl of Eſſex's Jealouſy of Waller's Greatneſs, and that Diſagreement between them, which ſometime after occaſion'd the dividing of their Forces, which expos'd the Earl of Eſſex to the Danger and Diſgrace he met with in Cornwall. He concluded, Whatſoever Forces you are pleas'd to draw out, I ſhall venture my Life with them, and be ready to give a quick End to this Cauſe. The Earl of Pembroke ended his Speech thus, I doubt not but your Care, and your Love, and your Fidelity, will make that Iſſue that will quit the Kingdom of all thoſe VILLAINS who have been the Cauſe of ſo much Effuſion of Blood. Theſe very Men, ſo term'd by his Lordſhip, are in the Earl of Clarendon's Hiſtory, the Pious, the Noble, the Warlike and Wiſe, to a Man.

Eſſex jealous of Waller.

Col. Hollis ſaid, The Parliament depend upon your Affections, and deſire you to offer your ſelves as one Man; for it is to no Purpoſe to go by little and little; it is but as a little Water thrown on the Fire, that does but enrage and will not quench it. The Recorder Glyn was the laſt who ſpoke; and all their Speeches had ſuch an Effect, that there were no leſs than 8400 Auxiliaries rais'd, half of which was ſent to Waller, and the other half join'd the Lord General's Army, which was ſpeedily recruited and rendezvouz'd at Beconsfield, from whence he march'd to Wickham the 14th of May, where we muſt leave him ſome Time to take a little Notice of what is done at London, where Archbiſhop Laud had been brought to his Trial, which we ſhall abridge after Pryn's Account of it.

Archbiſhop Laud's Trial.

This Trial commenc'd the 12th of March, when the Archbiſhop was brought to the Bar of the Houſe of Lords, where he kneel'd down, and was commanded to riſe by the Lord Grey of Werke, Speaker of that moſt Honourable Houſe, and then Mr. Serjeant Wylde, by Way of Introduction, related the Heads of his Offences. "If "all the Oppreſſions, all the pernicious Practices "and Machinations which have been in each "Time to ruinate our Religion, Laws and Li"berties, were loſt, I think here they might be "found and drawn out again to the Life. His "Faults are ſo wilful, ſo univerſal, ſo deſtruc"tive to the Laws of God and Man, ſo com"prehenſive of all the Evils and Miſeries which "now we ſuffer, the Sin would be upon our "own Heads if we ſhould not call for Ju"ſtice, &c." The Serjeant proceeds, "How "Churchmen in all Ages, as hath been obſerved, "ſhould come to be the archeſt Seedſmen of "Miſchief, and principal Actors in all the great "Diſtractions and Alterations that have happen'd, "is a Deſtiny that may ſeem ſtrange. But the "Reaſon is, ex bono Theologo malus Medicus. "Their intermeddling with temporal Things, "and Matters heterogenial to their Calling, "wherein God is pleas'd to ſmite them with "Blindneſs, and to infatuate their Counſels, "whereof a perfect Pattern we have in this "great Prelate, who, by abuſing his Profeſſion, "and making the Buſineſs of State the cuſtomary "Subject of all his Endeavours, became the "Author of all the illegal and tyrannical Pro"ceedings in the Star-Chamber and High Com"miſſion Court and other Courts, of all the In"novations in Doctrine and Diſcipline, of the "ſuppreſſing of godly Miniſters and Preaching, "of the advancing of others who were the Pro"moters of Popery and Arbitrary Power, and in"deed of all the Concuſſions and Diſtractions in "Church and State, whereby Religion hath been "juſtled out, Laws and Parliaments trodden "down under Contempt, &c." When the Serjeant had done, the Archbiſhop deſir'd Leave to ſpeak, and it being granted, he made a long premeditated Oration, which he had written in his Hand, of which nothing is more remarkable than this; I do here challenge whatſoever is between Heaven and Hell, that can be ſaid againſt me in Point of my Religion. What was ſaid againſt him, is by the Parliament in the firſt Article, That he hath traiterouſly endeavour'd to ſubvert God's True Religion by Law eſtabliſh'd in this Realm, and inſtead thereof to ſet up Popiſh Superſtition, which was prov'd upon him by Sir Nathaniel Brent Vicar-General to Archbiſhop Abbot, and Dr. Featly Houſhold Chaplain to that great Prelate, by whoſe Evidence it appear'd, that no Chapel in Rome could be more idolatrous than his at Lambeth, nor more full of offenſive Pictures and Images, taken from the Images and Pictures in the Maſs-Book. The like Idolatry and Superſtition were introduc'd by him in the King's Chapel, as was teſtify'd by Sir Henry Mildmay. His cauſing the Communion-Table to be remov'd to the Eaſt End of the Church, to be rail'd in and plac'd on an Aſcent for Adoration, was another Evidence of his Idolatry. But he deny'd, when Sir Nathaniel Brent made Oath to it that he had ever given Directions to him about it; Upon which Sir Nathaniel ſaid, My Lords, on the Oath I have taken, I receiv'd expreſs Command from the Archbiſhop himſelf to remove and rail in Communion-Tables in his Metropolitical Viſitation. The Archbiſhop reply'd, I proteſt I never gave him any, and I wonder Sir Nathaniel dares be ſo bold as to aſſert it upon Oath, ſince I can prove he formerly deny'd it. To this Sir Nathaniel anſwer'd, My Lords, ſince the Archbiſhop ſo confidently denies that he ever gave me any ſuch Directions, I ſhall humbly deſire that this Letter of his, ſent to me while I was viſiting at Maidſtone, may be read, for it will ſoon end the Controverſy. The Letter was as follows.

A. D. 1644.

Sir,

I Require you to command the Communion Table to be placed at the Eaſt or upper End of the Church, and there rail'd in; and that the Communicants there ſhall come up to the Rails to receive the bleſſed Sacrament; and the like you are requir'd to do in all Churches.

W. CANT.

This Letter being read, ſays my Author, much daunted and diſcredited the Archbiſhop in the Opinion of all the Auditors, he having nothing to reply but that he had forgotten it.

The impious Book of Sports on the Lord's Day was his own Work. Sir Nathaniel Brent prov'd that he gave him ſpecial Charge to ſuſpend Mr. Culmer, Mr. Players, Mr. Hieron, three eminent Miniſters in Kent, for not reading the ſaid wicked Book. Mr. Wilſon, another Miniſter, being conven'd before the Archbiſhop himſelf, and ask'd by him, Whether he had publickly read the Book of Sports in his Church? Upon his ſaying, No, the Archbiſhop ſaid, I ſuſpend you for ever from your Office and Benefice till you read it.

Another

A. D. 1644.

Another Instance of his Endeavours to introduce Popery, was his prosecuting Mr. Henry Gellibrand and his Servant William Beale, in the High Commission Court, for publishing an Almanack, in which the Names of the Popish Saints were left out, and some holy Martyrs put in their Place, according to Mr. Fox's Calendar. Mr. Gellibrand was Professor of the Mathematicks at Gresham College, and his Man Beale learn'd enough under him to compose an yearly Almanack for the Stationer's Company. Laud was then Bishop of London, and he carry'd on the Prosecution with great Violence; but Archbishop Abbot and the general Vote of the Commissioners acquitted Gellibrand; upon which the Bishop stood up in a Fury, and told the Court, The Queen her self sent for him, and specially complain'd to him against this Almanack, which gave great Offence to those of her Religion, and desir'd him to prosecute the Author of it, and suppress the Book; and therefore he hop'd he should not pass unpunish'd in that Court. However the Court acquitted him, and the Bishop in a great Rage said to Gellibrand, Sir, you have made a Faction in this Court, for which you ought to be punish'd; and know that you are not yet discharg'd hence; I will sit upon your Skirts, (a very common Menace with him) for I hear you keep Conventicles at Gresham College after your Lectures there. Accordingly he gave Order for a second Prosecution against him in the High Commission Court, which so affected that pious and learned Professor, that it threw him into a Fever, of which he dy'd. Here Laud frankly confesses he was an Agent for the Queen and her Papists, and it was too notorious to be controverted by Men of Integrity and Modesty.

One Dr. Pocklington, a Creature of his, publish'd a Book call'd Altare Christianum, wherein that Author stil'd those Popish Legendary Saints, left out by Mr. Fox in his Calendar, Holy Martyrs and Confessors of Jesus Christ, and reviles Mr. Fox's Protestant Martyrs as Traytors, Murderers, Rebels, Hereticks; which godly Book was found curiously bound and gilt in the Archbishop's Closet, being an acceptable Present from his Friend Pocklington.

His causing Auricular Confession to be preach'd up, with Pennance and Absolution, after the Romish manner, was too easily prov'd upon him to admit of the least Doubt, especially in the Case of Mr. Adams of Cambridge, who made a Sermon on Purpose to restore the Popish Confession and Absolution, in which he was oppos'd by those eminent Divines Dr. Ward, Dr. Brownrigge, Dr. Love, Dr. Beachcroft, Dr. Holdsworth, Dr. Bambridge, and encourag'd and supported by Dr. Cosins, Dr. Sterne, Dr. Collins, Dr. Smith, Dr. Cumber, Dr. Lany, Dr. Martin, Dr. Eden. But the major Vote was against Adams, and he was order'd to recant; which he was so far from submitting to, that he maintain'd Auricular Confession in his Act Questions. Thus we see how furiously they were driving towards Rome.

That the Doctrine of Transubstantiation was approv'd by Laud, appears by a Speech of his in the Star-Chamber. Purgatory, Processions, Oblations, Monkery, Prayers to the Virgin Mary, Ave's, Celibacy of Priests, Consecrations, Tapers, Candlesticks, Bowings, Altars, and the like, were fix'd upon him by a Cloud of Witnesses; as was his Hatred to the Reform'd Churches abroad and their Brethren in England, which appear'd to the Scandal of the Christian Church, in his opposing Contributions for the Maintenance of the exil'd Ministers, driven out of the Palatinate by the Spaniards. The Queen of Bohemia had sent one Mr. Ruly into England to promote that charitable Deed, and he procur'd a Patent by the Favour of the Lord-Keeper Coventry and Secretary Cooke; but when he carry'd it to Lambeth for the Archbishop's Licence to have it printed, Laud refus'd it, because it was said in the Patent, that the Charity was for Persons of the same Religion, which he would not allow, and complain'd of it to the King, who sent for the Lord-Keeper Coventry and Secretary Cooke, and they acquainted his Majesty, that the Patent was made Verbatim according to former Precedents, and it was now pass'd the Seal, and could not be alter'd. The King reply'd, It must be alter'd, for the Archbishop will have it so, and another must be drawn according to his Mind; which was done, and these Words left out, This Extremity is fallen upon them for their Sincerity and Constancy in the True Religion, which we together with them do profess, and which we are all bound in Conscience to maintain to the utmost of our Powers. Laud would not allow that we are all bound in Conscience to maintain the Reform'd Religion abroad, or indeed that it was the True Religion, for he struck out the Word True. To this he made a very weak Defence, and urg'd his Reason for leaving out those Words, because by the Religion of the Palatines the Pope was declar'd to be Antichrist, which had never been determin'd by any Council, whereas it was prov'd that the Synod of Gap in France, A. D. 1603. the Synod or Convocation of Ireland, A. D. 1615. the Synod and Parliament of England in the Act for the Subsidy of the Clergy, 3 Jac. define the Pope to be Antichrist. Most of his Defences are turn'd against him as directly as this, and there is no need of enlarging on the Second Branch of the Parliament's Charge touching his Endeavours to reconcile the Church of England to the Church of Rome, the First Branch including the Second; for by taiterously endeavouring to subvert the Protestant Religion, he of course endeavour'd to re-establish Popery.

As to State-Matters, the Charge against him was, That he hath traiterously endeavour'd to subvert the Fundamental Laws and Government of the Kingdom, and instead thereof to introduce an Arbitrary Power; which grand Article was spread into several Branches.

His traiterous Endeavours to subvert God's True Religion by Law establish'd.

His Usurpation of a Papal Power in Derogation of his Majesty's Royal Prerogative, and the Subjects Liberties.

His traiterous Endeavour to subvert the Rights of Parliament.

The first Part of the Evidence was manag'd by John Maynard, Esq; March 13th, 16th, 18th, and 28th: The Forenoons for the Evidence: The Afternoons for the Archbishop's Answers, and Mr. Maynard's Replies. The Second Part of the Evidence was manag'd by Robert Nicholas, Esq; which took up April 16th, May 4th and 16th. The third Part concerning Religion, was manag'd by John Wylde, Esq; Serjeant at Law, May 20, 27. June 6, 11, 17, 20 and 27th. and July 20 and 24th. The fourth and last Part of the Evidence was manag'd by Mr. Nicholas the 29th of July, and concluded the same Day.

The Archbishop had three Council allow'd him, Mr. Chute, Mr. Herne, and Mr. Hale, and after all the Evidence was given, and the Answers and Replies severally made, the Archbishop desir'd he might make a general Recapitulation of his whole Defence before the Lords, which accordingly he perform'd on the 2d of September.

A. D. 1644. To which Samuel Browne, Eſq; reply'd, and on the 11th of September ſumm'd up the principal Parts of the Evidence againſt him at the Lords Bar, anſwering the Archbiſhop's Allegations and Defences. This Browne was that eminent Lawyer afterwards Sir Samuel Browne, made a Judge of the Common Pleas by King Charles the Second, of whom Ruſhworth ſays, he invalidated all the Archbiſhop's Defences and Allegations. Now ſee how modeſt Mr. Echard repreſents it; The Innocence of this Prelate, and the Malice of his Enemies, are hardly to be match'd in any Account of primitive Perſecution. Prynne tamper'd with the Witneſſes. The Earl of Cork, Sir Nathaniel Brent, Sir Henry Mildmay, Captain Mildmay, Thomas Challoner, Eſq; Dr. Featly, were ſome of the Witneſſes with whom Echard tells us Mr. Prynne tamper'd; and then to ſhew he is as wiſe as modeſt, he adds, The Archbiſhop reckon'd it a particular Hardſhip, that a Man doubly ſtigmatiz'd, for which the Archbiſhop is now going to receive his Reward, ſhould be truſted with the Witneſſes and the Evidence againſt him. All the World knew that this imperious Prelate had ſpirited up the bloody Proſecution againſt Mr. Prynne, who was innocent in the Judgment of the whole Kingdom, except the corrupt Part of the Clergy and their Diſciples, and the Voice of his Country ſo far declar'd him innocent, as to return him a Member in all the ſucceeding Parliaments which were regularly choſen, and truſted him with every Thing that was dear to Engliſh Men. I take no Notice of the reſt of the Archbiſhop's Trial and Condemnation, as 'tis reported by Mr. Archdeacon, becauſe 'tis one continued Miſrepreſentation, and ſhall have recourſe to Ruſhworth, whoſe Sincerity has not yet been queſtion'd.

The Archbiſhop pray'd the Lords, that his Counſel might be heard in point of Law, and their Lordſhips conſented to it. The Managers for the Houſe of Commons deſir'd they might firſt have Notice, What Matter of Law the Archbiſhop's Counſel would inſiſt upon, which was, Whether in all, or any of the Articles charg'd againſt him, there was any Treaſon contain'd. Which was argu'd at the Lords Bar by John Herne, Eſq; as the Mouth of his Counſel, and reply'd unto by the Managers, October 11th.

The Commons finding their Proceedings, in Caſe of the Archbiſhop, met with new Difficulties daily in the Lords Houſe, and it having hung too long already, order'd an Ordinance to attaint him of High Treaſon upon the Evidence given againſt him. In purſuance of this Ordinance he was brought to their Bar, where Mr. Browne in his Preſence repeated that Evidence. In anſwer to which the Archbiſhop made a Speech of ſome Hours in length, which ſo little ſatisfy'd the Houſe, that they the ſame Day, Nov. the 11th, paſt the Ordinance for his Attainder with but one diſſenting Vote. They ſent it up to the Lords, and their Lordſhips voted that the Archbiſhop was guilty of the Charge as to Matters of Fact. They voted, that he had traiterouſly endeavour'd to ſubvert the Religion, Laws, Rights and Liberties of the Kingdom. That he had uſurp'd an arbitrary, tyrannical Power, in Derogation of that of the Sovereign, and they wanted only to be ſatisfy'd, whether all this was Treaſon. It was not indeed within the Statute of 25 Edward III. which determines the Government in the Perſon of the King, and all Treaſon within that Statute is only againſt his Perſon. But is it not within common Senſe to know that he who would deſtroy the Conſtitution, the Religion, Laws, Rights and Liberties of the People, is a Traytor in the worſt Interpretation of the Word. The Commons appointed a Committee to draw up Reaſons to ſatisfy the Lords therein, which were communicated at a Conference Jan. the 2d. by Mr. Serjeant Wylde, Mr. Browne, and Mr. Nicholas. But the wiſe Warwick aſſures us, they were all frivolous, and whoever has read his admirable Memoirs cannot but know how well able he was to diſtinguiſh between the Frivolous and the Important. On the 4th of Jan. the Lords paſt the Ordinance, by which the Archbiſhop was to ſuffer Death, as in Caſes of High Treaſon, to be drawn, hang'd and quarter'd. Mr. Archdeacon, who does really believe that the Poſterity of thoſe Lords would be aſham'd of what their Fathers had done againſt this Prelate, prints the Names of ſix of them, in which I ſhall imitate him, with a quite different Intention, Henry Earl of Kent, Philip Earl of Pembroke, William Earl of Salisbury, Oliver Earl of Bolingbroke, Lord North, Lord Grey of Werke.

A. D. 1644.

The Archbiſhop condemn'd to be drawn, hang'd and quarter'd.

The Lords, at a Conference with the Commons, inform'd them of a Letter and a Petition from the Archbiſhop, and a Pardon granted him by the King, which was drawn up at Oxford by Sir Edward Hyde, who, ſome ſay, drew up the Hiſtory of the Rebellion. This was like the reſt of the ſage Counſels at Oxford. What Heads muſt they have, who could think that a Piece of Paper would keep the Archbiſhop's Head upon his Shoulders after the Pains the two Houſes of Parliament had been at to condemn him. Thus as every one elſe believ'd it would be, 'twas over-rul'd and rejected. The Archbiſhop then petition'd, that if he muſt die, he might have Dr. Sterne, Dr. Heywood, Dr. Martin, three of his Chaplains, who, as it appears by his Trial, had been the principal Inſtruments of his Tyranny and Superſtition, to adminiſter Comfort to his Soul; and that he might not be Hang'd but be Beheaded, which the Commons agreed to but not without great Difficulty. The Parliament recommended two Divines, Mr. Marſhal and Mr. Palmer, to him, on this melancholy Occaſion; but as he never allow'd the Presbyterian Miniſters to be of the Chriſtian Religion in his Life-time, ſo he would not be pray'd for by them at his Death. He was brought to the Scaffold on Tower-hill the 10th of January, where he made a Sermon on that Text, Let us run with Patience, &c. wherein he endeavour'd to clear himſelf of the Charge againſt him, of a Deſign to introduce Popery. I have always, ſays he, liv'd in the Proteſtant Religion eſtabliſh'd by Law. He would have ſatisfy'd all that heard him, had he ſaid, I die in the true Proteſtant Reform'd Religion as it is now ſettled in Chriſtendom, according to the Word of God, the Practice of the Apoſtles, and the primitive Church of Chriſt. He did not forget the Churches Patrimony in his laſt Prayer. Which ſhews us what deep Impreſſion worldly Wealth had made on his Mind, ſo deep, that the Terrors of Death could not efface it. What Biſhop Burnet writes of him, gives one further Reaſon to believe he was far from being ſo heavenly minded as the Lord Clarendon, and his Shadow, Mr. Archdeacon, repreſent him. " He was a hot, indiſcreet " Man, eagerly purſuing ſome Matters that were " either inconſiderable or miſchievous, as the " Altar, the Walloon Churches, Book of Sports; " his Severity in the Star-Chamber and the High " Commiſſion Courts, was ſuch a viſible Ble- " miſh, that nothing but the Manner of his " Death could have rais'd his Character. His " Diary ſhews him to be an abject Fawner on " the Duke of Buckingham, and a ſuperſtitious " Re-

But is Beheaded.

A. D. 1644. " Regarder of Dreams. His Defence of himſelf, written with ſo much Care, is a very " weak Performance. Echard cries it up as a " wonderful Piece. He intended in that to make " an Appeal to the World. In moſt Particulars " he excuſes himſelf by this, That he was but " One of Many, who either in Council, Star- " Chamber, or High Commiſſion, voted illegal " Things.

Before I had ſeen Biſhop Burnet's Character of him, I could not but have Pity for ſo miſerable an Excuſe, when there was not a Man who ever heard of him, but knew he was the Contriver, Proſecutor, and Finiſher, of the illegal and inhumane Sentences in thoſe tyrannical Courts. The Biſhop of Sarum again,

" Now though this was true, that he was but " one, yet a chief Miniſter, in high Favour, de- " termines ſo much, that they are little better " than Machines acted by him. On other Occa- " ſions he ſays, the Things were prov'd by one " Witneſs only. Now how ſtrong ſoever this " Defence may be in Law, it is of no Force in " an Appeal to the World, for if a Thing is true, " it is no matter how full, or how defective the " Proof is. The Thing that gave me the ſtrong- " eſt Prejudice againſt him in that Book is, that " after he had ſeen the ill Effects of his violent " Counſels, and had been ſo long ſhut up, and " ſo long at leiſure to reflect on what had paſt in " the Hurry of Paſſion, in the Exaltation of his " Proſperity; he does not in any one Part of " that great Work acknowledge his own Errors, " nor mix in it any wiſe or pious Reflections on " the ill Uſage he met with, or the unhappy " Steps he had made.

In April this Year the Parliament remitted 66000 Pounds to the Forces in one Province of Ireland that ſtood out againſt the Iriſh Rebels, notwithſtanding the Ceſſation which his Majeſty had made with them, for the Preſervation of thoſe Proteſtants whom thoſe Rebels had not yet maſſacred.

Whitl. Eleff. Palat. His Serene Highneſs the Prince Elector Palatine wrote a Letter to the Parliament, Of the great Want he and his Mother were in, their Stipend from England being ſtopp'd. He bemoan'd the Courſes which his Brothers Prince RUPERT and Prince MAURICE took in fighting againſt them, and rejoiced to hear of the Covenant. For as the Royal Houſe of Bohemia always poſſeſs'd the Affections of the good People of England, who always made their Succeſſion to the Crown the Subject of their moſt zealous and devout Prayers, ſo have thoſe good People been ever in the beſt Wiſhes of that princely Family, the Conduct of Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice for a few Years only excepted.

Dutch Ambaſſadors. Some Weeks before this, Ambaſſadors from the States General of the United Provinces to the Parliament arriv'd at London, and were honourably receiv'd by the two Houſes and the City. They brought with them Letters from the Divines in thoſe Provinces to the Aſſembly at Weſtminſter, expreſſing their Satisfaction in the Parliament's and their Proceedings with reſpect to the Covenant, and deſiring there might be a Union of the Nations. Mr. Strickland, the Parliament's Miniſter at the Hague, having diſcover'd certain Engliſh Merchants, Webſter, Bainham, Manning, Ford, Yard, who had been aſſiſting in borrowing Money for the Queen on the Jewels, and buying Arms and Ammunition, they were voted Incendiaries and Enemies to the State. The Dutch Ambaſſadors had a publick Audience in the Houſe of Lords, and afterwards in the Houſe of Commons, where Chairs were ſet for them. They firſt were carry'd into the Inner Court of Wards, prepar'd for them as a Withdrawing Room; from thence they were conducted by the Serjeant at Arms with his Mace, and two Members of the Houſe were ſent to accompany them: When they came into the Parliament Houſe, the Speaker and all the Members ſtood up in their Places uncover'd, and the Ambaſſadors ſaluted them as they paſt by them. Then they ſate down in their Chairs, and the Members ſat down alſo. When the Ambaſſadors were cover'd the Speaker and the Houſe alſo cover'd. The former made a ſhort Speech of their Maſter's Affection to theſe Kingdoms, and their Deſire to mediate an Accord between the King and his Parliament. After their Speech was ended they return'd with the ſame Ceremonies as at their coming thither. During the Time of their being in the Houſe, there lay upon the Table in their View 48 Colours taken from the King's Forces at the Battle of Marſton Moor. The French Ambaſſador, Prince Harcourt, had no Negotiation with them, on Account of his refuſing to make his Addreſſes in the regular Stile and Manner.

A. D. 1644.

Before we follow the Parliament's Army into the Weſt, we muſt take a View of the King's Affairs, which were not in a very flouriſhing Condition. The Mungrel Parliament at Oxford were gone home. The Scots and the Parliament's Forces had ſhut up the Marquis of Newcaſtle in York, before Marſton More Fight: The Lord Hopton had been routed at Allresford, and the King had no conſiderable Body in the Field, but that under Prince Maurice, before Lyme. The King therefore draws his Troops out of his Garriſons to form an Army for himſelf; and the Queen being very near her Time left Oxford, April the 17th, to be deliver'd with more Quiet and Safety at Exeter. Queen leaves Oxford.

The Parliament had an Army of 10000 Horſe and Foot under Sir William Waller, about Farnham, and another of near the ſame Force at Reading, under the Earl of Eſſex, who took Poſſeſſion of Abington; and Sir Samuel Luke, Governor of Newport Pagnel, whom Butler abus'd by the Name of Hudibras, detach'd Captain Temple with a Party of Horſe, to obſerve the Motions of the Lord Hopton in his March from Abington to Worceſter. Temple was order'd not to engage, but being too forward, he fell upon three Troops of Hopton's Horſe at Iſlip, took 50 of them, a Captain and 17 Troopers, with ſome good Booty; but he was queſtion'd for not obeying Orders, and his good Service could ſcarce ſave him.

Had there been a right Underſtanding between Eſſex and Waller, there had now been an End put to the War, and they might have taken Oxford with the King in it, he having no Army to relieve him. But their Jealouſy of each other hinder'd their joining heartily in the ſame Service. Waller's Inſtructions were to reduce the Weſt, and Eſſex wanted that Commiſſion himſelf, by the Perſwaſion of the Lord Robarts, who aſſur'd him that upon his Appearance in Cornwall, the Royaliſts would throw down their Arms. But the Parliament order'd the two Generals to join their Armies, and beſiege Oxford, if the King was there; if not, to purſue him where-ever he was, and diſperſe his Forces, which were in no Condition to oppoſe them, what they were lay about Woodſtock, Kidlington, Bladon, Wolvercot. The Lord General Eſſex gain'd the Paſs at Ainſlow Bridge, and Waller that at Newbridge, the former with the Loſs of Captain Dean. Lieutenant Colonel Cunningham having one Arm ſhot off, held up the other and cry'd out, I have one yet left to fight for the Parliament. Eſſex near Oxford.

King leaves Oxford.

The King left Oxford the 3d of June, about 9 a-Clock at Night, and the next Morning muſter'd his Army at North Lye, about 3000 Foot and 4000 Horſe. From North Lye he march'd to Bourton on the Water, where he and the Prince lodg'd at Dr. Temple's, one of the Prince's Chaplains. From thence he march'd to Eveſham, and thence to Worceſter. Eſſex, upon Intelligence of the King's Departure, march'd to Chipping Norton; and Waller advanc'd to Stow on the Wold. By which Stations they entirely cut off the Communication between the King and Oxford; and his Majeſty had no Proſpect of any Help from the North. It was then debated in Parliament whether the Earl of Eſſex or Sir William Waller ſhould march into the Weſt to relieve Lyme, the Siege of which was preſt by Prince Maurice, recover Exeter and ſuccour Plymouth; but before their Pleaſure was known, the Earl of Eſſex had drawn off his Forces for his Weſtern March, and left Waller to purſue the King. Their Matters being thus ill concerted for Want of a good Underſtanding between thoſe two Generals; the Earl of Eſſex met with the greateſt Diſgrace that happen'd to the Parliament's Party in the whole War; and Waller, if he was not beaten, was render'd incapable of acting effectually againſt the King. The Earl of Eſſex was advanc'd as far as Saliſbury, when he receiv'd Orders to march back again towards Oxford, and only to ſend a Detachment to releive Lyme. Much better Counſel than he took. Waller was to follow that Detachment, and himſelf, with the main Army to purſue the King: But Eſſex continu'd his March Weſtward; and the two Houſes finding it was too late to prevent it, agreed to it. But this Conduct of theirs, and the Diſagreement between him and Waller, was good Cauſe for the Parliament to put their Armies on another Foot, and under other Command the next Year; and from this Time their very great Reverence to the Earl diminiſh'd, and their Affections cool'd.

Parliament Generals ill Conduct ſaves the King.

In the mean while Major General Browne had a Commiſſion granted him to command in Oxfordſhire, Berkſhire and Buckinghamſhire, and aſſiſt in reducing the King's Garriſons about Oxford. He had 4200 Men, moſt of them City Auxiliaries; as the Red Regiment, under Colonel Harſnet, the Blue under Colonel Pindar, and the White under Colonel Shepherd. While he was advancing towards Oxford, Sir William Waller took Sudely Caſtle, where Sir William Morton, high Sheriff of Glouceſterſhire, Lieutenant Colonel Pawyer, Major Oldham, Major Floyd, 5 Captains, 250 common Soldiers, were made Priſoners.

Waller takes Sudely Caſtle.

His Majeſty being inform'd that the Earl of Denbigh, Colonel Mytton, and Sir Thomas Middleton had beſieg'd Dudley Caſtle, in Staffordſhire, he ſent the Lord Wilmot, with the Earl of Northampton, and the Earl of Cleaveland's Brigade of Horſe, and 1000 Foot to raiſe the Siege. Wilmot charg'd the Parliament's Forlorn, under Mytton, with ſuch Fury that his Forces were all like to be cut off; and ſeveral Officers advis'd Denbigh not to quit his Trenches to relieve his Friends, but there to abide the Coming of the Royaliſts. The Earl, who had ſent out Mytton to meet them, reſolv'd, at all Ventures, to aſſiſt him, and drawing out his Troops, led them on in Perſon, giving the Cavaliers ſo ſmart a Charge, that he not only reliev'd his Friends, but repuls'd the King's Party.

Earl of Denbigh before Dudley Caſtle.

From Worceſter his Majeſty march'd to Bewdley, and Waller came to Bromeſgrave and Kidderminſter, within 2 Miles of him. He there expected to be join'd by Colonel Maſſey, and the Forces from Glouceſter, by the Earl of Denbigh, Sir Thomas Middleton, Colonel Mytton, Colonel Rigby, Sir William Brereton, with the Forces out of Lancaſhire, Cheſhire, Staffordſhire, which would have made a formidable Army. And the King being apprehenſive of their Junction, took a ſudden Reſolution to return to Oxford. To conceal his true Deſign he order'd ſome Troops of Horſe to ſhew themſelves along the Severne, towards Bridgnorth, as if he meant to march directly to Shrewsbury; upon which Waller diſlodg'd, and made all the Haſte he could to get before him; but his Majeſty ſuddenly turn'd back with his Foot, and came, before Night to Worceſter, whether his Horſe ſoon after follow'd, leaving Waller two Days March behind him. This was a fine Stroke of Military Politicks; and it is very plain that the King out general'd Sir William Waller. His Majeſty the next Day march'd to Eveſham, where he took ſome of the Magiſtrates, for having expreſt too much Kindneſs to the Parliament's Army, and proceeded to Broadway and Burford; from whence he ſent to Oxford for his Ordnance, Arms and Ammunition, and as many Men as could be ſpar'd. From Burford he came to Whitney, and quarter'd his Horſe in the Villages, near and upon the Banks of the River Thames, from Newbridge to Letchlade, where having ſtaid three Nights, he held a general Rendezvouz at Campsfield near Woodſtock; from whence he advanc'd to Buckingham, and thence made Incurſions into the neighbouring Parts, as Bedford, Dunſtable, Laiton, which much alarm'd the aſſociated Counties; and 'twas believ'd the King deſign'd to advance farther. This was one of the fineſt Marches and Expeditions during the whole Courſe of the War; and had it been againſt the common Enemy of Engliſhmen, would have deſerv'd more Praiſes than even the Earl of Clarendon could beſtow upon it. Waller perceiving himſelf dup'd, endeavour'd to recover by Speed what he had loſt by Incaution. He march'd from Wardſley, near Dudley to Saltwyche, thence to Perſhore, thence to Tewksbury, lately taken by Colonel Maſſey, thence to Stow, Shipſon upon Stoure, Banbury and Chipping Norton. The King hearing he was ſo cloſe to him, march'd from Buckingham to Brackley, and the next Day to Culworth. Waller quarter'd the ſame Night at Hanwell, and the next Day, the 28th of June, drew up his Forces in Battalia, under Crouch Hill, about half a Mile Weſt of Banbury. The King's Army fac'd him all Day: The River Charwell between them.

A. D. 1644.

Copredy Bridge Fight.

The next Morning Waller appear'd again in Battalia, and ſtood ſo, till perceiving his Majeſty drew off towards Daventry, leaving a Guard of Dragoons at Copredy Bridge, he commanded Lieutenant General Middleton with two Regiments of Horſe, and ſome Companies of Foot to fall upon his Rear. Middleton ſoon beat off the Guard at the Bridge, and marching over, charg'd the King's Forces, ſuppoſing them to be the Rear. But the Horſe having purſu'd them a while, found a greater Party of the Royaliſts yet behind them. The latter had got between the Bridge and the Foot, who came over with the Horſe. Theſe Cavaliers took ſeveral Pieces of Ordnance which were brought over the Bridge, and not ſufficiently guarded; ſo that the Parliamentarians could not make their Way back without great Loſs and Difficulty, but at laſt they forc'd it; the Bridge being made good and ſecur'd for their Retreat, by the Regiments of the Tower Hamlets: The Service was very hot,

while

A. D. 1644. while it laſted. On the King's Side were ſlain two Kentiſh Knights, Sir William Boteler, and Sir William Clarke. The Lord Wilmot was wounded and taken Priſoner, but reſcu'd by Sir Frederick Cornwallis, and Mr. Robert Howard, who was Knighted for it. On the Parliament's ſide Colonel Weems, a Scots Officer, General of the Artillery, was taken Priſoner; as alſo Lieutenant Colonel Baker of Sir William Waller's Regiment, Lieutenant Colonel Baines, and ſeveral Officers; Colonel Middleton was diſmounted amongſt the King's Forces, of whom one taking him for a Commander of theirs, mounted him again, and bad him make haſte and kill a Roundhead. The Royaliſts, ſays Ruſhworth, gave out that they loſt but 14 private Soldiers. Echard, who writes after the very worſt of thoſe Royaliſts, affirms there were but 14 common Soldiers kill'd on the King's Side. Ruſhworth aſſures us there were 100 kill'd, and 60 taken. Waller maintain'd the Bridge, and kept his Men drawn up on the other Side, both Armies facing one another the reſt of that Day, and the Cannon play'd on both of them. In the Night they alarm'd each other, but little Execution was done; and in the Morning the King's Army being drawn off, Waller march'd over Copredy Bridge to Towceſter. Echard's Hiſtory of this Engagement is extremely merry: Waller was defeated; Waller was routed; Waller quitted the Ground; ſo many Soldiers ran away from him that the King was prevail'd with to ſend a Pardon to the reſt of them, notwithſtanding theſe Pardons had never any Effect or were more minded than old Almanacks. Sir Edward Walker, Garter King at Arms, was to carry this Pardon; but Walker would not ſtir till a Trumpet had been ſent for a ſafe Conduct; and Waller ſaid he had no Power to receive any Meſſage from the King without Conſent of Parliament. The City Regiments, after the Skirmiſh at Copredy Bridge, return'd to London to be recruited, and Waller following them was receiv'd more like a General who had obtain'd a Victory, than one who had been ſo ſhamefully beaten as Mr. Archdeacon repreſents it.

Lyme reliev'd. Dorcheſter and Weymouth taken.

Before the Earl of Eſſex could reach Lyme that Town had been reliev'd by the Earl of Warwick, and the Fleet; Eſſex detach'd Sir William Balfour for that Service, and in his March took Dorcheſter, as Sir William did Weymouth, where the Lord General came the 19th of June; and the Earl of Warwick landing there, they had a Conference about the Operations of the Campaign.

Parliament and Eſſex diſagree.

The Jealouſies and Miſapprehenſions increas'd between the Parliament and their General Eſſex: The latter preſt for Money for his Army, and it was ſuggeſted, as if more Care was taken of ſupplying Waller than him. On the other hand, ſome of the Members ſeem'd to diſapprove of his Conduct

His March into the Weſt. in marching into the Weſt, alledging Lyme might as well have been reliev'd by a Party of Horſe, without carrying the whole Army ſo far: To which the Earl anſwer'd pretty warmly, concluding one of his Letters thus; Your innocent though ſuſpected Servant.

On the 26th of June, Eſſex having ſummon'd Wareham in vain, advanc'd to Chard in Somerſetſhire, where he receiv'd a Meſſage from the Queen, who 10 Days before had been deliver'd Princeſs Henrietta Maria born. of a Daughter, the Princeſs Henrietta Maria, at Exeter, ſhe who was afterwards the beautiful Dutcheſs of Orleans; 'twas to deſire a ſafe Conduct to Bath for the Recovery of her Health; and afterwards by another Meſſage, ſhe deſir'd a ſafe Conduct for Briſtol, to which he return'd Anſwer to this Effect; That if her Majeſty pleas'd, he would not only give her a ſafe Conduct, but wait upon her himſelf to London, where ſhe might have the beſt Advice and Means for reſtoring her Health; but as for either of the other Places, he could not obey her Majeſty's Deſire without Directions from the Parliament: Upon which her Majeſty not judging her Perſon ſafe at Exeter, as ſoon as ſhe was in a Condition to travel, remov'd from thence on Sunday the 14th of July, and took Shipping at Falmouth for France, her Month being juſt up. The Earl of Warwick had order'd ſeveral Ships to attend at Torbay, to intercept and hinder her Paſſage; yet her Majeſty, with a Flemiſh Man of War and 10 other Ships, ventur'd out, and by the Advantage of the Wind avoided any Annoyance from the Parliament's Fleet, which however purſu'd with all the Sail they could make; and one Frigat came up and diſcharg'd ſeveral Shot at the Ships under Convoy of the Flemiſh Man of War; but the Queen's Ship being freſh and clean, out ſail'd the Parliament's, and her Majeſty landed ſafe at Breſt, never ſeeing England again till after the Reſtoration.

A. D. 1644. Queen leaves England.

From Chard the Earl of Eſſex march'd to Tiverton, where he heard that Prince Maurice having ſent a Party to Barnſtaple, the Town ſhut their Gates againſt them, and ſlew ſeveral of them. Upon this the Earl diſpatch'd the Lord Robarts, with a ſtrong Party, to ſecure and ſettle the Town. Here was one Captain Howard, who had been formerly Lieutenant to Captain Pym, in the Parliament's Service, which he deſerted, and carry'd off with him 19 Horſe, for which he was now try'd before a Council of War, condemn'd and executed: In Revenge of whoſe Death, Sir John Berkley, Governor of Exeter, having in Cuſtody one Captain Turpin, a Sea Commander, who attempted to relieve that City when the Earl of Stamford was beſieg'd in it, and for the ſame being indicted, was condemn'd, but hitherto repriev'd, he hang'd him up by Command of Prince Maurice. The Parliament took this Man's Death very ill, alledging his Caſe was quite different from Howard's, the latter being a Run-away, the former a fair Priſoner of War; and therefore having Serjeant Glanville in their Cuſtody, who ſat on the Bench when Turpin was condemn'd, they order'd him and the other Judges, Heath, Foſter and Banks, to be impeach'd of High Treaſon, July the 22d. This Buſineſs and the hanging of 12 of the Parliament's Party, ſaid to be Clothiers, ſoon after at Woodhouſe in Wiltſhire, gave occaſion for preparing and haſtning the Ordinance for erecting a Court Martial. The Jargon of levying Arms againſt the King, two Years after the King had levy'd Arms againſt the Parliament is ſo abſurd, that nothing but the laudable Clemency of the two Houſes could have ſav'd Glanville from the Gallows, for having been acceſſary to the Murder of Turpin. Indeed the Creatures of the Court, in this and the following Reigns, till the Revolution, ſhew'd a ſtrong Appetite to hanging, and carryed their Point more by the Halter than by Reaſon and Juſtice.

Capt Turpin hang'd

About this Time Sir Robert Pye and Colonel Blake, afterwards the victorious Admiral, took Taunton Dean; and the Parliament Convoy, who went with the Cavalier Soldiers to Bridgwater, had Serjeant Francis's Letter about Prince Rupert's Victory at Marſton Moor, ſhewn them to mortify them; and though that Letter is one Lye from the Beginning to the End, yet it is better grounded than moſt Facts in their Hiſtories; for after the Royaliſts had worſted one Wing of the Parliamentarians, they Taunton taken by Blake.

A. D. 1644. immediately dispatch'd an Express to Oxford of a compleat Victory; and there was ringing of Bells upon it, and other Demonstrations of Joy; which News was carry'd as far as Bristol before that of Prince Rupert's Rout arriv'd there. Serjeant Francis's Letter is already inserted, and was so thoroughly believ'd that the Lord General Essex having receiv'd a Copy of the three Generals Relation of the Princes Defeat, he sent it by a Trumpet to Sir John Berkley, offering him a Sort of Bett that if Serjeant Francis's Letter was true, he would engage his Honour to deliver up Weymouth and Melcomb, if Sir John would engage to surrender Exeter, in Case the Account in the three Generals Letter was true: To which Sir John return'd an Answer so modest and handsome, that it is worth reading.

My Lord,

IN the Posture we are, 'tis very possible I may be deceiv'd in our Intelligence, and considering the Practice of some, not impossible but your Lordship may be. I am confident your Lordship hath no Intention to abuse the People. I am most sure I have not. It must be acknowledg'd your News is very unpleasant to Men of my Affection, and will not prove very prosperous to those of your Lordship's, if I am not mistaken in them, or my Arguments of them. I still incline to believe our own Account, but not to that degree of Difference as there is between Exeter and Weymouth; however, I shall receive the Assurance of either with the most equal Mind, and in the worst Event shall never want the Satisfaction of having discharg'd my Duty to my Country with an Heart as untouch'd of private Ends and Respects as any Man living, and as much

Your loving humble Servant,
John Berkley.

Irish Rebels in the King's Army taken and hang'd.

On the 11th of July Colonel Obrian sent out a Party of 240 Horse and Foot from Wareham to Dorchester, who fac'd the Town several Hours, but the Inhabitants stood on their Guard, and sent to the Parliament's Garrisons at Alderbury and Weymouth for Relief; accordingly Colonel Sydenham, Major Sydenham, and other Officers, came thither with some Forces, fell upon the Cavaliers, put them to flight, and pursu'd them almost to Wareham, slew 12, and took 60 Horses, and 160 Prisoners, of whom 8 being Irish Rebels, seven of them were immediately hang'd, and the eighth was spar'd for hanging his Fellows. It was said to be in Revenge of this that the Cavaliers hang'd up the twelve Wiltshire Clothiers. Colonel Obrian was Brother to the Earl of Inchiqueen, and hearing not long after that his Brother had declar'd for the Parliament, in Oppositon to the odious Cessation with the horrid Massacrers in Ireland, he quitted the Service he was in, and return'd to Ireland to serve under his Brother.

The King after the Action at Copredy Bridge intended to march Northwards and join Prince Rupert, but hearing of that Prince's Defeat he thought fit to change his Measures and go into the West, Waller being in no Condition to pursue him. From Evesham the Marquis of Hertford sent a Copy of a Message to the Earl of Essex, who communicated it to the Parliament, and 'twas intimated that the French Agent had the Original to deliver. A prepostrous Way of doing Business, to send a Copy only of a Message, and to leave the Original to be deliver'd by a Person who had render'd himself obnoxious to them, with this Error in the Address, To the Lords and Commons of Parliament assembled at Westminster, and not to the Parliament of England. His Majesty tells them, no Success of his shall divert him from endeavouriug to restore Peace. This Success is the Skirmish at Copredy Bridge, and the Parliament had just receiv'd the News of the entire Rout of his Armies in the North; he promises to maintain the true Reform'd Religion establish'd by Law, by which is meant, Spiritual Courts, Lay Chancellors, Excommunications, and the like, which they resolv'd to abolish, the Liberty and Property of the Subject, according to the LAWS OF THE LAND, according to the same Laws as when the Subjects were prest for Soldiers, and their Property forcibly taken from them by Ship Money, Loans, Tonnage and Poundage, and the like. The very same Laws were then in the Land, and there has been so little Appearance of real Sorrow for the unparallel'd Violation of them, that a Promise to maintain them could not but have wonderful Effects on those who were in Arms to prevent their being again violated. The Parliament had never been offer'd the least Guarantee for the Keeping of this Promise, but the same Royal Inclinations that had before so often broken it. Their Answer was, that they were considering of Propositions of Peace, and could take no farther Notice of that Message, it being but a Copy, and they not own'd as the two Houses of Parliament, any more than the Mungrel Parliament at Oxford. His Majesty had a Design upon Tewkesbury, but Colonel Massey, Governor of Glouceſter, having strongly reinforc'd the Garrison, the King on a sudden made up the Hills, march'd in View of Sudely Castle over the Downs to Cobberly, Beverston Castle, Sudbury, and so to Bath, Massey continually skirmishing his Rear. At Bath the King appointed a Meeting of the Inhabitants of Somersetshire at Kingsmore, near Ilchester, where he made a long Speech to them on the 22d of July, and told them, The Parliament were ready to devour them, and to destroy the true Protestant Religion, their Liberty and Property, adding, These I am come to defend, and he that dares not venture his Life for these, I had rather have his Room than his Company. Though the Somersetshire Men were no greater Politicians than they were 40 Years after, when so many Hundreds of them were hang'd for the Protestant Religion, Liberty and Property, as the Duke of Monmouth told them, and many of them did not march away with the King, yet it is incomprehensible how they could be impos'd on to believe the Parliament of England were about to beggar and inslave them.

King's Message for Peace.

From hence the King march'd to Exeter, and Essex made a Motion as if he intended a counter March to the East and meet him, which Prince Maurice having Intelligence of, he march'd with 4000 Horse and Foot after him, but Essex remain'd in his old Quarters about Tiverton, and hearing that the Lord Pawlett's Regiment of Horse was advanc'd to Cherrington, he sent a Party to beat up their Quarters, which they did in the Night, kill'd one Captain, some Troopers, took 60 of their Horses and all their Baggage. Essex found himself in great Perplexity by the King's getting between him and all Supplies of Men from London, and other Places. There was no way left for him but into Cornwall, whether the King seems to drive his Army before him, as a Covey of Birds are driven into a Net. The Lord Robarts indeed promis'd that he should be sufficiently supply'd there, and enabled to attack the King in Front, while Waller, or some other Parliament General, fell upon his Rear, and thus having coop'd him up they might cut Cherrington Skirmish.

A. D. 1644. cut off his Army at Pleaſure; but no Parliament Army came that way, and the King's increas'd daily by Reinforcements from Prince Maurice's Troops and his Garriſons, and by the coming in of the Weſt Country Men, who, as Acherley obſerves, liv'd ſo far off from London, that they might not know but that Laud was really the true Proteſtant Religion, and Strafford the Liberty and Property of the Subject, it being Laud's Religion, and Stafford's Politicks, which the King was fighting for.

Sir Richard Greenvile's ill Practices.

Eſſex in his farther March Weſtward drove the King's Garriſons out of Mount Stamford, Plympton, Saltaſh, and Greenvile Houſe, near Taviſtock, belonging to that Mirror of Chivalry, Sir Richard Greenvile, who was every Way equal to the Service to which he was revolted: He began it with Perfidy and Ingratitude, and continu'd it with Brutality and Cruelty. He endeavour'd to maintain the Paſs at Newbridge to keep the Earl of Eſſex out of Cornwall, but the Parliament Army ſoon forc'd their Way, and the Earl poſſeſs'd himſelf of Launceſton, where he found Store of Ammunition. He earneſtly ſolicited the Parliament for Succours, and Major General Middleton was order'd into the Weſt with 2500 Horſe and Foot; he took ſome of the King's Carriages in Somerſetſhire, but came too late to effect any Thing for the Relief of the Earl, to whom his Majeſty wrote a Letter with his own Hand the 6th Inſtant, and ſent it by the Lord Beauchamp, the Marquis of Hertford's Son, Nephew to Eſſex, to propoſe their joining together, and obliging the Parliament to put an End to the War, but without naming any Terms, unleſs he took the Offer of Advantage to his Lordſhip and his Army to be Terms. The Earl, though very deſirous of Peace on honourable Conditions, would not hear of a Treaty without Conſent of his Maſters, and it was a vain Propoſal to a Man of his known Honour. Minds truly noble, as they are incapable of eſpouſing a bad Cauſe, ſo are they of deſerting a good one; and Heaven and Hell are not more diſtant than Treachery and a publick Spirit. Such Sort of Addreſſes muſt be inconceivably Shocking to a generous Soul, that had ſtak'd every Thing which it held dear, for the Defence of the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty.

King writes to the Earl of Eſſex

This Letter from the King was back'd by another from Prince Maurice and the Earl of Brentford, adviſing the Earl of Eſſex gravely to take his Majeſty's Letter into Conſideration, and that was follow'd by another from the Lord Hopton, and the Officers of the King's Army, for Commiſſioners on both Sides to meet and ſettle Matters between them, without giving the Parliament any further Trouble about it. How full of Wiſdom and Honour were the then prevailing Counſels? The Earl of Eſſex anſwer'd the Earl of Brentford, That whereas he had received a Letter from his Majeſty, another from his Lordſhip, and a third from ſome other Commanders, by all which a Treaty was deſir'd, he thought fit to acquaint his Lordſhip, that it was not in his Commiſſion to be concern'd in any ſuch Treaty; nor could he betray the Truſt repos'd in him by the Parliament. If I had not made my ſelf ſo well acquainted as I am with the Reverend Hiſtorian's Notions of Religion and Honour, I ſhould have wonder'd at his paſſing by this Hiſtory without the leaſt Reflection on the Perjury the Earl was tempted to commit; inſtead of which, he blames him, and inſults him for not breaking his Oath ſo ſolemnly taken in the Covenant, and renouncing the many Proteſtations he had made to be faithful to the Cauſe he was engag'd in. 'Tis Matter of great Lamentation, that the paltry Intereſts of this World ſhould ſo blind the Conſciences of Men, whoſe Function it is to preach up the next, as to render them inſenſible not only of pious, but of moral Sentiments; and nothing could be more immoral and impious than the Earl's entring into a Treaty without the Conſent of the Parliament, who had entruſted him with the Command of their Armies. True it is, the Temptation was the ſtronger on Account of the Difficulties he had precipitated himſelf into by ſuffering the Enemy to ſhut him up in a Nook of the Kingdom. The General ſent up theſe Letters to the Parliament, and they were read at a Conference in the Painted Chamber, Auguſt the 14th. The two Houſes approv'd of his Lordſhip's Conduct ſo well, that they order'd him Thanks for his Fidelity.

A. D. 1644.

Wilmot diſgrac'd.

About this Time the Lord Wilmot, Lieutenant General of the King's Horſe, fell into his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, and was ſent Priſoner to Exeter, upon which, his Lordſhip being well belov'd in the Army, the old Horſe Officers preſented a Petition to the King, to know the Reaſon of his Diſgrace. In Anſwer to which a Charge was drawn up againſt him, and offer'd to them for their Satisfaction. The Main of the Charge was, That by the Meſſenger who went with his Majeſty's Letter to the Earl of Eſſex, the Lord Wilmot ſent alſo a Meſſage, to commend him kindly to the Earl, and tell him from him, he had many good Friends in the Army, that he ſhould lay hold of this Opportunity, and then they would ſhew themſelves, and the Court ſhould not have Power to hinder it. Wilmot in his Reply ſpeaks very ſoberly and reaſonably, though Echard repreſents him as always in his Cups; I never had a private Treaty, nor did ever ſpeak any Thing to the Prejudice of the Publick Cauſe, yet if there could be a Means found out to reconcile the juſt Intereſts of the King and Kingdom, ſuch as becomes an honeſt and well affected Man to appear in, I am ſure I ſhould be very ready to engage all my Aſſiſtance, thinking it an Action that may be very well juſtify'd to God and all honeſt Men.

Wareham taken by Sir A. Aſhley Cooper, &c.

In the mean Time Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper and Colonel Sydenham, with about 1200 Horſe and Foot, drawn out of the Garriſons of Lyme, Weymouth and Pool, came before the Town of Wareham, and began to ſtorm the Out-works, upon which Colonel Obrian deſir'd a Parley, and the Place was ſurrender'd on honourable Conditions; the Chief of which was, that Obrian and thoſe Forces there that had been brought out of Ireland, ſhould return to that Kingdom, to ſerve againſt the Iriſh Rebels.

Eſſex in Straits.

As the King had out general'd Waller before at Copredy Bridge Skirmiſh, ſo he did the ſame now by Eſſex, and both in one Campaign: He coop'd the latter up in a Corner, from whence there was no way left for him to eſcape but by Sea. Ludlow blames him for not fighting the King's Army before the weſtern Forces had join'd him, he being till then, at leaſt equal in Number to his Majeſty's; and he adds, much Superior in Courage and Affection to the Cauſe. If the Parliament did not take ſo much Care as was expected in ſending him Supplies, his Care ought to have been the greater in preventing the Want of them. And Poſterity will not think the Advice of the Lord Robarts, though a Corniſh Man, ſufficient to juſtify his giving the Enemy ſuch an Advantage over him.

There are various Accounts of the Diſgrace which befel the Earl of Eſſex's Army in Cornwall; but Whitlock aſſures us his is true; and Echard's Account being almoſt the Reverſe of it, I ſhall give it in the Words of the Memorialiſt.

rialiſt. His Majeſty came to Leskard, 8 Miles from Leſtwithiel, where Eſſex lay, and was there encompaſs'd by the King and Prince Maurice at Boconnoc, Sir Richard Greenvile at Bodmyn, and Sir Jacob Aſhley at Hull. The King's Party was deſirous to fight, but upon Conſultation it was held more adviſable to ſtarve the Parliament's Forces, to which End Goring with a Party of Horſe, and Sir Thomas Baſſet with 1500 Foot, were ſent Weſtward to ſtop all Proviſions from the Land's End Side, and to ſtreighten Eſſex by keeping his Horſe and Foot cloſe together. Eſſex drew his Cannon and Baggage towards Foy, but in thoſe bad Ways his Carriages ſtuck, and they were much hinder'd by it. In this Diſtreſs the gallant Sir William Balfour, having a ſtong Body of Horſe, near 3000, under his Command, and ſcorning to ſubmit to an Enemy he had always hitherto been us'd to conquer, broke thro' all the King's Quarters, and got ſafe to Saltaſh and from thence to Plymouth, with no Loſs. This is the moſt glorious Event in the whole War, and the diſarming the Earl of Eſſex's few Foot by the King's powerful Army of both Horſe and Foot, with all the Advantages of Ground, was ſo far from covering the Shame of this Inſult of Sir William Balfour's, that the Glory of the King's taking away the Earl of Eſſex's Mens Arms is loſt, in the Diſgrace he ſuffer'd by Balfour's Horſe breaking thro' all his Army, Cavalry and Infantry: And whatever Advantage his Majeſty would have had the World believe he had gain'd by diſarming Eſſex's Foot, People talk'd more of Sir William Balfour's Gallantry than of the King's Victory. The Parliament's Foot made a brave Defence ſome Time after their Horſe was gone; but Eſſex's leaving them, and taking with him the Lord Robarts, Sir John Meyrick, and other Officers, it was too great a Diſcouragement for them to defend themſelves longer. It is true Major-General Skippon propos'd it to them in this Speech.

Major Gen. Skippon's Speech to them.

Gentlemen,

" YOU ſee our General and ſome chief Of" ficers have thought fit to leave us, and
" our Horſe are got away. We are left alone
" upon our Defence. That which I propound
" to you is this, that we having the ſame Cou-
" rage as our Horſe had, and the ſame God
" to aſſiſt us, may make the ſame Trial of our " Fortunes, and endeavour to make our Way
" thro' our Enemies as they have done, and ac" count it better to die with Honour and Faith-
" fulneſs, than to live diſhonourable.

But few of the Council of War concurr'd with him in this Reſolution, alledging the Horſe had many Advantages to break through which the Foot had not, who now were alſo diſmay'd by the going away of their General; and ſeveral other Reaſons they urg'd for a Treaty which they had receiv'd Intimation from the King's Army his Majeſty was willing to accept.

Accordingly Commiſſioners were appointed to treat.

For the King.

Prince Maurice, the Earl of Brentford, the Lord Digby.

For the Parliament.

Col. Barclay, Col. Whichcot, Col. Butler.

Articles were agreed upon the 2d of September to this Effect; To deliver up to the King their Artillery, with all their Bag and Baggage: No Perſon under a Corporal to wear any kind of Weapon: All Officers above to wear only Sword and Piſtols. In Purſuance of this Treaty his Majeſty had Poſſeſſion of 40 Pieces of Braſs Ordnance, 200 Barrels of Powder, Match and Bullet proportionable, 9000 Arms for Horſe and Foot. Some of the private Soldiers liſted themſelves in the King's Service, and ſome of the reſt as they march'd forth being pillag'd by the Cavaliers, Major-General Skippon rode up to the King, who ſtood to ſee them paſs by, and told him, It was againſt his Honour and Juſtice that his Articles ſhould not be perform'd, his Soldiers pillaging ſome of the Parliament's Soldiers contrary to thoſe Articles, and deſir'd his Majeſty to give Orders to reſtrain them, which was done, and Skippon with his Men march'd to Pool under Convoy of Col. Adrian Scroope, who ſign'd a Certificate of the good Behaviour of the Parliament's Forces in their March, and Major-General Skippon did the ſame for his generous Deportment towards him and his Soldiers, and gave him a ſafe Conduct to [illegible]. This worthy Gentleman Lieutenant-Colonel Adrian Scroope had a Kinſman in the Parliament Army, who with Col. Ingoldsby ſate on the Bench at the Trial of the King; but at the Reſtoration Col. Ingoldsby was made a Knight of the Bath, and Col. Adrian Scroope was hang'd, drawn and quarter'd, notwithſtanding the good Services of his Kinſman and Nameſake for his Majeſty, and the good Services of many of that ancient Family in ſeveral Parts of England, who took Arms for the King.

A. D. 1644.

Parliament Officers ſurrender.

The Officers of the Parliament Army in Cornwall who ſurrender'd, were Major-General Skippon, Col. Whichcot, Col. Barclay, Col. Gower, Col. Tyrrel, Col. Butler, Col. Hunter, Col. Francis, Col. Dean, Col. Forteſcue, Col. Weare, Lieutenant-Colonel Martin, Lieutenant-Colonel Moore, Lieutenant-Colonel Draper, Lieutenant-Colonel Ingoldsby, Lieutenant-Colonel Mackenſy, Lieutenant-Colonel Floyd, Lieutenant-Colonel Webb, Lieutenant-Colonel Pride, Lieutenant-Colonel Everſhot, Lieutenant-Colonel Bulſtrode, Lieutenant-Colonel Traherne.

Whitlock informs us ſeveral who were no Friends to Eſſex inveigh'd againſt him as one that had quitted his Command, and deſerted his Army in the greateſt Danger. Others excus'd and commended him for this Action, by which Means only he could preſerve himſelf, his Officers and Soldiers to do the Parliament further Service. Others condemn'd Waller, Manchester and Middleton, for not making more haſte to the Aſſiſtance of their General. Every one vented his own Fancy and Cenſure; but there ſeems to be great Reaſon to charge the Earl with Want of Vigour and Foreſight in his Weſtern March. He propos'd his coming to London to juſtify himſelf; but the Parliament wrote him, They were fully ſatisfy'd that he was not wanting to uſe his utmoſt Endeavours in that Service, and were well aſſur'd of his Fidelity, deſiring him to entertain no Thoughts of Diſcontent or Diſcouragement, but to go on in the managing of the War, Sir William Waller's and other Forces being ready to join him. Notwithſtanding this civil Letter, it is evident that from this Time their mutual Civilities were affected, and the Cordiality of their Friendſhip daily diminiſh'd. The Parliament were deſirous of Peace in the beſt Acceptation of the Word, and were reſolv'd to bring the King to a Neceſſity of the ſame Interpretation of it. They were jealous that their General the Earl of Eſſex took it in too unlimited a Senſe, and was willing enough that the Laudæan Hierarchy ſhould ſtand, and the Prerogative be what the King would have it, provided himſelf, and the Houſe of Peers were ſecur'd in their Privileges, and the Commons were kept in the ſame or a greater Inferiority. The Two Houſes were for the general Rights, Liberties and Properties of the People, and a thorough Reformation. To effect this, they reſolv'd as ſoon as conveniently they could to put their Military Affairs under the Management of Officers who were intirely of their own Sentiments, and for a vigorous Proſecution of the War till thoſe good Ends could be obtain'd.

The King, according to Echard, after this glorious Succeſs, look'd upon Plymouth, and receiv'd a rude Anſwer to a moſt gracious Meſſage; for my Lord Robarts, who was left Governor there, was not ſo frighted at this Glory as to part with ſo conſiderable a Place for a kind Word or two. His Majeſty put the Two Houſes in Mind of his Meſſage from Eveſham about Peace, but this Meſſage too wanting the neceſſary Form of Addreſs, had no more Effect than the other, and with good Reaſon, for the Stile of all theſe Meſſages were eternally the ſame; The Religion as eſtabliſh'd by Law; The Prerogative according to the Laws of the Land; The Rights and Privileges of Parliament according to Law: All which he adminiſter'd for 15 or 16 Years in the Manner the Two Houſes juſtly fear'd he would again interpret thoſe Laws, when he was reſtrain'd by no Power but the Royal Will and Pleaſure.

His Majeſty march'd back thro' Somerſetſhire, where the Inhabitants preſented a Petition to him, offering to ſpend their Lives in aſſiſting him to obtain ſuch a Peace as he was contending for. There was much Dependance to be made on theſe worſhipful People, who not long after were ſome of the firſt who petition'd the Parliament to bring the Grand Delinquent to Juſtice.

During the King's Stay at Chard, ſays Echard, the brave Col. Gage, a Papiſt, undertook from Oxford to relieve Baſing Houſe, a ſtrong Place in Hampſhire, valiantly defended by the Marquis of Wincheſter, another Papiſt, againſt the Parliament for above three Months. All which he perform'd after a moſt ſoldierly Manner, tho' it was near 40 Miles from Oxford; and ſoon after this great Action, &c. I repeat this ſhort Piece of Hiſtory, becauſe it is an Epitome of his Way of telling Story. Whitlock informs us this Gage " took about 1500 of the King's Foot " out of ſeveral Garriſons, and mounting them " for Dragoons, march'd by Night towards Baſing Houſe. Col. Norton and Col. Morley, " who were then in a kind of Blockade, took " the Allarm: Norton charg'd his Troops and " broke thro' them, but they with great Courage wheel'd about, and charg'd Norton's " whole Body, who retreated into Col. Morley's " Quarters. In the mean while they got ſome " Supplies of Ammunition and Proviſions into " the Houſe. Morley and Norton fac'd them, " but they would not fight, and retreating back " again, were purſu'd, 150 of them kill'd and " taken, as many Men as they had reliev'd. " Among the Priſoners was a Major and other " inferior Officers. Norton loſt but one Man. " Gage's Party gave an Allarm to Major-General Brown at Abington, who ſhortly after in " Revenge allarm'd Oxford it ſelf, and " brought away four Drove of Cattle from under " the Walls.

Gage attempts to relieve Baſing.

Another merry Story of the Archdeacon's, is as follows Verbatim. " The fearleſs Goring being now poſſeſs'd with great Gaiety, earneſtly " adviſ'd the King to march with all Speed and " beat Waller, who lay at Andover with 3000 " Horſe and Dragoons. This was agreed to, but " the March was not manag'd with all neceſſary " Punctuality by thoſe about the King. Yet " they came not within four Miles of Andover " before Waller had Notice of their Motions; " and taking a View of their Strength and good " Order, durſt not ſtand a Battle, but drew back " into the Town, leaving a ſtrong Party of Horſe " and Dragoons to make good his Retreat. But " the King's Van charg'd and routed them with " conſiderable Execution, purſu'd them thro' the " Town till the Darkneſs of the Night ſecur'd " the Remainder. They were very much ſhatter'd.

A. D. 1644.

The plain Truth of the Fact is no more nor no leſs than what Whitlock writes thus Verbatim. " The King's Army march'd to Andover, where " ſome Skirmiſhes were betwixt them and Sir " William Waller's Forces, and about 20 kill'd " on both Sides." I ſhould not much diſcommend the Archdeacon and his Brother Hiſtorians for making the moſt of every little Succeſs in caſe it had came to any thing, and their noble Cauſe had been a whit the better for it. But ſince a few Months only are to paſs before they are to be beaten out of every Field and every Town in England, it is a very childiſh Piece of Vanity to repreſent thoſe to be always Heroes, who are ſo ſoon to be always Runaways. It would be endleſs to pretend to give an Account of every petty Advantage obtain'd by the Parliament's Forces over the King's. But what would the Archdeacon have made of a Skirmiſh between 80 of the Garriſon of Leiceſter, Convoy to ſome Carriers, and Colonel Haſtings with 120 Men, who ſet upon thoſe Carriers? But their Convoy kill'd 8 of the 120, took 60 Priſoners, and moſt of their Arms.

King at Andover.

At the ſame Time Sir Thomas Middleton having taken Montgomery Caſtle in North Wales, was forc'd to leave it at the Approach of the King's Army in thoſe Parts, againſt which it was not long tenable, and to look out for Help to reſcue the few Parliamentarians whom he had left in the Caſtle, which the Lord Byron immediately beſieg'd with 5000 Men. Middleton being join'd by Sir William Brereton, Sir John Meldrum, and Sir William Fairfax, advanc'd with about 3000 Men againſt the Enemy, who met and engag'd them, Sept. 18. both Parties came preſently to puſh of Pike, and the Cavaliers worſted the Parliament's Horſe, which ſo encourag'd the King's Soldiers, that, as it was a very common Thing with them, they ſhouted and cry'd, The Day's our own, The Day's our own; and their Shouting and Crying ſo enrag'd the Parliament's Forces, that they came on again with freſh Courage and entirely defeated the Royaliſts, took Major-General Broughton, Sir Thomas Tildeſley a Papiſt, Lieutenant-Colonel Bludwell, Major Williams, 9 Captains, as many Subalterns, and 1500 private Centinels. On the King's Part were ſlain 300, and 500 wounded. On the Parliament's Part about 40 were ſlain, and about 60 wounded. The Lord Byron made his Eſcape by the Goodneſs of his Horſe. But the Parliamentarians had little Reaſon to value themſelves on their Victory, ſince they purchas'd it ſo dearly as with the Loſs of Sir Will. Fairfax, who was kill'd with nine Wounds, of whom with much Sincerity and Plainneſs may be ſaid, there was not a braver Officer, nor a better Engliſhman, nor a more zealous Proteſtant in the Kingdom. His Zeal for Religion and Liberty engag'd him in this, the Good Old Cauſe, and no doubt he could with great Comfort ſay in the Agonies of Death, Dulce eſt pro Patriâ mori.

Montgomery Fight.

Sir William Fairfax kill'd.

A Trumpet who had deſerted Prince Rupert on ſome Diſcontent, came to Sir William Brereton and inform'd him that Col Baines, Col.

A. D. 1644

Fight at Malpas.

Coniers, and Sir Marmaduke Langdale, all three Papiſts, with 1000 Men, were marching towards Cheſter by Malpas to join the Prince, upon which Brereton drew out 8 Troops of Horſe, and 7 Companies of Foot, every Footman mounted behind a Trooper. When they came within two Miles of Malpas the Foot alighted, and the Horſe march'd before the Foot. The King's Forces ſent out a forlorn Hope to obſerve them; but Brereton's Horſe not coming the Way they expected, wheel'd about, and got between the Town and the Cavaliers, kill'd or took moſt of them, and defeated alſo a Party from Malpas. Col. Baines, Col. Coniers, Major Harborn a Papiſt, and Major Hesketh another Papiſt, were ſlain; Major Maxey, Major Cromwel, and Major Crathorn, were taken Priſoners, together with other Officers, and moſt of the Soldiers.

Theſe and a great many other fine Actions on the Parliament's Side are intirely omitted in the Earl of Clarendon's and Mr. Archdeacon's Hiſtories, or are looſely ſlurr'd over; the Former gives his Reaſon for it, and I think it the ſincereſt Thing in the Book, when he ſpeaks of the Rout at Marſton Moor. He took no Delight in telling it.

The King.

After the Skirmiſh at Andover, his Majeſty march'd to Whitechurch, and ſent the Earl of Northampton with his Brigade of Horſe to raiſe the Siege of Banbury Caſtle, which Col. John Fiennes had beſieg'd three Months to little Purpoſe. Accordingly on the 25th of October the Earl, having join'd ſome Horſe and Foot from Oxford under Col. Gage, came to Banbury and rais'd the Siege, doing conſiderable Execution on Fiennes's Men, who did not behave as their Fellow-Soldiers had done on the like Occaſion. He had much ado to make good his Retreat to Warwick, leaving behind him ſome of his Ordnance, and three Waggon-Load of Arms and Ammunition. But by this Service his Majeſty was depriv'd of the Aſſiſtance of this Brigade of Horſe at the ſecond Battle of Newbury, which happen'd two Days after,

The Parliament had been diligent to recruit Eſſex's Army, and had ſent 6000 Arms by Sea, for his Foot that came out of Cornwall. They had alſo new cloath'd them, and furniſh'd them with a new Train of Artillery, which was ſent by Water as far as Reading to be convoy'd thence by Mancheſter's Army to the Earl of Eſſex's, who took the Field on Thurſday Oct. 17. about 6 Weeks after his Diſgrace in Cornwall. He advanc'd from Portſmouth to Petersfield, and on the 21ſt his Forces, Mancheſter's, and Waller's join'd near Baſing, making an Army much ſuperior to the King's, who now ſaw that his Advantage in the Weſt had more Honour than Profit in it. For there were alſo marching to join the Earl of Eſſex, the City Brigade, commanded by Sir James Harrington, being the Red and Blue London Regiments. The Red Regiment of Weſtminſter, the Yellow Regiment of Southwark, and the Regiment of the Tower Hamlets, making in all 5000 Men. On the 22d of October his Majeſty, who had fac'd the Parliamentarians with a Party of Horſe, drew off his Infantry from Kingſclear, and march'd to Newbury, as the Parliament Army did to Reading. The next Day the Latter came to Aldermarſton, and two Days after to Bucklebury Heath, about five Miles from Newbury. They made a very good Army, and the Parliament wrote to the Generals to agree among themſelves, and take for Example the good Underſtanding between the General Officers in the North. But whatever was the Reaſon of it, if it was not Indiſpoſition, as the Earl of Eſſex gave out, his Lordſhip abſented himſelf from the Army at this important Juncture, and without imputing it to the Intrigues of Cromwel, and the Fineſſe of ſome leading Members of the Houſe of Commons, that Aſſembly would not have deſerved the Character of Wiſe, which is given them by all ſober Writers, had they ever put him again at the Head of their Armies. It was thought the King, whoſe Army was inferior in Number to the Parliament's, would have declin'd fighting till Prince Rupert had join'd him with 3000 Horſe and Dragroons, or at leaſt till the Earl of Northampton return'd with his Brigade of Horſe and the Foot from Oxford; and it was the beſt Counſel his Majeſty could take. He had caſt up Works about Newbury, fortify'd the Avenues, lin'd the Hedges, and kept within the Town, guarded with his Artillery; ſo that what Advantage the Parliament Generals had by Numbers, the King would have had as much by Situation, if he had kept it; but he caus'd his Horſe and Foot to draw out into Speen Field, the Midway between Newbury Town and Demington Caſtle, as well to make his Army ſeem more numerous, as to embattle them as advantagiouſly as poſſible. Little paſs'd the firſt Day, the 26th of October, for the River Kennet was between them, only the two Armies cannonaded each other, tho' with no great Execution, and ſome Skirmiſhing and Picqueering happen'd between the Horſemen; ſo the greater Part of the Parliament Army retreated to Cheveley, and quarter'd there that Night in the Field. Here it was reſolv'd at a Council of War to divide their Forces thus: All General Eſſex's Horſe and Foot, and moſt of the Forces under the Command of Waller, with the City Brigade, ſhould march to Speen Hill, and the Earl of Mancheſter's Foot and Part of his Horſe to continue in the Field near Shaw, a ſmall Village, where the Houſe of Mr. Doleman was fortify'd by his Majeſty's Forces; and it was agreed, that as ſoon as the Latter ſhould by diſcharging of the Cannon underſtand that thoſe at Speen were engag'd, Mancheſter ſhould fall on to gain the Paſſage at Shaw, and give a Diverſion to that Part of the Army deſign'd for Speen. The Horſe were commanded by Sir William Waller and Sir William Balfour, the Foot by Major-General Skippon, who by Break of Day on Sunday the 27th of October was on the March. He fetch'd a Circle to avoid the Fire from Dennington Caſtle, where Part of the Garriſon ſally'd on his Rear, and took ſome Priſoners, and Skippon intercepted ſome Carts loaden with Proviſions for his Majeſty's Uſe. In four Hours Time his Foot made their Approach on the Weſt Side of Newbury. It was near Three a Clock in the Afternoon before they could get themſelves into Battalia. Then the forlorn Hope of Horſe began the Fight, ſeconded by the Foot, and for three Hours together the Battle was maintain'd with as much Reſolution, Bravery, and even Deſperateneſs, on both Sides, as had been known ſince the Commencement of the War; but in Concluſion the Parliament's Forces beat the King's from the Works at Speen, and out of the Village, and took nine Pieces of Cannon, among which were ſix of thoſe they loſt in Cornwall, which the Foot that were then diſarm'd ventur'd deſperately to regain, and when they had got them, embrac'd them for Joy, ſaying, We'll give you a Corniſh Hug. Orleans aſſures us, that all thoſe Troops having taken an Oath in Cornwall never to ſerve againſt the King, were perjur'd by fighting againſt him in this Battle; which is falſe, for the Parliament's Soldiers there diſarm'd took no ſuch Oath, and they now ſufficiently reveng'd themſelves for the Affront then put upon them.

A. D. 1644.

A. D. 1644. Night coming on prevented further Action. On the other Side of Newbury the Earl of Manchester the ſame Sunday Morning commanded a Party of about 400 Musketeers to paſs the Kennet on the left Hand of Shaw, and thereby divert the King's Strength from attending Speen Hill. Theſe Musketeers advanc'd accordingly, and beat the King's Forces out of two of their Works, and took ſome Priſoners, but were at laſt beaten back with conſiderable Loſs. Towards Four a Clock, Manchester hearing the Cannon play from Speen Hill, play'd alſo on Doleman's Houſe at Shaw with two ſmall Pieces of Ordnance, and commanded a Party of 500 Musketeers as a Forlorn Hope to attack it, which they did, and beat thoſe who ſally'd out of the Houſe into their Works. The Reaſon why they did no more, was ſaid to be becauſe Night came on. The Action on this Side is generally condemn'd as imperfectly perform'd, and gave Occaſion of Complaint againſt one another by Manchester and Cromwel, and that the King's Army was not as entirely routed as ever was any Army, is imputed wholly to the bad Service on Shaw Side. The King's Forces left the Field in exceeeding Haſte and Confuſion, which is hardly worth mentioning; for the Parliament Army was much more numerous. Skippon had broke in upon the King's Forces on the Weſt Side, Manchester might more eaſily have done it on the Eaſt Side, Doleman's Houſe being nothing to Dennington Caſtle, and the Cavaliers muſt then have been intirely cut to Pieces. The King march'd out of Newbury Town in the Night, and ſecuring what Cannon he had left, his Carriage and Baggage in Dennington Caſtle, he retreated by Wallingford to Oxford. The Loſs was little or nothing on the Parliament's Side: On the King's about 200 were kill'd, among whom were Mr. Goring, Sir Anthony St. Leger, and Major Trevillian, Col. Thomas Dalton, Capt. Thurſtan Anderton, Capt. Samway, Capt. Wells, the four laſt Papiſts. Three hundred of the King's Forces were taken Priſoners, and among them Thomas Wentworth Earl of Cleveland. Major-General Skippon wrote thus to the Committee: "The King, "Prince Charles, and Prince Maurice, with "about 7 or 800 Horſe, got Weſtward, as we "are credibly inform'd. The reſt of his Forces "leaving the Train at Dennington, went to-"wards Oxford, all much ſhatter'd. General "Ruthen, and the Earl of Brentford's Lady, were "taken 7 Miles off, himſelf narrowly eſcaping, "thro' our own Party's unadviſedly ſounding of "a Trumpet when they were near the Place "where he was. We had 50 Soldiers ſlain, and "no Officer of Note but Capt. Gauler of my "Lord General's Regiment. The Wounded "are ſcarce 100. Whitlock informs us that the "King march'd out of Newbury an Hour after "Midnight with an Attendant Troop of Horſe "only. The Parliament's Forces took 1000 "Arms, and had they had but one Hour more "of Day-light, would in all Probability have "routed and diſpers'd the King's whole Army, "which was in ſo great Diſtraction, that they "retreated three ſeveral Ways at once in great "Confuſion." General Ludlow, who was in this Battle, tells us, "The Uſage our Men met "with in Cornwall being freſh in their Memo-"ry, caus'd them to charge with ſuch Vigour, "that ſome of them ran up to the King's Can-"non and clap'd their Hats on the Touch-holes, "falling ſo furiouſly on the Enemy, that they "were not able to ſtand before them, but were "forc'd to quit their Ground, and ran under "the Shelter of Dennington Caſtle." Mr. Archdeacon, with whoſe Sincerity and Judgment the Reader muſt by this Time be as well acquainted as I am, aſſures us, "Sir John Cansfield, A. D. 1644. "another notorious Papiſt, Colonel of the "Queen's Regiment of Horſe, charg'd the Par-"liamentarians with ſo much Gallantry, that he "routed them, and purſu'd the Execution of "them near half a Mile. General Goring and "the Earl of Cleveland charg'd the Left Wing "of the Parliament's Horſe ſo furiouſly, that "they forc'd them over a Hedge in great Con-"fuſion, and follow'd them. At Shaw Houſe "Sir John Browne with the Prince's Regiment "drove 1200 Horſe and 3000 Foot of the Earl "of Manchester's Men before him with great "Execution, till meeting with another Body of "their Horſe, he retir'd to the Foot in Doleman's "Garden, who oblig'd Manchester's Horſe to "wheel about, when Sir John fell upon their "Rear, kill'd many, and kept that Ground all "the Day, while Col. Thelwell's Reſerve of "Foot gall'd their Foot with ſeveral Vollies, "and then fell in with the But-End of their "Muskets till they beat them quite out of the "Field, leaving two Drakes, ſome Colours, "and many dead Bodies behind them. At this "Time a Body of their Foot attempted Shaw "Houſe, but were ſo briskly receiv'd by Colo-"nel Page, that they were ſoon forc'd to re-"tire with ſuch Confuſion, that they left 500 "dead upon a little Spot of Ground, ſo they "drew off the two Drakes into the Houſe. The "Enemy being beaten off, and retiring from all "that Quarter, it was now Night, which nei-"ther Party was ſorry for." This excellent Portion of Hiſtory, of which hardly one Word is literally true, is however a poor Imitation of a more famous Hiſtorian on the Cavalier Side, who wrote Mercurius Aulicus, the Court Paper, at Oxford, and was the beſt Hand that could be pick'd out in that Univerſity, where once a Week it diverted and edify'd the illuſtrious Aſſembly then in that City. Mercurius Aulicus.

This News-Book was publiſh'd the Saturday after Newbury ſecond Fight, and contains a Relation of it at large, every whit as florid as the Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory, and a little more impartial. "The REBELS ſent out ſeveral "Parties to have fallen upon his Majeſty's Quar-"ters, but they were every one beaten; 1100 "of the REBELS on the Hill before Shaw "came down to paſs the River Kennet; they "got over, and then advanc'd with much Con-"fidence, till that gallant Gentleman Sir Ber-"nard Aſtley came up with 400 Musketeers, and "charg'd them with ſuch Judgment and Cou-"rage, that he routed all thoſe 1100 REBELS. "While he was upon the Execution of the "REBELS, two other Bodies of REBELS "haſted over the River to ſecond the firſt; but "the brave Knight ſo follow'd his Blow, that he "made the firſt REBELS rout the ſecond RE-"BELS, who all ran thro' the River in ſuch "Diſtraction and Confuſion, that abundance of "them were drown'd, beſides the Slain." There are ſeveral following Pages of the like Hiſtory on his Majeſty's glorious Victory at Newbury in this State Paper, which is but a faint Reſemblance of Falſtaff's Account of his Proweſs in Shakeſpear, I ſhall only give one Inſtance more. Fine Writing on the Cavalier Side.

"Col. Liſle gave the REBELS three moſt gal-"lant Charges. In the Firſt his Field Word "was For the Crown, and then he beat them "back and knock'd them down both with Bul-"let and Musket Shot. In the Second Charge "his Word was For Prince Charles, and then "he cut them off as they came on, and hewed "them down ſufficiently as they ran away. In the "Third Charge it was For the Duke of York,

" and then he ſlaſh'd them ſo home, that they " troubled him no more, for had they come on " again, he had reſolv'd to have gone over all " the King's Children, and have knock'd them " down, and hew'd them down, and ſlaſh'd " them down For the Duke of Glouceſter, the " Princeſs Mary, the Princeſs Henrietta, till " he had not left one REBEL to fight againſt the " Crown or the Royal Progeny." This Cavalier Hiſtory-Writer, whoſe Manner is equally polite and ſincere, modeſtly rebukes a News-Writer at London for ſaying Mr. Charles Goring was kill'd, tho' he was ready for another Charge againſt the REBELS; but then he unfortunately commits the like Slip himſelf, Their General the Earl of Eſſex is now in the Chirurgion's Hands, whereas the Earl of Eſſex was not in the Battle. He upbraids the Parliamentarians, Sir William Waller, Sir Arthur Haſlerigge, Sir Philip Stapleton, Col. Forteſcue, Sir William Balfour, &c. with the Meanneſs of their Quality; and having juſt mention'd the Earl of Mancheſter, he ſays, I have not met with a Right Honourable REBEL, except the Honourable Mr. Fiennes. The Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Archdeacon have not ſuffer'd ſo delicate a Remark to eſcape them.

Ruſhw. 728.

I doubt not we ſhall be excus'd for this long Digreſſion, it being ſo undeniable a Proof of the Dependance we are to make on theſe Gentlemens Hiſtories, and of the Neceſſity of our own to ſet People right, if they would know any thing of theſe Matters. It is certain there was not the ſame Vigour ſhewn on Shaw Side as there was on that of Speen by the Parliament's Forces, and that the Appearance of the King's Army again at Newbury a few Days after, gave too great Reaſon to the Two Houſes to be apprehenſive of the ill Effects of the Miſunderſtandings and Jealouſies among the chief Generals, and to provide againſt them as well as they could.

The Parliament Army, after the Fight, ſummon'd Boys Governor of Dennington Caſtle to ſurrender it, and that reſolute Officer defying them, they march'd towards Oxford, but were hinder'd advancing farther than Hanwell by the bad Ways, ſo they return'd to Newbury; and two or three Days after they receiv'd Advice by their Scouts that the King's Army very much increas'd by the Junction of the Forces under Prince Rupert, and thoſe from Banbury was on the March to relieve Dennington, which the King effected, tho' the Parliament's Army was more numerous than his. General Ludlow writes of it thus. " The King " in the Face of an Army twice as numerous as " his, had Time to ſend his Artillery from Den- " nington Caſtle towards Oxford, without any " Oppoſition, to the Aſtoniſhment of all thoſe " who wiſh'd well to the Publick; but by this " Time it was clearly manifeſt, that the Nobi- " lity had no further Quarrel with the King than " till they could make their Terms with him, " having for the moſt Part grounded their Diſ- " ſatisfaction upon ſome particular Affront, or " the Prevalency of a Faction about him. But " tho' it ſhould be granted that their Intentions " in taking Arms, were to oblige the King to " conſent to redreſs the Grievances of the Na- " tion, yet if a War of this Nature muſt be de- " termin'd by Treaty, and the King left in the " Exerciſe of the Royal Authority, after the ut- " moſt Violation of the Laws, and the greateſt " Calamities brought upon the People, it doth " not appear to me what Security can be given " them for the future Enjoyment of their Rights " and Privileges." Here the Republican was too hard for the Engliſhman. The Propoſitions of the Uxbridge Treaty, if the King had comply'd with them, were ſufficient Security, as will be ſeen hereafter. But the Over-earneſtneſs of ſome Parliament Lords for Peace before ſuch Security was obtain'd, oblig'd both Houſes to change Hands in carrying on the War, and to employ thoſe Officers who thought it their Duty while their Swords were drawn, to make the beſt, and that was the quickeſt Uſe of them.

Soon after this the King reſolv'd to relieve Baſing, and to oppoſe him therein the Parliament's Forces drew from Newbury that Way, but thoſe before Baſing rais'd the Siege of their own Accord, and nothing of Moment happen'd between the Two Armies, and nothing was like to happen till the Parliament's was put under other Management: For tho' the Earl of Eſſex was a Man of too much Honour to betray his Truſt, yet he was for doing the Parliament's Buſineſs in his own Way, and not in theirs, which made it abſolutely neceſſary for them to take other Meaſures before the next Campaign.

The Parliament's at Reading, Henley, Abington, Farnham, &c.

His Majeſty returning to Oxford, the Archdeacon purſues him with a Panegyrical Congratulation on his Succeſſes this Summer, in which he nobly diſplay'd his Genius, and ſhew'd himſelf a moſt vigilant and valiant Commander. When he has not the Earl of Clarendon's Abundance of Words, which are the Character of his Lordſhip's Characteriſticks, Mr. Echard's Eulogy is extremely laconick and barren; for tho' a ſmall Invention will ſerve to falſify Fact, it muſt be a large one to adorn it. I do with Pleaſure read the Story of the King's admirable Conduct, through the whole Courſe of this Campaign. In the Beginning of which he was ſhut up between two Armies under Eſſex and Waller, each of them as numerous as his own. One of them he ſo ruffled at Copredy Bridge, as to render it impotent; the other he diſarm'd in Cornwall. And when they were both recruited and rejoin'd, he fought and clear'd himſelf of them with little more than half their Forces at Newbury, where in ten Days Time he appear'd again to give them Defiance; and to deny him the Glory of a great intrepid General, is to do him Injuſtice. If the ſame Courage and Conduct had been ſhewn in ſo good a Cauſe as that of King William's at the Boyne, his Fame and his Memory would have been equally glorious and immortal. What a deplorable thing is it to think on, that a great King ſhould be environ'd and govern'd by deſperate and criminal Counſellors, and to ſave them, be hurry'd on to his own Deſtruction? For it is certain by his Conduct in the War he was capable of heroic Actions, if, inſtead of Heroiſm, Laud and his Brethren had not fill'd his Royal Breaſt with Bigotry, a Weed which grows faſt, takes deep Root, and choaks all the good Seed which otherwiſe would ſpring and flouriſh in a good Soil.

The King's admirable Conduct this Campaign.

During theſe Tranſactions between the greater Armies, ſome Things memorable were tranſacted between the Leſs. Col. Maſſey, with a Detachment of the Garriſon of Glouceſter, having join'd Col. Purefoy with his Regiment of Horſe, they made an Incurſion into Herefordſhire, and fac'd Hereford. Prince Rupert having Intelligence of it, advanc'd towards Eveſham Bridge, intending to paſs it, and get between Maſſey and Glouceſter, while Col. Myn, and Sir John Winter a Papiſt, held him in Play on Herefordſhire Side. But Maſſey hearing of his Approach, drew back in Time, and got ſafe into Glouceſter. Four Days after, May the 7th, he march'd out of that City with 900 Musketeers, 100 Pikes, Col. Purefoy's and Part of his own Regiment of Horſe towards the Foreſt Side, where he fell upon Weſtbury, a Garriſon of Sir John Winter's, who held the Church and a ſtrong Houſe adjoining. At Acton in Lancaſhire we found the Cavaliers behind their great Guns in the Church, at Weſtbury in Glouceſterſhire they are poſted on the ſame holy Ground, and the Roundheads muſt beat the Church about their Ears to come at them: But whenever the Parliamentarians get into a Church, it is made a Stable, it is profan'd, 'tis Sacrilege, and a damnable Sin. Maſſey order'd his Soldiers to fling their Granades into that conſecrated Place, which was ſoon ſurrender'd, and Capt. Bret and 60 Priſoners taken, while a Party of his Troops beat up the Enemy's Quarters at Little Dean, where Lieutenant Colonel Congreve, a Papiſt, was ſlain, Capt. Wigmore and others taken Priſoners. Thence, May the 8th, Maſſey march'd to Newnham, where another Party of Sir John Winter's kept Garriſon in another Church, into which Maſſey's Forces preſently running after them, the Cavaliers cry'd out Quarter, but at the Inſtant one Tipper, a Papiſt, Servant to Sir John Winter, blew up a Barrel of Gun-powder in the Church, which however had no other ill Effect than to ſinge ſome of the Soldiers. Tipper had been taken Priſoner before, and broken his Parole, which made him afraid of a Gibbet, and that put him upon this miſchievous Deſign, which ſo enrag'd Maſſey's Men, that they ſlew him and 20 of his Companions. All the reſt had Quarter, except one Capt. Butler an Iriſh Rebel, whom a Common Soldier knock'd o' the Head. Here were taken Capt. Malory, Capt. Michael Morgan, Capt. Halford, Capt. Blany, 3 Lieutenants, 4 Enſigns, Store of Powder, Match, and 4 Pieces of Ordnance, without the Loſs of one Man on Maſſey's Side, who hearing Col. Myn and Sir John Winter had join'd the Forces of the Lord Herbert, another Papiſt, to oppoſe him, got again ſafe into Glouceſter. Soon after, May the 22d, he ſurpriz'd Beverſton Caſtle in Wiltſhire, while Ogletborpe the Governor was abroad courting his Miſtreſs, and thence marching to Malmsbury he ſent a Summons to Col. Henry Howard the Governor, who, to his Honour be it ſpoken, return'd an Anſwer which no Cavalier Governor had the Wit or Courage to ſend before or after it, I keep the Town of Malmsbury for the King and Parliament aſſembled at Oxford. Upon which Maſſey's Foot got into the Suburbs, broke their Way thro' the Houſes till they came almoſt up to the Works, and the only Place of Entrance into the Town, which is built on the Level of a Rock. Maſſey caus'd a Blind to be made croſs the Street to bring up the Ordnance, loaden with Carbine Shot; but in the Heat of the Buſineſs the Fancy of an Alarm ſeiz'd upon his Men, that thoſe in the Town were ſallying out upon them. There was nothing in it, yet ſo prevalent was their Pannick, that thoſe very Men who at other Times would brave it in the Face of an Enemy, venture on Breaches, and even Mouths of diſcharging Cannon, were now ſmitten with ſuch Diſtraction and Fear, that they all fled when none purſu'd them, and left their Ordnance deſerted in the open Street. The Garriſon, by Reaſon of the Blind, perceiv'd not this Advantage, which otherwiſe had prov'd fatal to the Aſſailants. This Incident ſhews us that Cowardice as well as Courage has its critical Minute, and that Terror and Temerity poſſeſs Men ſometimes like Dæmons, and produce the moſt involuntary Actions. Maſſey had much ado to rally his amaz'd Soldiers, but at laſt they recover'd both their Courage and their Ground, and the next Morning a Forlorn Hope, ſeconded with a good Reſerve, advanc'd to the only Paſſage which had no Drawbridge, only a Turnpike, at which they flung in their Granades. Thoſe within made a Random Shot, but by the Diſadvantage of a rainy Night, their Muskets lying wet on the Ground, were little ſerviceable; and Maſſey's Men thronging into the Town, got Poſſeſſion of it May the 24th. Col. Howard was taken at the Works, making as brave a Defence as was poſſible. Maſſey gave ſtrict Orders that the Town ſhould be preſerv'd from Plunder, as he always did on the like Occaſions, giving this Reaſon, I cannot judge any Part of England to be an Enemy's Country, nor any Engliſh Town capable of Devaſtation by Engliſh Soldiers. A Saying worthy a great Commander, who was in Arms for the Defence of the Liberties and Properties of Engliſh Men.

About ten Days after, June the 5th, Colonel Maſſey drew out a Party of Men, 120 Horſe and 30 Dragoons under Major Hammond, and 300 Foot, with which he made himſelf Maſter of Tewkesbury, his Horſe and Dragoons coming up to the Main Guard before the Alarm was taken, overturn'd the Enemy's Ordnance, and charg'd thro' the Streets as far as the Bridge, Worceſter Way, where they took the Governor Col. Myn, who had deſerted the Service in Ireland. Col. Godfrey, Col. Vavaſor Quarter-Maſter General, and a Lieutenant, all three Papiſts, with other Officers of the Garriſon, were ſlain. Maſſey's Horſe and Dragoons, the Foot not yet come up, ſuppoſing themſelves to be wholly victorious, ſome of the Officers and Soldiers diſmounted and went into the Houſes, others diſpers'd themſelves, all neglected both making good the Bridge they enter'd at, and diſarming the Main Guard, for tho' they charg'd and routed them, yet they were now rally'd again, and obſerving the Enemy not ſeconded with Foot, and in Confuſion, they fell upon them, beat them out of the Town, and took ſeveral Priſoners. But Myn the Governor was ſecur'd and ſent over Severne as ſoon as he was taken, and by this Time Maſſey was advanc'd with his Foot to the Bridge towards Glouceſter, which he found drawn up and the Works mann'd on that Side. He poſted his Dragoons there while he drew up his Men round the Town, it being now dark Night; but before he could reach the farther End, where he enter'd, thoſe of the Town having loſt their Governor and ſeveral Officers, and deſpairing to maintain it, fled towards Worceſter about Midnight, leaving behind them 18 Barrels of Powder, Store of Match, 200 new Pikes, two Braſs Cannon, &c. The taking of this Place was of great Conſequence, it being a ſtrong Frontier Town, ſecuring that Side of the County of Glouceſter, and commanding a good Part of Warwickſhire, by which his Majeſty's Meaſures were broken, who intended to have made a Stand at this Paſs againſt Waller's Army. I am the longer about this Progreſs of Maſſey, for that there are ſeveral ſurprizing Turns in it, which doubtleſs will be Entertainment for the Reader, eſpecially conſidering that this active Officer endeavour'd afterwards to turn his Activity as well as Perſon on the other Side, tho' not with the like Succeſs and Reputation. It is not unnatural to impute it to the Cauſe on both Sides.

The taking and keeping of theſe Places ſo drain'd away Maſſey's Men, that he could no longer keep the Field, till recruited by the Arrival of Col. Stephens with three Troops of Horſe and two Troops of the Regiment of Col. Harley, a very worthy Gentleman, Father of that moſt excellent Proteſtant and Patriot Mr. Robert Harley, ley, to whoſe pious Memory is owing the Honour of having put a Stop to the Victorious Arms of England againſt France. Maſſey being inform'd that the King's Forces of Herefordſhire and Worceſterſhire were to join about Coſſelawn to waſte the Country about Glouceſter in Harveſt Time, a Work the Cavaliers moſt delighted in, he reſolv'd to prevent this Junction, and with 200 Horſe and 300 Foot was preparing to march; but juſt as they were ready an Accident happen'd, which had like not only to have ſpoil'd the Deſign, but to have ruin'd the whole Garriſon of Glouceſter; for there having that Morning at a Council of War ſome Words paſs'd between Major Gray, who had diſtinguiſh'd himſelf at the Siege of Glouceſter, and Major Hammond, the former began now to queſtion the latter for his haſty Language, and requir'd Satisfaction. His Challenge being either refus'd or ſlighted, Gray gave Hammond a Box on the Ear; upon which both drew, and after a Paſs or two Gray, who began the Quarrel, receiv'd his Death's Wound by a Thruſt in the Neck, and expir'd on the Spot. His Soldiers being then in Arms, not only refus'd to march, but threaten'd to be reveng'd on Hammond for the Death of their Major. The Governor, Col. Maſſey, was forc'd to uſe all the Art he was Maſter of to appeaſe them, and after an Hour's Perſwaſion and Treaty, they were ſomewhat qualify'd, and content to march Major General Myn, another Iriſh Deſerter, with 160 Horſe and 800 Foot, quarter'd at Red Marley, with whom next Morning, July the 27th, Col. Maſſey engag'd, and after a ſharp Encounter, Major General Myn was ſlain, with about 170 of his Men; Major Buller, 7 Captains, 4 Lieutenants, 5 Enſigns, and 300 Common Soldiers taken Priſoners: In the Purſuit of whom Maſſey's Forces met 150 Horſe and 500 Foot coming from Worceſter under Lieutenant Colonel Paſſie to join Myn. Paſſie, who commanded them, rode away before, not expecting an Enemy, and juſt at the Beginning of the Fight was coming up to Myn's Brigade to give Notice of the Approach of his Men; but meeting with ſome of Maſſey's, he was wounded and left for dead, by which each Party knew nothing of the other's Condition; but during the Time of Action the Worceſter Men were advanc'd near, while Maſſey's Men were ſcatter'd in the Purſuit of Myn's, whom they had routed. The firſt Diſcovery of theſe Men was made by Col. Broughton and Capt. Backhouſe, upon whom a blunt Trooper charg'd up from the Head of the Main Body in the Entrance of a Croſs Lane. Him they ſurpriz'd in the Name of Friends, drew him aſide, and inform'd themſelves of the Strength at Hand. After which they made a ſudden Outcry, as if they had a great Body ready for a Charge. The Worceſter Men ſuſpecting an Ambuſcade, ſtopp'd and retreated, which gave Maſſey an Opportunity to rally his diſpers'd Troops, and content with the Succeſs he had gain'd, to make his Retreat to Glouceſter, where he gave honourable Burial to the Body of Major General Myn.

I cannot yet leave the Company of this victorious Officer Col. Maſſey. After the Rout at Marſton Moor ſome of Prince Rupert's ſcatter'd Troops got towards Wales, and quarter'd about Hereford: Theſe he had a Mind to draw into the Weſt; but apprehending leſt Maſſey might intercept them, he to facilitate their Paſſage over Severne at Auſt, ſent a Party of 500 Horſe and Foot to fortify Beachly for a laſting Guard, being a Place of difficult Approach, a Gut of Land running out between Severne and Wye, but a commodious Paſſage from Wales to Briſtol, and the Weſtern Parts. Four Days after they had begun their Fortifications, and drawn their Trench half-way from the Bank of one River to the other, the reſt being well guarded with a high Quickſet Hedge lin'd with Musketeers, a Ditch within, and a fair Meadow beyond, in which was made an Entrenchment, Maſſey with about 600 Horſe and Foot advanc'd thither, and lighting on a Party of Horſe from Chepſtow, skirmiſhed and made them retreat. He fac'd the new Works that Evening, and next Morning waited an Opportunity to aſſault them, for at high Water the Place was inacceſſible, by Reaſon of the Ships which guarded each River with Ordnance lying level with the Banks, and clearing the Face of the Approach from Wye to Severne. He therefore took the Advantage of the low Water, and drew forth a Party for the Onſet. He ſelected 10 Musketeers out of the Forlorn Hope to creep along the Hedges, and there fall on. Theſe gave the firſt Alarm, and caus'd thoſe in the Works to ſpend their firſt Shot in vain; which being done before they could re-charge, the Forlorn Hope went on, and the Reſerve following, they ran up the unfiniſh'd Works, and got Poſſeſſion of them, killing ſeveral, and taking many Priſoners; but ſome recover'd Boats and made their Eſcape, and others were drown'd.

Deſtroys Pr. Rupert's Works at Beachley.

His next Expedition was the taking of Monmouth, which was indeed deliver'd to him by Lieutenant Colonel Kyrle, , who had revolted from the Parliament's Party on the Loſs of Briſtol, and weary of the Cauſe he was engag'd in, was willing to purchaſe his Peace of them at the Price of this important Town. Kyrle propos'd to Maſſey to pretend a ſudden Return to Glouceſter with his Forces from Beachley, and the Lieutenant Colonel would come out, as to fall on his Rear, which ſhould beat him back, and enter the Place with him. Maſſey accordingly gave out the Neceſſity of a Retreat, and having march'd back three Miles, lodg'd his Forces in a Thicket of the Forreſt of Dean, ſending out Scouts to prevent Diſcovery. The Intelligence ſoon reaches Monmouth, Lieutenant Colonel Kyrle draws out his Men, and is ſurpriz'd at Highmeadow Houſe about Midnight with 30 Horſe. Tho' as little Noiſe as might be was made, yet Col. Kyrle's Cornet eſcaping gave the Alarm to Monmouth, and the Garriſon ſtood upon their Guard when Maſſey came up to it, yet Kyrle arriving there with 100 ſelect Horſe, and pretending to return with many Priſoners, perſwaded the Guard at the Drawbridge to let it down with Col. Holtby the Governor's Conſent, but with much Jealouſy, and a ſtrong Guard, and the Bridge preſently drawn up again; inſomuch that this firſt Party were like to be made Priſoners, and began to ſuſpect that Kyrle, inſtead of betraying the Town, had betray'd them. However they declar'd themſelves, fell on, overpower'd the Guard, and made good the Bridge, ſome of 'em keeping a ſtrict Eye on Kyrle's Deportment, who fought as heartily as any of them, to let in the main Body, who ſoon maſter'd the Town, Sept. the 26th; but by the Favour of the Night, dark and rainy, the Governor and moſt of the Garriſon got off over the dry Graft.

Surprizes Monmouth.

The Surprize of Monmouth, the Key of South Wales, the only ſafe Intercourſe for the King's Army between the Weſt, Wales and the Northern Parts, alarm'd all the King's Party thereabouts, eſpecially the old Marquis of Worceſter, a zealous Papiſt, in his Caſtle of Ragland. He rais'd the Country, and call'd in ſome of Prince Rupert's Horſe to his Aſſiſtance, who with Sir William Blaxton's Brigade of 500 Horſe, and above 1000 Foot, march'd towards Monmouth and beat up a Quarter of Maſſey's, but after a briſk Skirmiſh was repuls'd, a Major of Horſe and two Captains ſlain, Sir William Blaxton wounded, and ſeveral Priſoners taken, of whom ſuch as were Welch Maſſey us'd very kindly, and ſoon after ſent them to their reſpective Homes, every one with a little Note directed to his Maſter, or the Pariſh where he liv'd, ſignifying, That the Intention of the Parliament and Maſſey's coming thither, was not to enſlave their Perſons, or take away their Goods or Livelihoods, but to preſerve their Lives and Fortunes, to open the Courſe of Juſtice, and free them from their heavy Burthens under the Forces of Rupert a German. By which Artifice, and free Diſcharge of all Priſoners, the Welch People began to entertain better Thoughts of the Parliament's Party than formerly: After this Colonel Maſſey demoliſh'd the Works at Beachley a ſecond Time, and drove away Sir John Winter, who had repair'd them.

Monmouth retaken.

But he could not hinder the Recovery of Monmouth by the King's Forces, who took the Town at a Diſadvantage when Lieutenant Colonel Throgmorton, whom he had left Governor there, was march'd with 300 Men to take Chepſtow. The Marquis of Worceſter's Tenants in Monmouth preſently ſent Notice of his having drawn off ſo many Men, upon which Colonel Rogers, Sir Trevor Williams, the Lord Charles Somerſet, the Marquis's Son, with a ſtrong Party came to the Town, and eaſily maſter'd it, taking the Committee Men, Colonel Broughton, Colonel Stephens, Mr. Catching of Trelleck, and Mr. Jones of Uske Priſoners, together with 4 Captains, 150 common Soldiers, 14 Pieces of Ordnance, 15 Barrels of Gun-powder. Thus was this important Place loſt by the Raſhneſs and Vanity of Throgmorton, that as Ruſhworth ſays, He might have the Honour of doing ſomething, or there would not have been any General in this War, who had begun, proſecuted and ended a Campaign with more Glory than Colonel Maſſey did this.

Leverpool taken by Sir John Meldrum.

One of the laſt Actions this Year was the Reduction of Leverpool by Sir John Meldrum, who had lain ſome Time before it and reduc'd it to great Straits, yet the Officers refuſing to ſurrender the Town to the Parliament, 50 of the Garriſon eſcap'd out of it, and drove away before them what Cattle they could to Meldrum, which thoſe that remain'd in the Town perceiving, and being moſt of them Iriſh, and fearing they ſhould be exempt from Quarter, they to make their Peace ſeiz'd on their Officers on the 1ſt of November, and deliver'd them Priſoners to Meldrum, who took Poſſeſſion of the Town, where were taken two Colonels, two Lieutenant Colonels, three Majors, 14 Captains, and great Store of Ordnance, Arms and Ammunition. The Royaliſts had ſhipp'd their beſt Goods to convey them to Beaumaris, but the Soldiers had Notice of it from the well affected in the Town, and manning out long Boats brought the Booty back again. We ſhall have too much Occaſion to ſpeak of the Diviſions and Sub-Diviſions in the Parliament and Army hereafter. What Echard ſays of them at the Cloſe of this Year's military Actions, is to repreſent both as Men of addle Pates, guided by Faction and Enthuſiaſm, while the Counſels at Oxford were the moſt ſober and the moſt ſage that human Policy could produce, though there were ſuch miſerable Diviſions and Diſtractions, the unavoidable Effects of Diſtreſs and Deſpair among them, and the ſage and ſober Counſellors ſo perſecuted the King with Advices and Demands, that Mr. Locke tells us, he had ſcarce the Liberty of Choice, whether to remain in their Hands, or put himſelf into the Hands of the Parliament Army. Nay, the King himſelf ſays in a Letter to his Queen dated at Oxford, April 9th, 1645. If thou knew what a Life I lead in point of Converſation, which in my Mind is the chief Joy or Vexation of one's Life, I dare ſay thou wouldſt pity me, for ſome are too wiſe. Thoſe are the Counſellors ſo often ſpoken of by the Earl of Clarendon, who was himſelf one of them. Some are too fooliſh: Theſe are the Counſellors ſo often ſpoken of by my ſelf. Some too buſy, others too reſerv'd, many Fantaſtick, &c. Echard hides all this as carefully as can be, that none of their Wiſdoms may be brought into Suſpicion, which he learn'd from the Lord Clarendon. This Letter was ſent to the Queen by Binion, the London Silkman, who though a Bankrupt at London made a rare Courtier at Oxford. The Miſunderſtandings among the Cavalier Officers had already ſhipp'd near 100 of them for Hamburgh, and foreign Parts, which is no great Wonder, for Perſons under Diſappointment and Calamity ſeldom agree well together, nor is there often more Agreement among Perſons fluſh'd with Succeſs. Demands riſe high in Proſperity, every Man judges of his Merit as it weighs in his own Scale, and in Adverſity every Man thinks he is at leaſt intitul'd to Complaint, and the Loſer will have leave to ſpeak. But the unhappy Differences which prov'd ſo fatal to the Parliament were yet in Embrio, and the Birth appear'd not with the Deformity which Echard gives it till two or three Years after. However, they now paſt ſeveral Ordinances which could not but ſeem Monſtrous to his Imagination. As, one for Ordination of Miniſters, notwithſtanding any Breach in the Apoſtolical Succeſſion. An Ordinance for providing them Maintenances out of Deans and Chapters Lands. An Ordinance for Eſtabliſhing the Aſſembly's Directory of Worſhip; and putting down the Common Prayer Book. I believe Mr. Archdeacon thinks no Wickedneſs in the World can come up to that. Such Ordinances as theſe muſt throw him into a Tremour; and that about ſcandalous Miniſters work it up to a Frenzy, and we cannot expect Ceremony from him towards a Senate who had aboliſh'd all Ceremonies in the Church.

A. D. 1644.

The Myſtery which he makes of the Deſigns of the Independents by the Change of the Generals, is not a Dream of his own, but of ſome of his ſober Writers, whom he has copy'd as faithfully as if they had been awake when they wrote for him. He makes the great Villainy of this Turn to be the Production of a Faſt when their Preachers kept the Pulpit 10 Hours, and the next Day Sir Henry Vane told them, If ever God appear'd to them it was in Yeſterday's Exerciſe, which could only proceed from the immediate Spirit of God. He beſought them to remember God and their Country; and that thoſe Parliament Men who had Places would lay them down, which of courſe remov'd Eſſex, Manchester, Waller, &c. among whom were thoſe Diſguſts and Diſagreements which were ſo prejudicial to the Service. The Reverend Hiſtorian repreſents thoſe Gentlemen who had been zealous for the Directory as out of their Wits, and to do that effectually he ſeems to have parted with his own. General Ludlow, who was himſelf an Independent, a Member of Parliament, a chief Officer of the Army, a Man of Honour, Genius, Vertue, Learning, Knowledge and Experience, ſpeaks of this Alteration ſoberly and rationally. " The Diſputes in the mean " Time continu'd in the two Houſes concerning " the Conduct of the Army, and though what " was objected touching the late Miſcarriages at " the Fight of Newbury, and elſewhere, amount-

" ed not to a formal Charge, yet it ſo far pre-
" vail'd with the Houſe of Commons, as to con-
" vince them of the Neceſſity of making an Al" teration in the Command of the Army, in or" der to bring the War to a Concluſion." Which Reſolution was taken by the Houſe upon a Report made to them by Mr. Zouch Tate, who, by the way, was a zealous Presbyterian, and no Independent, and is ſaid to be the only profeſs'd Presbyterians in the Houſe of Commons, when this Parliament met firſt, though there was a great Number of Puritans. Mr. Tate was Chairman of the Committee for reforming the Army, and repreſented in his Report, That the Committee had been endeavouring to obey the Order of the Houſe, but found the Condition of the Army as the Phyſician did the Blood of his Patient, who conſulted him about the Cure of a ſlight Tumour, when the whole Maſs of his Blood was entirely corrupted; that therefore the Committee had order'd him to acquaint the Houſe, that the whole Body of the Army being infected, nothing would ſerve for their Recovery leſs than the entire renewing of their Conſtitution.

Self-denying Ordinance.

The Houſe, that they might do it without giving Occaſion to any ſiniſter Reflections upon themſelves, agreed to a Self-denying Ordinance, the Grounds of which were expreſs'd to be the Clearing of the Parliament from the Aſperſions caſt upon them of prolonging the War, on purpoſe to gratify each other with Places, and neglecting their Duty in the Houſe by holding Employments in the Army, &c.

Every one knows Zouch Tate was no Creature of Cromwel's, and every one that has read the true Hiſtory of theſe diſtracted Times, ſuch as Rushworth's and Whitlocke's, muſt know, that the Diſagreement among the General Officers of the Parliament's Army, would neceſſarily corrupt the Soldiers; and if as they had begun their Defence with the Sword, they reſolv'd to end it by ſecuring their Religion, Rights and Liberties, they could not hope to do it without putting their Forces under other Management, and they could not change Hands more decently than by this Self-denying Ordinance, of which we ſhall hear more the next Year. Some Hiſtorians, as Gregorio Leti, who pretends he had his Memoirs from the Earl of Angleſey, who publiſh'd Whitlocke's Memorials, repreſents this Ordinance as the Effect of Cromwel's Intrigues to remove the Earl of Mancheſter, to whom he was Lieutenant General, and get the chief Command himſelf; but as he is out in moſt Things, notwithſtanding the Authority he boaſts of, ſo is he in this; and to me nothing can ſeem more natural, than that after Sir William Waller had been routed at Roundway Down, for want of Aſſiſtance from the Earl of Eſſex, and the Earl of Eſſex had been hinder'd of a compleat Victory at Newbury firſt Battle, for want of Aſſiſtance from Waller, after the Earl's Diſgrace in Cornwal, and his leaving the Army, not only there, but before the laſt Newbury Fight, after Cromwel's formal Complaint againſt Mancheſter, and Mancheſter's as formal Complaint againſt Cromwel, the Parliament ſhould put other Generals over their Armies. The Royaliſts were ſenſible that the Alteration would be for the worſt with reſpect to them, and that in the Low Condition of their Affairs a vigorous and zealous General would ſoon clear the Kingdom of them; but though they were afraid of this Change to a Degree hardly expreſſible, yet they put the beſt Face they could upon it, and ſeem'd to be Merry even when they trembled, calling the Parliament's new Model of the Army the new Noddle, and it is ſome of their beſt Wit too.

Elect. Palatine in England.

I have mention'd his Highneſs the Prince Elector Palatine's writing to the Parliament, and about the latter End of the Summer he came over into England, and was complimented by a Committee of both Houſes. This Prince appears to have a Senſe of true Religion, and to differ in Morals very much from his Brother Prince Rupert, who indulg'd himſelf in Looſeneſs of Life as well as Principle, though in his latter Days he became ſenſible of the Deſign to deſtroy the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty, and generally voted in Parliament with the Country Lords in King Charles the Second's Reign. The Committee inform'd his Electoral Highneſs, That the two Houſes were ſurpriz'd at his Coming without giving them any previous Notice, and conceiv'd his Reſidence abroad might be of great Advantage to the Publick, for the Parliament have always been very tender of the Affairs of his Highneſs, and will continue the ſame Regards, and are ready to expreſs it in their Actions and faithful Advice. To which the Elector reply'd, I hold my ſelf much oblig'd to the Parliament for their former Favours, and my Coming is to expreſs in Perſon what I have often done by Letters, my ſincere Affections unto them, and to take off ſuch Jealouſies as either the Actions of ſome of my Relations, or the ill Effects of my Enemies might by my Abſence caſt upon me. My Wiſhes are conſtant for the good Succeſs of the great Work you have undertaken for a Thorough Reformation, and my Deſires are to be rul'd and govern'd by your grave Counſels, and being ready to ſerve you, I will with Chearfulneſs embrace your Advice. The King wrote his Highneſs a Letter from Taviſtocke, Sept. the 27th, which was extreamly cold; and though his Majeſty ſaid, The Conſideration of your Mother's Son is the only Cauſe of my Curioſity, yet it is plain he was a little perplexed about it, and wanted to know who invited him, and what he meant by coming. The latter was very plain, his Highneſs could have no other Meaning than to procure Aſſiſtance of thoſe who were willing and able to aſſiſt him; whereas himſelf and his Intereſts, and the Intereſt of the Proteſtant Religion in Germany, had been ſhamefully abandon'd by the Court of England for above 20 Years, but the Palatine Houſe was too much Proteſtant to be regarded by Miniſters under the Influence of Villiers, Weſton, Wentworth and Laud. The two Houſes order'd an Apartment at Whitehall to be fitted up for his Highneſs, and 8000 Pounds a Year to be ſettled upon him, till their Circumſtances enabled them to make better Proviſion. They alſo paſt an Order for his being admitted, when he pleas'd, into the Aſſembly of Divines, to hear their Debates, as his Highneſs had deſir'd. A Committee was appointed to take his Affairs into Conſideration, and 10000 Pounds a Year order'd to be paid to his Royal Mother the Queen of Bohemia. Theſe Civilities from the Parliament are the Occaſion, I ſuppoſe, that Echard tells us, her Majeſty's two Sons Rupert and Maurice ſcorn'd their elder Brother the Elector. I have frequently obſerv'd with what Diſregard that Queen and her Royal Poſterity have always been treated by the Laudean Faction. If they had been famous for Foreſight one would think they foreſaw, that the Succeſſion of that Illuſtrious Houſe to the Crown would one Day ſave and ſecure the Reform'd Religion in England, the Liberties and Properties of the People, which they could not foreſee but with the utmoſt Terror and Deteſtation, as appears by the Tenor of their late Hiſtories.

The Proteſtant Succeſſion the Security of our Religion and Liberty in England.

Ordinance for Martial Law Commiſſioners.

In June this Year the Parliament paſt an Ordnance for excluding all Members of both Houſes, who

A. D. 1644. who had deserted them, and for electing Members to sit in the Place of those Commons who had been expell'd. Two Months after they pass'd the Ordinance for executing Martial Law, intended chiefly against Spies, Conspirators, Mutineers, Breakers of the Covenant, Deserters, Assisters of the Enemy; The Commissioners were the Earl of Northumberland, the Earl of Kent, the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Salisbury, the Earl of Bolingbroke, the Earl of Manchester, the Earl of Denbigh, Lord Viscount Say, Lord Wharton, Lord North, Lord Grey of Werke, Lord Robarts, Lord Lisle, Sir James Harrington, Sir William Waller, Sir Arthur Hasterigge, Sir John Corbet, Sir John Bampfield, Sir Henry Hayman, Col. Stapely, Colonel Whitehead, Col. Morley, Col. Purefoy, Col. Ven, Col. Jephson, Col Rigby, Col. Brown, Col. West, Col. Player, Col. Prince, Col. Harsnet, Col. Popham, Major General Skippon, Col. Fleetwood, Col. Williams, Col. Turner, Col. Maynwaring, Col. Whichcot, Col. Pindar, Colonel Humphry, Colonel Owen, Sir Nathaniel Brent, Dr. Thomas Eaton, Edward Baynton, Esq; William Molyns, Esq; John Bradshaw, Esq; Thomas Arundel, Esq; William Steel, Esq; Lieutenant Colonel Welden, Lieutenant Colonel Underwood, Lieutenant Colonel Wilson, Lieutenant Colonel Webb, Lieutenant Colonel Bradley, Major Salloway, Major Tichburn, Major Camfield. A Court as little likely to do any thing cruel and unjust, as could be hop'd for from the Birth, Education, Principles and Professions of so many noble Lords and Gentlemen, there being very few of them who were Gentlemen by their Offices only, as Ven and Brown. The latter indeed did sit in a bloody Court afterwards, and aton'd by his Injustice there for the Justice he did in this. The first Man who dy'd by this Act, was one Pit of Wolverhampton in Staffordshire, a profess'd Puritan, who being Tenant to Col. Levison the Popish Governor of Dudley Castle, was prevail'd upon to endeavour to bribe Capt. Tuthill Governor of Rushal-Hall to betray that Garrison for 2000 Pounds. Tuthil discover'd the Treason, and Pit at the Gallows express'd his great Sorrow for attempting the Fact for which he was to suffer.

An Ordinance for an Assessment for Ireland. In October an Ordinance pass'd for an Assessment thro' the Kingdom of England for the present Relief of Ireland and the British Army there. The City of London was assess'd 300 Pounds a Week, Middlesex and Westminster 125 Pounds a Week, and so all the Counties of England and Wales, amounting in all to about 4500 Pounds a Week.

For no Quarter to Irish Rebels in England. The Parliament also pass'd an Ordinance, that no Quarter should be given to the Irish who were found in Arms against them in England.

At this Time the Lord Macgwire and Hugh Oge Mac Mahon, Esq; were first brought upon their Trials for the Irish Rebellion, and their Guilt was so notorious, that Mr. Archdeacon cannot lay their Blood to the Parliament on any other Account, than that Macgwire was a Lord and try'd by Commoners. Macgwire and Mac Makon were taken at Dublin the Day before they were to have seiz'd that Castle, and to have murder'd the Lords Justices of Ireland. Mac Mahon immediately confess'd and boldly avow'd the Plot; but Macgwire would not then acknowledge it. At last he made a large Confession before the Lord Lambert and Sir Robert Meredith. About July 1642. they were sent for over to England and committed to the Tower, where they remain'd two Years, the Parliament not having Leisure to bring them to Trial. They then, by Confederacy with two Priests belonging to the Spanish Ambassador, and one Mr. Levison over against the New Exchange in the Strand, at whose House the French Agent lodg'd, got a Steel saw, with which in the Night they saw'd asunder the Door of their Chamber above two Inches thick, and so with Cords got over the Tower-Wall, and swam the Ditch. No News was heard of them in a Month. They took Lodgings at a Constable's House in Drury-lane, and one of them looking then out of Window to call an Oyster-Woman, happen'd to be spy'd by a Servant of Sir John Clotworthy, whose Servant O Conolly had discover'd their Plot; and probably the good Services of this Gentleman's Servants expos'd him to the Insults of the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Echard. The Lieutenant of the Tower hearing where they were hous'd, went and seiz'd them, and carry'd them back to Prison. Their late Escape put the Two Houses upon expediting their Trial. Mac Mahon pleaded Not Guilty, but was convicted by full Evidence, condemn'd, hang'd, drawn and quarter'd at Tyburn, Nov. 22. Macgwire pleaded his Irish Peerage; but Mr. Prynne and Serjeant Whitfield, Counsel for the State, argu'd learnedly against it, and the Court over-rul'd his Plea. The Witnesses who prov'd the Charge, were Sir William Cole, Sir Francis Hamilton, Sir William Steward, the Lord Blaney, the Lady Caulfield, and Sir Charles Coote. The Evidence was too full to admit of much Debate, so he was convicted and condemn'd to die as Mac Mahon did. He petition'd the Two Houses that he might be beheaded, which was refus'd, and in Truth the Gallows was good enough for such an impenitent bloody-minded Rebel. He had much Popish Trumpery about him when he mounted the Ladder, and Directions from his Priest how to make his Prayers, as, We fly to thee for Aid, O holy Mother of God. Hail! sweet Mother of Christ, pray for the Church of Ireland, M. Grea, Say Jesu Maria three Times, also a Pater and Ave and Jesu Maria three Times. Which Farce the poor Wretch was made to believe by his Priest would carry him to Heaven.

Retaken.

Condemn'd and executed.

About the same Time Sir Alexander Carew was brought to his Trial for Treason in contriving to betray the Island of St. Nicholas near Plymouth, of which the Parliament had made him Governor, to the King. Treachery is a Crime so unworthy a Gentleman, that it has a good Word in no History but in the Archdeacon's and the History he copy'd from. He tells us this Knight was willing to redeem his former Errors, his voting for the Attainder of the grand Apostate Strafford, and taking the Covenant, by Breach of Oath and Trust. It is no Matter how these Men gain their Ends, if they can but gain them. Carew was seiz'd in the very Fact by his own Soldiers, and sent up to the Parliament, who order'd him to be try'd by the Court Martial. The Witnesses against him were Mr Francis Mayor of Plymouth, Mr. Randal, and Mr. Willis, two Ministers, Capt. Hancock, Mr. Deep a Merchant, and Arthur Skinner Gent. Being found guilty, and condemn'd to be beheaded, his Lady petition'd for a Reprieve on Account of his distracted Condition, upon which a Committee was appointed to visit him, who reported that he was not distracted, but a Month's Time was given him to settle his Estate. He made a Speech on the Scaffold, wherein he said, All you can lay to my Charge is but Intention, and no Man knows my Intentions better than my self, and they shall die with my self. The Archdeacon makes an old Woman's Reflection on this Execution, ecution, that he was the next Man who was beheaded on that Scaffold after the Earl of Strafford. But what he makes of the Puniſhment of the Hothams is enough to ſet one a trembling; that their Death was another Inſtance of Divine Vengeance, for their being true to their Country, and ſecuring Hull. As if the Cauſe of Tyranny, Spiritual and Temporal, of Sabbath-Breaking, Superſtition, and Ceremonies, was the Cauſe of God. The Brachmans and Muſſelmans ſeem to know as much of the Chriſtian Religion as theſe Men do of the Reform'd.

Sir John Hotham try'd and condemn'd.

On the 30th of November Sir John Hotham was brought before the Court Martial at Guildhall, Sir William Waller Preſident. The Charge againſt him was for traiterouſly endeavouring to betray the Truſt the Parliament had repos'd in him, which was prov'd by his Letters to the Lord Digby and the Marquis of Newcaſtle. He made but a poor Defence, and Sentence of Death paſs'd upon him that he ſhould be beheaded; but on his Lady's Petition for Time to ſettle his Eſtate, he was repriev'd.

His Son Capt. Hotham try'd and condemn'd.

His Son Capt. Hotham was charg'd with holding traiterous Correſpondence with the Parliament's Enemies. One main Evidence was his own Servant John Keys, who depos'd that his Maſter having firſt ſworn him to Secrecy, ſent him to Newark with a Meſſage to the Queen, juſt after he was committed to Priſon in Nottingham Caſtle. 'Twas to deſire her Majeſty to ſend a Party to reſcue him, when he was remov'd thence to be ſent to London, or to the Lord General. Keys was intruſted with ſeveral other Notices for the Queen, and deſiring his Maſter to give him a Token that her Majeſty might give Credit to him, Hotham ſaid, By the ſame Token I ſent her a Letter by one of her own Doctors of Phyſick where ſhe might land in England. Keys further depos'd, that when he came to Newark and deliver'd his Letter, her Majeſty ſaid, This unhappy Accident had not fallen out if Capt. Hotham had come away when he firſt reſolv'd it. Upon which the Lord Digby ſtanding by, told her Majeſty, Both he and his Father had come in long ſince, but for doing your Majeſty better Service, and by forbearing it for a Time. So plain Evidence as this could not but produce the ſame Sentence as paſs'd againſt his Father 17 Days before. The Father being condemn'd the 7th of December to die on the 16th, and the Son was condemn'd the 24th of December to die the 1ſt of January, which I mention to ſhew Mr. Archdeacon's uncommon Veracity and Modeſty. He ſays, The vile Artifices us'd both before and after their Trials, were ſo unhuman, as have been rarely practis'd among Chriſtians. The Man who writes thus is a Dignitary in the Church. The Father was order'd firſt to ſuffer upon an appointed Day, and the Son the Day following. Ruſhworth tells us the Father was condemn'd to be executed the 16th of December, and the Son was not condemn'd till the 24th of December; he adds, they were try'd by a Court Martial, but he takes no Notice of the Ordinance which made the Court Martial the Law. The Lords having repriev'd Sir John Hotham for a few Days without Conſent of the Commons, it occaſion'd a Vote that no Reprieve ſhould be valid without the Conſent of both Houſes. This tragical Story takes up but a few Lines in the Archdeacon's Folio, and yet it teems with Falſities. He ſuffer'd Hugh Peters to tell the People he had reveal'd himſelf to him, and confeſs'd his Offences againſt the Parliament. What Laurence Echard ſays of Hugh Peters, they being both Miniſters, is ſo far from being true, that Sir John Hotham himſelf ſaid on the Scaffold, I was no way guilty of betraying Hull from the Parliament; and Hugh only told the People, It is the Deſire of Sir John Hotham, that ſince he has in his Chamber fully diſcover'd himſelf to me and other Miniſters, many Queſtions may not be put to him, but that he might have Liberty to ſpeak only what he thought fit concerning himſelf. Sir John diſown'd any Offence againſt the Parliament as to Hull, and Mr. Peters did not declare that he had confeſs'd his Offences. One cannot let ſuch Scraps of Hiſtory paſs without taking Notice of the Inſolence in them; for tho' Peters was a Man of a whimſical Character, yet his Station in the Proteſtant Church was of much more Eminence than the Hiſtorian's is like to be, at leaſt if he is rewarded as his Hiſtory deſerves.

Both executed.

The next Criminal brought before the Court Martial, Sir John Corbet Preſident, was an infamous Perſon, one Roger L'Eſtrange, a Writer of ſuch Hiſtory as our late Hiſtories of England, in the Reign of King Charles II. and a zealous Champion for the Church, in Echard's Senſe of that Word. His Crime was the contriving to betray the Town of Lynne in Norfolk to the Cavaliers. He receiv'd a Commiſſion from his Majeſty, beginning thus; We having receiv'd from our truſty and well-beloved Roger L'Eſtrange, &c. Which Commiſſion, ſaid the Judge Advocate, not being that of a Soldier to raiſe Men, but a Commiſſion of Bribery and Corruption, merely to make a Party in the Town by clandeſtine Ways, with Baits and Promiſes of Money and Preferment, and the Priſoner coming from the Enemy into the Parliament's Quarters without Drum, Trumpet, or Paſs, it brought him within the Danger and Penalty of a Spy. It was prov'd againſt him, that he promis'd one Mr. Leaman, a Sea Captain, 1000 Pounds, and Corporal Haggar 100 Pounds to make a Party in Lynne, which Leaman diſcover'd to Col. Walton the Governor, who ſent ſix Soldiers diſguis'd like Seamen to ſeize L'Eſtrange at Mr. Paſton's at Appleton Hall, where they took him and his noble Commiſſion, and he was condemn'd as a Spy, To be carry'd back to the Place from whence he came, and there to be hang'd by the Neck until he be dead. A Sentence which all honeſt Men in England wiſh'd afterwards had been executed. But he was repriev'd and ſhut up in Newgate ſeveral Years, where he learnt the Manners and Language of a Goal, as appear'd plentifully in his Obſervators, Ryehouſe-Plot, and other deteſtable Libels againſt the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty, which made him ſo great an Ornament to the Cauſe he eſpous'd, and a proper Subject for Mr. Archdeacon's Eulogy. Among other Pieces of Treachery, which, as the eaſieſt Way, the Cavaliers choſe to do their Work by, was the Attempt of one Mr. Barnard, a Parſon, to corrupt Major General Browne Governor of Abingdon. Barnard had left his Pariſh of Woolchurch, London, to be a Court Preacher at Oxford. Browne was a Sort of Kinſman of his, and as ſuch Barnard ſent to him for a Paſs to come and ſpeak with him, which being granted, he told the Major General he wiſh'd they were both on one Side. Browne, to ſift him, declar'd, if he thought himſelf in an Error, he would not be long in leaving it. Mr. Barnard then deſir'd Liberty to write to him, which the Major General granted, and the firſt Letter he wrote him informs Browne, His Majeſty wonder'd that he, who is recommended to him for many worthy Parts and Actions, which ſhew'd he was no Stranger to noble Qualities; He, who, &c. and Condemn'd to be hang'd in Smithfield.

A. D. 1644. ſo for 20 panegyrical Particulars, ſhould not only join with, but lead his Subjects againſt him. By the by, this ſame Major General, with all theſe heroical Endowments, was no more nor leſs than a London Woodmonger. The Parſon endeavour'd to prove that he was IPSO FACTO excommunicated for ſiding with the Parliament by two or three Texts out of Proverbs, the Writer of which never heard of Excommunication, and that he was commanded to run from his Colours by two or three Texts more in Timothy. That he was look'd upon as Mordecai look'd upon Eſther, as one advanc'd to reſtore the King to his Subjects, and his Subjects to the King. If Hugh Peters or Stephen Marſhal, whom Echard calls the Eſſex Parſon, had held forth like this Mr. Barnard, the Archdeacon could not have made himſelf too merry with them. Browne gave a civil Anſwer to his Letter, which was follow'd by another, with an Offer of being made a Baronet. But the Major General reply'd, Abingdon deſerv'd ſomething better. Upon which the Lord Digby wrote to him, and told him, He was a Perſon of much Reaſon, and very much a Gentleman, and if he will be ſo good as to receive his Majeſty's Forces into Abingdon, he ſhall have a Warrant to be a Baronet, and the Command of a Brigade in his Majeſty's Army. Browne anſwers, There is nothing wanting to an abſolute Concluſion between them, ſaving a ſpeedy Proviſion of his Affairs at London. The Reply from the Lord Digby highly extols the Major General's Diſcretion, and preſſes for a ſpeedy Concluſion. But the Major General receiving a Reinforcement of 1500 Foot into the Town, convinc'd the Lord Digby that Browne had made a Fool of him, which appear'd more fully in the Major General's next Letter, Did your Lordſhip imagine that your Ink would catch like Bird-Lime. You ſay you have hang'd a Spy of mine, and that you may be ballanc'd, this very Morning I will cauſe to be hang'd one of yours condemn'd by our Council of War. Digby out of Revenge wrote a Letter ſo worded, as to give the Parliament a Jealouſy of Browne, who anſwer'd it, as one who knew what he meant by it, The World may now ſee which Way the Queen convey'd from London the Jewels beyond Sea, and the Iriſh Rebels were brought over, which Way ſo many Overtures have appear'd and vaniſh'd, ſurely by my Lord Digby's Trick of Cleanly Conveyance, a Term Digby had us'd in his laſt Letter. Browne's Works about Abingdon were not finiſh'd, and had the Garriſon of Oxford attempted the Place, while he was fooling their Secretary of State, they muſt have carry'd it. But when the Fortifications were compleat the Major General told him ſo, and bad him Defiance. The Dexterity of this volatile Lord is the Subject of much Encomium in the Earl of Clarendon's and the Archdeacon's Hiſtories, though we ſee he is out-witted and banter'd by a Woodmonger.

Ld. Digby out-witted by Colonel Browne the Woodmonger.

1645. We have mention'd that there had been ſome Overtures for a Treaty made by his Majeſty. But the two Houſes conceiving that in thoſe Meſſages they were not ſufficiently own'd to be a Parliament, return'd only an expoſtulary Letter, and no farther Progreſs was made in it till about a Month before Chriſtmas, when both Houſes, with the Conſent of the Scottiſh Commiſſioners, having prepar'd certain Propoſitions for Peace, wrote to the King's General for a ſafe Conduct for the Lords and Commons, and Commiſſioners for Scotland, who were appointed to carry them to his Majeſty, and theſe were, the Earl of Denbigh, the Lord Maynard, the Lord Wenman, Mr. Pierpoint, Mr. Hollis, Mr. Whitlocke, the Lord Maitland, Sir Charles Erskines, Mr. Barclay. The Trumpet who carry'd the Parliament's Letter brought back a ſafe Conduct from Prince Rupert under the King's Hand and Seal, which yet took no Notice of them as Members of Parliament, but as private Perſons. The Commiſſioners were not very civilly us'd by Colonel Blake, Governor of Wallingford, who quarrell'd with the Earl of Denbigh concerning ſome Paſſages of the War, and Sir Jacob Aſhley Governor of Oxford made them wait ſome Hours in the cold open Field, at the latter End of November; at laſt they were admitted into the Town, and lodg'd at a ſorry Inn, the Katharine Wheel, near St. John's College. The next Day they had Acceſs to his Majeſty, and the Earl of Denbigh read the Propoſitions which the two Houſes of Parliament and the Scots Commiſſioners had agreed to, as the Ground Work of Peace. The King ask'd the Commiſſioners if they had Power to treat. They anſwer'd, No. But their Commiſſion was to receive his Majeſty's Anſwer in writing. His Majeſty reply'd, Then a Letter Carrier might have done as much as you. The Earl of Denbigh ſaid, I ſuppoſe your Majeſty looks upon us as Perſons of another Condition than Letter Carriers. The King reply'd, I know your Condition, but I ſay your Commiſſion gives you Power to do no more than a Letter Carrier might have done. Which caus'd ſome Diſſatisfaction in the Commiſſioners, who went away in it, but ſome of the Court Lords afterwards excus'd to them thoſe haſty Words. At the Reading the excepted Perſons Names which the Earl of Denbigh read with great Courage and Temper, Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice being preſent when there Names were read as Perſons excepted, they fell into a Laughter, at which the King ſeem'd diſpleas'd, and bad them be quiet. His Majeſty's Behaviour to theſe Commiſſioners in general did not promiſe well for a Peace. When he gave them his Anſwer 'twas ſeal'd up, which they did not think proper to receive thus, and humbly addreſs'd to have a Copy of it. The King reply'd, What's that to you, who are but to carry what I ſend, and if I will ſend the Song of Robin Hood and Little John, you muſt carry it. To which the Commiſſioners only ſaid, The Buſineſs we came about, and are to return with your Majeſty's Anſwer, is of ſomewhat more Conſequence than that Song. Whitlocke, one of them, ſays, " Other Paſſages there " were which ſhew'd the King to be then in no " good Humour, and more wonder'd at, eſpe- " cially in a Buſineſs of this Importance, where " the diſobliging of the Commiſſioners could " be of no Advantage to the King; but all was " endeavour'd to be made up again by ſome " Lords about his Majeſty before the Commiſſi- " oners came away, and a Copy of the Anſwer " was ſent them. They took another Excep- " tion to the Paper, which was directed to no " Body, nor the Parliament ſo much as acknow- " ledg'd or nam'd in it." To which the King anſwer'd, It was deliver'd to the Parliament's Commiſſioners, and that was ſufficient. Some of the Lords told them, They could not get it otherwiſe, chiefly becauſe they were there as Commiſſioners of both Kingdoms, and earneſtly entreated them for Peace ſake to receive it as it was ſent, which was at laſt conſented to, and they carry'd it to the Parliament. Both Houſes had a Conference upon his Majeſty's Anſwer. In the Preamble of which were High Expreſſions of his Deſires of Peace, and he demanded a Safe Conduct for the Duke of Lenox and Earl of Southampton to bring his Anſwer to the Propoſitions, which was granted, and Somerſet Houſe order'd Commiſſioners ſent to Oxford.

A. D. 1645. Ill us'd by the King's Officers.

A. D. 1645. to be prepared for their Reception: But no Member of either Houſe was permitted to viſit them or ſend to or receive any Meſſage from any one that came from Oxford without leave. All the Anſwer the King's Commiſſioners brought, was a Propoſal for Perſons to be appointed to treat on both Sides and debate the Propoſitions, which the Parliament had ſent to his Majeſty, which being voted, ſafe Conducts were granted by King and Parliament for their reſpective Commiſſioners, and Uxbridge appointed to be the Place of Treaty.

Treaty at -Uxbridge.

The King's Commiſſioners.

Theſe Commiſſioners for the Treaty on both Parts met at Uxbridge, Wedneſday the 29th of January, and ſeveral Viſits paſt between them; Sir Edward Hyde viſited Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke; the Lord Colepepyr did the ſame to Sir Henry Vane, and others of the King's Commiſſioners viſited ſeveral of the Parliament's, with whom they had long Diſcourſes about the Treaty, which both Sides ſeem'd very forward to promote; but it was viſible as ſoon as it open'd, that the King did not think his Caſe ſo deſperate as he ſoon found it to be, when the Campaign was begun and his Commiſſioners made no Conceſſions which they could ſuppoſe would be ſatisfactory. Mr. Archdeacon continues the Character of his Hiſtory in the Account he gives us of this Treaty: The very Opening of it being falſe and taken from a French Papiſt. The Parliament inveſted their Commiſſioners with a Power only to treat, whereas the King inveſted
587. his with a full Power not only to treat but to conclude. Salmonet ſays, Au lieu que le Roy Leur avoit donnè un plain Pouvoir de traitter librement & deconclurre ſur tout le detail des Affaires les Eſtats avoient reſtraint les Pouvoirs de leurs Deputez aux Inſtructions qu'ils recevroient, which is directly the Reverſe of the Truth. Whitlocke aſſures us the King's Commiſſioners ſaid, We are bound up by our Inſtructions from his Majeſty, and can go no further. A. D. 1645.

Sir John Benner's Houſe at the farther End of the Town was fitted up for the Place of Meeting, and the firſt Thing they treated upon when the Commiſſioners met there, was Religion, the chief Article of which Dr. Stuart aſſerted to be not Faith and Piety, but Epiſcopacy, ſuch as that of Munſter and Toledo, which he affirm'd to be Jure Divino. By Epiſcopacy he muſt underſtand Baronies, Lordſhips, Titles, Dignities, Spiritual Courts, Prerogatives, Mitres, Croſiers, &c. Which it was impoſſible for the Apoſtolical Biſhops to have or think of, there not being a Power upon Earth which did not treat them as Enemies; for if the good Doctor had ſaid, that Biſhop Titus and Biſhop Timothy's Vocation to preach God's Word and take Paſtoral Care of their Flocks was Jure Divino, nay that their pious Succeſſors have the ſame Divine Right which thoſe primitive Biſhops had, there would not have been a Word ſaid againſt him. Mr. Henderſon and Mr. Marſhal ſpoke in Praiſe of Presbyterian Government as more ſuitable to the Word of God, and conſequently Jure Divino; and the Marquis of Hertford reply'd to both of them, My Lords, here is much ſaid concerning Church Government in general; the Reverend Doctors on the King's Part affirm, that Epiſcopacy is Jure Divino; the Reverend Miniſters on the other Part do affirm the Presbytery is Jure Divino; for my Part, I think that neither the one nor the other is Jure Divino; and I deſire we may leave this Argument, and proceed to debate upon the particular Propoſals. The Earl of Pembroke was of the ſame Judgment, and many of the Commiſſioners beſides theſe two Lords were willing to paſs over this Point, and to come to the Particulars. But the Jure Divino Men on both Sides ſtood to their Text, and the Lay Commiſſioners could not but perceive the Peace they came to treat about would not be much forwarded by the warm Debates of the Clergy. One of them, Mr. Chriſtopher Love, who it ſeems was a Voluntier, and was come to Uxbridge without being ſent, preach'd there to the Market People, and ſaid in his Sermon, They were not to expect any good from the Treaty, for that they came from Oxford with Hearts full of Blood, and that there was as great a Difference between this Treaty and Peace, as between Heaven and Hell, and that they only amus'd the People with Expectations of Peace, till they were able to do ſome fatal Miſchief. This Piece of Impudence would have deſerv'd ſome notable Puniſhment, if the King's Commiſſioners had not really ſo amuſed the People. Their Memorial upon it was ſent to the Parliament, but the Treaty broke up ſo ſoon that Love eſcap'd Animadverſion. In the Management of the firſt Article about Religion, and Epiſcopacy as a Fundamental of it, we may ſee by the Papers on both Sides how hopefully the Buſineſs went on. Epiſcopacy.

King's Commiſſioners Paper. "As we have "given your Lordſhips already many Reaſons "concerning the Injuſtice and Inconveniency "which would follow upon paſſing the Bill for "aboliſhing Epiſcopacy: So we are ready now "by Conference to ſatisfy your Lordſhips, why "we conceive that the ſaid Bill is not for the "Glory of God or the Honour of the King.

Parliament's Commiſſioners Reply. "We "have received no Satisfaction from your Lord-"ſhips, nor have you yet made appear unto us "any Injuſtice or Inconveniency in the paſſing "of the Bill for aboliſhing Epiſcopacy." This occa-

A. D. 1645. occasion'd a new Debate between the Divines for Episcopal and Presbyterian Government; and after it was over,

The Parliament's Commissioners deliver'd another Paper. "There having now been several Days spent upon the Proposition for Religion, and all Objections alledg'd to the contrary, either from Conscience, Law, or Reason being fully answer'd, we should be wanting to the Trust repos'd in us, if we did not press for a clear Answer to the Proposition concerning Religion.

King's Commissioners. "We deny that the Objections alledg'd by us against the passing the Bill for abolishing Episcopacy, from Conscience, Law or Reason, have been fully answer'd by your Lordships, or that indeed we have receiv'd any Satisfaction from your Lordships in those Particulars; and we should be wanting to the great Trust repos'd in us if we should consent, &c.

Parliament's Commissioners. "We did assure our selves that after so many Days Debate concerning Religion, and our Removal of whatever Objections had been offer'd by your Lordships, and our making appear how great a Hindrance Episcopal Government is, and hath been to a perfect Reformation, to the Growth of Religion, and prejudicial to the Civil State, that your Lordships would have been ready to have answer'd our Expectation, &c.

King's Commissioners. "It is evident, and we conceive consented to on all Purposes, that Episcopacy hath continu'd even from the Apoples Times by continual Succession in the Church of Christ without Intermission or Interruption.

If two of them speak, or two Hundred of them it is all one. Eternal Sophistry and Prevarication! That the Function and Title of a Bishop to preach the Gospel, administer the Sacraments, to take the Pastoral Care of one Church, and sometimes to superintend others, in a brotherly exhortative Manner, was without Intermission or Interruption is true; but could the most invincible Assurance pretend that the Matters for which the King's six Doctors contended, Mannors, Royalties, Peerages, temporal Powers, Courts and Castles, have been without Intermission or Interruption in the Church of Christ, from Pope Linus's Time to Pope Joan's, or Pope John's 800 Years after. I have before me a very learned and judicious Writer, Mr. Tallents, who knew the State of this Affair better than the Uxbridge Doctors; and I shall give his own Words, which will be sufficient and satisfactory, and there needs no more be said of it.

Binius Can. Apost. "The Names of Bishop and Presbyter were promiscuously used, and not distinguish'd for above 200 Years. There were good Bishops at Rome till after the Year 300: From thence they declin'd much, till the Year 600, and from thence they grew very bad. The Catalogues of these Bishops seem very fair; This is the boasted Succession, without Intermission or Interruption; but there is great Confusion in them: Few of them are alike. Some are nam'd that were never in Being. The Times of most are uncertain, and the Names of divers unknown; there being no certain Writer of their Lives from the Year 858, to the Year 1047. Besides, there were many long Vacancies, and 30 Schisms, 2 or 3 Bishops or Popes at the same Time. There are also great Differences about the first 6 Bishops, as Baronius confesses: Some say St. Peter came to Rome Anno 42. some say 63. and some not at all. We must by no Means imagine the first Bishops of Rome, who were holy Men, and gave themselves to Prayer and the Word, were like the Bishops in after Ages or now, &c." What Mr. Tallents says is agreeable to the A. D. 1645.

Parliament's Commissioners Reply. "So far were we from consenting that Episcopacy hath continu'd from the Apostles Times by continual Succession, that the contrary was made evident to your Lordship, and the Unlawfulness of it fully proved." Warwick, who is certainly as good a Divine and Casuist as he is a Politician and Historian informs us, that the Presbyterians storm'd at Dr. Lany; and Dr. Hammond prov'd by Scripture that the Covenant was against it. Echard assures us, impartial Men, such as the Earl of Clarendon and himself, thought the King's Divines superior to the other in Argument and Genius; the last Word Genius is very good if he understood it, and if he had we should not have found it in his Panegyrick. This is their modest way of talking. By Superiority here, if any Thing is meant it is Confidence, they out fronted the Presbyterian Divines, as we read in Whitlocke, Dr. Steward, and Dr. Sheldon argu'd very positively, that the Government by Bishops was Jure Divino; Mr. Henderson and Mr. Vines argu'd as positively, but more modestly, that the Government of the Church by Presbyteries was Jure Divino.

King's Commissioners. "We must profess to your Lordships that we did conceive the Succession of Episcopacy from the Apostles was consented to on all Sides, and cannot remember that the contrary thereof was so much as alledg'd, much less that the Unlawfulness thereof was prov'd.

One may perceive by this with what Spirit and with what Truth these Gentlemen and Doctors argu'd. It was not possible for the Parliament's Commissioners to debate this Article, but they must at least alledge some such Thing: But the King's Commissioners, the Lords, Knights, and Doctors, do not remember a Syllable of it, and a Treaty was likely to come to something that was made up of asserting and denying. His Majesty's Commissioners were oblig'd to allow that the spiritual Courts ought to be obolish'd by taking away their Fees and Excommunications; yet that scandalous Grievance, which not only reflects on the Protestant but the Christian Religion, and indeed upon all Religion, as being a Mart for Wickedness by Mulcts and Commutation, &c. is still the Complaint of all honest Men, and the Practices of those mean mercenary Officers the Infamy of a great and generous Nation. The King's Commissioners offer'd that Ceremonies should not be enjoyn'd, which in Truth was to abolish them; that Bishops should not ordain without Consent of the Presbytery; that they should preach every Sunday and reside in their Dioceses, and that Pluralities should not be suffer'd, &c. But the Parliament's Commissioners had engag'd for the establishing of the Covenant which abolish'd Episcopacy, and it was great Pity they could accept of nothing less; for the King's Commissioners could yield to nothing more: So that Article remain'd in Statu quo.

Militia. The next was that of the Militia, the Power of which the Parliament's Commissioners demanded to be vested in such Persons as both Houses and the Parliament of Scotland should nominate, which, says Echard, Lane, Gardiner, Bridgman and Palmer, prov'd to be without any Pretence of Law or Justice. Observe how positive he is, and yet the very contrary of it is the Fact. He adds, "Sir Edward Hyde

A. D. 1645.

" and Mr. Whitlocke had ſome Diſputes, but to " no Effect ;" that is, the King's Commiſſioners would make no Conceſſion that was effectual. Whitlocke's own Account of it is as follows ; " Sir Edward Hyde would have had it " for granted that the whole Power of the Militia, by the Law of England, is in the King " only : Mr. Whitlocke deny'd this to be ſo very " clear, and undertook to make it out, that our " Law doth not poſitively affirm where that " great Power is lodg'd, and doubted not but to " ſatisfy the Commiſſioners fully in that Point : " Upon which it was mov'd that a Day might be " appointed to hear their Arguments, but the " Earl of Southampton was againſt a formal Debate, which would take up too much Time, " and ſo was Mr. Hollis. However the Commiſſioners of England and Scotland at their " Return to their Quarters gave Whitlocke " Thanks for encountring Sir Edward Hyde " upon the Point of Right as to the Militia, " wherein he was ſo confident. They ſaid the " Honour of the Parliament was concern'd there- " in, and Whitlocke had vindicated it." However the King's Commiſſioners, continues Echard, to ſhew their Readineſs for an Accommodation, propos'd, that for ſeven Years the Perſons to be truſted with the Militia, ſhould be nam'd half by the King and half by the Parliament : Whereas the Truth is, the Parliament to ſhew their Readineſs for an Accommodation, ſent an Expreſs to their Commiſſioners at Uxbridge to propoſe a " Limitation of the Militia for three " Years after the three Kingdoms are declar'd " by the King and Parliament to be ſettled in " Peace, or have it ſettled in the Parliament " for ſeven Years after the Time the King is " willing to ſettle it.

Ireland. The Third Article about Ireland is told as faithfully as the reſt. The Archdeacon writes, " Sir Edward Hyde, who knew the Secrets of " that Affair, undertook the King's Vindication, " and hiſtorically diſplay'd the Juſtice and Piety " of the King's Proceedings, and the inevitable " Neceſſity of the Ceſſation with the bloody " Iriſh REBELS." This is not only directly againſt the Truth, but in full Defiance of it. That pious and juſt Act ſtruck the whole Nation with Horror, and one cannot read it without ſhuddering. Theſe Iriſh Rebels had juſt maſſacred 200000 Proteſtants, Men, Women and Children, with the greateſt Variety of diabolical Cruelty. The Blood of thoſe Innocents was ſtill as it were reeking on the Hands that ſign'd the Treaty on the Part of the Maſſacrers. As to the Juſtice of it, let us ſee what the Parliament's Commiſſioners at Uxbridge ſaid after the Matter had been debated. " It is very contrary to our " Expectation to find your Lordſhips unſatisfy'd, " notwithſtanding the Arguments and Reaſons " alledg'd by us that his Majeſty had not Power " to make the Ceſſation with the REBELS in Ire- " land ; and that upon Peruſal of the Statutes, " it appears not to you that his Majeſty had no " Power to make that Ceſſation. It is ſtrange " that your Lordſhips had forgot all other Arguments uſed by us from the Common Law " from other Proceedings in Parliament, and " Circumſtances as this Caſe ſtands, on which " we ſtill inſiſt, and do affirm, that his Majeſty " had no Power to make or conſent to that Ceſ- " ſation ;" which indeed is as plain as ſimple Fact and common Senſe can make a Thing ; for by an Act of Parliament paſs'd by this King himſelf, the Contributors of Money towards carrying on the War in Ireland, were to be repaid out of the forfeited Eſtates in that Kingdom, and this Ceſſation cut off thoſe Forfeitures. The King's Commmiſſioners, in the Management of this Point, ſpoke and acted like Perſons who were aſham'd of the Buſineſs, but yet were oblig'd to juſtify it, and confirm it, the King having not only ſent for Sir Michael Ernly's, Sir Richard Fleetwood's, Col. Monk's, Col. Gibſon's, and Col. Warren's Engliſh Regiments from Ireland ; but the Ceſſation was then about to be turn'd into a Peace, and the Popiſh REBELS were treating with him to ſupply him with an Iriſh Army to reduce the Parliament of England. One can't without bluſhing read the frivolous Excuſes of the King's Commiſſioners for the Marquis of Ormond's refuſing to take Vengeance on the Murderers of ſo many Thouſands of unarm'd defenceleſs Proteſtants. We have ſeen what was the Juſtice of this Ceſſation, and the Piety of it could not but be ſeen at the ſame Time. The Parliament's Commiſſioners earneſtly beſought the King's, That God's Quarrel might be rereng'd upon thoſe perfidious Enemies of the Goſpel of Chriſt, who had imbru'd their Hands in ſo much Proteſtant Blood ; and that they would conſider the Ceſſation that is made with them is for their Advantage, and rather a Protection than a Ceſſation, as if it had been all of their own contriving, Arms, Ammunition, and all manner of Commodities being to be brought to them, that afterwards they may the better deſtroy the ſmall Remainder of the Proteſtants. The Parliament's Commiſſioners add, Again, we beſeech your Lordſhips, in the Bowels of Chriſtian Charity and Compaſſion to ſo many poor Souls, who muſt periſh if the Strength of that raging Adverſary be not broken, and in the Name of him who is the Prince of Peace, who hates to be at Peace with ſuch Shedders of Blood, give not your Conſent to the Continuance of this Ceſſation, till Juſtice have been fully executed upon the Actors of that accurſed RE-BELLION. Let not the Judgment of War within this Kingdom, which God hath laid upon us for our Sins, be increas d by ſo great a Sin as any Peace or Friendſhip with them, whatſoever becomes of us : If we muſt periſh, let us go to our Graves with that Comfort, that we have not made Peace with the Enemies of Chriſt, yea the Enemies of Mankind, declar'd and unreconcil'd Enemies to our Religion and Nation. Yet, according to the Reverend Hiſtorian, the making Peace with theſe Enemies of Chriſt was an Act of great Piety. As to the inevitable Neceſſity of it, the Falſhood of that Pretence is as ſelf-evident as that there is Light in the Sun : For the Engliſh Proteſtants in Ireland, for whoſe Preſervation it was ſhamefully pretended to be made, proteſted, complain'd, and petition'd againſt it, and yet it is confidently ſaid at Uxbridge, His Majeſty's Engliſh Proteſtant Subjects could not ſubſiſt without a Ceſſation. There is nothing in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, or Mr. Archdeacon's Hiſtory, more falſe than this, The Parliament's Commiſſioners anſwer'd the King's ; The contrary is undeniable, and his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects there, both Engliſh and Scottiſh, who have oppoſed that Ceſſation, have ſubſiſted, and do ſtill ſubſiſt. It was ſaid again by the King's Commiſſioners, The poor Proteſtants in Ireland were preſerv'd, and that Kingdom kept from utter Ruin by the Ceſſation of Arms made with the Popiſh bloody REBELS. Nothing falſer than this is to be met with in Monkiſh Fables and Legends ; it is not only the very Reverſe of a Truth which every body knew, but which they that ſaid it could have prov'd better than any one. The Parliament's Commiſſioners reply'd, It is moſt apparent that the Neceſſities alledg'd for the Grounds of that Ceſſa-

A. D. 1645. Ceſſation were made by Deſign of the Popiſh and Prelatical Party in England and Ireland, who ſo wickedly contriv'd the ſame, that the Proviſions ſent thither by the Parliament for Relief of his Majeſty's good Subjects in Ireland, were diſpos'd of, and afforded to the REBELS there in their greateſt Wants. Many wicked Inſtances of this Deſign are ſet forth in their Paper of the 22d of February; and this is the juſt and pious Affair of which, ſays Echard, Sir Edward Hyde knew the Secrets. Theſe Men do really know no more of Piety and Juſtice, than what Mr. Archdeacon expreſſes in his Vindication of that impious and unjuſt Ceſſation, of which Whitlocke writes thus; The Earl of Ormond concluded the Ceſſation with the Iriſh REBELS, and divers of them under Col. Ernley came over hither to ſerve the KING. A Miniſter was voted out of his Living for conſtantly praying for the Iriſh REBELS. Sir William Brereton reported to the Houſe of Commons, that the Iriſh REBELS commit great Spoil and Cruelty where they come in Cheſhire, and that more of them are expected over. The Houſe taking into Conſideration the Marquis of Ormond's treating with them, and ſending them over to England, voted to impeach him as a TRAYTOR to the Three Kingdoms. In the mean while 20000 of the Scots in the North of Ireland vow'd to live and die together in Oppoſition to the Ceſſation. The Earl of Inchiquin, who commanded the Engliſh Army in Munſter, wrote a Letter to the King, ſubſcrib'd by all the chief Officers, Earl of Inchiquin, Lord Broghil, Sir William Fenton, Sir Percy Smith, Lieutenant Col. William Brocket, Lieutenant Col. Thomas Searl, Major Muſchamp; wherein they earneſtly pray'd his Majeſty to revoke the Truce which his Commiſſioners at Uxbridge ſaid again and again, and no doubt would have ſworn it, was made on Purpoſe to preſerve them. The Concluſion of this Letter was thus, Whatever your Majeſty's Reſolution is hereupon, ours is to purſue the War vigorouſly againſt thoſe inhuman and furious BUTCHERS, and we will rather chuſe to die Martyrs in a good Cauſe, than baſely abandon the Defence of it. What Baſeneſs was it then not only to abandon thoſe brave Men, but to aſſert that the abandoning them was to ſave them, the Nonſenſe of which is without Example, as is the Effrontery of juſtifyiug an unjuſt and impious Act as a pious and juſt one. But to cloſe this Article, and give a ſolid Proof of the Ingenuity of the King's Commiſſioners at Uxbridge, and of the Modeſty and Ingenuity of their Hiſtorians, Mr. Hyde and Mr. Echard, let us read what Sir John Temple, Maſter of the Rolls in Ireland, and a Privy Counſellor there when this Ceſſation was made, ſays of it.

Larr. p. 210.

" After a conſiderable Number of Horſe as well " as Foot ſent over by the Parliament of Eng- " land arriv'd at Dublin, and had in ſome petty " Encounters thereabouts try'd the Metal of the " REBELS, and found their Spirits of a poor " and baſe Allay, they began extremely to diſ- " value them, and would be no longer abus'd " with the fabulous Reports of their great " Strength and Numbers, which with much Ad- " vantage they had long made uſe of. There- " fore now they began to ſeek them out in all " Places, and whereſoever they met with them " they always prevail'd even with ſmall Num- " bers very often againſt great Multitudes of " them, ſparing not many Times to purſue them " into the midſt of their greateſt Faſtneſſes, and " made the very Bogs and Woods unſafe Recep- " tacles for their broken Forces, and with ſo great " Succeſs was the WAR proſecuted by the Eng- " liſh, from the firſt landing of their Forces out " of England, until the TREATY OF THAT " MOST UNHAPPY CESSATION concluded " in September 1643. as that in all the Encoun- " ters they had with the REBELS during that " Time, they never received any Scorn or De- " feat, but went on victoriouſly beating them " down in all Parts of the Kingdom." This Gentleman was on the Spot, a great Sufferer by that accurs'd REBELLION, and was like to be ſtill as great a Sufferer as any Man in Ireland, yet he is ſo far from thinking there was any Preſervation for him in the Truce with the Maſſacrers, that he bewails the concluding it. What Abſurdity, what Stupidity, and worſe ſtill than all that, are there in pretending to conclude a Treaty to preſerve thoſe People who know there is no Preſervation for them but in breaking it, and continuing the War. The Truth is, the Militia, Epiſcopacy, and the bringing Delinquents to Puniſhment were Things the King himſelf, his Biſhops and his Counſellors, could not bear the Thoughts of, and the King could not maintain his Ground another Campaign againſt the Parliament without Aſſiſtance from the Iriſh Papiſts, who according to what the Parliament's Commiſſioners ſaid at Uxbridge, were in League with the Prelatical Party; and Agents from the Iriſh Maſſacrers were admitted by the Court of Oxford, to whom the King, when he took his Leave of them, ſaid, we have both need of one another, Ruſhw. that we neither of us may fail of what we deſign. The Deſign of the bloody Iriſh REBELS was to cut the Throats of all the Engliſh Proteſtants in that Kingdom, and reſtore the Papal Tyranny and Idolatry. This Deſign was open and avow'd, the Lord Inchiquin, in a Letter he wrote Colonel Myn before he deſerted the Service in Ireland, writes thus, Some Counſellors about the King have prevail'd with him to make ſuch an Agreement with the Rebels here, as leaves the Intereſt he now has in their Power, whereof we find they mean to make uſe for the Extirpation of the Engliſh Nation and Proteſtant Religion out of this Kingdom, of which we have given the King notice, &c. However, the King tells them farther, You muſt not defer putting it in Execution, by aſſiſting me with all your Forces againſt my REBEL Subjects of England. Do you aſſiſt me to ſubdue them, and when you have done me that Service, you the Iriſh Butchers, the King himſelf calls them ſo, Ruſhw. p. 240. may expect all the Support and all the Protection that can be hop'd for from a grateful Prince. At the Head of this Agency, were Dermot Mac Trag Obrien, one of the moſt barbarous of thoſe Butchers, the Lord Muskerry, Sir Robert Talbot, &c. and one need not ſay how welcome they were to the Court at Oxford, after what we have repeated of the Speech which was there made to them. Thus ended the famous Treaty of Uxbridge, after it had laſted 24 Days, in which, according to Whitlocke, There appear'd no Compliance in the King's Commiſſioners to grant any of the Propoſitions, and they only preſs'd for longer Time. Dr. Welwood, in his Memoirs, imputes the King's Obſtinacy in refuſing the leaſt Compliance, except a little in the Article of Epiſcopacy, to a Letter he received at that critical Juncture from Montroſe, who with a Party of Banditti, for moſt of his Followers were no better than Highland Robbers, had over-run Scotland, but made no Settlement. The Biſhop of Salisbury told this Story to Welwood, not with a Deſign he ſhould print it, and having himſelf related it in his own Hiſtory, I ſhall take it thence. The Marquis of Montroſe's Succeſs was very Miſchievous, for when the King had been

Bp. Sal. p. 59.

A. D. 1645. been ſatisfy'd by Whitlocke and Hollis, two of the Parliament's Commiſſioners at Oxford, juſt before the Treaty at Uxbridge, that it was his Intereſt to make Peace with the Parliament on the Foot of their Propoſitions, ſoftned in ſome Places, and many of his Counſellors, as the Earl of Southampton, Earl of Dorſet, Lord Colepepyr, not Digby nor Hyde, &c. were of the ſame Opinion, juſt then the King receiv'd a Letter from the Lord Montroſe, with ſuch an Account of what he had done, of the Strength he had, and of his Hopes next Summer, that the King was by that prevail'd on to believe his Affairs would mend, and that he might afterwards treat on better Terms. This unhappily wrought ſo far, that the Limitations he put on thoſe he ſent to treat at Uxbridge, made the whole Deſign miſcarry. Montroſe wrote to his Majeſty, That he had gone over the Land from Dan to Beerſheba, which was true as to his riding Poſt and outrunning Oppoſition; but as Biſhop Burnet obſerves, he had made himſelf Maſter of no ſtrong Places or Paſſes, and therefore had it in his Power only to do Miſchief to his Country without doing good to his Maſter. He added, Come thou and take the City leſt I take it and it be called in my Name; for having been a rank Covenanter and bigotted Presbyterian, he wanted not Texts of Scripture to expreſs his Vanity now as they had done his Hypocriſy before. Moſt of the King's Commiſſioners at Uxbridge, who were not excepted out of the Parliament's Article of Indemnity, as Mr. Hyde always was, were for accommodating Matters before they left Uxbridge. The good Earl of Southampton rode Poſt from Uxbridge to Oxford, to preſs the King to yield to the Neceſſity of the Times, and by giving his Aſſent to the moſt material Propoſitions, ſettle a laſting Peace with his People: All the wiſe and innocent Part of his Council preſt him to do it upon their Knees, and his Majeſty, though very reluctant, at laſt was prevail'd upon to follow the wholeſome Counſel of thoſe faithful Counſellors. The next Morning was appointed for ſigning a Warrant to his Commiſſioners to that Effect; and ſo ſure were they of a happy End of all Differences, that the King at Supper complaining his Wine was not good, one told him merrily, I hope your Majeſty will drink better before a Week is out, with my Lord Mayor at Guildhall: But before the next Morning came, the fatal Letter from Montroſe arriv'd with his Dan to Beerſheba; wherein he expreſt his utter Averſion to all Treaties with his Rebel Parliament; and adds, he hopes it is not true that his Majeſty has conſented to treat, adviſing him not to do it as unworthy of a King, and aſſuring him he doubted not but to be able within a few Months to march into England with a brave Army to his Aſſiſtance. Thus in a Moment were all the Impreſſions the King's beſt Friends had made upon him daſh'd out. This Letter was copy'd from the Original by the Duke of Richmond, which Dr. Welwood ſaw, and has printed at large: And Dr. Burnet not only affirms this Letter came to the King during the Uxbridge Treaty, but Meſſengers alſo brought the ſame Romantick Advices from Montroſe. Yet Echard with a vain ridiculous Air ſays, I will not examine into the Inconſiſtency of this Letter with the Earl of Clarendon's Account and the beſt Writers; as if the ſureſt Way to come at the Truth was not to refer to thoſe Hiſtories that are inconſiſtent with the Earl of Clarendon's and his beſt Writers? and being ſenſible that his own Authority would by no Means paſs with judicious Readers, he quotes the weakeſt Paſſage in the Compleat Hiſtory of England, where weak ones are pretty plenty: Suppoſing ſuch a Letter was written, yet it ſeems to be no Inference that the King himſelf was the Cauſe of the Breaking off the Treaty, when the Denial of the leaſt Conceſſions, and even of a few further Days, was the ſole Act of the Parliament's Commiſſioners. This is their way in all their Arguments and Hiſtories. They take the very Reaſoning and Words of the Parliament, and turn them againſt them. The Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke informs us, there could be no Expectations of a good Iſſue of the Treaty, or Inducement for the Parliament to grant longer Time, when not one of the Parliament's Propoſitions was granted. Theſe ſpiritual Authors are always in ſuch a Pannick when their temporal Concernments are in Jeopardy, that any Help, even of the Iriſh REBELS, is acceptable: And as the Article of Epiſcopacy every Way concern'd them, they have no Mercy on the Parliament for not making Conceſſions, that is, for not continuing the Revenues, Prerogatives, Powers, Dignities, and every Thing belonging to it, which has a Tincture of the Pomps and Vanities which it is their Duty to renounce and to teach us to do the ſame. It was eaſily to be conjectur'd by the King's Commiſſioners bringing ſo many Doctors with them that the Article of Religion would never be comply'd with.

Montroſe's fatal Letter.

Welwood

A. D. 1645.

That of the Militia would have ſecur'd all the reſt, and there being no Military Power left to invade the Civil, the Government muſt have been reduc'd to the Rule of the Law, which is no where pretended to have been the Rule of this King's Reign, but in his own Declarations, and the Hiſtorians who have built their Hiſtories on thoſe ſolid Foundations, and that it would be the Rule afterwards when the Power of Breaking it was reſerv'd, could not be conceiv'd by any Man in his Senſes.

The Article of the Iriſh REBELS was not likely to be yielded up when there had ſo lately paſt ſo much Endearment between them and the Court at Oxford, who expected with Impatience a powerful Aſſiſtance from them. Nay, during the Treaty it was intimated to the King's Commiſſioners that his Majeſty was engag'd for Ireland, and had ſent this Letter to Ormond.

" I Cannot but mention the Neceſſity of haſt-
" ning the Iriſh Peace. But in Caſe,
" againſt all Expectation and Reaſon, Peace
" cannot be had, you muſt not by any Means
" fall into a new Rupture with them, but con" tinue the Ceſſation, for which you ſhall pro-
" miſe them to join with them againſt the Scots
" and Inchiquin, &c.

By theſe Letters, ſays Sanderſon, as great a Cavalier and as great an Hiſtorian as Mr. Archdeacon, the Myſtery is open'd why the King is ſo violent for Peace with the Iriſh: But this was tenderly treated by the King's Commiſſioners; and well they might be willing to ſhadow theſe Deſigns. He frankly confeſſes the King dealt doubly with the Parliament in the Affair of the Iriſh REBELS; and Echard commends his Juſtice and Piety in it.

Till the Preliminaries were ſettled for a good Foundation to treat, the Meeting at Uxbridge was at beſt but a wild Buſineſs, from which no reaſonable Man could expect any Good.

Notwithſtanding the Archdeacon's Objection to Welwood's Memoirs as inconſiſtent with the Earl of Clarendon's, an excellent Character of a Hiſtory, and notwithſtanding alſo the notable Reflections he has cited out of the Compleat Hiſtory

A. D. 1645. ſtory of England, ſober Writers are of Opinion that Montroſe's Romantick Actings and Boaſtings had too great an Influence on his Majeſty's Reſolutions in rejecting every Propoſition of the Uxbridge Treaty. Mr. Acherley writes thus of it; "As to the King, his Majeſty's Affairs were "in a ruinous Condition, for it was apparent "that by one Stroke more all his Power in Point "of War would be quite extinguiſh'd, which "makes the Wonder great why he inſiſted ſo "much as he did upon Points of Prerogative, "and why he did not comply with any Terms "by which his Government and Poſſeſſion of "the Crown might be reſtor'd at a Time when "he had nothing to oppoſe againſt the prevail-"ing Power, unleſs his Majeſty's too great De-"pendance on Montroſe's wild Succeſſes made "him indifferent." Biſhop Burnet ſays, Lord Hollis told me all was owing to Montroſe's unhappy Succeſſes.

I cannot conclude what I have to ſay of the Uxbridge Treaty without taking Notice of an Error in Raguenot, Gregorio Leti, and even Larrey, who all mention Oliver Cromwel's being one of the Parliament's Commiſſioners there; and Leti particularly writes thus; "Cromwel's Reputation increas'd much in this "Conference, wherein he gave great Proofs of "his Ability, both in Military and Religious "Matters, inſomuch that every one was not on-"ly pleas'd with the Solidity and Eloquence "of his Arguments, but there was hardly any "Body that would venture to argue with him." All the Fault in him is, that Cromwel was no Commiſſioner, and was not there.

The Preparations for War continu'd all this while, and the two Houſes paſt the Ordinance for new modelling their Army. And what wiſe ones the King had about him we may gueſs again by Echard's Character of them, they look'd upon this new Army and their new Officers with ſuch Contempt, that the New Model was by them in Scorn, commonly called the New Noddle, which is ſome of their beſt Wit as well as Foreſight. But the Truth is, they were in mortal Fear of both the new Officers and Army. They knew too well the Conduct and Courage of Fairfax and Cromwel, to have any Hopes left of ſpinning out the War. They knew both thoſe Generals were in Earneſt, and reſolv'd heartily to reduce them to Obedience without any more Ceremony and Complement. The Parliament declar'd their Intention to be no longer amus'd with Meſſages and Words: But ſince the Controverſy had been left to the Deciſion of the Sword, they were for the Sword's deciding it as ſoon and as effectually as poſſible. For this End they ſhifted Hands, and to do it with as much Civility as they could to their own Members, they made the Ordinance General to exclude the Members of both Houſes from Employments in Army and Fleet: But there was a Pretext found out to continue Cromwel in his Command. I do not find that the Parliament had any Jealouſy of the Earl of Eſſex's Fidelity to the Cauſe they were engag'd in; but it is viſible by his March and Diſgrace in the Weſt; by his avoiding the ſecond Battle at Newbury; by his Miſintelligence with Waller and other Generals; by his own continual Speeches in Praiſe of Peace, that he would have been glad of one on much eaſier Terms than the Parliament would ſubmit to, and it was not prudent in them to carry on the War under ſuch Management. But they parted with the Earl in as handſome a Manner as they could. They highly extoll'd his Valour, Wiſdom and Experience; they thank'd him for his many glorious Services to the Common Wealth, and ſettled 10000 Pounds a Year on him. 'Tis certain he was very loath to part with his Batoon, though he gave the Parliament as good Words as they had given him, when he deliver'd it up. But thoſe who were for a ſpeedy End of the War, and reducing their Enemies to a Neceſſity of making ſuch a Peace as would effectually ſecure thoſe valuable Rights and Liberties for which they had been Fighting and Conquering, found it abſolutely neceſſary to change their General, which is the whole Secret of this Self-denying Ordinance. Indeed other Uſe was made of it afterwards, when the Army had knock'd down all Oppoſition, and began to ſet themſelves above their Maſters, when a Party under the Notion and Title of Independants, became the Majority in the Army, and ſupported the like Party in the Houſe of Commons, till they were the major Vote in Parliament. The Independants, at the Paſſing of this Ordinance, could carry nothing by themſelves, and if the Presbyterians had not join'd with them it had never paſt. Mr. Archdeacon makes a Myſtery of this plain Fact, and almoſt all his Authorities are founded on the Dreams and Viſions of thoſe who wanted ſome better Excuſe for their being beaten and baffled, than Cowardice and Folly. This Ordinance was not to extend to Deputy Lieutenants, Juſtices of Peace, or Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer, who were Members of either of the Houſes of Parliament. The Lords did not ſo readily fall in with it as the Commons deſir'd; and the Diſagreement about it increas'd the great Difference between the two Houſes, which ended in the Diſſolution of one of them.

A. D. 1645.

Parliament Army new modelled.

The new Army was to conſiſt of 6000 Horſe, 1000 Dragoons, and 14000 Foot, under the Command of Sir Thomas Fairfax, General.

Oliver Cromwel, Eſq; Lieutenant General.
Philip Skippon, Eſq; Major General.
Lieutenant General Hammond, Lieutenant General of the Ordnance.
Henry Ireton, Eſq; Commiſſary General of the Horſe.

Colonels of Horſe.

Col. Middleton, Col. Sidney, Col. Graves, Col. Sheffield, Col. Vermuyden, Col. Whaley, Sir Michael Liveſey, Col. Fleetwood, Col. Roſiter, Sir Robert Pye.

Colonels of Foot.

The Archdeacon aſſures us that theſe Ten Colonels of Foot had not among them all one thouſand Pounds a Year Land, which though it is as falſe as it is impertinent, is far from being a Diminution of the Merit of theſe Officers. I could name him ten Generals in the late Wars with France, who had not altogether Land enough for a Knight of a Shire, when they enter'd the Service; yet they behav'd as gallantly as if they had been Heirs to as much Land as they conquer'd.

By the Self-denying Ordinance the following Members of both Houſes were oblig'd to lay down their Commiſſions: The Earl of Eſſex, the Earl of Warwick, the Earl of Mancheſter, the Earl of Denbigh, the Lord Robarts, the Lord Grey of Groby, the Lord Howard of Eſcrick, the Lord Fairfax, the Lord Willoughby, Sir William Waller, Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir Thomas Middleton, Sir John Meyrick, Sir William Brereton, Sir John Price, Sir Samuel Luke,

A. D. 1645.

Luke, Sir Arthur Haſlerigge, Denzill Hollis, Eſq; William Strode, Eſq; Thomas Cary, Eſq; Iſaac Pennington, Eſq; Colonel Purefoy, Colonel Hutchinſon, Colonel Rainsborough, Colonel Stapeley. But Cromwel, Brereton, Luke, Price, Middleton, Rainsborough, and others, were permitted to ſerve 80 Days longer, and that Permiſſion was afterwards prolong'd as their Service was wanted.

Sir Tho. Fairfax made General.

Sir Thomas Fairfax was in the North when he was made General of the Army, and coming privately to London, was the next Day, February the 19th, conducted to the Houſe of Commons by four of their Members. A Chair was ſet for him, but he refus'd to ſit, and the Speaker told him the great Truſt the Commonwealth had conferr'd upon him in the Command of their Army, and the good Opinion they had of his Valour and Fidelity for the Defence of Religion, Laws and Liberties, yet it was ſix Weeks after this that the Earl of Eſſex formally deliver'd up his Commiſſion at a Conference between the two Houſes, at which Time he deliver'd alſo a Paper to this Effect, That he having been employed for almoſt three Years paſt as General of all the Parliament's Forces, which Charge he had endeavour'd to perform with all Fidelity and Sedulity, yet conſidering by the Ordinance lately brought up to the Houſe of Peers, that it would be advantagious to the Publick, he deſir'd to lay down his Commiſſion, and freely to render it into the Hands of thoſe from whom he received it, and deſir'd, that ſuch of his Officers who had done faithful Service, and were now left out, might have their Arrears, and ſome others be received into favour. The Earls of Mancheſter and Denbigh then alſo laid down their Commiſſions, which was declar'd by both Houſes to be an acceptable Service, and a Teſtimony of the Fidelity and Care theſe three Lords had of the Publick. The Commons appointed a Committee to conſider of Gratifying the Lord General, and the two other Earls, for their faithful Services, and hazarding their Lives and Fortunes for the Publick. Some of Eſſex's Friends were againſt his laying down his Commiſſion, but others told him, That Miſchiefs and Conteſts might ariſe if he kept it, of which he himſelf was ſenſible. And, ſays Whitlocke, As he had great Stoutneſs of Spirit, ſo he had great Goodneſs of Nature, and Love to the Publick, which perſwaded him to deliver up his Commiſſion. It was very abſurd and deſperate Counſel, which thoſe of his Friends gave, who would have had him to have kept it, after the Parliament had voted a new General, and not at all to depreciate the Merit of ſo gallant a Peer, and ſo good an Engliſhman, as the Earl of Eſſex, it is moſt certain, that excepting the Raiſing the Siege of Glouceſter, his Services were not ſo beneficial to the Publick, as his Loſing his Army in Cornwal, through his own ill Conduct, was prejudicial; and as for the Battles of Edgehill and Newbury, which he fought, though Echard and other Hiſtorians falſify the Fact in denying him the Advantage, yet it is very evident that thoſe Victories were not ſo well improv'd as they might have been; and that the Suffering the King's Army to retreat after the treacherous Action at Brentford, loſt an Opportunity of diſperſing it, and reſtoring Peace before much Blood had been ſpilt in this unnatural War. No Body thinks there was the leaſt Tincture of Unfaithfulneſs in his Lordſhip's Conduct, or that he wanted Courage; but it is obvious he would have had the War carry'd on, and the Peace made in his own Way, which the Parliament thought too indifferent and dilatory.

Earl of Eſſex lays down his Commiſſion.

Admiralty. The Earl of Warwick laid down his Commiſſion of Lord High Admiral, as the other Earls had done, and had a like Compliment from the Parliament, who appointed Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, and nam'd the Earls of Eſſex, Northumberland, Pembroke, Warwick, the Lords Say and North, Sir Walter Earl, Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir John Evelyn, Sir Chriſtopher Wray, for that Commiſſion. The Commiſſions which they granted now to their Generals had not the Care of the Preſervation of his Majeſty's Perſon in them, nor were in the Name of the King and Parliament, but in the Name of the Parliament alone, and if they had run ſo at firſt there would have been the leſs Abſurdity in them, for every one knew the Earl of Eſſex's Army was rais'd to fight the King's, and that the Care of the Preſervation of the King's Perſon at the Battle of Edge-hill, where his Majeſty attack'd him, was Nonſenſe, yet the Archdeacon tells us, that the leaving out that Nonſenſe was a Sign of the Parliament's Intention from the beginning to murder the King. This was the firſt plain Diſcovery of their Intention. The Juggle and Mask were remov'd. He knew very well that the two Houſes abhor'd the King's Death, and while they were free did their utmoſt to prevent it, yet becauſe they were Presbyterians he does what he can to load them with this Infamy.

A. D. 1645.

The main of the King's Strength was in the Weſt, where Goring commanded, and committed ſo many Acts of Cruelty and Rapine, that his Name is Infamous there to this Day, eſpecially about Taunton, which Town he beſieg'd, and during the Siege his Soldiers made themſelves terrible by continual Butcheries, Rapes and Robberies, inſomuch that the Name of Goring's Crew is even now remember'd with Abhorrence. Before he form'd this Siege a ſmall Officer, one Colonel Edmund Windham, ſent a Summons to Colonel Blake the Governor, threatning him with Fire and Sword, but Blake, infinitely ſuperior to Windham in the Character of Heroiſm, return'd this Anſwer, Theſe are to let you know, that as we neither fear your Menaces, nor accept your Proffers, ſo we wiſh you for Time to come to deſiſt from all Overtures of the like Nature unto us, who are reſolv'd to the laſt Droop of our Blood to maintain the Quarrel we have undertaken, and doubt not but the ſame God who hath hitherto protected us, will e'er long bleſs us with an Iſſue anſwerable to the Juſtneſs of our Cauſe. Howſoever, to him alone ſhall we ſtand or fall. The Works of the Place were inconſiderable, and Blake was in great Want of Ammunition and Proviſions, yet he made a reſolute Defence againſt ſeveral Armies, one after another, till a Party of the Parliament's Forces broke through the Beſiegers, and ſupply'd the Town with Stores of Proviſions, and what they wanted. Larrey terms it the Saguntum of the Parliamentarians, comparing the Fidelity of Taunton to that of Saguntum in Spain, and the Extremities which both Towns were reduc'd to, one with the other. Taunton, however, had better Fortune than Saguntum, which Hannibal took and demoliſh'd, but Taunton was reliev'd twice by the Parliament Army; the firſt Time was when Colonel Welden and Colonel Graves, who were detach'd by Sir Thomas Fairfax, came to the Aſſiſtance of Blake, whom the Parliament had order'd the General to relieve, but he was afterwards countermanded, and Graves and Welden ſent on that Expedition. They came before the Town on Sunday, May the 11th, and the Beſiegers knew nothing of their coming till they were within 4 Miles of the Place. Greenvile the weſtern Robber, and the other Cavalier Commanders, immediately drew off in Confuſion, Siege rais'd. In the laſt Storm one Bawdon, a Parliament Officer, having his Thumb cut or ſhot off, as he was driving the Cavaliers before him out of that Part of the Town, proteſted the Rogues ſhould not carry it away with them, and while he was ſearching for it, one of thoſe Rogues, who remain'd drinking in an Alehouſe ſhot him dead out of a Window, which was the greateſt Loſs that happen'd to the Beſieg'd in that Action. The Parliament order'd Colonel Blake 500 l. and 2000 l. for his Garriſon. And what is very remarkable, the 11th of May was kept an Anniverſary Day of Rejoicing for the Relief of that Town, even after the Reſtoration, and in the Worſt of Times, King Charles, and King James's Reigns, and is ſtill yearly kept at Taunton in ſome Meaſure. Goring had been order'd out of the Weſt, and Prince Rupert out of the North, to join the King at or about Oxford, where the Court was very much perplexed at the Raiſing the Siege of Taunton; Goring's Heart was ſet upon the Reduction of that Place, that he might bring that rich and populous Town and Country under Contribution, and indulge himſelf in Rapine and Riot. This made him ill digeſt the Orders he receiv'd to leave the Weſt, eſpecially when he heard that Colonel Welden and Colonel Graves had thrown Succours into the Town. In this Humour he approach'd Oxford, which City his Majeſty had left and was making towards Worceſter, to be nearer Prince Rupert.

Cromwel defeats the Earl of Northampton at Iſlip. Lieutenant General Cromwel march'd from Windſor with a Party of Horſe to Caveſham Bridge, and thence to Wheatley, to obſerve the King's Motions, and being inform'd that a Squadron of Horſe under the Earl of Northampton and Goring was hovering about Iſlip, he haſten'd thither, attack'd and defeated them, took 400 Horſe, 200 Priſoners, of whom many were of Rank, and the Queen's own Standard. The reſt fled to Bletchington Houſe, where Colonel Windebank kept Garriſon for the King. Cromwel purſu'd them thither, and after ſome Treaty took the Houſe alſo upon Articles, and therein ſtore of Arms and Ammunition, for which Colonel Windebank was ſhot to Death at Oxford.

Col. Windebank the Governor ſhot.

Colonel Fiennes fell upon a Party of the King's Horſe near Witney in Oxfordſhire, took 120, three Standards, and 140 Priſoners, Lieutenant General Cromwel fell upon another Party of the King's at Bampton Buſh, where he took Sir William Vaughan, Lieutenant Colonel Littleton, and another Lieutenant Colonel, Mr. Lee, 5 Captains, 8 Lieutenants, 8 Enſigns, Dr. Dunſe, 20 Serjeants, 230 Common Soldiers and Arms. Being reinfor'd with 500 Foot from Major General Browne's Garriſon at Abington he attempted Farringdon Houſe without Succeſs. The King's Forces under Prince Rupert and Goring join'd in Oxfordſhire, and, with the Troops his Majeſty had there before, made an Army of 11 or 12000 Men, which had he kept together he might at leaſt have defended himſelf longer. Echard has found out a Victory for Goring, who ſurpriz'd a Horſe Quarter of Cromwel's, and another Party of Fairfax's Horſe, broke and defeated them with great Slaughter, which gave him great Reputation, and made him exceeding welcome to the King. Larrey writes, Cromwel open'd the Campaign fortunately, by the Defeat of Colonel Goring, whom he made to loſe the Title of Invincible, which his People had given him. But Larrey being a Proteſtant may not have Credit with Mr. Archdeacon, therefore ſee what Leti a Papiſt ſays, Cromwel meeting a Body of 1300 Horſe commanded by Goring, defeated them, took 200 Priſoners, &c. We ſee how well grounded the Reputation of the Hiſtorian's Heroes is, for Goring did not beat Cromwel's or Fairfax's Men, but was himſelf ſoundly beaten. He was order'd again into the Weſt to join Greenvile and Hopton, and renew the Siege of Taunton.

A. D. 1645.

Sir Thomas Fairfax being making Preparations to beſiege Oxford, the King perceiv'd he was ill adviſ'd in dividing his Army; and tho' his marching Northward to relieve Cheſter, which was diſtreſs'd by Sir William Brereton, had ſo good an Effect, that Brereton on the News of it drew off his Forces; yet it brought him into a Neceſſity of coming to a deciſive Battle, which prov'd fatal to himſelf and to his Followers.

King relieves Cheſter.

But before the utter Overthrow of his Army, he came before Leiceſter, where Col. Gray commanded for the Parliament; and one of the Gates being betray'd to him, his Forces enter'd, after a gallant Defence made by the Parliament's Soldiers in the Market-place. The Cavaliers put a great Number to the Sword, ſome of them after Quarter was given. They murder'd ſeveral Women, raviſh'd ſeveral Maids and Matrons, turn'd others naked into the Streets. They hang'd Mr. Rayner and Mr. Sawyer in cold Blood, and murder'd Mrs. Barlow, a Miniſter's Wife, and her Children. The whole Town was miſerably plunder'd. This is Whitlocke's Account of the King's Triumph, as Echard terms it; and I do not here or elſewhere mention the Maſſacres, Rapes and Plunderings of the Royaliſts as Matter of Wonderment; for People who were in Arms to deſtroy the Rights, Liberties and Properties of the Nation in general, could not ſtick at killing them, and robbing them in particular; but to ſhew what Reaſon the Archdeacon has to glory in a Conqueſt which a good Proteſtant and Engliſhman cannot read without Horror, he aſſures us the Town was got purely by an Act of great Courage; and Whitlocke, that it was got purely by an Act of great Treachery. But this Falſity is nothing to the wretched Reflections he makes on the Conſternation the Two Houſes were in on News of the Loſs of this one Town only, a Place, ſays he, very conſiderable, but of no great Extent. The taking of Leiceſter gave the King's Armies a mighty Reputation, and made a terrible Impreſſion upon the Hearts of thoſe at Weſtminſter. Great Fears and Diſtruſts aroſe in the Houſes, every Word falſe, and ſeveral Members were heard to ſay in their Paſſage, There is no Hope but in the King's Mercy, and the ſpeedieſt Recourſe to it will be the ſafeſt Expedient. What follows may have a little more Truth in it, becauſe this has none at all. The Royal Party ſeem'd as good as ſure that the Day was their own, which they made appear even in London by all publick Signs and Diſcourſes, which they durſt no more do than to have taken Cromwel by the Noſe at the Head of his Ironſides. What his Majeſty ſaid upon it in a Letter to the Queen, ſhews how ſoon he was lifted up with a little Succeſs in the Midſt of extreme Calamity and Diſtreſs: I may, without being too ſanguine, affirm, that ſince this REBELLION my Affairs were never in ſo hopeful a Way.

Takes Leiceſter.

The ſtrong Town of Shrewsbury, which cut off the Communication with Wales, had been lately ſurpriz'd by the Parliamentarians; the Town of Taunton, one of the Keys of the Weſt, had lately been reliev'd; Weymouth, which Sir Lewis Dives had taken for him, was juſt recover'd by the Parliament's Forces; the Scots had

A. D. 1645. had join'd Sir William Brereton in the North; Sir James Long had been juſt routed at the Devizes by a Party of Sir William Waller's Troops, with the Loſs of a whole Regiment of Horſe. Montroſe had lately been defeated in Scotland. The Rout at Iſlip was but a few Days before, and Sir Thomas Fairfax was about to lay Siege to Oxford; yet his Majeſty ſays, his Affairs were never in ſo hopeful a Way ſince he began the War.

Battle of NASEBY. Let us look a little into Echard's Hiſtory preceding the Fight at Naſeby, becauſe we ſhall ſee by it that himſelf and the Authors he depended upon are as ignorant of the true Cauſe of that Fight, as if it had been fought in China. "The "King, inſtead of retiring towards Worceſter to "join General Gerrard, who had 3000 Horſe "and Foot, or ſtaying for General Goring, now "ſent for by his Majeſty, or of marching North-"ward with the Terror of a victorious Army, "which we ſhall ſee preſently was ſo terrible, "that Oliver was afraid they would have gi-"ven him the Slip, unfortunately turn'd "towards Oxford, which was thought by "ſome to be in Diſtreſs. From whence hearing "that Fairfax was drawn off, it kindled a "greater Appetite in the King's Army to find "him out." There are many other Falſities in this Account of the Preparations for the Battle of Naſeby, but the laſt is the moſt extraordinary one; for Fairfax and Cromwel were all this while drawing the Cavaliers into the Snare they had prepar'd for them, as appears by Larrey's Hiſtory. "Cromwel made but a ſmall Account "of his little Succeſſes. His Views and Hopes "went much farther, and flaming with Deſire to "ſee himſelf engag'd with the Royal Army, "he deſpis'd all Triumphs but over the King, "and therefore being highly delighted that his "Deſigns were ſupported by the Advice and "Commands of the Two Houſes, he us'd his "utmoſt Diligence to bring his wiſh'd-for Pro-"ject to ſucceed, and block the Way up, ſo that "the King could not eſcape him." The Two Houſes, inſtead of having Recourſe to the King's Mercy as the ſafeſt Expedient, in which Echard tells us they center'd all their Hopes, had really Recourſe to their Army, and commanded their Generals to bring the King to a Battle, now he was in the Field, before he got into a Town again. Larrey proceeds, "With this Deſign, "and the better to conceal it, Cromwel made a "Feint of marching towards the Northern "Counties, as if his Intention was to go into "Scotland, and there join the Covenanters Ar-"my. He croſs'd Huntingtonſhire and Cam-"bridgſhire, but he communicated his Intention "to General Fairfax, that he might follow him, "keeping cloſe to the King's Army, which he "did not doubt would purſue him, and join "him when there ſhould be Occaſion. Every "thing ſucceeded. The King ſuppoſing no "Stratagem, and being altogether intent on "Cromwel's Motions, took his Route thro' Nor-"thamptonſhire, with a Deſign to obſerve him, "but not risk a Battle, in which he was miſta-"ken. The active and diligent Cromwel no "ſooner had Advice that the King was encamp'd "near Naſeby, but he reſolv'd to ſurprize him "there, and compel him to fight. He advis'd "Fairfax of it, and the whole Army marching "all Night, came the 10th of June by Break of "Day up with the King's Camp." What need was there then of the Archdeacon's kindling an Appetite in the Royaliſts to find out Oliver? Fairfax and Cromwel have found out the King, and are reſolv'd not to let him eſcape, as he had done at Edgehill and Brentford. The Battle ending ſo unhappily as it did, Echard will by no Means leave any Blame on the King, and therefore he affirms his Majeſty deſign'd to return to Leiceſter, and continue on the Defenſive; whereas, directly contrary to this, we are inform'd by a Writer who was on the Spot, the King's Opinion prevail'd againſt the Mind of moſt of his great Officers, who thought it beſt to avoid Fighting. A. D. 1645. Sp. p. 33.

On the 5th of June Sir Thomas Fairfax roſe from before Oxford, and march'd to Marſh Gibeon, having order'd Major General Skippon, who lay before Borſtall Houſe to join him, which Mr. Archdeacon very ingeniouſly calls being beaten off with Loſs. Here the Lord General had Intelligence that the King was marching from Leiceſter towards Daventry, with Intention to raiſe the Siege of Oxford, which was done to his Hand. The next Day the Army march'd to Great Brickhill, and the next Day to Sherrington, from whence an Expreſs was ſent to General Cromwel in the Aſſociated Counties, to inform him of the Army's advancing that Way. On the 9th of June a Party was ſent out to get Intelligence of the Enemy, who brought in ſome Priſoners of Sir Marmaduke Langdale's Brigade, by whom General Fairfax was inform'd that the King lay ſtill at Daventry, having fac'd Northampton. A Council of War was alſo held, where it was reſolv'd to ſend Letters to the Two Houſes, praying, That in Conſideration of the Likelihood of a ſudden Battel, Lieutenant General Cromwel's Abſence in the Houſe might be diſpenc'd with for a Time, which ſhews us that he was not ſo entirely exempted from the ſelf-denying Ordinance as is pretended. Col. Hammond went Poſt to London with theſe Letters, and return'd Poſt with a favourable Anſwer, and a Commiſſion for General Cromwel to command the Horſe under the Lord General Fairfax; which Proceeding of the Parliament being purſuant to a Motion of the Council of War held when Oliver was at a Diſtance, and knew nothing of the Matter, takes away much of the Artifice and Trick imputed to Cromwel, to get himſelf diſpenc'd from the Ordinance laſt mention'd. On the 11th of June the Army march'd to Wootton, within 8 Miles of Northampton, where they were inform'd that the King's Army lay ſtill at Daventry, his Foot and Carriages on Burrough Hill making a Shew as if he intended to fight on that Ground. But afterwards it appear'd that his Stay there was only till a Party of 1200 Horſe was return'd from convoying the plunder'd Cattle and Sheep from Leiceſterſhire and Northamptonſhire to Oxford, himſelf intending to follow Cromwel. From Wootton the General march'd to Gilsborough, within 5 Miles of Burrough Hill. A Party of Horſe being detach'd to get further Information of the Enemy, they alarm'd their Camp and took ſome Priſoners, by whom the Parliamentarians underſtood the King was a Hunting, the Soldiers in no Order, and their Horſes at Graſs, having not the leaſt Knowledge of Fairfax's Advance. But the Alarm was quickly taken thro' all their Quarters, and the Parliament's Foot being ſomewhat behind, it was not thought proper to make any farther Attempt. About Twelve that Night the General took Horſe, and rode about both the Horſe and Foot Guards till Four in the Morning, expecting the Enemy would have ſhewn ſome Gallantry that Night, and fallen upon ſome of his Quarters. About Break of Day a remarkable Accident befel him as he was riding his Round, for having forgot the Word, he was ſtopp'd by the Guard, and requiring the Soldier who ſtood Centinel to give it him, he refus'd to do it, ſaying,

A. D. 1645. I am to take the Word from all that paſs, but to give it to none; which oblig'd the General to ſtop in the Rain till the Captain of the Guard came, and commanded the Centinel to give him the Word, which he did, and the General rewarded the Soldier for his Duty and Careſulneſs. As he was riding within a Mile and a half of Flowre, where the Enemy kept a Horſe-Guard, he could diſcern them about Three a Clock in the Morning riding faſt over Burrough Hill, and making Fires in Abundance, as if they were Firing their Huts, which gave him Reaſon to conclude they were about to march; and two Hours after he receiv'd Advice from Scout-maſter General Watſon, who was almoſt always upon the Reconnoitre, that the Enemy was drawing off from Burrough Hill in great Amazement at the near Approach of the Parliament Army. Echard owns his Majeſty lay quiet five Days, not knowing where Fairfax was, tho' within five or ſix Miles of him; a very unhappy Security amidſt ſo much Danger, and an Inſtance that the King's ill Fate faſt purſu'd him; for in all the War he had not till then ſhewn any Want of Conduct or Activity. Watſon's Scouts were follow'd by ſome Spies, who confirm'd the former Report, adding, that the King's Carriages were drawn from Burrough Hill towards Harborough. Upon which a Council of War was held. Before it broke up, Lieutenant General Cromwel arriv'd with 600 Horſe out of the Aſſociation, to the great Joy of the General and the whole Army. A Party of Horſe was immediately order'd to get Intelligence on Daventry Side, and Colonel Ireton with a ſtrong Party to fall upon the Flank of the Enemy if he ſaw Cauſe, while the main Body of the Parliament's Army flank'd the King's in their March to Harborough, and came that Night, the 13th of June, to Gilling, where they underſtood the Royaliſts were at Harborough, their Rear within two Miles of Naſeby, and ſoon after, that Col. Ireton had fallen into their Quarters in Naſeby Town, where he took many Priſoners, ſome of the Prince's Life-guard and Langdale's Brigade, and gave a terrible Alarm to all their Forces; upon which his Majeſty quitted the Quarters he had taken, and for Security went to Harborough, where Prince Rupert quarter'd, who was then a-bed; but the King order'd him to be call'd up, and a Council of War to be held, by whom it was reſolv'd to give Battle, taking themſelves, ſays my Author, as indeed they were, a more conſiderable Force than the Parliament's, eſpecially in Horſe, on which they chiefly depended.

Saturday, June the 14th, General Fairfax advanc'd by Three a Clock in the Morning from Gilling towards Naſeby, and by Five his Army rendezvouz'd near the Town, when great Bodies of the Enemy's Horſe appear'd on the Top of the Hill on Harborough Side; and theſe were follow'd by the whole Army, for the Royaliſts had receiv'd falſe Intelligence, that Sir Thomas Fairfax was flying towards Northampton, and they made ſo much haſte to purſue him, that they left many of their Ordnance behind them. Whereas Fairfax, inſtead of flying, had drawn up his Army in Battalia in a large fallow Field, on the North-Weſt Side of Naſeby, and was ready to receive them.

Of the Parliament Army Fairfax and Skippon commanded the Main Body, Cromwel the Right Wing and Ireton the Left. The Reſerves were brought up by Rainsborough, Hammond and Pride. The Parliament Word was God our Strength; the Royaliſt, Queen Mary, a Papiſt, 'tis true, but never the worſe Word for their Purpoſe. Prince Rupert began and charg'd the Parliament's Left Wing with great Reſolution. Ireton made gallant Reſiſtance, but was at laſt forc'd to give Ground, he himſelf being run through the Thigh with a Pike, and into the Face with a Halbert, his Horſe ſhot under him, and himſelf taken Priſoner. Prince Rupert follow'd the Chace almoſt to Naſeby, and in his Return ſummon'd the Train, who made no Anſwer but with their Firelocks. He alſo viſited the Carriages, where was good Plunder, for which the Cavaliers had always ſo keen an Appetite that to come at it, they never conſider'd the King's Safety nor their own, and it muſt be confeſs'd that this Plunder was what their common Soldiers fought for, ſince one cannot believe they were ſo well appriz'd of the great Advantages of arbitrary Power, and the Bleſſings of Superſtition and Prieſtcraft, as the Earl of Clarendon and the more enlighten'd of them were.

Prince Rupert remain'd all this while among the Parliament's Carriages which he could rifle, tho' they could not take, and all this while was Cromwel cutting to pieces the left Wing of the King's Army, whom he had forc'd from their main Body, broke them and their Reſerve with a dreadful Slaughter; after which he bore down like a Torrent on the main Body of the Royal Army, and with the Aſſiſtance of two or three Regiments of Infantry encompas'd their Foot, who finding themſelves deſerted by their Horſe, threw down their Arms and yielded themſelves Priſoners. His Majeſty got out of the Field into Leiceſter Road, where he was purſu'd by the Parliament Horſe, and thinking Leiceſter not ſafe enough, he poſted to Litchfield, and thence into Cheſhire and Wales. Prince Rupert returning too late from his Expedition againſt the Parliament's Carriages, found all was loſt on the Place of Battle, and with about 300 Horſe made as faſt as he could to Briſtol. Tho' the Action was hot while it laſted, and many of the King's Soldiers who behav'd like Engliſhmen, were ſlain; yet the Shortneſs of it prevented a greater Slaughter on both Sides: On that of the Parliament, Captain Buſh of Cromwel's, and Captain Selby of Fleetwood's Regiments, and Lieutenant Colonel Francis of Skippon's Regiment were kill'd, and about 1000 kill'd and wounded: 600 of the King's Soldiers, among whom was Colonel Sayr, a Papiſt, were kill'd, but 6000 were taken Priſoners, which made the Number of the Slain the leſs. Among the latter were Sir Thomas Daliſon and Sir Richard Cave, Sir Peter Brown, Major Rively, Major Markham, and Captain Thorold, the four laſt Papiſts. All their Train of Artillery, every one of their Carriages were taken, 8000 Arms, 200 Barrels of Powder, 200 Horſes, 6 Colonels, 7 Lieutenant Colonels, 16 Majors, 70 Captains, 80 Lieutenants, 80 Enſigns, 200 inferior Officers, 140 Standards and Colours, the King's Footmen and Servants, his Coaches, Sumpter and Cabinet, of which more in due Time. Whitlocke tells us, there were found among the Runaways 100 Iriſh Women, and many other Women who had follow'd the Camp; and Mr. Echard, with ſingular Sincerity tells us, Fairfax's Soldiers avoided no Manner of Cruelty, and in the Purſuit kill'd above 100 Women, ſome of which were Perſons of Quality. It is modeſt to a Miracle. Women of Quality are wont to be Campers; and tho' they were Iriſh Qua-

Particular Accidents in the Battle.

The Lord General had his Helmet beaten off, and riding in the Field bare headed from one Part of his Army to another, to ſee what Advantage might be gain'd, he came up to his own Life Guard, commanded by Colonel Charles Doyly, who told him he was too much expos'd, ſo many Bullets flying about him, and offer'd him his Helmet, which the General refus'd, ſaying, It is well enough Charles. A Body of the King's Horſe making a Stand not far off, Sir Thomas Fairfax ask'd him if he had charg'd them; Doyly reply'd, I have charg'd them twice but cannot break them: Upon which the General order'd him to charge them once again in Front, and he would himſelf charge them in Rear. Thus they would meet together in the middle of them. Doyly did as he was commanded, and both together charging that Body put them in Confuſion, broke them, and Fairfax and Doyly met indeed in the Middle of them, where Fairfax kill'd a Cornet, and one of Doyly's Troopers took his Standard, bragging of the Service he had done in killing the Officer and taking his Colours: But Doyly who ſaw the General himſelf kill the Cornet, ſeverely reprimanded the Trooper for his bragging and lying, telling him how many Witneſſes there were who ſaw the General do it with his own Hands; but Fairfax himſelf bid the Colonel let the Trooper alone, ſaying, I have Honour enough, let him have that Honour. General Skippon, the oldeſt Soldier remaining among the Chief Officers, receiv'd a Shot in the Body, from one of his own Men, as was ſuppos'd unwillingly, whereby he was in a great Meaſure diſabled to perform the Duty of his Poſt that Day, though extreamly deſirous to do it: The Lord General entreated him to go out of the Field, but he anſwer'd, I will not ſtir ſo long as a Man will ſtand; and he ſtaid accordingly till the Battle was ended. Cromwel alſo had his Helmet knock'd off, but haſtily catching it up he clap'd it on the wrong Way, and ſo fought with it bravely the reſt of the Day. We have mention'd Ireton's being wounded and taken in the Fight, but in the Confuſion of the Rout, he got looſe again and was a Witneſs of the Victory obtain'd by his Party.

Whitlocke, who was one of Lilly's Patrons, as were Mr. Selden, Mr. Hollis, Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir Chriſtopher Wray, Mr. Reynolds, and the Learned Elias Aſhmole, Eſq; ſpeaks of that Aſtrologer's foretelling the Battle of Naſeby, which he himſelf tells thus in his Life, "I made "Uſe of the King's Nativity, and finding that "his Aſcendant was approaching to the Quadra- "ture of Mars about June 1645, I gave this un- "lucky Judgment in my Anglicus for that Year, "If now we fight a Victory ſtealeth upon us, "and ſo it did in June 1645, at Naſeby, the "moſt fatal Overthrow he ever had." Sober Perſons, eſpecially ſuch as curſe Lilly for his Prediction, may cenſure ſo grave a Perſon as Mr. Whitlocke for taking any Notice of it, and deſpiſe the Parliament for countenancing him, tho' the King himſelf countenanced him ſo far as to ſend Mrs. Whorwood to him from Hampton-Court, when he was there under Confinement, to erect a Figure for his Eſcape, and ſhe gave him 20 Broad Pieces, part of the 1000 Pounds which Alderman Adams, of London, had lately ſent him. But the King's Conjurers, though they were eternally running from one Houſe to another among the Celeſtial Ones, could never make any Thing of their Errand. All the Houſes were againſt them. The chiefeſt of them was Hodges of Wolverhampton, of whom Lilly writes, "He was a great Royaliſt, but could ne- "ver hit any Thing right for that Party, though "he much deſir'd it. A. D. 1645. P. 49.

Colonel John Fiennes was ſent to London with the Priſoners and Colours, and the News was receiv'd in that City with unexpreſſible Joy, as being the Promiſe of a ſafe Peace.

P. 46. Lilly's Propheſy of Naſeby Fight.

Among the Pillage of the Field, which was very rich, was taken the King's own Cabinet, "Where, ſays the Archdeacon, were lodg'd his "ſecret Papers, and Letters between him and "his Queen, of which they ſoon after made the "moſt barbarous Uſe, and publiſh'd them in "Print with the ſevereſt Comment." The Falſhood and Sophiſtry of this Reflection, which is in all their Hiſtories, Orleans, Raguenot, Salmonet, Clarendon, Warwick, &c. are equal to the Character of his Hiſtory. He would have you believe by the moſt ſecret Papers, are to be underſtood the Privacies of Conjugal Amours, and the Secrets of the Marriage Bed, which if they had made publick, it would have been a barbarous Uſe of thoſe Papers. Inſtead of this they publiſh'd ſuch Paſſages as prov'd to the World what they had long aſſerted, That the King correſponded with the Iriſh REBELS, and that he was never ſincere in the Treaties he propoſed to the Parliament. We have already obſerv'd that he would not ſuffer thoſe Butchers to be call'd REBELS, and it was here that the Manuſcript of his Victories written by Sir Edward Walker was taken among other Papers, where when Sir Edward ſaid REBELS, he ſtruck it out with his own Hand, and in ſeveral Places wrote Iriſh over it. There was alſo taken and brought to the Lord General a Wooden Image like a Roundhead, which the Cavaliers blaſphemouſly called the God of the Roundheads, and carry'd it about their Camp in Scorn a little before the Battle began. In one of the Letters to the Queen, it is ſaid His Majeſty intended to make a Peace with the Iriſh, and to have 40000 of them over into England to proſecute the War here. Did this need a ſevere Comment? and could any Thing but this Intention keep up the Spirit of a Party reduc'd to the extreameſt Degree of Miſery and Deſpair. In other Letters to the Queen the King complains, that he could not prevail with his Mongrel Parliament at Oxford to vote that the Parliament at Weſtminſter were no Parliament: That he will not make Peace with the Engliſh REBELS without her Approbation, nor go one Jot from the Paper ſhe ſent him. That upon the Treaty at Uxbridge he did not poſitively own the Parliament, it being otherwiſe to be conſtru'd, though they were ſo ſimple as not to find it out, and that it was recorded in the Notes of the Council that he did not acknowledge them a Parliament. But the Parliament were not ſuch Simpletons as to be impos'd upon by him and his Oxford Counſellors. They oblig'd the King to own them in as ſolemn Words as Language can expreſs, and his Majeſty's commanding that Prevarication to be recorded in the Notes of the Council, that he did not own them after he had done it ſo ſolemnly, is one of thoſe Paſſages which a little Diſcretion would have ſunk as the Parliament ſunk thoſe Paſſages in the King's Letters, which would have vindicated him for the Particular of the 40000 Iriſh REBELS. The King made them more than they were, to keep Life in the languiſhing Spirits of his Queen and Followers; but that he intended to bring as many of them The King's Cabinet taken. Whitl.

A. D. 1645. ever as he could is a Truth ſo well known that I ſhall not endeavour to prove the Lord Clarendon and Mr. Echard's Miſrepreſentations on that Article ſince they ſufficiently prove themſelves. The double Dealing in the Treaty of Uxbridge, and putting the Terms of Peace into the Queen's Hands, are Paſſages that would not admit of Vindication. Another Charge of Concealment he brings againſt the Parliament, is their hiding a great Part of his Majeſty's Book ΕΙΚΩΝ ΒΑΣΙΛΙΚΗ, which his Majeſty had not then written, and never did write, but was afterwards the Performance of Dr. Gauden, as is proved as plain as Proof can make a Thing, by Dr. Walker, who carry'd Gauden's Manuſcript to the Preſs, and talk'd of it frequently with the true Author, by the Earl of Angleſey, who was ſo careful to prevent the World's being any longer impos'd on by it, that he left an Atteſtation under his Hand that King Charles II. own'd to him, his Father did not write it: So did King James II. but ſince thoſe Proofs appear'd, we have another in Biſhop Burnet's Hiſtory of his own Times.

Eikon Baſilike not written by the King.

" The Duke of York ſuffer'd me to talk very " freely to him about Religion, and as I was " urging him with ſomewhat out of his Fa- " ther's Book, he told me, That Book was not " of his Father's Writing, and that the Letter " to the Prince of Wales was never brought to " him;" 'tis much inſiſted on by Clarendon and Echard. " The Duke of York added, Dr. " Gauden writ it; after the Reſtauration, the " Doctor brought the Duke of Somerſet and " the Earl of Southampton both to the King " and me, who affirm'd, that they knew it was " his Writing, and that it was carry'd down to " the Iſle of Wight by the Earl of Southampton, " and ſhewed the King during the Treaty there, " who read it, and approv'd of it. The Duke " ſaid farther, Though Sheldon and the other " Biſhops oppos'd Gauden's Promotion, becauſe " he had taken the Covenant, yet the Merits of " that Service carry'd it for him, and he was " made a Biſhop." Dr. Burnet ſays this Evidence is very ſtrong, and indeed ſtronger there cannot be. Since theſe Evidences we have ſtill another later one, Dr. Burnet of the Charter-houſe, and a Biſhop whoſe Name I was not told, being at Dinner on a Thirtieth of January, at the Houſe of a Perſon of Quality, one of the noble Company, from whom I had it, ſaid to Dr.

M. S. Burnet, There's Dr. Gauden's Letter to the Lord Clarendon about Eikon Baſilike, and the Lord Clarendon's Anſwer in their own Hand-writing at ſuch a Booksellers, Why don't the Biſhop and you go and ſee them? Dr. Burnet reply'd, Be quiet, be quiet, we have ſeen them already. I find, that upon the publiſhing of this Book, many People ſuſpected it to be an Impoſture, among others Lilly writes, " I wonder Eikon Baſilike ſuſpected at firſt to be a Forgery.

" at that Paſſage of his, if it was his, which I " doubt of, in that Book publiſh'd under his " Name, and call'd his Portraiture, wherein he " maintains the Parliament was called as much " by his own Choice and Inclination, as Advice " of others, whereas it is manifeſtly known even " unto all, it was only Neceſſity and the Impor- " tunity of the Engliſh. The Book it ſelf main- " tains ſo many Contradictions unto thoſe Things, " manifeſted by his own Letters under his own " Hand to his Queen, that I conceive the moſt " part of it Apocryphal. The Meditations or " Pſalms, wholly were added by others. Some " looſe Papers he had I do well know, but they " were nothing ſo well methodiz'd." Again,

P. 53. " Two main Things are objected againſt the " King, which his late pretended Book meddles " not with, or anſwers. Firſt, Why his Majeſty " was ſo tender-hearted of the Iriſh, as not to A. D. 1645. " ſuffer above 40 Proclamations to iſſue againſt " thoſe Rebels in Ireland, and thoſe alſo to no " Purpoſe, or unopportunely, when too late. " Beſides, to ſhew his Reſpect unto them, I " know he obliterated with his own Hands the " Word Iriſh Rebels, and put in Iriſh Subjects, " in a MS. Diſcourſe, writ by Sir Edward Wal- " ker, and preſented to him, which I have ſeen " of the Iriſh Rebellion. Secondly, Whereas " the Parliament were ſending over Clothes and " other Neceſſaries for the Engliſh Soldiers in " Ireland, the King ſeiz'd them as they went, " arm'd and furniſh'd the Engliſh and Welch " againſt the Parliament. The Reaſons of theſe " are omitted by the Penmen of his Portraiture.

But to good Judges of Sentiments and Stile all theſe Declarations are needleſs. The Diſagreement there is between the King's Thoughts and Expreſſions in that and his other Writings, the Affectation, and the Rounding and Ranging of the Periods, the Coldneſs even in ſuch exalted Devotion, and the Bitterneſs where Occaſion is taken to ſpeak of the Reform'd Religion, as it is eſtabliſh'd in Proteſtant Countries, ſhew ſufficiently, without other Proof, that it was not the Work of a Layman.

Echard's Story of the Spy, who was the Cauſe of the Loſs of the Battle of Naſeby, is ſo far from being true, that it could not be true. He tells us, Cromwel and Ireton prevail'd with the unwilling General to open the Letters which the Spy was carrying to the King from Goring, adviſing him not to fight till he join'd him. Cromwel could not prevail with him, for he was then in the Aſſociated Counties, and came not to Fairfax's Camp till after the Reſolution to fight was taken. If there had really been no Intention to bring over the Iriſh Maſſacrers to aſſiſt the Cavaliers, the continuing the War after the entire Defeat at Naſeby, is an Effect of Deſpair, which ſeldom appears while Men have their Wits about them, for if, like the Parliamentarians, we purſue the Royaliſts from one End of the Kingdom to the other, 'tis only from Rout to Rout on their Side, and from Victory to Victory on that of their Enemy.

General Fairfax takes Leiceſter.

General Fairfax march'd from Naſeby Field to Leiceſter, where the King had left a Garriſon under the Lord Haſtings, whom he ſummon'd two Days after the Fight, and his Lordſhip return'd a Cavalier Anſwer, defying him and his victorious Army, but he did not keep in that ſturdy Humour, for the next Day on the Firing of two or three great Guns, he ſent out a Trumpet to deſire a Parley, which being granted, Colonel Pickering and Colonel Rainsborough concluded a Treaty of Surrender on more honourable Terms than Men in their deſperate Condition ought to have expected. But ſuch was the Clemency of the Parliament's General, who took Pleaſure indeed in Conqueſt, but not in Inſolence and Cruelty, which cannot be ſaid of the King's Generals in the few Inſtances we have of their Succeſſes.

Taunton again diſtreſs'd.

Sir Thomas Fairfax's Heart was ſet on relieving Taunton, which good Town Goring had reduc'd to a ſecond Extremity, and ruin'd the adjacent Country with ſecond Pillage and Devaſtation. Colonel Blake the brave Governor, had in ſeveral Sallies got great Advantages of him, and at laſt wrote to the Parliament; That if Relief came not ſpeedily they ſhould be put into great Straits for Proviſions and Ammunition. He aſſur'd the Houſe he had never accepted of a Parley, but ſcorn'd it. That his Garriſon had ſome Ammunition left, and reſolv'd to feed upon their Horſes. He deſir'd the Houſe to take Conſideration ſideration of their Condition, and left all to the Almighty, who he doubted not would relieve them. The Parliament anſwer'd, That Relief ſhould ſpeedily come to the Garriſon. And what Money they took up the Houſe would pay, deſiring them to go on in their Vigilancy and Valour and they ſhould never want Encouragement. Soon after Governour Blake had Intelligence from Lyme, that Succours were order'd for him, and having receiv'd thence a ſmall Supply of Powder, a Party of the Garriſon iſſu'd out on the Beſiegers and ſlew above 400 of them, with the Loſs of 100 of the Beſieg'd, who oblig'd the Enemy by this ſharp Action to draw back, and enlarg'd their Quarters 5 or 6 Miles in Compaſs. On the Parliament's Side were kill'd Colonel Lloyd and Colonel Rickbel. On the King's Major Norwood and Captain Richardſon, two Papiſts. Sir John Digby was mortally wounded and died at Bridgwater, a ſtaunch Papiſt. The Parliament ſent Orders to General Maſſey to march towards Taunton with 3000 Horſe and Foot, before General Fairfax left purſuing the King, but he was only ſtrong enough to hinder the Cavaliers ſcatter'd Troops from joining Goring, and Fairfax wrote him Word he would be up with him by ſuch a Day, in order to clear Taunton, and the Country about it, from ſuch a horrid Crew.

General Blake's Letter to the Parliament.

A. D. 1645.

General Fairfax's March into the WEST.

The two Houſes deſir'd the Scots Army to advance towards Hereford, that by reducing ſo conſiderable a Place on the Welch Frontier, the King, who was in Wales, might be farther ſtraiten'd, and ſent Orders to General Fairfax to march to the Relief of Taunton. Accordingly having ſettled the Town of Leiceſter, he march'd the 20th of June to Lutterworth, thence to Warwick, thence to Clifford and Campden in Glouceſterſhire, and on the 25th he came before Highworth in Wiltſhire, and ſummon'd one Major Hen, who had fortify'd himſelf in the Church and refus'd to ſurrender. There is a Spice of Deſperation and Frenzy in the future Actions of the Cavaliers. Hen hung out bloody Colours, but he no ſooner ſaw the Guns drawing up againſt his Fortification than he yielded upon Quarter. The Soldiers had good Booty. The Reſiſtance the Cavaliers make is like the Agonies of dying Men, yet they will not ſuffer their Maſter to part with the Laudæan Prelacy, or rather to part with them, to ſave Himſelf, his Kingdoms and Poſterity. The Miſchief they did now was of no Uſe to them, and the Parliament's Forces treated them like Men who deſerv'd Pity rather than Chaſtiſement, the Delinquents only excepted, who had brought all theſe Calamities on the Nation, and of whom Mr. Edward Hyde was not the leaſt guilty. The General left a ſmall Garriſon at Highworth to enlarge the Parliament's Quarters that way. From Marlborough, June 29. Spies were ſent to Taunton, to give Governor Blake Notice of Fairfax's March towards him. On Salisbury Plain the Army met with ſome of the Club Men, and near Blandford in Dorſetſhire took Mr. Penruddock and one Fuſſell, two of their Captains, who upon Promiſe of future peaceable Behaviour were diſmiſs'd. Theſe Club Men were ſpirited up by ſome Laudæan Prieſts in Wiltſhire and Dorſetſhire, who having a little more Diſcretion than Dr. Hudſon, Dr. Dunſe, and other Doctors, who were among the King's Troops, did not counſel them to declare openly for the King, but for a Neutrality, and under that Pretext to fall upon thoſe who offer'd to diſturb them, meaning the Parliament's Forces only, which they fail'd not to do when they met with Straglers, or had any Advantage over them, as they once broke into Major General Maſſey's Quarters, ſurpriz'd ſome of his Men and ſlew them, but having ſeveral of their own ſlain in Revenge, it gave a Check to them for ſome Time. Their Leaders, Dr. Goche of Trinity College, Cambridge, Mr. Bromwel, Mr. Waltham, Mr. Hook, all Club Divines, John St. Loe, Eſq; Peter Hoskins, Eſq; Thomas Trenchard, Eſq; Robert Culliford, Eſq; Gentlemen much too good for the Company they kept, Mr. Richard Newman, Mr. George Hawles, Mr. Robert Pawlett, and one Young an Attorney, deliver'd a Petition to Sir Thomas Fairfax, to deſire, that till a Peace was concluded the Towns of Dorſet and Wilts ſhould be put into their Hands. The General thought fit to temporize with them till he had driven Goring from before Taunton, leſt on any ill Succeſs theſe Club Troops, headed by their Clergy, ſhould fall upon thoſe of his Men, who retreated to thoſe Counties, ſo he gave them good Words, though he knew very well that ſome of them had rais'd Men by the King's Commiſſion, and reſolv'd to diſperſe them as ſoon as he had an Opportunity.

A. D. 1645.

Goring hearing of Fairfax's Approach drew off his Army to Blackdown, to tempt the Garriſon of Taunton to ſally ſtill farther from their Works, and then cut off their Retreat. But the Garriſon heard as well as he that General Fairfax was approaching, and left Goring to his Management.

The Army march'd from Dorcheſter to Beamiſter, which Town they found in Aſhes, being ſet on Fire by Prince Maurice's Men in five Places at once, occaſion'd by a Quarrel between the French and Corniſh. Here the General receiv'd certain Information, that Goring, who did not know what to do, was quite drawn off from Taunton and come to Ilmiſter, making the beſt of his Way to avoid the victorious Army, but he had ſtaid about Taunton too long. He had a long Reckoning to make up, for the Robberies and Cruelties he and his Crew had committed, and Fairfax is reſolv'd they ſhall pay it. At Crookkern the General commanded Colonel Fleetwood with a Body of Horſe to purſue Goring, while three other Regiments of Horſe, and two of Foot, march'd more ſlowly after him, to be ready to join in caſe of Action. The Enemy pretended to make good South Petherton Bridge, but on Fleetwood's Approach they abandon'd it. The Parliament's Forces march'd over the Bridge towards Ilcheſter, and ſent a Detachment to Load Bridge, where the Royaliſts had a ſtrong Guard, but it was not thought fit to attack them. They had alſo garriſon'd Ilcheſter and Langport, and broke down the Bridge near Yeovill. On July 7, the Parliament Army rendezvouz'd in a Field near Crookkern, and the General and Lieutenant General went with a Party to view the Paſs at Load Bridge. The Enemy's Horſe appear'd in great Numbers. They drew up their Foot and march'd ſome Regiments from Load Bridge along the Side of the River Parret, towards Ilcheſter. The Horſe on both Sides skirmiſh'd all Day by Parties on the Meadows near the River. The Cavaliers had Garriſons at Ilcheſter, Langport, Burrough, Sydenham Houſe, and Bridgwater, and their Army was ready on the other Side of the River to defend the Paſſage. The General therefore left a ſufficient Strength to obſerve the Garriſon at Ilcheſter, and the Guard at Load Bridge, and march'd his Army to Yeovill, where Intelligence was brought that Colonel Phillips, Governor of Ilcheſter, had quitted it, after having burnt the Bridewell, a Place he had fortify'd. The Guard alſo was drawn off from Load Bridge, and Goring came near Taunton again as if he thought he might ſurprize the Club Men.

A. D. 1645. Town in the Security they probably were in upon the Approach of the Parliament Army. General Fairfax ſent Major General Maſſey after Goring with his own Brigade of Horſe, and order'd another Party of Horſe as a Reſerve if need were.

Wedneſday, July the 9th, the Army march'd to Long Sutton, where News came that Major General Maſſey was near upon an Engagement, and the General immediately gave Command that Colonel Montagu ſhould march with 2000 Musketeers to his Aſſiſtance, being every where an inclos'd Country, but the Engagement was over before he could come up, Goring's Party beaten, many ſlain, 800 Horſe taken Priſoners. In this Action Colonel Cooke was ſhot through both Cheeks. The Parliament Horſe continu'd all Day skirmiſhing with the Enemies, at a Paſs a Mile beyond Langport on Ham ſide. They took a French Cornet with his Standard, a Dutch Man, and a Spaniard Priſoners.

Battle of Langport.

The next Day, July the 10th, the Cavalier Infantry advanc'd from Langport to the Paſs, lin'd the Hedges thick with Musketeers, and drew up their Ordnance, upon which the General, Lieutenant General, and all the Officers, inſtantly mounted and rode up the Field where the Enemy was preparing to engage, one of the raſheſt Actions in the War, for Goring might have made his Eſcape when he was Maſter of the weſtern Side of the River. Fairfax could not have hinder'd his Army's getting into Devonſhire and Cornwal, where there were more Forces to encreaſe it, but ill Fate purſu'd the King and his Generals, and Deſpair hurry'd them on Enterprizes which had no Proſpect but Deſtruction. The Parliament's Army was not only more Numerous but Victorious, and Goring's, ſpirited with nothing but the Luſt of Blood and Rapine, which ſinks always in Battle, where the honeſt and generous Mind only carries a Man well through.

Before the Detachment ſent as a Reſerve to Maſſey return'd, Fairfax's Ordnance play'd on Goring's Army with great Execution, beating the Enemy from the Hill on Ham ſide, and forcing them to draw off their Ordnance from the Paſs. The Parliament Foot drew down the Hill towards the Paſs, and with their wonted Reſolution charg'd the Enemy from Hedge to Hedge till they got the Paſs, upon which Goring's Horſe advanc'd towards them, and were charg'd and routed by Major Bethel and Major Desborough. The Musketeers coming up after the Horſe, fir'd on them ſo cloſe, that the King's White and Black Regiment march'd off without farther engaging, and were purſu'd as far as Aller Drove, 3 Miles off, where Goring's Horſe and Foot made a ſhort Stand, but ſeeing Fairfax's Horſe and Foot marching after them in excellent Order, the Cavaliers took to their Heels, the Horſe endeavour'd to leap the Reens, which are broad, full of Water in Winter, and Mire in Summer, and many of the Cavaliers were mir'd. The Troopers diſmounted and got into the Meadows to the Infantry, who being ſurrounded yielded at Diſcretion. There were about 300 of the King's Soldiers kill d, among whom was Mr. Theodore Moxſe, a Popiſh Voluntier, and 1400 Priſoners taken, among whom were Major General Porter, Colonel Heveningham, and Colonel Slingsby, General of Goring's Ordnance Fairfax's Men took alſo 100 inferior Officers, 40 Standards and Colours, 4000 Arms, and 1200 Horſes. Goring, and the reſt of the Runaways, got to Bridgwater, and the General took up his Quarters at Middleſey, within 5 Miles of it. The next Day he drew up his whole Army, Horſe and Foot, on Weſton Moor near Penſy Pound, the very Spot of Ground where juſt forty Years after the Duke of Monmouth's Forces fought King James the Second's. The People of Middleſey, Weſton, Chedſey, Bawdrip, Puriton, Pawlet, and all along Poldon Hill, hearing of the Defeat of the Cavaliers, and fearing to taſte of their former Cruelties as they ran away, roſe in great Numbers, and with their Colours, Clubs, and Arms, appear'd upon Knoll Hill, then belonging to the famous Governor Blake. General Fairfax being inform'd of it, He, Lieutenant General Cromwel, and other Officers, rode up the Hill to them, and were receiv'd with ſeeming Joy, in token of which they gave them a Volley, and their Leader made a neutral Speech. The General having engag'd them not to ſupply Bridgwater with Proviſions return'd to the Army, which quarter'd that Night in and about Chedſey, within two Miles of Bridgwater, which Town the Lord General reſolv'd to reduce.

General Goring routed.

If I am more particular in this Siege than any other, ſome Allowance is to be made for my writing it on the Spot, and for the Love which every one naturally bears to the Place of his Nativity, an Affection which I have obſerv'd to be more prevalent in the Natives of this Town than thoſe of any other, owing probably to their plentiful and jocund Way of living. I am furniſh'd with the Particulars by a Manuſcript which will be improv'd by my Knowledge of the Place, at that Time the moſt Important in the Weſt of England, it, in ſome Meaſure, cutting off the Communication between all the Country beyond it to the Lands End, and the Reſt of England, ſtanding on the River Parret, which divides the ſpacious and rich County of Somerſet in two, and from the Mouth of that River 12 Miles from Bridgwater in the Severn Channel, to its Source on the Edge of Dorſetſhire, not far from the Britiſh Channel, is an Iſthmus not much above 30 Miles broad. The Country from the North almoſt to the South Channel, abounds with all Sorts of Proviſions, as much, if not more, than any Part of England, and could plentifully ſupply a much greater Garriſon than the King had in Bridgwater. A Town which never departed from the true Intereſt of England, when they were not miſled by Bigots, nor influenc'd by an ill Neighbourhood. It was now full of Gentlemen and Clergymen, who, contrary to the Inclination of the Inhabitants, who were generally Puritans, under the Guidance of a very pious, worthy Miniſter, Mr. Deveniſh, their Vicar, made it a Garriſon for the King, while the gallant Colonel Blake, afterwards the renowned Admiral, a Native of this Town, kept Taunton for the Parliament.

Siege of BRIDGWATER.

About 3 Months before General Fairfax attack'd Bridgwater, the Prince of Wales kept his Court in the Caſtle there, and had his Council with him, the chief of whom were, the Earl of Berkſhire, Sir Edward Hyde, the Lord Capel, the Lord Colepepyr. Thither were ſummon'd the King's Commiſſioners for the four aſſociated Counties.

For Cornwall.

Sir Henry Killigrew, Mr. Coriton, Mr. Scawen, Mr. Roſcorroth.

Theſe Gentlemen waited on the Prince the 23d of April, and a long Conſultation was held at the Caſtle about the Operations of the enſuing Campaign. Sir John Stawel propos'd, that One and All ſhould riſe in theſe Aſſociated Counties, and knock the Parliamentarians o'th' Head. But the Vigour of that Propoſition did not meet with the Applauſe it was intended for, his Highneſs's Council not being ſatisfy'd that the One and All were at the Command of Sir John Stawel. At this Meeting was diſcover'd the ill Effect of the Diſagreement between Goring and Greenvile, the King's Generals in the Weſt. Complaints were daily brought againſt Sir Richard Greenvile, and Goring was diſguſted that the Prince did not make him Generaliſſimo of all the Weſtern Armies, which were to be ſoon diſſipated. Much Buſineſs would have been done according to Sir Edward Hyde, who was one of the principal Counſellors, IF it had not been for the Diviſions in the Counſels, which render'd this Meeting uſeleſs. His Highneſs ſtaid at Bridgwater eight Days, and then return'd to Briſtol.

Windham Governor of Bridgwater his Character and his Wife's.

The Earl of Clarendon in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, gives us a pleaſant Account of the Wife of the Governor of Bridgwater, Colonel Edmund Windham, who had been a Burgeſs for this Borough, and was expell'd the Houſe of Commons as a Monopolizer. His Wife had given Suck to the Prince, yet, to uſe the Lord Clarendon's Words, ſhe was a Woman of no good Breeding, and a Country Pride, Nihil Muliebre præter Corpus gerens, having nothing of a Woman about her but her Body. He adds, She valu'd her ſelf much upon the Power and Familiarity which her Neighbours might ſee ſhe had with the Prince of Wales, and therefore upon all Occaſions in Company, and when the Concourſe of People was greateſt, would uſe great Boldneſs towards him, and, which was worſe than all this, ſhe affected in all Companies where ſhe let her ſelf out to any Freedom, a very negligent and diſdainful Mention of the Perſon of the King. She diverted the Prince by her Folly and Petulancy from applying himſelf to the ſerious Conſideration of his Buſineſs, and ſpoke negligently and ſcornfully of his Council. Intolerable! The Lord Clarendon was the chief Man of that Council, and to be ſcorn'd and neglected was enough to put her into his Hiſtory in as ill a Figure as the Wife of Col. Ven, whom he has alſo made as immortal as the Hiſtory of the Rebellion. Governor Windham acted upon his Neighbours without Controul, ſays the Earl, and it is ſaid he hung up an honeſt Townſman upon the Sign-Poſt of the George Inn for having given Offence to ſome of his Clergymen by certain Acts of Devotion in the Presbyterian Way. On the 3d of June the Prince of Wales return'd to Bridgwater, and was attended by a Deputation from the Club-Men, who to the Number of 5 or 6000 appear'd in Arms on Poldon Hill, near Marſhal's Elm, 10 Miles from this Town. They complain'd of Goring's Violence and Rapine, and the Earl of Clarendon aſſures us that Sir John Stawel had his Agents amongſt them. Several Perſons were active at their Meetings, who were known to be affected to the King's Service. The Prince order'd Goring to reform his Army by good Diſcipline, but he took little Notice of thoſe Orders, and liv'd himſelf and ſuffer'd his Men to live in all manner of Licentiouſneſs; but what was moſt grievous to Windham Governor of Bridgwater, he took the Contributions which were aſſeſs'd on the Inhabitants of the Parts adjacent for the Payment of his Garriſon, which conſiſted of about 1800 Men, ſome of whom were taken Priſoners by the Club-Men for attempting to levy thoſe Contributions by Force, after Goring had inhibited Windham to do it.

A. D. 1645.

An Account of the Town.

The Town of Bridgwater is ſeated, as the Earl of Clarendon obſerves, in the Centre of the Shire, and is conſequently the beſt ſituated for the Buſineſs of it, which one would think to be within the Compaſs of common Underſtanding, and therefore not liable to be conteſted. It is the youngeſt Town and the oldeſt Corporation in the County; it not having a Being before the Norman Invaſion, and was incorporated about 130 Years after by Procurement of that powerful Baron William de Briwere, Favourite to Henry II. Richard I. and King John. Briwere built the Caſtle, and made it the Head of his Manors in thoſe Parts. The Caſtle and the Manor of the Caſtle are now in the Poſſeſſion of his Grace the Duke of Chandos, who has built a very handſome Street between the Site of the old Caſtle and the River. The Caſtle now remaining is a modern Building not 100 Years old, and there were no more Apartments in it in Windham's Time than there are now, but ſome Outlodgings and Houſes, of which nothing now is to be ſeen. There were 40 Guns mounted on the Walls, which were 15 Foot thick in moſt Places. An Hiſtorian who was with Sir Thomas Fairfax, ſays, The Town glory'd in the Equality of its Level, there being not a Clod on the Eaſt Side of the River that could afford any Advantage againſt the Place. The Fortifications were very regular and ſtrong; the Ditch about it very deep, and 30 Foot wide, which for a great Part of the Circuit of the Town was every Tide fill'd up to the Brim with Water. The Circuit within the Line and Works was not very large, but very well mann'd. The Town is divided into two Parts by the River Parret, over which is a Stone Bridge with three large Arches built by Nicholas Trivet the Hiſtorian, who marry'd a Deſcendant of Briwere's in Henry III's Time, or that of his Son Edward I. There was a high Fortification at the Eaſt End of the Field, where ſtood the Hoſpital of St. John, and Mounts rais'd between that and Dunwear, which render'd the Acceſs difficult on the Side of Eaſtover the Eaſtern Diviſion of the Town. There was alſo a Garriſon in Sydenham Houſe, belonging now to Mr. Dodington, one of the Lords of the Treaſure, and Repreſentative in this preſent Parliament for the Borough of Bridgwater. The Houſe was ſurrender'd to Colonel Holborn on Summons, and in it 100 Men were made Priſoners of War. The General order'd Col. Welden's Brigade to poſt themſelves at Ham Houſe on the South-Weſt Part of the Town, and the adjacent Hill belonging alſo to Mr. Dodington, from whence it was eaſy to annoy the Place. Batteries were rais'd there, but the Lord General reſolv'd not to make a long Siege of it, and to carry the Town by Storming, while his Soldiers were fluſh'd with the Victory at Langport. He commanded Col. Okey with a Detachment to reduce the King's Garriſon at Burrough, where 140 of Goring's Men had fortify'd themſelves in a Chapel on the Top of a ſteep Pyramidical Hill; but they were ſo terrify'd at the Sight of the Rout given their Fellows in Auler Grounds, juſt under the Hill, that they ſurrender'd upon Quarter.

Vice Admiral Moulton had been order'd to cruize in the Severne, or Briſtol Channel, and prevent the tranſporting of Soldiers from Wales

A. D. 1645. to Bridgwater, between which there is great Communication on Account of the Coal Trade. Moulton's Frigates took 16 Welſh Tranſports off Steepholmes, an Iſland, or rather Rock, about two Leagues from the Mouth of Bridgwater River, famous for the Retirement of the old Britiſh Hiſtorian Gildas, which, with Variety of other curious Incidents relating to theſe Parts, muſt be referr'd to the Deſcription of Somerſetſhire, a Work the Author has been preparing theſe twelve Years, the perfecting of which, as uſeful and pleaſant as it would be, has been and is ſtill impeded purely by the Prejudice of Party, and a private Jealouſy too mean to be mention'd here.

On Monday the 14th of July a Council of War was held at the head Quarters at Chedſey, and a great Debate aroſe whether to ſtorm the Town or not. They came then to no Reſolution; but however Preparations were made for a Storm, Faggots were provided, and the Soldiers drawn out in a Readineſs: But it was deferr'd at that Time, and Lieutenant General Hammond caus'd eight Bridges about 40 Foot long to be prepar'd, which was of great Uſe in the Storm. This Day the General fording the River at Dunwear to view the Poſts on Ham Side, was in Danger of being ſurpriz'd by the Head of the Tide, which at a Spring breaks in ſometimes in a foamy Wave, of 4 or 5 Foot high, the Breadth of the River. Two Days after another Council of War was held at Chedſey, wherein was debated, Whether to riſe, and leave the Town unattempted, which was conceiv'd to be very prejudicial to their future Progreſs, or to ſit down before it; being a Place of that Strength, and they not ſure to carry it, leaving the Enemy at Liberty to rally his broken Forces, which ſeem'd very hazardous, or block it up by Forts on both Sides with Part of their Army: But the Difficulty of laying a Bridge over the River, thro' the Violence of the Current, which would be neceſſary for maintaining a Communication between the Quarters on both Sides, hinder'd that Deſign, or attempt it by Approaches. It was conſider'd, if they ſhould go that Way, it would prove very tedious; and if, during their Stay about it, any great Glut of Rain ſhould fall, it would fill up their Trenches, and diſable them from effecting the Buſineſs; ſo at laſt it was reſolv'd to ſtorm, tho' it carry'd the greateſt Danger with it. Yet the Deſire the Army had to be ſpeedily free, for the farther Service of the Common Wealth, ſurmounted all Difficulties, and both Officers and Soldiers drew Lots for their Poſts, ſome to ſtorm, ſome to be Reſerves, others to allarm. The Day appointed for it was Monday the 20th of July. General Maſſey was to make the Attack on Ham Side, with the Regiments of Col. Welden, Col. Ingoldsby, Col. Forteſcue, Col. Herbert, Col. Birch, and the Major General's own Regiment. On St. John's and Caſtle Field Side were poſted the General's Regiment, Lieutenant General Cromwel's, Col. Pickering's, Col. Montagu's, Sir Hardreſs Waller's, Col. Pride's, Col. Rainsborough's. On the Saturday the General forded the River again, and rode round the Town to ſee if all Things were ready, that both Sides might fall on together. The Caſtle Wall on the North Side was very high, the Moat was deep, and between the North Gate and Weſt Gate was a Battery on the off Side of the Moat, which hinder'd all Approach that Way. On Sunday Mr. Peters preach'd an encouraging Sermon, after his Way of Preaching, in the Forenoon, and Mr. Bowles, the Lord General's Chaplain, in the Afternoon. The eminent Mr. Baxter, who was preſent at this great Action, was not wanting in the Diſcharge of his Duty. Mr. Bowles is the ſame Divine who was afterwards ſo inſtrumental in the Reſtoration, and refus'd the Deanry of York, which was offer'd him. After the Sermons the Drums beat, and the Army was drawn up in the Fields about Horſey and Bower. The Commanders of the Forlorn Hope, and the Soldiers who were to begin the Storm, were afreſh exhorted to do their Duties by Mr. Peters, who behav'd that Day tam Marte quam Mercurio. As ſoon as it grew dark, the Soldiers drew to the ſeveral Poſts alloted them to Storm. The Storm'd. Signal was the ſhooting off three Pieces of Ordnance, which the Forces on Ham Side were to take Notice of, and to fall on at the Inſtant. Before the Action Sir Thomas Fairfax ſent a Summons to the Governor and Citizens, as Sir Roger Manley calls them, to ſurrender: But Windham, like the reſt of the Cavaliers, did not want Words of Defiance, and return'd a ſcornful Anſwer, for which he is to pay ſeverely the next Day. July the 21ſt, about Two a Clock in the Morning, while Maſſey's Forces kept alarming the Enemy on the South Part of the Town, Lieutenant Col. Hewſon led on the Forlorn Hope at the Eaſt End, and was valiantly ſeconded by the General's own Regiment, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Jackſon, and Lieutenant General Cromwel's, commanded by Lieutenant Col. Aſhfield. The Bridges prepar'd by Col. Hammond were quickly brought to the Ditch at St. John's and Caſtle Field, and thrown over it, on which the Soldiers paſs'd with little Loſs, and with undaunted Courage mounted the Works the Enemy had rais'd there, beat them from their Ordnance, and turn'd them on the Town, while Capt. Reynolds, of Cromwel's Regiment of Horſe, at the Head of the Forlorn Hope, drove the Cavaliers from the Draw-bridge at St. John's, which was let down, and a Paſſage made to the Eaſt Gate, which was ſoon forc'd open, and Reynolds entring Eaſtover, ſays my Author, with his Horſe, ſcour'd the Streets of that Part of the Town up to the Stone Bridge, over the River that cuts it in two; upon which the Officers and Soldiers, to the Number of 600, who had made Reſiſtance in Eaſtover, threw down their Arms, and cry'd Quarter, Quarter. There was at that Time a Gate on the Bridge where the Enemy inſtantly made Barricades, and drew up a Draw-bridge. The Parliament's Forces had not been two Hours in Eaſtover before the King's ſhot Granades and Slugs of hot Iron, which fir'd it on both Sides, and by next Morning it was all burnt to the Ground, except three or four Houſes: It conſiſted then of Goodly Buildings, as my Author writes, who ſaw it, and of ſeveral Streets. Major Cowel of Col. Harley's Regiment, ſtood in the Midſt of Eaſtover, while both Sides were in Flames, and kept Guard to prevent the Enemy's ſallying. General Fairfax hoping the Storm might have ſo wrought upon the Soldiers, and the Fire on the Townſmen, that they would have hearken'd to a Treaty, renew'd his Summons, which the Governor peremptorily refus'd, as if it was his Intent that ſo fair a Town ſhould be deſtroy'd, for he knew he could at worſt be but a Priſoner of War. There was no Hope of his being reliev'd, and the Reſiſtance the Royaliſts made, had more of Frenzy in it than Courage. When the Latter ſaw Eaſtover in a Blaze, they rang the Bells for Joy, and ſet Fire themſelves to ſeveral Houſes in Silver Street, Friers Street, and at the Pig Croſs, which ſhew the Effect of it to this Day, where the Parliament Fire had done no Hurt, laying it to the Charge of the Townſmen, who, they ſaid, did it on Purpoſe to be rid of them; for the Inhabitants,

A. D. 1645. habitants, as I have already obſerv'd, were generally well affected to the Parliament. The Townſmen ſaid the Soldiers did it, when they had little Hopes to hold out; But Thanks be to God, ſays the Hiſtorian, we found more of it ſtanding than we expected.

On Tueſday, July 22. General Fairfax reſolv'd to alarm the Town on the Eaſt Side, while General Maſſey ſtorm'd it on the South; but that Reſolution was chang'd to an Alarm on both Sides, at which the Enemy was much amaz'd, and abandon'd their Line on the South and South-Weſt Part of the Town. About Two a Clock that Day the General ſent a Trumpet to the Governor with a Meſſage to this Purpoſe; That his Denial of fair Terms had wrought in him no other Thoughts, but of Compaſſion towards thoſe that were innocent, who otherwiſe might ſuffer thro' the Governor's Obſtinacy; wherefore he ſignify'd to him, That Women and Children that would might come forth of the Town by Four a Clock; which being made known to Col. Windham's Lady, ſhe came out, as did alſo the Lady Hawley, Mrs. War, and ſeveral other Ladies. They were no ſooner gone, than the Cannon play'd fiercely into the Town; Granades were ſhot, and Slugs of hot Iron in Abundance, by which ſeveral Houſes on the Corn-hill, in St. Mary's Street and High Street were ſet on Fire, and the Wind being high, increas'd the Flame. The Citizens and Soldiers, ſays Sir Roger Manley, who was then there, were aſtoniſh'd at this unuſual Tempeſt, and every Man employ'd about ſaving his Houſe and his Goods. Windham, amidſt this Diſtraction, ſent Tom Elliot, as he was then generally call'd, one of the King's Domeſticks, to deſire Terms; but the General would only grant the Soldiers their Lives, the Inhabitants their Liberty and Freedom from Plunder, the Gentlemen to be diſpos'd of as the Parliament ſhould appoint, which the Governor ſaid the Gentlemen would not conſent to, and Mr. Elliot, the ſame who carry'd the Great Seal to the King at York, fearing the Army would fall on, pray'd the General to forbear till he went once more to Windham, from whom he preſently brought back an Anſwer of Submiſſion. The Town continu'd on Fire, and the Townſmen ran about, crying, Mercy, for the Lord's Sake. Hoſtages alſo came out to the Lord General for Performance of the Governor's Agreement, who were Sir John Heal, Sir Hugh Windham, Mr. Walrond, Mr. War, Mr. Sydenham, Mr. Speke, and the Town was the next Day, July the 23d, Taken. ſurrender'd to the Parliament Army upon Quarter for Life only. There were in the Town when Sir Thomas Fairfax came before it, Col. Edmund Windham the Governor, Sir Hugh Windham, Sir John Digby, Sir John Heal, Sir John Stawel, Sir Francis Courtney, Mr. Speke, Mr. War, Mr. Walrond, Mr. Sydenham, &c.

One of the pooreſt hiſtorical Creatures who ever wrote, is Sanderſon, to whom Mr. Archdeacon is much obliged, and he tells us, The Garriſon was to march out, leaving ſuch Ammunition and Plunder as eſcap'd burning, which was very little, and not worth the Purchaſe. This Author was allow'd to be the beſt Hiſtorian on the Cavalier Side, till the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Echard appear'd in direct Defiance to Fact and Truth; and how they were taught by Sanderſon will be ſeen when he is compar'd with Whitlocke and Ruſhworth, the latter being preſent when this Town was ſtorm'd and taken. There were left for the Parliament 40 Pieces of Ordnance, 4000 Weight of Match, and Powder in Proportion, Victuals for 2000 Soldiers for four Months, 1700 Priſoners, 200 of them Reformades, Commanders, Gentlemen and Prieſts, Treaſure in Plate, Jewels, &c. ſaid to be worth 100000 Pounds. The Works of the Town were as ſtrong as any in England, and the Moat as deep. A. D. 1645.

The taking of Bridgwater, according to my Lord Clarendon, who had been there but a Month before, was "Matter of Amazement to all Men; "nor was it any Excuſe that it was not of "Strength enough againſt ſo ſtrong an Army, "for it was ſo ſtrongly ſituated, and it might "well have had all thoſe Additions which were "neceſſary for Fortifications, that it was inexcuſable in a Governor, who had enjoy'd that "Charge 3 Years, with all the Allowances he "had himſelf deſir'd, and had often aſſur'd the "King that it was not to be taken, that it did "not reſiſt any the greateſt Strength that could "come before it for one Week, and within leſs "Time it was ſurrender'd into Fairfax's Hands, "not till it had been ſtorm'd, burnt, and ren"der'd defenceleſs: But the Earl of Clarendon did not love Windham on his Wife's Account, who had no very good Opinion of his Counſels. Again, "That this prodigious Succeſs on the "Enemy's Side ſhould break the Spirits of moſt "Men is not at all to be wonder'd at, &c."

An Expreſs was immediately diſpatch'd to the Parliament with Advice of the Surrender of Bridgwater. They gave him 20 Pounds as a Reward, and order'd that the Miniſters in the ſeveral Pariſhes of London ſhould the next Lord's-Day, render Thanks to God for the taking of this Town, of which Mr. Peters gave them, two or three Days after, a more particular Account, and produc'd ſeveral Commiſſions in Characters which were taken from the Priſoners at Bridgewater. The Houſe order'd him 100 Pounds, and Thanks to their General Sir Thomas Fairfax, for reducing it. Colonel Birch was made Governor. The Reaſon of ſo great Treaſure found here was, that the Cavalier Gentry had from all the adjacent Parts, ſent in thither their Jewels, Plate, and beſt Houſhold Furniture; Colonel Windham, the Governor, having aſſur'd the King it could not be taken. Much Plate and rich Hangings were carry'd thence to London, and there ſold to raiſe Bounty Money for Fairfax's Soldiers who were at the Storm, which was the moſt Furious of any in this War, and the Prize of the Victors as valuable; But the fine Town, as the Hiſtorian ſtiles it, ſuffer'd much in the Burning ſo many goodly Buildings, of which there are left no Remains in the Eaſtern Diviſion of the Place, which was taken by Storm, but the Weſtern can now boaſt of more Beauty and Magnificence of Building than any other Town in the Weſt of England, of ſo ſmall a Circuit, ſcarce 2 Miles in Circumference.

A Week after the Surrender of Bridgwater, the Army was drawn up on Mendip Hill, above Wells, with Intention to march to Bath; but Bath taken upon Intelligence that the Citizens had open'd their Gates to Colonel Rich, who came before it with two Regiments of Horſe and two Troops of Dragoons only, the General turn'd towards Shireburn, which he took a View of at the Lodge, Saturday, Auguſt 2. The ſame Day he had Information that the Club Men of Dorſet, Wilts, Club Men. and Somerſet, were to rendezvouz at Shaftsbury, and a fair Opportunity offer'd to ſurprize them. Theſe Club Men correſponded with Prince Rupert, Lord Hopton, and Goring, though they pretended Neutrality. Indeed it was one of the beſt Cards the Cavalier Generals had to play in this Extremity. This Rabble were in all above

A. D. 1645. above 15000 Men, and if they could have been prevailed upon to have declar'd and fought for the King, it might have prolong'd the War ſome Months at leaſt, and People in Deſpair always flatter themſelves, that Matters being at the Worſt muſt mend; but though the Club Men were much better inclin'd to that Service than to the Cauſe of their Country, they had not Courage enough to oppoſe a victorious Army, and the Lord General did not think it convenient to be any longer trifled with by them, or to leave them at Liberty to join or not join the Royaliſts at their Pleaſure. He therefore commanded Colonel Fleetwood with a good Body of Horſe to ſurround them in the Town of Shaftsbury, which accordingly he did, and took about 50 of their Ringleaders Priſoners; among whom were Dr. Goche, the Parſon, Mr. Hawles, Mr. Carey, Mr. Young, Mr. Cradocke, who were all diſarm'd and impriſon'd. The next Day the General receiv'd Advice that more Club Men were to join them from Dorſet, Wilts and Somerſet, to deliver their Fellows out of Priſon, though their real Intent was to hinder Proviſions coming to the Army before Shirburn. Upon this Lieutenant General Cromwel went in Perſon with Part of the Army to diſperſe them: As he advanc'd towards Shaftsbury, he diſcover'd ſome Colours on the Top of a high Hill, full of Wood and almoſt inacceſſible. He ſent a Lieutenant and a ſmall Party to know their Meaning, and to inform them the Lieutenant General was there. Mr. Newman, one of their Leaders went along with Gen. Cromwel's Lieutenant, to the General, and demanded, Why the Gentlemen were taken at Shaftsbury? Cromwel told him, "No Account was due concerning their Fellows there taken, but yet he "aſſur'd him, that the General only intended "if they were found upon due Trial, to have "committed any Offence, they ſhould be puniſh'd according to Law, otherwiſe be releas'd." Newman's next Demand was, that they might ſecure themſelves from Plunder: To which the Lieutenant General reply'd, "The General "will not ſuffer any of you to be plunder'd or injur'd, but upon Complaint againſt any of his "Soldiers, will do you Juſtice;" With which Anſwer he ſeem'd ſatisfy'd, and the Club Men on the Hill diſappear'd: But Cromwel advancing towards Shrawton, the Seat of Mr. Freeke, ſaw 4000 of them on Hambleton Hill, where is an old Roman Work deeply trench'd. The Lieutenant General ſent a Lieutenant with a Party of Horſe to require an Account of their Meeting; he was anſwer'd with a Volley of Shot from the Club Men. Cromwel ſent one Mr. Lee, who had come from them to him to require Submiſſion to his Orders, and that they would diſperſe, which they refus'd, and made another Volley on the Parliament's Soldiers. Lee was ſent to them again to prevent Effuſion of Blood, but they refus'd this third Meſſage at the Inſtigation of one Bravel, a Parſon, who bad them ſtand to it, or he would Piſtol thoſe that gave back. The Lieutenant General then order'd his own Troop to fall on, which they did, and were repuls'd, the Club Men firing from behind the old Work, to which there was a Paſſage about 20 Foot wide: Upon this Major Desborough with the General's Regiment, went round about a Ledge of the Hill, and climb'd it with much Difficulty, which the Club Men perceiving, and that he was about to attack their Rear, they ran away; ſome were ſlain, many wounded, the reſt ſlid and tumbled down the high ſteep Hill to the Hazard of their Necks. Four hundred of them were brought to Shrawton, of whom 200 were wounded. In this Skirmiſh Captain Pattiſon and about 12 more were kill'd on the Parliament Side. There were among the Priſoners four Parſons, Mr. Talbot of Milton, Mr. Lawford of Auckfield, a vicious one, and two more. The Motto of their Colours was, A. D. 1645.

Diſpers'd.

If you offer to plunder or take our Cattle,
Be aſſur'd we will bid you Battle.

My Author adds, in others of them they had Sentences of Scripture profanely apply'd by their malignant Prieſts, who were the principal ſtirrers up of the People to theſe tumultuous Aſſemblies, particularly Bravel before mention'd, Parſon of Compton, and Mr. Rogers Parſon of Langton, who iſſu'd out Warrants to the Country Fellows to make Repriſals for the Priſoners taken at Shaftsbury, and the Club Men own'd they would have laid down their Arms had it not been for Bravel, Lawford and White, Vicars or Curates. We have read in the Earl of Clarendon's and Echard's Hiſtories, That the Puritan Miniſters were the Eccleſiaſtical Drummers, and preach'd the People to War. But here we find ſome of their own Eccleſiaſtical Friends in actual War, miſleading their ſtupid Hearers to hazard their Lives and Goods for they knew not what; and the ſame Spirit ſtill poſſeſſes too many of the Vicars and Curates in the ſame Quarter of the Kingdom.

In the mean Time General Fairfax carry'd on the Siege of Shirburn Caſtle, before which was kill'd the gallant Captain Horſey of Colonel Rainsborough's Regiment, who was bury'd with military Pomp in the fine Church at Shirburn, where his Anceſtors lay bury'd: His Family being at leaſt as ancient and honourable as Mr. Hyde's, who is pleas'd to ſay in his impartial Hiſtory, that there was hardly a Colonel in the Parliament Army of a better Family than the private Soldiers, and here's a Captain only of as good a one as his own, or that of the greateſt General in the King's Army, the Princes only excepted. A Breach of 50 Foot wide being made in the Caſtle Wall, the General ſummon'd Sir Lewis Dives the Governor to yield, but he return'd a peremptory Denial, confiding too much in the Zeal and Strength of the Club Men. Upon his Refuſal of Terms 20 of his Garriſon leap'd over the Wall, and came to the Parliament Army upon Quarter. Thoſe within cry'd out for a Parley, but it was deny'd upon any other Condition than to have their Lives ſpar'd; and while they were diſputing it, the Parliament's Soldiers enter'd the Place at the Breach, and the Garriſon threw down their Arms; Quarter was given them, but they were ſtripp'd to the Purpoſe, all but Sir Lewis Dives and his Lady, the Lord Digby's Siſter, and a few more. The Soldiers found Plunder to a great Value, and took it in a diſorderly Manner, which could not then be prevented. Beſides their making a Reſiſtance not like brave Men, but mad Men, no Relief being to be expected, loſt them all Claim to the Uſage of generous War. The taking of this Place ſo diſcourag'd the Club Men, that they gave the General very little Trouble afterwards. In it were taken, beſides Sir Lewis Dives, the Governor, Colonel Giles Strangeways, Sir John Walcot, Mr. Pawlet, Colonel Thornhill, and others of Quality. We cannot name the latter without obſerving that Sir James Thornhill, the greateſt Genius for Painting, not only of our Nation, but of our Age, is of the ſame Family, and Owner of the ſame Seat, Thornhill, in this County of Dorſet. Shirburn taken.

A. D. 1645.

The Priſoners, as well the Club Men as thoſe taken in Shirburn Caſtle, being ſent to London, the General march'd to Caſtle Cary in Somerſetſhire, and in his March order'd Colonel Rainsborough with his own, and Colonel Hammond's Regiments to take in Nunney Caſtle, which was very ſtrong though not very large, and had a Garriſon of 100 Men under Captain Turberville, who ſurrender'd it the ſecond Day after Summons.

Siege of Briſtol.

The Siege of Briſtol being reſolv'd on, Commiſſary General Ireton was commanded to advance near it with 2000 Horſe and Dragoons, to preſerve the adjacent Towns for the better Accommodation of the Army. Vice Admiral Moulton was order'd to ſend ſome Ships from Milford, to block up the City on the Side of the Severne. Prince Rupert, the Governor, had there and in the Neighbourhood about 5000 Men, Horſe and Foot. The General detach'd a ſtrong Party of Horſe with a Regiment of Foot to take Poſt at Hanham, three Miles from Briſtol, on the River Avon, between that and Bath, which gave the Enemy the firſt Alarm; for the Cavaliers made ſo great Dependance on their good Friends the Club Men, that they did not think the General would be able to reduce Shirburn in ſo ſhort Time. Upon his Approach they fir'd Bedminſter and burnt it to the Ground, a Village now almoſt contiguous to the City on Somerſetſhire Side: Thither was ſent a ſtrong Party of Horſe and Foot to keep the Prince where he was, upon Advice that he intended to break through with his Horſe and join Goring. The General and Lieutenant General went with this Party, view'd the Town, and appointed Guards and Quarters on Somerſetſhire Side: The General himſelf quarter'd at Keynſham, where he receiv'd Meſſages from ſeveral Lords and Perſons of Quality for Paſſes to go beyond Sea; but they had ſtaid too long in England ſince the War broke out, and done too much Miſchief to be let go at the Ending of it. The two next Days, the 22d and 23d of Auguſt, were ſpent in ſetting Guards on Glouceſter and Somerſetſhire Side, the Head Quarters being remov'd to Hanham. The Enemy's Cannon play'd from the Great Fort and Pryor's Fort, but wounded only a Dragoon. They made a Sally with a Party of Horſe but were beaten in again, with the Loſs of Sir Richard Crane, and others. The Head Quarters were again remov'd to Stapleton on Glouceſterſhire Side. The next Day being Sunday, the Enemy ſally'd out again, at the Salley Port near Pryor's Hill Fort, in a full Career, but were again beaten back by Colonel Rainsborough's Regiment. In this Action they loſt a Major and ſome others. The next Day Warrants were iſſu'd to Sir John Horner, that eminent Patriot, High Sheriff of the County of Somerſet, to raiſe the Poſſe, and be in a Readineſs to reinforce General Maſſey, who lay about Taunton, to obſerve the Motions of Goring, who had got a Body together in Devonſhire. On Tueſday the Enemy ſally'd on Colonel Welden's Brigade at Bedminſter, and through the Negligence of the Officer who then had Command there, took 10 and kill'd as many. As a Recompenſe for this Affront Captain Molineux of Colonel Butler's Regiment, and another ſtout Officer, ſeeing three bold Cavaliers under their Works, rode up to them, and ask'd Whom they were for? They ſwore, God damn them, for the King, and fir'd at the two Roundheads, who immediately return'd their Fire, wounded them, and after ſome Bickerings, took Sir Bernard Aſhley, who was one of them, and dy'd of his Wounds; Colonel Daniel another of them, and his Companion got into the Town again. On Thurſday the 28th of Auguſt, Lieutenant Colonel Kempſon of Welden's Regiment, took the Fort at Portſhead Point, which open'd a Paſſage for the Parliament's Ships into Kingroad, where Vice Admiral Moulton arriv'd three Days after, came a Shore to wait on the General, and offer'd him his beſt Aſſiſtance of Sailors, if the General ſtorm'd the City. The Beſieg'd made a Salley on the Parliament's Quarters near Lawford's Gate, and took three or four Soldiers. A. D. 1645.

On Monday the 1ſt of September, Prince Rupert ſally'd out with 100 Horſe and 600 Foot, and was driven in again by Fairfax's Horſe and Colonel Rainsborough's Brigade of Foot; but it being a wet miſty Day, Colonel Okey fell in among the Enemy unawares, and was taken by them. The Valiant Captain Guilliams of Commiſſary General Ireton's Regiment was kill'd in the Skirmiſh. On Tueſday a Council of War was held, and it was then reſolv'd to ſtorm the Place. Colonel Welden with his Brigade, conſiſting of his own Regiment, Colonel Ingoldsby's, Colonel Forteſcue's and Col. Herbert's were to ſtorm on Somerſetſhire Side; Colonel Montagu with the General's Brigade, conſiſting of Fairfax's Regiment, Colonel Montagu's, Colonel Pickering's, and Sir Hardreſs Waller's were to ſtorm on both Sides Lawford's Gate, to the Rivers Avon and Frome. The Bridge over Frome to be made good againſt Horſe with Pikes, or to break it down. Colonel Rainsborough with his own Regiment, Major General Skippon's, Colonel Hammond's, Colonel Birch's, and Colonel Pride's were to ſtorm from the Salley on Frome Side up to Pryor's Hill Fort, and to ſtorm the Fort it ſelf as the main Buſineſs, 200 of this Brigade to go up in Boats with the Seamen to ſtorm Water Fort: A Regiment of Horſe and another of Foot to move up and down in the Cloſes before the Royal Fort, to ply hard upon it and alarm it. A Regiment of Dragoons and two Regiments of Horſe to carry Ladders with them, and attempt the Line and Works by Clifton and Waſhington's Breach: All Things being ready, the General order'd every Man to have ſix Shillings paid him for his Encouragement; ſo much having been promis'd them as a Bounty for their good Service at Bridgwater; and the General and Council here receiving News of Montroſe's Succeſſes and Depredations in Scotland, wrote a Letter to the Earl of Leven and his chief Officers, to expreſs how ſenſible they were of it, and how willing to ſerve them if Need were for their ſettling of their Nation in Peace, ſo ſoon as the Condition of this Kingdom could ſpare them. Sign'd by Sir Thomas Fairfax, General, Oliver Cromwel, Lieutenant General, Thomas Hammond, Lieutenant General of the Ordnance, Henry Ireton, Commiſſary General, Edward Montagu, afterwards Earl of Sandwich, Colonel Richard Forteſcue, Colonel, afterwards Sir Richard Ingoldsby, Colonel John Pickering, Sir Hardreſs Waller Colonel, Colonel William Herbert, Colonel Robert Hammond, Lieutenant Colonel James Gray, Adjutant General of the Foot, Lieutenant Colonel Thomas Pride, Sir Robert Pye Colonel, Colonel Thomas Rainsborough, Colonel Thomas Sheffield, Colonel Ralph Welden, Colonel Charles Fleetwood, Lieutenant Colonel John Raymond, Lieutenant Colonel Leon. Watſon, Captain Arthur Evelyn, Adjutant General of the Horſe, Captain Richard Dean, Comptroller of the Ordnance, Lieutenant Colonel James Jackſon, Major John Desborough, Major Chriſtopher Bethel. *A. Cannon

A. D. 1645. Cannon Baskets being fill'd, Seamen and Boats ſent for, and all Things ready for a Storm, the Lord General ſent a Letter to Prince Rupert, to ſummon him to ſurrender the City, in which Letter he endeavour'd to convince the Prince of the Juſtneſs of the Parliament's Cauſe, and of his delivering up the City to them: He cloſes it thus, Let all England judge whether the Burning of its Towns, ruining its Cities, and deſtroying its People be a good Requital from a Perſon of your Family, which hath had the Prayers, Tears, Purſes and Blood of its Parliament and People. I have often taken Notice of this. And, if you look on either as now divided, hath ever had the ſame Party, both in Parliaments, and among the People moſt Zealous for their Aſſiſtance and Reſtitution, which you now oppoſe and ſeek to deſtroy, and whoſe conſtant Grief hath been, that their Deſires to ſerve your Family have been ever hinder'd and made fruitleſs by the ſame Party about his Majeſty, whoſe Courſe you act, and whoſe Intereſt you purſue in this unnatural War. It is worth obſerving here that General Fairfax remonſtrates againſt Prince Rupert's drawing his Sword againſt a Party, who were the only zealous Friends to his illuſtrious Family, the Parliament of England having always deſir'd nothing more earneſtly than the Reſtoring the Palatine Houſe to their Hereditary Rights. The Trumpet that went with the Summons was detain'd all Night, and the next Day, September the 5th, brought an Anſwer from the Prince, deſiring Leave to ſend to the King, which the Lord General excus'd as a Delay, and demanded a more poſitive Anſwer by the ſame Trumpet, who brought back Propoſitions; to every Article of which the General objected, and gave his Reaſons for it in Writing, which not ſatisfying Prince Rupert, the Storm was made the 10th of September.

The Storm.

The Signal was the Firing of Straw and Faggots on the Top of a Hill, and the Shooting off 4 great Guns againſt Pryor's Fort, from the Place where the General was to reſide all the Time of the Storm, which began immediately upon the Signal, and was terrible to the Beholders. The Parliament Word was David before the Line was enter'd, and the Lord of Hoſts afterwards. Colonel Montagu and Colonel Pickering, with their Regiments at Lawford's Gate enter'd ſpeedily, and took 22 great Guns with many Priſoners. Major Desborough advanc'd with the Horſe after them, having the Command of the General's Regiment and part of Colonel Graves's, Sir Hardreſs Waller, and Lieutenant Colonel Jackſon enter'd with their Regiments between Lawford's Gate and the River Frome, Colonel Rainsborough's and Colonel Hammond's Regiments enter'd near Pryor's Fort, Major General Skippon's and Colonel Birch's enter'd nearer to the River Avon. The Regiment commanded by Colonel Pride was divided, part aſſign'd to the Service at Pryor's Fort, and part to alarm the Great Fort. Theſe took a little Fort defended by Welch Men. The Seamen aſſiſted in ſtorming the Line and Works, which being broken down by Pioneers, Captain Ireton, Major Bethel, Adjutant General Fleming, of Whaley's, Rich's and Graves's Regiments of Horſe, enter'd, and meeting with a Party of the Enemies defeated them. In this Action Colonel Taylor, Burgeſs for Windſor, but expell'd for Malignancy, was mortally wounded. This ſo diſhearten'd their Horſe, who perceiv'd alſo that Fairfax's Foot were Maſters of the Line, that they never came on again to give one Charge, but retreated, and ſtood in a Body under Covert of the Great Fort, and Coulſton's Fort. In the mean while Pryor's Hill Fort held out obſtinately two Hours after the Line was center'd, but then was taken by Storm, ſome of the Parliament's Soldiers creeping in at the Port Holes. Captain Lagoe, of Colonel Pride's Regiment, was the firſt who laid hold on the Colours, and the Parliamentarians were ſo enrag'd at the Obſtinacy of the Cavaliers, that they put the Commander, Major Price, and moſt of the Officers and Soldiers to the Sword. All this was done between two a Clock and five in the Morning. It was dark, and well it was ſo for the Parliament's Soldiers, who could not have ſtood upon any Ground, had it been light, to have attempted Pryor's Hill Fort, in regard the Great Fort, and Coulſton's Fort on the one Side, and the Caſtle on the other, might have cut them off as they came, but being in the Dark they durſt not ſhoot for fear of killing their own Men, the Cavalier Horſe being drawn up during the Storm in a Body between Coulſton's Fort and the Great Fort. The Forces on Somerſetſhire Side had not the like Succeſs. The City Works were ſo High without Temple Gate and Radcliffe Gate, that the Ladders could not reach them. The Horſe deſign'd to enter the Line there, were Lieutenant Cromwel's Regiment, commanded by Major Huntington, Sir Robert Pye's, and Colonel Sheffield's, who all three behav'd with great Intrepidity, but could not force their Way. And leaſt the Prince ſhould attempt to make his Eſcape, while Fairfax's Men were ſtorming, Commiſſary General Ireton's, Colonel Butler's, and Colonel Fleetwood's Regiments of Horſe, were appointed to be in a moving Body on Durdam Down, the moſt open Paſſage for Horſe to get off. Ireton, and the two other Regiments, alarm'd that Side of the Line, and Great Fort, towards Durdam Down and Clifton, as Colonel Okey's Dragoons did Brandon Hill Fort, and the Line towards Clifton. A. D. 1645.

The Surrender.

About 9 a Clock a Trumpet came from the Prince to deſire a Parley, which there was Reaſon enough to refuſe, but conſidering the Enemy had fir'd the City in ſeveral Places, at which Time Temple Street was burnt, and that the whole City was like to be conſum'd, if the Fire had gone on, the General conſented to a Treaty, and nominated Colonel Montagu, Colonel Rainſborough, and Colonel Pickering, to be his Commiſſioners to treat with the Prince's Commiſſioners, Colonel Mynn, Major General Tillyer, Sir William Vavaſor a Papiſt, and they agreed upon Articles which were very honourable for a Garriſon in that deſperate Condition, who were allow'd to march out with Arms, Colours, Drums, Bag and Baggage, and they did ſo the next Day, the 11th of September, when the Prince march'd out of the Great Fort, and with him went 8 Lords, ſeveral Ladies and Perſons of Quality. The General waited on his Highneſs about 2 Miles, and there was a great Appearance of the Country to ſee Prince Rupert and his Garriſon marching off, many crying, Give him no Quarter, Give him no Quarter, for his Highneſs had much provok'd the People by the ill Diſcipline of his Men, and had carry'd on the War with great Rage and Inveteracy againſt the Parliament, who made ſuch ample Proviſion for his Mother and elder Brother the Prince Elector, and were always ſo zealous to promote the Intereſts of his Princely Family. Whitlocke ſays, "The Cauſe of fitting down before Briſtol was "to prevent the Plunder and Cruelties of Prince "Rupert in that Country." Here were taken 140 Pieces of Cannon mounted, 100 Barrels of Powder, and Ammunition in Proportion. The

A. D. 1645.

Great Fort and Caſtle had Proviſions for 150 Men for 350 Days; there was in Garriſon, as Mr. Creſwick the Mayor told General Cromwel, 2500 Foot, 1000 Horſe, and about 1500 Train'd Bands and Auxiliaries, and there march'd out only 500 Horſe and 1400 Foot, the reſt being kill'd, or wounded, or taken, or run away. Fairfax loſt but 160 Men in the Storm, among whom were Capt. Gayle of Pickering's Regiment, Lieutenant Colonel Durſey of Forteſcue's, Major Cromwel and Capt. Ward of Ingoldsby's, Capt. Sterne of Rainsborough's, Major Bethel of Whaley's, Capt. Guilliams of Ireton's. Fairfax here and at Bridgwater recover'd all the Cannon which the Earl of Eſſex loſt in Cornwall. Major General Skippon was appointed Governor of Briſtol, Mr. Creſwick the Mayor was diſplac'd, and John Gunning, Eſq; who had been Sheriff A. D. 1631. put into his Office.

Thus in little more than two Months has the victorious General Sir Thomas Fairfax won two Battles, and taken the two ſtrongeſt and moſt important Towns in the Weſt of England, by Storm partly, and partly by Surrender. We muſt now leave him there, and ſee how his Majeſty diſpos'd of himſelf after the Rout at Naſeby.

The Continuance of the War now is an Affront to the Character of the Engliſh Nation, whoſe Valour has always had a Mixture of Sobriety; but the Cavaliers are ſo many Quixots fighting with Windmills. There is not the leaſt Likelihood of their ſaving themſelves by Reſiſtance, and yet they keep up one another's Spirits as if there was Heroiſm in their Deſpair.

The King after Naſeby Rout.

The King being got into South Wales, was join'd by General Gerrard with 2000 Horſe and Foot, and receiv'd great Encouragement from the Commiſſioners of the Welſh Counties, who attended him at Abergavenny. Several Gentlemen in thoſe Parts were ſeiz'd for obſtructing the Levies that were made for him, and without conſidering that the Parliament had a hundred to one to make Reprizals, ſome about the King were for hanging theſe Gentry, which his Majeſty not conſenting to, Echard tells us the Marquis of Worceſter made this ſhrewd Anſwer; Well, Sir, that forgiving Temper may chance to gain you the Kingdom of Heaven, but if ever you gain the Kingdom of England by theſe Means I'll be your Bondſman. I do not believe one Word of it came out of the Marquis's Mouth. 'Tis ſo far from being ſhrewd, that it is extremely ſilly; for if, as his Lordſhip would have had him, the King had order'd the Marquis's Neighbours to be hang'd, and the Parliament had hang'd up half a hundred of their Enemies, how ſhrewdly would the old Marquis have adviſ'd his Majeſty, who was about paſſing over to Briſtol, and in order to it was come to Chepſtow, where he was met by Prince Rupert; and tho' his Highneſs ſeem'd highly pleas'd with having the Court in the City of which he was Governor, yet other Meaſures were taken, an uſual Effect of the Irreſolution in unfortunate Counſels. The King returning to Cardiffe, heard of the Loſs of Bridgwater, which, ſays the Lord Clarendon, he had been perſwaded to believe was impregnable, and the Loſs of it could not but make great Impreſſions upon him, to think he was betray'd. The Commiſſioners of all Counties earneſtly deſir'd Peace, and ſome Officers of the Army enter'd into Cabals with them to get Propoſals to be ſent to the Parliament. Prince Rupert was of the ſame Opinion, and wrote his Reaſons for it to the Duke of Richmond, which the King anſwer'd in a Letter written with his own Hand at Cardiffe. The Lord Clarendon informs us, 'Twas ſo lively an Expreſſion of his Soul, that no Pen elſe could have written it: I ſhall therefore repeat a Paſſage or two, If I had any other Quarrel but the Defence of my Religion, Crown and Friends, you had full Reaſon for your Advice. It will not be deny'd that thoſe Friends were the Delinquents, againſt whom the Parliament demanded Juſtice, and, as was declar'd after the Reſtoration, drew their Swords to bring them to it. All the Calamities which the Nation had indur'd in this King's Reign, were owing to their evil Counſels, yet the Letter ſays, God will not ſuffer his Cauſe to be overthrown. I know my Obligations not to abandon God's Cauſe, and do not deſpair that God may in due Time avenge his own Cauſe, for which his Majeſty had bargain'd with the Iriſh Rebels to fight, as will be ſeen preſently.

A. D. 1645.

At Cardiffe the King heard that the Scots Army had laid Siege to Hereford, and the Earl of Clarendon is of Opinion no better Way could be thought of to relieve it, than by iſſuing Writs to the Welch Sheriffs to raiſe their Poſſe. I was very willing to follow his Lordſhip in his Hiſtory of the King's Actions after Naſeby Rout, but every one of them is ſo magnify'd, and will ſo little bear it, that it is turning them into Ridicule.

His Majeſty paſs'd over the Mountains of Brecknock and Radnor to Ludlow, thence thro' Shropſhire and Derbyſhire to Welbeck, intending to join Montroſe, who had over-run Scotland, without having made himſelf enough Maſter of any Part of it to ſtand out againſt the Power that was coming againſt him. The King proceeded as far as Doncaſter, where the Gentry ſo well preſerved their Promiſes to him, that within three Days there was an Appearance of full 3000 Men without Arms; but they offer'd to get Arms within four and twenty Hours, if the King ſtaid ſo long, which was ſo uncertain, that a few Hours after his Majeſty made haſte back to Newark, on News that David Leſley was come to Rotheram, with all the Scottiſh Horſe, to enter Scotland and oppoſe Montroſe, which he did effectually, routed his Band of Mountaineers and Iriſh REBELS, whom he cut off almoſt entirely, and oblig'd the Marquis to ſhelter himſelf behind the Grampian Hills. This was the Army which was to enter England, in Hopes of whoſe March the Treaty of Uxbridge was broken off, and his Majeſty got into Yorkſhire.

The Lord Clarendon, in the Fulneſs of his Politicks, which are indeed incomparable, informs us, that IF the King with his beaten and baffled Troops, as he calls them himſelf, had, inſtead of retreating from Doncaſter, fallen upon David Leſley and his 4000 Horſe at Rotheram, he had found him in a very ill Poſture to have made Reſiſtance, and had abſolutely preſerv'd Montroſe. His Majeſty, ſays the Earl, proſecuted his Journey from Newark to Oxford, tho' not without making ſome Starts out of the Way, by which he had an Opportunity of beating up ſome Quarters of the Parliament Horſe. As thus in Whitlocke: "In the King's March, the Scots "Horſe fell upon his Quarters at Bewdley, took "70 Horſe, and ſeveral Officers. At Tilbury "Sir John Gell fell upon his Rear, took Capt. "Blake and 40 Priſoners." The Earl of Clarendon aſſures us, that David Leſley knew nothing of the King's being in Yorkſhire; and Whitlocke, that Major General Pointz, Col. Roſſiter, and the Country Forces, were order'd to join the Scots, after which Junction they got between the King and the North, ſo he retreated back to Newark. A Party of the Parliament's

A. D. 1645. made a Start and fell upon his Rear, took the Lord Harris a Papiſt, 100 Horſe, and ſeveral Priſoners. Whitlocke again: "From Newark "the King march'd into Lincolnſhire, where his "Army committed many Outrages." The Earl of Clarendon's Starts. The next Day he lay at Belvoir, the next at Stamford, his March being very ſudden, for he met with frequent Starts from the Parliament's Forces. "A Party from "Burleigh and Leiceſter fell upon his Rear, took "80 Horſe, four Standards, and many Priſoners. "The Van of his Army being as far as Stilton "by Huntington, were oppos'd by Capt. Gibbs "and Capt. Poe, but they were overpower'd by "Numbers, and the King's Forces enter'd the "Town, which they miſerably plunder'd," and made the like Starts in ſeveral Places of Cambridgſhire and Bedfordſhire, upon an unarm'd defenceleſs People, and not upon the Parliament's Horſe Quarters. At laſt underſtanding the Country was riſing againſt them, his Majeſty haſten'd to Woburn, where ſome of his Stragglers were taken, and from thence to Oxford, where he ſtaid three Days only, and then, according to the Lord Clarendon, proſecuted his former Reſolution, "at leaſt to endeavour the Relief of "Hereford; and as he was on his March thi-"ther, he receiv'd Intelligence that the Scottiſh "Army, upon Notice of his Purpoſe, was that "Morning riſen in great Diſorder and Confuſion. "This News was ſo welcome, and his Majeſty "was receiv'd with ſo full Joy into the City of "Hereford, that he ſlip'd the Opportunity not "of vanquiſhing, overcoming, or routing, but "of diſcommoding the Scottiſh Army, IF not "ruining it." The Pleaſantry of it is extremely delightful; for in Truth the Scots Army conſiſted of 16 or 17000 Men, and the King had with him not above 4000, moſt Horſe and Dragoons. The Parliament order'd Major General Pointz and Col. Roſſiter to attend his Motions, and if he went towards Hereford, to correſpond with General Leven, and aſſiſt him. Accordingly Pointz and Roſſiter follow'd the King, and the Common Council of the City of London reſolv'd that every one of them ſhould furniſh a Horſe and Arms to make up with other Forces a flying Army to attend the King, who, if we may believe the Lord Clarendon, was going even then to drive the Scots Army from before Hereford. There is no other ſuch Hiſtory in Being. The Truth is, the Scots were alarm'd at the Progreſs of Montroſe, and tho' their Horſe was gone to the Relief of their Brethren, they could not be eaſy ſo far Southward, while all was in Danger in the North; upon which Conſideration only they quitted the Siege of Hereford, and march'd Northward; but in their March heard of the Marquis of Montroſe's intire Defeat, and at the Deſire of the Parliament lay down before Newark, the King making what haſte he could towards Cheſter to relieve that City, beſieg'd by Sir William Brereton. His Forces plunder'd and burnt Mr. Cartwright's Houſe at Aynoe in Northamptonſhire. But before he bent his March that Way, he endeavour'd again to get ſome Levies in Wales to relieve Briſtol. He went a ſecond Time to Ragland Caſtle in Monmouthſhire, where he receiv'd the dreadful News of the Surrender of Briſtol, which ſo diſcompos'd him, that he wrote the following Letter to Prince Rupert from Hereford.

His Letter to Prince Rupert.

Nephew,

"THO' the Loſs of Briſtol be a great Blow to "me, yet your ſurrendring it as you did is "of ſo much Affliction to me, that it makes me "not only forget the Conſideration of that Place, "but is likewiſe the greateſt Trial of my Con-"ſtancy that hath yet befallen me. For what is "to be done, after one that is ſo near to me "both in Blood and Friendſhip, ſubmits him-"ſelf to ſo mean an Action? I give it the ea-"ſieſt Terms ſuch ——— I have ſo much to "ſay, that I will ſay no more of it, only leſt "Raſhneſs of Judgment be laid to my Charge, "I muſt remember you of your Letter of the "12th of Auguſt, whereby you aſſur'd me, that "if no Mutiny happen'd you would keep Bri-"ſtol for Four Months. Did you keep it four "Days? Was there any thing like a Mutiny? "More Queſtions might be ask'd, but now, I "confeſs, to little Purpoſe. My Concluſion is, "to deſire you to ſeek your Subſiſtence, until it "ſhall pleaſe God to determine of my Condi-"tion ſomewhere beyond Sea, to which End I "ſend you herewith a Paſs, and I pray God to "make you ſenſible of your preſent Condition, "and give you Means to redeem what you have "loſt; for I ſhall have no greater Joy in a "Victory than a juſt Occaſion, without bluſhing, "to aſſure you of my being

Your loving Uncle, and

Moſt faithful Friend,

C. R.

Having lately read the Particulars of the Siege and Surrender of Briſtol, one can't think the Prince's Conduct deſerv'd ſo ſevere Animadverſion. General Fairfax had maſter'd above a Mile of the Line and Works in the ſtrongeſt Part of the City, the Miſcarriage on the Side of Somerſetſhire was owing only to the Shortneſs of the Ladders, which would be lengthen'd in two or three Hours time. The City was a Fire, and the Prince had no Way to ſave that, himſelf and his Garriſon, but the Way he then took. What Succeſs the King had had in his Field Battles, was owing to Prince Rupert's Valour, and this Letter ſeems to be the Effect rather of Affliction than Reflection.

His Highneſs was convoy'd from Briſtol to Oxford, and the King wrote a Letter to the Council there, to require him to deliver up all his Commiſſions; which it was ſurmis'd to him the Prince would not do tamely; and therefore Orders were ſent to impriſon Col. Leg, Governor of Oxford, and Favourite to his Highneſs, leſt he ſhould attempt any thing on his Account.

From Hereford the King went to Worceſter, and made an Attempt to reach Oxford, but was hinder'd by Major General Pointz, who follow'd him cloſe with about 3500 Horſe and Dragoons; ſo he march'd to Ludlow, and thence towards Cheſter, which was beſieg'd and diſtreſs'd by Sir William Brereton, Col. Jones, and the Cheſhire and Lancaſhire Forces. It was thought the King intended to paſs from Cheſter into Ireland, and put himſelf at the Head of the Army that was to be tranſported thence into England. The Earl of Clarendon's Account of the King's March and Defeat, is as pleaſant as his Lordſhip's other Relations of Events in this War. "The Enemy "had ſurpriz'd both the Out-works and Suburbs "of Cheſter, when the King came within half "a Day's Journey of it; ſo that his unexpected "coming look'd like a Deſignation of Provi-"dence for the Preſervation of ſo important a "Place. The Parliamentarians were no leſs "amaz'd, looking upon themſelves as loſt; "and the King's Troops believ'd them to be "in their Power." Every Word of which is as true as that the King ſaw the enſuing Fight from the Walls of Cheſter, when he was not in the Town, but in the Battle on Rowton Heath, two Miles off. The placing his Majeſty upon Cheſter Walls, is to leſſen the Diſgrace of the Defeat as much as poſſible, in a Suppoſition that Sir Marmaduke Langdale had not been ſo beaten as he was by Major General Pointz, if his Majeſty had been in the Battle: A very poor Way of Writing! If his Troops are beaten, he is beaten, and there's no Need of concealing his being in the Action, which is not a whit the better or the worſe for it. The Fact is thus:

Echard. Rowton Heath Battle.

Whitl.

Sir William Brereton, with the above-mention'd Forces, had lain before Cheſter ſome Time, when Col. Jones, who commanded the Horſe, and Adjutant General Lothian, who commanded the Foot, drawing off from before it in the Evening, the Beſieg'd thought they were gone, and took the leſs Care of their Works, but early the next Morning Jones and Lothian return'd and ſtorm'd the Suburbs and Out-works before they were diſcover'd, which the King hearing, haſten'd his March to relieve the Place, and with about 5000 Horſe and Foot got thro' Wales to the Neighbourhood of Cheſter. Pointz, whoſe Duty was to obſerve him, having Intelligence of his March, took a ſhorter Way, and came to Rowton Heath, 2 Miles from Cheſter; he could reach no farther. He alſo had given Col. Jones Notice of his Approach, deſiring him to charge that Body in the Rear while he attack'd them in Front. But the King's Troops engag'd Pointz, Sept. 26. before Jones could come up, and worſted him. However he rally'd and made good his Ground till Jones's Forces join'd him, and then, together with Lothian and Jones, renew'd the Fight, utterly routing the King's whole Body, of which about 300 fled into Cheſter, and the King with them. But the Purſuit was ſo violent, that he immediately left the Town, and fled into Wales. The reſt of his Party were kill'd, taken, and diſpers'd. Among the Slain was the Lord Barnard Stewart, Earl of Litchfield, a faultleſs young Man, ſays the Earl of Clarendon, Lieutenant Colonel Middleton, Lieutenant Colonel Conſtable, Capt. Abraham Lance, Capt. Robert Lance, all Papiſts; and during the Siege were kill'd Lieutenant Colonel Philip Howard, Mr. Roger Wood, Mr. Edward Davis, Mr. Errington, all Papiſts, on the King's Side, as alſo two Knights, one Colonel, and above 400 Officers and Soldiers, Sir Philip Muſgrave, and ten Colonels, moſt of them Knights, ſeven Lieutenant Colonels, five Majors, forty other Officers, 1000 Common Soldiers, and 100 Horſe were taken. The Country People took 60 Priſoners after the Rout, with Store of Arms, which the Cavaliers had flung away in their Flight, and the Parliamentarians had good Pillage. The invincible Obſtinacy, or rather the miſerable Infatuation of theſe Men! There is ſcarce a Horſeman left of the whole Body that had attended the King ſince the Battle of Naſeby; Montroſe was ſuppreſs'd in Scotland, the King's Troops in the Weſt were flying before General Fairfax. South Wales was in a manner reduc'd, Pointz following the King into North Wales. Yet rather than Delinquents ſhall be puniſh'd, or Epiſcopacy aboliſh'd, does the King not only fly from the War, but from Peace, which might now eaſily be had on thoſe Terms, and there remain'd no Hope for him ever to have better, unleſs he had plac'd his Hope in Aſſiſtance from Iriſh REBELS. In this deſperate Condition the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Echard are eternally holding Councils of War for the wiſe Counſellors to ſhew their Parts; but they came to Reſolutions only to abandon them; and yet theſe two Hiſtorians in-large upon them, as if they had been all crown'd with Victory. A. D. 1645.

The firſt Action which ſucceeded thoſe Counſels, was the ſending the Lord Digby and Sir Marmaduke Langdale Northward to join Montroſe, if they could. The Earl of Clarendon's Hiſtory of this Event is as riſible as Affectation and Inſincerity can make it. "The Lord Digby "was inform'd at Doncaſter, that there was "1000 Foot newly rais'd for the Parliament a "little out of the Way, which he reſolv'd to "fall upon, and did it ſo well, that they all "threw down their Arms." Whitlocke, "He "ſurpriz'd 400 of the Parliament's Party at "Shirburn, and ſhatter'd Col. Wren's Regiment of Horſe." Clarendon again: "While "the Lord Digby ſtaid at Shirburn, he had "Notice of the Advance of ſome Troops of "Horſe under the Command of Col. Copley. "Digby preſently ſounded to Horſe, and having gotten ſome few Troops ready, march'd "with them out of the Town, and finding Copley ſtanding upon a convenient Ground, he "would not ſtay for his other Companies, but "immediately charg'd them with that Courage, "that he routed moſt of their Body, which after a ſhort Reſiſtance fled, and were purſu'd "thro' Shirburn, where his other Troops were "refreſhing themſelves, and diſcerning the "Flight of Copley's Horſe, concluded in great "Conſternation, that their own Fellows were "flying, and ſo with equal Confuſion they "mounted their Horſes, and fled as faſt as "the others. IF it had not been for the flying "of theſe Troops, becauſe the Enemy fled, the "Lord Digby had without doubt been Maſter "of the North." Is not this excellent above all Story? The Roundheads and Cavaliers are running away very lovingly together. Again: "By "this Means one Troop only that remain'd in "the Field unbroken fell upon the Lord Digby, "and thoſe Officers and Gentlemen who ſtay'd "with him, for it ſeems the Parliament Troops "ran away, tho' no Body ran after them, and "they were compell'd to retreat to Skipton, "which they did with the Loſs of Sir Richard "Hutton, a gallant and worthy Gentleman;" as they are all to a Man, excepting two or three who had diſoblig'd his Lordſhip. "The Lord "Digby's Baggage and Cabinet were taken, "which being publiſh'd by the Parliament, ad-"miniſter'd ſo much Occaſion of Diſcourſe." The Occaſion adminiſter'd, was by the Diſcovery of a horrid Correſpondence with the bloody Maſſacrers in Ireland, and a Deſign to bring them over to deſtroy the Proteſtants in England, as they had done there; which I ſpeak the more boldly, for that I ſhall prove it upon them, when I have given the true Hiſtory of the Rout of Digby, that the Reader may laugh as well as I when he compares it with that of the Lord Clarendon.

"Col. Copley engag'd the Lord Digby's whole Whitl. p. "Body, not a Part of them, about Milford, 162. "routed and purſu'd them three Miles, ſlew "Col. Carnaby, Sir Richard Hutton, ſeveral "Officers, and 40 others, took Priſoners four "Colonels, many inferior Officers, Gentlemen "and Reformades, about 400 Troopers, and the "Counteſs of Niddeſdale, who was under the "Lord Digby's Convoy. That Lord's Coach, the "King's Chirurgeon, and divers Letters and Pa-"pers were taken, among which was a Letter to a "Member of Parliament, who was expell'd for "it." Ludlow adds, that Copley recover'd the Men and Arms which the Lord Digby had taken. One cannot part with the Earl of Clarendon yet, for what follows is not one of the leaſt Falſities in

A. D. 1645. in the History of the Rebellion. " Moſt of Dig-
" by's ſcatter'd Troops came together again at " Skipton, with which he march'd without any " other Miſadventures through Cumberland and
" Weſtmoreland, as far as Dumfreis in Scotland."
One cannot read it without Hands and Eyes uplifted. For Ludlow informs us, that Party was defeated a ſecond Time by Sir John Browne, and a third by Colonel Bright; yet according to the Lord Clarendon, they met with no other Miſadventures; " but being arriv'd in Scotland, Lord Digby routed near Scotland. " and neither receiving Directions which Way
" to march, nor where Montroſe was, and leſs
" Knowledge how to retire without falling into " the Hands of the Scottiſh Army on the Bor" ders, in the higheſt Deſpair, the Lord Dig-
" by, Sir Marmaduke Langdale, the Earls of " Carnwarth and Niddeſdale, and moſt of the " other Officers embark'd themſelves for the Iſle
" of Man, and ſhortly after for Ireland," which is ſo far from Truth, that he met with the following Miſadventures, Diſgraces and Routs, as we read in Whitlocke; " The Lord Digby and
" Langdale, with 800 Horſe advancing to" wards Scotland to join Montroſe, were fallen
" upon at Carliſle Sands by a Party of " the Scots Forces under Sir John Browne,
" who though leſs in Number, after a ſharp
" Diſpute routed Digby's Party, kill'd 100,
" took 200 Horſes, ſeveral of their Officers,
" 3 Colours, many Priſoners, and diſpers'd the " whole Party, Digby and Langdale flying into
" the Iſle of Man." The Reader will obſerve how the Earl of Clarendon turns and winds himſelf in this Hiſtorical Adventure, and how it is after his Manner envelop'd in Words to conceal the Truth. Warwick, who tells his Tale as wretchedly as ever any Body told one, comes off much better in his than the Lord Clarendon.
P. 290. Digby's Deſign evaporated; he is beaten in his Entrance into Yorkſhire, before he got into Carliſle defeated, and ſo forc'd to ſhip himſelf for Ireland, inſtead of Scotland. This Scrap of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion is ſo very extraordinary and Clarendine, that I recommend it to the Reader as a choice Example of the Author's ſincere and fine Way of Writing.

Now let us ſee what Sort of Letters there were taken in the Lord Digby's Coach: The Contents were, That the King, notwithſtanding that tremendous Appeal to Heaven before the Sacrament at Chriſt-Church, Oxon, againſt Popery and Papiſts, and the pledging his Salvation upon it, offer'd the Iriſh Papiſts a Toleration of their Religion, the Choice of their Governor, to have Forts and Caſtles, &c. on Condition they ſent 10000 of thoſe Maſſacrers into England, whom he himſelf call'd Butchers, to aſſiſt him againſt his Enemies, meaning the Parliament of England. There was alſo a Commiſſion to the Earl of Glamorgan, a Papiſt, impowering him to treat and conclude an Agreement with the Iriſh REBELS. The Popiſh Archbiſhop of Tuam being
P. 194. ſlain at the Battle of Sligo, in Ireland, Whitlocke informs us there were Letters taken about him, diſcovering the Tranſactions between the KING and the REBELS, whom his Majeſty tenderly ſtiles the Confederates; but the Lords and Commons of England are every where term'd in the Full of the Mouth, REBELS. Whitlocke adds, Thoſe Letters diſcover'd large Offers to the Maſſacrers, as a Toleration of their Religion, &c. as is above-mention'd. Not long after the People of Padſtow in Cornwall, ſeizing a Ship coming from Ireland, the Maſter of which threw a Packet over Board, it was recover'd, and in it
Ludlow. was found a Letter from the Earl of Glamorgan, importing that 6000 Iriſh REBELS were ready to embark for the Aſſiſtance of the King's Party, and 4000 more ſhould follow in a little Time, which is farther confirm'd by this Letter of the Earl of Glamorgan's to the King, I am now at Waterford providing Shipping, immediately to tranſport 6000 Foot, and 4000 more are by May next to follow: This was after the Earl of Glamorgan had been charg'd with High Treaſon by the Lord Digby, and committed for treating with the Maſſacrers, which Commitment was all Grimace. The Noiſe that wicked Treaty had made even among the Royaliſts, of whom the more reaſonable complain'd againſt it, occaſion'd the pretended Diſgrace of the Earl of Glamorgan, who wrote to his Lady not to entertain any Fears concerning him, for that he doubted not he ſhould be able to juſtify his Proceedings to the Confuſion of thoſe who had cauſed his Impriſonment, which he could well do by the before-mention'd Commiſſion, and he was employ'd in the ſame impious Service after his Enlargement, as appears by his Letter in Sanderſon, addreſt to his Majeſty, yet upon the Parliament's diſcovering and declaring warmly againſt this clandeſtine, felonious Treaty, the King reply'd thus, His Majeſty doth proteſt, that till ſuch Time as he had Advertiſement that the Perſon of the ſaid Earl of Glamorgan was arreſted, he never heard nor had any kind of Notice that the ſaid Earl had enter'd into any Capitulation with the Iriſh. I never met with any colourable Pretence for this nefarious Confederacy with the Iriſh Maſſacrers. The beſt is in Echard, becauſe taken from the beſt Writer and the honeſteſt Man on that Side, one Doctor Nalſon, who in a Nook of the Paper Office, found a Letter written to the Popiſh Lords and Gentlemen by the Lord Digby, wherein 'tis ſaid the King will joyn with the Roundheads and Scots Presbyterians rather than do the leaſt Act that may hazard the Proteſtant Religion. The Archdeacon's Judgment was not of Extent enough to let ſuch an idle Paper from ſuch an idle Author eſcape him; for it is very well known, as Whitlocke ſays, that this very Lord Digby, the Popiſh Earl of Glamorgan, and the Marquiſs of Ormond, concluded the Peace with the Iriſh Butchers, which put the Provinces of Munſter and Ulſter in that Kingdom, under the Government of the Popiſh ſupreme Council. Glamorgan's prior Treaty had ſo incens'd the Parliament, " That they refus'd either to treat with " the King, or admit him to come to London,
" or this Buſineſs to end here, but render'd all
" the King's ſubſequent Treaties with the Par" liament ſuſpected, and the End of attaining
" the King's Propoſitions more difficult. And " here, continues Coke, you may ſee how this
" King would proſtitute his Honour and Chri-
" ſtianity, contrary to what he ſo often profeſs'd
" not only to the Parliament but to his own

A. D. 1645. King's Treaty with the Iriſh REBELS. Sanderſon. Ludlow. Sanderſon. Coke.

The King remaining at Newark after the De- Diviſions in the King's Garriſon at Newark. parture of Digby and Langdale, there happen'd ſome Differences in the Garriſon, which render'd his Condition ſtill worſe, as it made him more uneaſy, for there was no Manner of Proſpect that it would mend. Hither came Prince Rupert with his Brother Prince Maurice, and was ſeemingly reconcil'd to the King about the Surrender of Briſtol; but his Majeſty having made the Lord Bellaſis Governor of Newark, inſtead of Sir Richard Willis, who was appointed Captain of his Guards, about the 20th of October, the two Princes and the Lord Gerrard eſpous'd Willis's Quarrel; and Bellaſis had the Party of the Lord Digby. Prince Rupert told the King plainly, Willis was remov'd becauſe he was his Friend; and Gerrard added, It was a Plot of the Lord Digby, who was a Traytor, and he would prove him ſo. This Language ſo ſurpriz'd the King that he commanded them from his Preſence, and to come no more into it: Upon which the Prince, the Lord Gerrard, Sir Richard Willis, and above 200 Officers, the Meaneſt a Captain, deſir'd Paſſes to go beyond Sea, and retir'd from Newark to Wyverton, whence they ſent to Col. Roſſiter for Parliament Paſſes, engaging their Honours never to return to take up Arms againſt them; accordingly Paſſes were granted to the Princes and others. The King ſoon after by haſty Night Marches, got from Newark to Oxford in the Beginning of November, where we muſt leave him to follow General Fairfax farther into the Weſt.

Fairfax's March into the Weſt.

The Prince of Wales was Generaliſſimo of all the King's Forces in thoſe Parts, which were commanded under him by the Lord Hopton, Sir Richard Greenville, the Lord Goring and Sir John Digby in ſeveral Bodies; but before the Parliament's Forces went in Purſuit of them, 'twas thought convenient to clear the Trading Counties and the Roads towards London, of Cavalier Garriſons, which were reduc'd rather to Neſts of Banditti than Retreats for Soldiers. Ludlow tells us, "Many of the King's Party "hover'd about the Hampſhire and Wiltſhire "Downs, to rob Travellers, and thence were call'd Colonel Down's Men.

Lieut. Gen. Cromwel takes the Devizes.

Lieutenant General Cromwel march'd with his own, Colonel Montagu's, Colonel Pickering's, Sir Hardreſs Waller's, and Colonel Hammond's Regiments, to take in the Devizes and Lacock Houſe in Wiltſhire. Sir Charles Lloyd, Governor of the Devizes ſurrender'd it after a few Shot, on Condition of marching out, Officers and Gentlemen with Arms, and the Soldiers without Arms. The next Day, September the 24th, Colonel Boſvile yielded Lacock on Summons, himſelf, Officers and Soldiers to have their Arms and Baggage. Colonel Rainsborough ſummon'd Sir Charles Lucas, Governor of Berkley, who anſwer'd, He would eat Horſe Fleſh before he would yield, and Man's Fleſh when that was done; but they were not ſuch Cannibals as they made themſelves. We muſt remember that theſe heroical Perſons had not the leaſt Hope of Relief, and that the Overflowings of their Courage are of no more Uſe to them than the Overflowings of their Bile, and indeed paſt off generally in Vapour. For no ſooner had Rainsborough maſter'd the Out-works by Storm, and put 40 to the Sword, than Lucas was glad to ſound a Parley, and accept of ſuch Conditions as Rainsborough would give him and his Garriſon, about 500 Men.

And Lacock.

And Berkley.

Cromwel takes Winchester.

Lieutenant General Cromwel, while General Fairfax was marching Weſtward, diſpers'd the Hampſhire Club Men, and coming before Winchester, forc'd the Gate, enter'd the Town and began to batter the Caſtle, the Lord Ogle the Governor having rejected his Summons. He then planted more Guns againſt it and made a Breach; upon which the Lord Ogle beat a Parly, which was agreed to, and Colonel Hammond and Major Harriſon for Cromwel, concluded Articles with the Governor, who ſurrender'd the Caſtle the 14th of October. It had a Garriſon of 500 Men, and was well provided with all Sorts of Stores. There were in the Place Sir John Pawlet, Sir William Courtney, Sir Edward Ford, and Colonel Bennet. Againſt the two latter Cromwel made great Exceptions, they having not kept to their Engagements with the Parliament, but rather than ſtay longer before it he at laſt conſented to let them go with the reſt and march'd himſelf to reduce

A. D. 1645.

Baſing, a Place of Importance, it having been a great Annoyance to the Trade, both of London and the Country. As ſoon as Lieutenant General Cromwel had planted his Batteries and ſettled the ſeveral Poſts for the Storm, his Men fell on with their wonted Reſolution, and took Baſing Houſe and the Grange with little or no Loſs. Colonel Pickering ſtorm'd the New Houſe, paſt through it, and got to the Gate of the Old Houſe; the Marquis of Wincheſter, a Papiſt, Lord of it, ſounded a Parley, which the Parliament Soldiers would not hear of. In the mean while Colonel Montagu and Sir Hardreſs Waller's Regiments maſter'd the ſtrongeſt Work, and beat the Enemy from a whole Culverin. They there drew their Ladders after them, and got over another Work and the Houſe Wall before they could enter. In this Attack Sir Hardreſs Waller was wounded, but the Parliament Forces ſuffer'd not much: They put many of the King's Forces to the Sword, and ſome Officers of Quality: One Major Caſtle a notorious Papiſt, was kill'd by Major Harriſon, for this Garriſon had been a Harbour for Papiſts, and no doubt they far'd the worſe for it. Major Caſaud, Captain Wyburn, Captain Rigby, Popiſh Officers, were ſlain, as alſo theſe Popiſh Volunteers, Mr. Salvine, Mr. Bowles, Mr. Stoner. One Robinſon, a noted Player in thoſe Days, and a fit Champion for ſuch a Cauſe, was kill'd here; about 300 Priſoners were taken, and the Soldiers got rich Booty, the Stores of all Kinds being prodigious; the Furniture ſo coſtly that one Bed only was valu'd at 1300 Pounds. The old Marquis talking with Hugh Peters after the Place was taken, as to the Juſtice of the Quarrel, ſaid, If the King had no more Ground in England but Baſing Houſe, which was called Loyalty, he would adventure as he did and maintain it to the uttermoſt. The Son of this zealous Papiſt became a zealous Proteſtant, and all the Reward he had for the Sufferings, Loſſes, and Merit of his Father, was his being ſpar'd when the Lord Ruſſel was murder'd in King Charles the Second's Reign, the Court having as good Proof againſt the one as the other. The Marquis, Sir Robert Peake and other Priſoners of Quality were ſent up to the Parliament.

Beſieges Baſing.

Storms it.

Takes it.

After this new Advantage the Lieutenant General follow'd General Fairfax into the Weſt, and in his March took Langford Houſe in Wiltſhire, which Sir Bartholomew Pell ſurrender'd at Summons, October the 18th. And by the reducing of this Place the Roads were ſo clear'd from London to Exeter, that a ſingle Man might have travell'd there, without any Fear of an Enemy.

General Fairfax about the ſame Time took Tiverton, and gave Quarter to Sir Gilbert Talbot the Governor, and the Garriſon, though his Men enter'd the Place Sword in Hand, and carry'd it by Aſſault; in it was found much Plunder, and about 300 Men were made Priſoners: among them was one Major Sadler, who having deſerted the Parliament had privately made Overtures to General Fairfax to ſerve him for a Pardon, but they being rejected he was try'd by a Council of War, and condemn'd to die. He broke Priſon and eſcap'd to Exeter, not yet reduc'd, where the Royaliſts having had Information of the Offers he had made General Fairfax, try'd him by their Council of War, condemn'd and ſhot him.

Gen. Fairfax takes Tiverton.

While the General was on his March in Devonſhire, he receiv'd Advice that all South Wales had declar'd for the Parliament, after Colonel Mitton had oblig'd Colonel Fitz Morris to deliver up Chepſtow Town and Caſtle and made him-

A. D. 1645. himſelf Maſter of Monmouth, Sir Trever Williams and Colonel Morgan rais'd 1500 Men for the Parliament in Glamorganſhire and Monmothſhire. Pembrokeſhire and Carmarthenſhire had before been intirely reduc'd by Major General Langhorne. The Marquis of Worceſter had a long while influenc'd and govern'd that Country. The King was twice there in Perſon in Expectation of raiſing very great Reinforcements for his Armies; but Reſource is now cut off, and Hereford being ſurpriz'd by Col. Birch and Col. Morgan, the Cavaliers have no Place to retreat to on that Side of England but Ragland Caſtle, which will follow the Fate of their other Garriſons.

In Hereford were taken according to Ludlow, 40 Lords, Knights and Gentlemen of Worth, moſt of them Papiſts. If it was the Cauſe of God and the true Proteſtant Religion for which the King fought, as he always declares, how comes it, that when any of his People are taken Priſoners, there are ſuch Numbers of Papiſts amongſt them? Colonel Birch's Stratagem to ſurprize Hereford is a very pleaſant one. He hir'd 6 Men, and diſguis'd them like Labourers, putting Lieutenant Bernard as a Conſtable over them with a Warrant to bring thoſe Men to work in the City. They lodg'd in the Night within 3 Quarters Musket Shot of the Place, and 150 Firelocks near them; himſelf with the Foot, and Col. Morgan with the Horſe coming up after them to cut off all Intelligence from the Town, by which Means they were never diſcover'd. The firſt Night they came too ſhort, but the next, with careful Spies and Scouts they carry'd on the Buſineſs, and in the Morning, upon letting down the Drawbridge, the Conſtable and the 6 Country-men went with their Pick-axes and Spades to the Bridge. The Guard beginning to examine them, they kill'd three and kept the reſt in play till the Firelocks came up, who made it good till Colonel Birch and Colonel Morgan came with the whole Body, and ſoon maſter'd the City, December the 18th.

We ſhall not take further Notice of Sir Thomas Fairfax's Progreſs in the Weſt this Year, intending to begin the Hiſtory of the next Years Military Tranſactions with it, and ſhall cloſe this with a ſhort Account of ſome Re-encounters in other Parts of the Kingdom.

Colonel Moor Governor of Gaunt Houſe, with 200 Horſe, fell upon 500 of the King's, 3 Miles from Oxford, routed them, and purſu'd them to that City, taking Mr. Sackville, the Earl of Dorſet's Son, one of the King's Pages, Prince Rupert's Chaplain, and ſeveral others, Priſoners; about the ſame Time Colonel Paine march'd with a Party from Abingdon to Farringdon, with an Intent to ſurprize the Garriſon; but though he fail'd in that, he took 100 Horſe, 4 Captains, other Officers, and 36 Priſoners, with the Loſs but of one Man. Thus while the Royal Garriſon of Oxford was ſhut up within the Walls, the King's Forces in the Neighbourhood ſuffer'd much by the Vigilance and Valour of the Parliamentarians.

After the King's Defeat at Routon Heath, Colonel Jones renew'd the Siege of Cheſter, which was valiantly defended, and the Beſieg'd made ſeveral bold though not ſucceſsful Sallies. They lay near Ireland, and no doubt were in daily Expectations of the 10000 Iriſh Men. Sir William Byron, the Lord Byron's Brother, got together 400 Horſe about Holt Caſtle, of which Colonel Jones having Notice, he drew off a Party of Horſe from the Siege, attack'd him and routed him, took Sir William and other Perſons of Quality Priſoners, ſlew 40, and brought away as many Horſe. Sir William Vaughan with 1700 Foot, and 700 Horſe was marching towards Cheſter to throw Succours into it, of which Colonel Jones having Notice, 1400 Horſe and 1000 Foot were detach'd from the Siege to encounter them, under the Command of Colonel Mitton, who came up with them near Denbigh, defeated them, kill'd 100 of them, took 500 Horſe, 400 Foot, and ſo diſpers'd them, that not above 100 were left together. Another Parliament Party took Shelford Manor, almoſt in Sight of Newark. It had been reſolutely defended by 200 Men, of whom the greateſt Part after Summons and Quarter refus'd, were put to the Sword. The Governor, the Earl of Cheſterfield's Son was wounded and taken Priſoner. Mr. Cary and Mr. Gennings, two Popiſh Voluntiers were kill'd, as was alſo Captain Cliſton, another Papiſt. Wyverton Houſe near Newark, follow'd the Example of Shelford. Latham Houſe, defended two Years by the dauntleſs Counteſs of Derby, of the Blood of Tremouille in France, yielded upon Articles, and in it were found 12 Cannon, Store of Arms and Ammunition, rich Prize and Pillage.

A. D. 1645.

Sir William Vaughan routed by Col. Mitton.

And Wyverton. And Latham.

Thus the Parliament's Forces clear'd the Way every where, and it is not in human Wiſdom to imagine what could reaſonably give Hope to the Cavaliers, and ſupport them in an Oppoſition that was as vain as it was deſperate.

We muſt leave Newark, beſieg'd or rather blockaded by the Scots and General Pointz, Cheſter by Sir William Brereton and Colonel Jones, General Fairfax in Cornwall, and take a View of what paſt at Oxford and Weſtminſter.

The King being got ſafe from Newark into Oxford was at Leiſure to conſider the Perils which ſurrounded him, and the hopeleſs Way of Deliverance by Arms, which Conſiderations naturally produc'd Thoughts of Peace, but no juſt Thoughts of accompliſhing it. For the wiſe Counſellors began with adviſing his Majeſty to ſend a Meſſage to the Parliament, almoſt glutted with Victory, which as the Earl of Clarendon ſays, ſhould contain nothing but a Reſentment, that his former Meſſages had not been anſwer'd. Was there ever ſuch Wiſdom before in the World? If they had Reaſons for not anſwering the Meſſages before they were Conquerors, they muſt of Courſe have more Reaſons not to do it after. The Lord Clarendon's political Reflections on this Occaſion, being not founded upon Fact, muſt be left to the Fate of all ſuch Reflections, and the Reader will not expect any Remark ſhould be made upon them: It would too much ſwell the Bulk of this Hiſtory, and too much interrupt the Courſe of it. But when ever any Attempt ſhall be made to juſtify them, I am well enough provided to prove it will be in vain.

Before the King's Meſſage of Reſentment was receiv'd, the Parliament had appointed a grand Committee to ſit about Propoſitions of Peace, and inſtead of a Treaty were reſolv'd to reduce the Terms of it to Acts, which were to be preſented to his Majeſty. Yet the Earl of Clarendon not taking the leaſt Notice of this Reſolution, declaims with a very great Superfluity of Words, on the Perverſeneſs of the two Houſes in refuſing to treat in the King's Way. The grand Committee had ſate ſeveral Times, and debated the Propoſitions, which were in ſome Forwardneſs to be made Acts, when the King ſent a ſecond Meſſage to them for a ſafe Conduct for the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Southampton, Mr. John Aſhburnham, and Mr. Jeffery Palmer, to bring his Propoſals to London; to which Anſwer was return'd, That they were themſelves in Conſider- ation of Propoſitions to be ſent by way of Bills to his Majeſty, And the Commiſſioners for Scotland agreed to it. They were ſo much in earneſt for this Peace, that they provided for themſelves and their Friends in the Articles of it, having voted,

Members to be promoted.

That their General, Sir Thomas Fairfax, be made a Baron, and have 5000 l. a Year ſettled upon him.

The Lord Fairfax, his Father, to be made an Earl.

The Lieutenant General Cromwel to be made a Baron, and to have 2500 Pounds a Year.

The Earl of Northumberland, the Earl of Eſſex, the Earl of Warwick, the Earl of Pembroke, to be made Dukes.

The Earl of Salisbury, and Earl of Mancheſter, to be made Marquiſſes.

The Lord Roberts, the Lord Say, the Lord Willoughby of Parham, the Lord Wharton, the Lord Howard, to be made Earls.

Denzill Hollis, Eſq; to be made a Viſcount.

Sir William Waller to be made a Baron, and to have 2500 l. per Ann.

Sir Arthur Haſlerigg to be made a Baron, and to have 2000 l. per Ann.

Sir Henry Vane, ſen. to be a Baron.

Sir Philip Stapleton to be a Baron, and to have 2000 l. per Ann.

Sir William Brereton, to have 1500 l. per Ann.

Major General Skippon to have 1000 Pounds per Ann.

In the mean while the King met his mongrel Parliament at Oxford again, and as an Effect of more Wiſdom, they were permitted to vote, That the Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, the Judges and the Pleaders at Weſtminſter, are guilty of High Treaſon, and the Seal to be void. A rare Way this to promote Peace. They alſo voted, That the Directory which the Parliament had eſtabliſh'd by Law ſhould not be us'd in Divine Service, but the Common Prayer to be ſtill us'd as by Law eſtabliſh'd. The Parliament of England look'd on them, and treated them as a Non-Entity. But they look'd upon themſelves, and the King look'd upon them, and treated them as ſo many Some-bodies. The two Houſes reſolv'd, The King's Anſwer ſhould be deſir'd to their Acts without any Treaty, which the Scots Commiſſioners ſeem'd to deſire. And that Motion of theirs to treat, with their refuſing to beſiege Newark, when they were firſt requeſted to do it, and to deliver up the Places they were poſſeſs'd of in England with that Readineſs which was expected, created ill Blood between the two States, and there was not then Temper enough in either of them to provide againſt it in Time.

Diviſions in Parliament.

Now alſo began to appear ſome Clouds of Difference ariſing in the Parliament Houſe, the only Cloud that threaten'd them, for the Oppoſition they might expect from the Royaliſts was rather deſpicable than dangerous. And all Parties thought of making their Market by their Merit in the late Succeſſes.

The Presbyterians.

The Presbyterians were the Majority in the Parliament, City, and Aſſembly of Divines, but the Independents had undermin'd them in the Army, where their Head, Oliver Cromwel, did what he pleas'd, though Sir Thomas Fairfax had the Name and Show of General. The Cavaliers were a baffled, beaten Party, and without the Diviſions and Sub-diviſions which fell out in Parliament and Army, they had never been heard of more. Nor is it in any one Inſtance owing to their Policy and Management that they ever lifted up their Heads again, but wholly to the Inteſts, Jealouſies, and Reſentments of the chief Men, both in the Parliament and Army, both grown too ſecure and too wanton by Succeſs. A. D. 1645.

There were but few Independent, and no Baptiſt Miniſters in the Aſſembly of Divines, but thoſe Independents who were there acted with a Spirit and Conſtancy which were troubleſome to the Presbyterians, who procur'd a Petition from the Common Council of London, That more Power might be given to Miniſters and Elders than was eſtabliſh'd by Parliament. This Petition was follow'd by another from the London Miniſters, who were anſwer'd, That they ſhould go home and look to the Charges of their ſeveral Congregations. Alderman Gibs preſented a like Petition from the City to the Houſe of Lords, with a long Speech, and their Lordſhips promis'd to take it into Conſideration, being very much Presbyterian in Principle.

Aſſembly of Divines.

The Independents had kept themſelves pretty much to themſelves till the War broke out, and they and the Baptiſts were reckon'd no more Sectaries than the Presbyterians by Churchmen. But when the Aſſembly of Divines met there were among them 6 or 7 of the moſt eminent Independent Miniſters who join'd with the Presbyterians till they had drawn up the Confeſſion of Faith, the larger and ſmaller Catechiſm, but when they came to Church Government, they engag'd the Presbyterians in long Debates, and kept the Matter as long as they could undetermin'd and unexecuted in almoſt all Parts of the Kingdom, except London and Lancaſhire, which gave their Party Time to ſtrengthen themſelves in the Army and Parliament, and at laſt hinder its Execution. The Chief of theſe Independent Miniſters were, Mr. Jeremiah Burroughs, Mr. Sydrach Sympſon, Mr. Philip Nye, Mr. Thomas Goodwin, Mr. William Bridge. Not illiterate, ignorant Enthuſiaſts, as the Lord Clarendon and Mr. Echard repreſent them, but as Mr. Baxter, their known Opponent, does it impartially, learned, diſcreet, and pious, capable of being very ſerviceable to the Church, Searchers into Scripture and Antiquity. He adds, Some Epiſcopal Men, of whom Archbiſhop Uſher acknowledged to him he was one, held that every Biſhop was Independent as to Synods, and Synods were not ſo much for Government as for Concord. This Party diſtinguiſh'd themſelves by a Zeal for a Thorough Reformation in Church and State, and were for the moſt part Republicans. Thoſe of the Parliament who were for ſo effectually ſecuring their Spiritual and Temporal Liberties, that it ſhould not be in the Power of a ſingle Perſon to invade them hereafter, lik'd very well to ſee the Independents ſo zealous, and gave them Encouragement. Cromwel, who probably began to think what Game he ſhould play for himſelf after the Battle of Naſeby, courted and careſs'd them as much as was conſiſtent with keeping Terms with the Presbyterians.

The Independents.

Cal. p. 112.

The Baptiſts.

The Baptiſts were Independents in every Thing but Infant Baptiſm, the denying of which, good Church-men do generally believe, being generally ſo taught, to be as great a Hereſy as thoſe of the Ophites and Peternians, if they know what thoſe Hereſies were, and conſidering their Cauſe is ſo very good, it is great Pity there is no more to be ſaid for it out of Hiſtory or Argument. Baxter, who wrote for Infant Baptiſm with more Succeſs than any of thoſe Men, writes thus of the Baptiſts, "He found many of "them ſober, godly People, not differing but "in Point of Infant Baptiſm, and as to that, "conſulting Antiquity, he obſerv'd, That tho' "Infant Baptiſm was held lawful by the "Church,

" the Emperor Conſtantine," in whoſe Reign there were more Chriſtians baptiz'd than had probably been in an hundred Years before. Mr. Baxter and Dr. Calamy, both eminent Aſſertors of Infant Baptiſm, add, All the Penalty of Delay of Baptiſm was the being ſtill numberd among the Catechumens or Expectants. Mr. Echard is a Church Hiſtory Writer, and an Archdeacon, and yet he does not ſhew that he knows one Word of theſe Matters, upon which many thouſand Words more may be ſaid was it needful, or more nearly related to the Hiſtory of England, only I cannot help obſerving, that there is hardly one rural Vicar or Curate in twenty who has the leaſt Conception that ſuch a Catechumen is in a State of Salvation, ſo literate, ſo rational, and ſo charitable are they.

The Baptiſts and Independents agreeing exactly in Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Polity, made them united a formidable Party, which alarm'd the Presbyterians, who by endeavouring to nip them in the Bud in a Time of ſo much Diſtraction, irritated thoſe who were only offended before, and induc'd them to put themſelves under the Protection of the Army, who found the Presbyterians in too much haſte as they thought for Peace, and willing to accept of it, if the King would accept of them and their Directory, without conſidering much the Merit of the Army, and the Intereſt of the other Denominations, which the Soldiery were reſolv'd ſhould be conſider'd before they put their Swords into the Scabbards, Satisfaction and Security after ſo bloody and expenſive a War grew popular Terms, and all thoſe who made uſe of them went under the Notion of the Independent Party, though there were many Presbyterians, ſome Church-men; and if one could believe Mr. Archdeacon, ſome Papiſts, as Sir John D'anvers, one of the King's Judges, among them: Lieutenant General Cromwel, Lieutenant General Ludlow, John Liſle, Eſq; Sir Henry Vane, jun. Henry Martin, Eſq; Sir Arthur Haſlerigg, Sir Henry Mildmay, Lord Grey of Groby, Lord Monſon, Anthony Stapely, Eſq; Miles Corbert, Eſq; &c. were at the Head of this Party in the Houſe of Commons; and at the Head of the Presbyterians were Denzil Hollis, Eſq; Sir Philip Stapleton, John Glyn, Eſq; Sergeant Maynard, Sir William Waller, Sir John Clotworthy, Sir Benjamin Rudyard, Sir William Lewis, Colonel Long, Colonel Harley, Colonel Maſſey, Colonel Copley.

The Army.

Heads of the Independents.

Heads of the Presbyterians.

There was another Party in the Houſe of Commons who declar'd for neither Side, as Mr. Pierpoint, Bulſtrode Whitlock, Eſq; Oliver St. John, Eſq; John Crew, Eſq; Sir Thomas Widdrington, Colonel Birch, Mr. Goodwyn, Sir John Hippeſley, &c. who ſometimes voted with the Presbyterians, and ſometimes with the Independents, as they thought conduc'd moſt to the Service of the State, and generally they went with thoſe who were for Satisfaction and Security, till it was known that Oliver and his Party meant the Death of the King by it, in which they were left by all thoſe who meant the Reformation, and not the Deſtruction of the Government at the Beginning of the Rupture.

Neutral Party.

A. D. 1645.

As to the Sects, Antinomians, Familiſts, Seekers, Ranters, Adamites, &c. every one knows they were the Muſhrooms which ſprung up in the Fields of Blood during the Civil War, and when muſter'd together, hardly made up the Number of Parſon Maſon's Followers in Buckinghamſhire, about ſix or ſeven and thirty Years ago, with whom the Church of England may be as well charg'd as the Presbyterians and Independents, with the Sectaries againſt whom they were always preaching and labouring as much as conſiſted with the Confuſion of the Times.

Sectaries.

Mr. Baxter informs us, that the Parliament's Friends ſaw betimes what would be the fatal Conſequence of the before-mention'd Diviſions and Sub-diviſions, and that their Enemies had not a Twig to catch at to ſave them from ſinking to the Bottom for ever but what grew out of them. They had nothing left to employ their Valour about, and their Wiſdoms had been baffled as much as their Armies had been beaten; but they could with Safety, if not with Succeſs, foment thoſe Diviſions, and flatter'd themſelves that when by courting ſometimes one Party, and ſometimes another, a Breach was made, they might enter at it, tho' all other Entrance was deny'd them. Succeſs is as apt to perplex Counſels as Diſtreſs. The Conquerors quarrel as often about dividing the Prize, as the Conquer'd about keeping of it. There had been 1000 Light Houſes ſet up in Hiſtory to direct Nations and States how to avoid the Rocks and Sands of Diſcord. Baxter foreſaw, and it needed not good Eyes, what would be the Effects of the Animoſities between the Presbyterians and the other Denominations whom he warn'd, That a Houſe divided againſt itſelf cannot ſtand; That the Courſe they took would bring them to Shame, and turn a hopeful Reformation into Scorn, and make the Land of Nativity a Place of Calamity and Woe, as it was from the Reſtoration, the Effect of that divided Houſe, to the Revolution.

Diviſions.

Cal. p. 97.

We ſhall in the Sequel of this Hiſtory ſo often have Occaſion to ſpeak of theſe Parties jointly and ſeparately, that it was neceſſary to explain them a little, to make what we are to ſay the more intelligible.

Juſt at the End of the preſent Year, his Majeſty ſent another Meſſage to the Parliament, offering to come to London and treat with the Two Houſes: Upon which read what Mr. Acherley writes; " It is obſervable, that the King in " all his Anſwers to thoſe infinite Petitions and
" Invitations which had been ſent him to re-
" turn to his Parliament, had always objected,
" That he would not return for fear of Tu-

King's Meſſage.

He propos'd in this Meſſage to commit the Truſt of the Militia for ſuch Time and with ſuch Power as is expreſs'd by his own, not the Parliament's Commiſſioners at Uxbridge, to the following Commiſſioners: Lord Privy Seal, Duke of Richmond, Marquis of Hertford, Marquis of Dorcheſter, Earl of Dorſet, Lord Chamberlain, Earl of Chicheſter, Earl of Southampton, Lord Seymour, Lord Lucas, Lord Leppington, Mr. Delaware, Mr. Spencer, Mr. Aſhburnham, Mr. Gervaſe Clifton, Mr. *Tho. A. D. 1645. Earl of Warwick, Earl of Denbigh, Lord Say, Mr. Pierpoint, Mr. Hollis, Sir Thomas Fairfax, Sir Henry Vane, Mr. Robert Wallop, Mr. Oliver Cromwel, Mr. Philip Skippon. But the Militia, with all its Powers, being to be reſtor'd to the King ſolely in Three Years, while Reſentment and Revenge were ſtill hot, and not the leaſt Satisfaction offer'd for the Blood that had been ſpilt in the Three Kingdoms by the wicked Counſels of Delinquents, the Parliament reſolv'd to go on as they had begun, in preparing Bills for his Majeſty to ſign, as the Foundation of a ſafe and laſting Peace, which all good Engliſhmen earneſtly pray'd for.

The main Strength the King had leſt, were the Remains of his Weſtern Army under the Prince of Wales, retreating before Sir Thomas Fairfax, the Garriſons of Oxford, Newark, and Worceſter. Yet ſuch was the Fury and Outrage of the Cavaliers, even in the woful Cataſtrophe of their War, that Col. Bard, Governor of Worceſter, now iſſu'd out his Warrants to the Conſtables for Contributions, in theſe Terms:

The King's Governor of Worceſter's Warrant.

Know ye, That unleſs you bring in unto me, at a Day and Hour in Worceſter, the monthly Contributions for ſix Months, you are to expect an unſanctify'd Troop of Horſe amongſt you, from whom if you hide your ſelves, they ſhall fire your Houſes without Mercy, hang up your Bodies wherever they find them, and ſcare your Ghoſts. I wonder ſuch a fine Piece ſhould not be found in Mr. Archdeacon's Hiſtory, among ſo many Pieces not ſo fine, which he intended for the Glory of his Heroes.

A. D. 1646. General Fairfax did not think fit to lay Siege to Exeter in the Depth of the Winter, but having ſtreighten'd the Garriſon there as much as he could, he follow'd Goring, who was haſtening farther Weſtward with 1000 Horſe. Biſhops Cliff, Stoke and Poltimore, were garriſon'd by Fairfax, the latter with the Conſent of the Owner Sir John Bampfield, a worthy Member of the Houſe of Commons, whom I name the rather, for that there are ſtill Branches of that ancient and honourable Family to glory in, and imitate the Example of their Anceſtor.

General Fairfax in the Weſt.

When the General arrived at Ottery, November the 4th, a Trumpet came to him from his Royal Highneſs the Prince, with a Letter deſiring a Paſs for two New Lords, Hopton and Colepeper, to go to the King on a Deſign of mediating a Peace between his Majeſty and both Houſes of Parliament. The Lord General reply'd, he would ſend his Highneſs's Letter to the Parliament, from whom only he could expect an Anſwer; but if he would disband his Army, and go himſelf to them, he would be his Convoy. While the General lay at Ottery, he receiv'd a Letter from the Lord Goring for a ſafe Conduct for Col. Scrope and Col. Philips to attend him with Overtures; which was granted, not out of Expectation of Good from the Treaty, but to increaſe the Jealouſy and Diſcontent between Goring's Party and Greenvile's. The Overtures brought by Scrope and Philips were for both Armies to engage themſelves to force both King and Parliament to Conditions. To which the General return'd no other Anſwer, than that he would acquaint the Parliament with it. At Ottery a Sickneſs incident to the Seaſon ſeiz'd his Soldiers, and for ſome Time hinder'd his marching into Cornwall, which gave Greenvile and Hopton an Opportunity to raiſe more Corniſh Men; tho' the Earl of Clarendon, then Prime Miniſter to his Royal Highneſs, attributes whatever was done in his Service to the Depth of Wiſdom in the Prince's Counſels, and makes Myſteries of thoſe Things which will appear to be plain Facts. The Step the Lord Goring had taken about the Overtures, being not done in Concert with Mr. Hyde and Greenvile, the Jealouſy and Diſcontent above-mention'd increas'd ſo far, that Goring left his Army and retir'd to France, from whence he went to Spain, and, to crown all his heroical Actions recorded by Mr. Echard, turn'd Dominican Fryar, as did alſo another of their Heroes, the Lord Cottington, Fellow Ambaſſador in Spain with Sir Edward Hyde, and the Gradation in the Remove was very ſmall. Indeed I ſhould not have been aſtoniſh'd at it if they had all turn'd Fryars, conſidering the Cauſe they had eſpous'd

A. D. 1646.

Goring retires to France.

The General ſent Sir Hardreſs Waller, with a Body of Troops, to ſeize Crediton, and order'd ſeveral Houſes to be garriſon'd for the Parliament, as Sir William Courtney's at Polderham, Sir George Chudleigh's at Aſhton, the Lord Chicheſter's and Mr. Davy's at Canon Leen, by which the City of Exeter was ſo ſtreighten'd, that the Prince's Generals were preſs'd very much to relieve it, and gave out they would attempt it, which made the General rendezvous his Army between Okehampton and Crediton, from whence Lieutenant General Cromwel advanc'd to Bovey Tracy, January the 16th, where Part of the Lord Wentworth's Brigade lay, took about 400 Horſe, ſeven Colours, one of them the King's, with a Crown and C. R. upon it. Several of the King's Officers were at Cards when the Parliamentarians enter'd the Town, and ſeeing the latter coming upon them, flung their Stakes out at the Window; for which, while Cromwel's Soldiers ſcrambled, the Lord Wentworth's Officers made their Eſcape.

Ld. Wentworth's Brigade defeated.

The General advancing in Perſon, march'd to Aſhburton, which a Day before, January the 9th, had been the Enemy's Head Quarters. The advanc'd Guard found a Body of them at the Town's End, beat them thro' the Town, and broke two Regiments of that Brigade.

On the 12th of January the Army appear'd before Dartmouth, where Sir Hugh Pollard commanded for the King, and had near 1000 Men in Garriſon. General Fairfax order'd all Neceſſaries to be provided for a Storm, and on the 18th about Eleven at Night the Action began. The Cavaliers made but one Diſcharge before the Parliamentarians got under their Cannon, poſſeſs'd them, and turn'd them againſt the Enemy, having none of their own, the Way and Weather not admitting any to be drawn againſt the Place, where were no leſs than 100 Pieces mounted. The Commanders of every Party took the Poſts aſſign'd them, and maſter'd thoſe of the Enemy. Lieutenant Colonel Pride poſſeſs'd himſelf of Mount Boone, where were Twenty Pieces of Ordnance; Col. Hammond took the Weſt Gate, where were Four Pieces of Ordnance, and Twenty in the Flanker; Col. Forteſcue took Tunſtal Church with Twelve Pieces of Ordnance in it, and the other Commanders ſucceeded alike in the other Parts of the Town, particularly the Old Caſtle, where were five great Guns that commanded the River. All which was done with the Loſs of one Man kill'd. The Town being maſter'd, Capt. Dean, Comptroller of the Ordnance, was ſent to ſummons two Men of War which lay in the River, and yielded immediately. About a Mile from the Town were two old Forts, mounted with 84 Guns, the Garriſons of which beat a Parley. The General permitted Sir Henry Cary, who commanded in one of them, to march away, but oblig'd the Lord Newport and Col. Seymour, with their Garriſon in the other, to ſurrender

Dartmouth ſtorm'd and taken.

A. D. 1646. render at Mercy: Among them was found Sir Hugh Pollard, Governor of Dartmouth, who had fled out of the Town to that Fort. There were 600 Men in the Out-Garriſons, and 1000 in the Place, of whom 800 were made Priſoners. The reſt were either kill'd, or ſuffer'd to march off with Sir Henry Cary. In this Service Capt. Roupe's Men of Dartmouth were very uſeful in guiding the Parliament's Soldiers at the ſeveral Attacks. The Engineer belonging to the Town, a bigotted Papiſt, was in Danger of being torn in Pieces by the Women for his Cruelty in burning of Houſes, particularly Mr. Plumley's, with great Store of Corn in it, threſh'd and unthreſh'd.

Plymouth Siege rais'd.

Some Days before, Sir John Digby, who commanded the Blockade of Plymouth, march'd off, leaving his Works ſtanding, and that important Town which had defended it ſelf againſt two or three long Sieges, was at laſt deliver'd from a rapacious revengeful Enemy.

Not long after Dartmouth was taken, a Ship from France came into the Port, as if it had been ſtill in the King's Hands. The Maſter immediately threw his Diſpatches over-board, but ſufficient Matter was diſcover'd in the Queen's and Goring's Letters to ſhew, they had at the ſame Time Negociations with the Scots Presbyterians and the French Papiſts to carry on their good Cauſe. The General intended to return Eaſtwards and lay Siege to Exeter; but upon Advice that the King's Forces in Cornwall were about to croſs the Tamar, in hopes of being join'd by a great Body of Horſe from the Eaſt to attempt the raiſing the Blockade of Exeter, Fairfax march'd to meet them, having by Col. Hammond reduc'd Polderham Caſtle, where Sir ——— Meredith commanded for the King. On the 11th of February the General came up with the Royaliſts near Torrington, where his Forlorn of Horſe charg'd the King's, and forced them to retreat; however they ſally'd, being reinforc'd, and put the Parliament's Forlorn to a Stand, whoſe Reſerves and ſome Foot coming up, they again forc'd the Enemy to retreat, and purſu'd them as far as Stephenſton, Mr. Rolle's Houſe, which they had begun to fortify, but quitted it on the Approach of Fairfax's Men, and retreated to Torrington, whither Fairfax's Forlorn follow'd them. The Enemy drew their Foot out of the Town into the Cloſes. The Parliament's Forlorn of Foot lin'd the Hedges, and ſo they fac'd each other about two Hours within half Musket Shot. There were ſeveral Skirmiſhes between the Forlorns and Reſerves on both Sides, and by this Time it began to be Night. Sir Thomas Fairfax call'd his Council of War to conſider, whether to engage before Day or not; but they deferr'd the Reſolution, and the General and Lieutenant General rode to the Forlorn to ſee in what Poſture they were. They knew the Enemy to be ſtill in the Town by the Tattoe which they could hear. However, to be certain, ſix Dragoons were commanded to creep under a Bridge near the Barricades, and to give Fire, to ſee whether they would anſwer, by which it might be known certainly whether they ſtood to defend the Town. They receiv'd the Charge, and anſwer'd with a ſharp Volley of Shot. The Parliament's Forlorn Hope ſeeing the Dragoons engag'd, gave Fire, upon which the Enemy fir'd all along the Hedges and Works, and the Reſerve to the Forlorn came up to their Relief, which being ſo engag'd, the whole Army advanc'd, and about 8 at Night the Battle began, ſix Fields from the Town. The Parliamentarians fought from Hedge to Hedge till they had beaten the Royaliſts into their Barricades, which for an Hour they maintain'd very reſolutely, and often repuls'd the Parliament's Forces, who at laſt got over the Barricades, and forc'd the Enemy into the Town. The Horſe follow'd them, and ſcouring the Streets, were warmly receiv'd by the Cavaliers; but they drove them before them thro' the Town, and out of the Barricades, at the other End of it. The Parliament's Soldiers having taken many Priſoners, put them into the Church, but many more eſcap'd in the dark over the Hedges, throwing down their Arms, and all the Men flying ſeveral Ways. Fairfax's Soldiers were no ſooner poſſeſs'd of the Town, but the Enemy's Magazine, which they had left in the Church took fire, whether caſually or by Deſign is uncertain: It prov'd a terrible Blaſt, blowing up the Church with all the Wood and Lead upon it, deforming many Houſes, killing ſome of the Priſoners in the Church, and ſome of the Parliament's Soldiers in the Church-yard. Two great Webs of Lead fell within 10 Foot of the General, and a great Number were hurt with the Stones, Timber, and Lead. Moſt of the Town was ſhaken, and the Blow could not but be prodigious, near 80 Barrels of Powder being fir'd. Sir John Digby, at the Head of the Enemy's Horſe, gave one Charge more, and then they all fled about Eleven a Clock at Night. Their Infantry were taken, ſlain, and totally routed, many of their Cavalry taken and diſpers'd. The reſt fled in great Diſorder towards Cornwall, leaving all their Bag and Baggage behind them. Among the Colours taken, was one of the Lord Hopton's, with this Motto, a very bald one, I will ſtrive to ſerve my Sovereign King. Sir John Digby's Commiſſion was taken, 500 Pounds in Money, and much rich Pillage in his Quarters. The Lord Hopton, the Lord Capel, and the Lord Wentworth, were in this Battle, the Lord Hopton and the Lord Capel were wounded, Major General Threave, Capt. Fry, ſeveral Officers, and 400 of their Men kill'd and blown up. This Army conſiſted of about 4000 Horſe and 5000 Foot, of which very few remain'd in a Body.

Lord Hopton routed at Stratton.

General Fairfax advancing to Launceſton, Feb. 25. the Lord Hopton retir'd to Bodmin, whither the General purſu'd him, March the 2d, and Hopton retreated to Truro. At Bodmin Sir Thomas Fairfax had Intelligence that the Prince of Wales, with Sir Edward Hyde and his other Counſellors, had ſhipp'd themſelves for Scilly, from whence, ſays Sir Edward in his Hiſtory, he might be able to relieve his Friends in England, tho' he might have done it as well from Alderney or Sarke, for in Truth he wanted Relief himſelf as much as they did. But theſe Gentlemen always carry'd their politick Views along with them, and their Hopes ſeem'd to increaſe with their Calamities. The laſt Thing which Guilt ſubmits to is Deſpair.

On the 3d of March Col. Edgecombe deliver'd up his ſtrong Houſe of Mount Edgecombe to the General, and Mr. Coriton, Mr. Glanvile, Mr. Lower, and Mr. Treviſe, Corniſh Gentlemen, made their Submiſſion. The General ſhew'd them the original intercepted Letters from the Earl of Glamorgan, concerning the Army of Iriſh REBELS to be brought over to the King's Aſſiſtance. Several of thoſe Rebels being found a-board the Iriſh Ship at Padſtow, were knock'd on the Head by the Townſmen, and one, a Captain of thoſe REBELS, offer'd on Promiſe of Pardon, to confeſs what he knew, which was, that 300 Iriſh were appointed for the Prince of Wales's Life-guard, of whom 100 were to be put into the Mount, and 100 into Pendennis Caſtle. The Corniſh Gentlemen juſt mention'd were ſo ſurpriz'd at this Intelligence, that they declar'd they would raiſe what Force they could to aſſiſt the Parliament againſt all Iriſh and Foreigners, tho' they had hitherto aſſiſted the King.

IRISH REBELS imploy'd by the King.

We remember how Clarendon and Echard inſulted the Parliament when the Earl of Eſſex had unadviſedly ſhut himſelf up within a Nook of this County of Cornwall, and left his Army to take Care of themſelves, and that his Horſe broke their Way thro' the King's. General Fairfax has now got the Royal Army within another Nook of Cornwall; but tho' their Horſe were almoſt double the Number to Eſſex's, there's no Attempt to break thro', which indeed Fairfax had well provided againſt, with the utmoſt Precaution, and Hopton and his Army are in ſo miſerable a Condition, that it would be inhumane to inſult them, tho' the Inſolence of the Cavaliers and their Hiſtory Writers, do ſufficiently provoke one.

From Bodmin Sir Thomas Fairfax wrote a Letter to Sir Ralph Hopton, taking no Notice of his Barony of Stratton, a Title which he purchas'd with Apoſtacy from good old Engliſh Principles, wherein he ſaid, "I have thought "good, for Prevention of more Blood-ſhed, "or of farther Hardſhip or Extremity to any, "but ſuch whoſe Hearts God ſhall harden to "their own Deſtruction, to ſend you this Summons for your ſelf and your Forces, to lay down "your Arms, and withal, a Tender of ſuch Conditions upon a preſent Surrender, and Engagement never to bear Arms againſt the Parliament, as may be better than any thing they "can rationally expect by farther ſtanding out." Thus we ſee that the General, out of meer Compaſſion, made the firſt Motion of Treaty to them, whom he could eaſily have cut to Pieces or ſtarv'd. But the Earl of Clarendon, who had all along been with Hopton's Army, and muſt neceſſarily know the Truth, will not allow this kind Offer to proceed from a generous Sentiment of Soul in Sir Thomas Fairfax, but from a mutinous Spirit in Hopton's Officers, who poſitively propos'd to ſend for a Treaty, which poſitively had been propos'd and ſent to them. The Lord Hopton's Anſwer to the General's Letter further ſhews us, what we learn by the Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory, that the Royaliſts did not know what was doing at Weſtminſter, or that their Judgments were not ſo ſagacious and piercing as the Earl repreſents them; for he deſires to be inform'd, Whether the King has not paſs'd the Four Bills, and concluded a Treaty with the Parliament: If ſo, there was no Occaſion for them to treat; if not, he would name eight Commanders, and three Country Gentlemen, to give a Meeting to an equal Number on Fairfax's Side. In the General's Anſwer to the Lord Hopton's Letter, are ſome Expreſſions which will confirm what we have urg'd of the King's treating with the Iriſh REBELS, and the Double Dealing of his Commiſſioners in former Treaties with the Parliament's: "I believe that as the "Parliament may be diſcourag'd from the Way "of Treaty by former Experiences of the Fruitleſſneſs thereof, and the ill Uſe the ſame hath "been deſign'd or driven unto, viz. only to "gain Advantages for War, without real Intentions for Peace; ſo the late Overtures that way "are the leſs likely to be ſucceſsful, by Reaſon "of the clear and certain Diſcoveries the Parliament have had, that his Majeſty, at the "ſame Time, was and is labouring, by Agents "in all Parts, to draw in Foreign Forces, and "eſpecially that the Earl of Glamorgan, by "Commiſſion from his Majeſty, had concluded "a Peace with the Iriſh Rebels, upon the only "Condition of ſending over Forces to invade "England, whereof I preſume you cannot but "have heard: And tho' his Majeſty did in a "Letter to the Parliament diſavow any ſuch "Agreement, and pretended he had given Order to the Lord Digby for the Attainting and "Impeaching the Earl of Glamorgan of High "Treaſon, yet by late Diſcoveries of the Parliament, and eſpecially by Letters intercepted "from the Lord Digby and the Earl of Glamorgan, to Secretary Nicholas, your ſelf, Sir "Edward Hyde, and others, it is moſt clear "and evident, that the arreſting the Earl of "Glamorgan was only for a preſent Colour, to "ſalve Reputation with the People, and continue their Deluſions till Deſigns were ripe for "Execution; for the ſame Peace is fully concluded with the REBELS, the King to have "Aid from them, &c." After this there can be no Front ſo harden'd, as to deny the Treaty with the Maſſacrers in Ireland, and the inviting of them into England to butcher the Proteſtants in this Kingdom, as they had done in that: And to me it does not ſeem much Matter, whether the King granted a Commiſſion to thoſe bloody REBELS before he made War upon the Parliament or after, for that War might have been avoided, if he had govern'd according to Law, which he ſays he is fighting for in all his Declarations; and it was as much againſt Law to commiſſion the Popiſh Rebels to kill the Engliſh as the Iriſh Proteſtants; and that he did ſo commiſſion them was, as General Fairfax ſays, clear and certain. If thoſe Butchers were proper Champions for the Cauſe of God, as his Majeſty calls his own, let any reaſonable Reader determine; and what fine Hiſtories muſt the Earl of Clarendon's and Mr. Echard's be, which deny that he gave any Commiſſion at all to the Iriſh REBELS. This one Article is enough to prove that neither of thoſe Hiſtorians made Conſcience of what they did ſay, or did not ſay, for the Cauſe they eſpous'd. The Lord Hopton ſeeing his Stratagem would not take, but he muſt beg a Ceſſation, if he would have it, ſent at Twelve a Clock at Night for a Treaty at Treſilian Bridge. The Earl of Clarendon affirms he would not treat for himſelf. The General conſented, and appointed his Commiſſioners.

Lord Hopton's Army ſurrender

A. D. 1646.

Shillings a Man; Strangers to have Paſſes to go beyond Sea, and the Engliſh to go to their Homes, taking an Oath never to bear Arms againſt the Parliament; about 3000 ſurrender'd, and Eſſex's old Soldiers in Fairfax's Army ſaid, We are even with the King's Forces for the Lord General's Buſineſs in Cornwall. While Hopton's Troops were disbanding, another Packet of the Lord Glamorgan's was taken at Peryn, containing Copies of the Letters intercepted at Padſtow. The Ship put into Cornwall on a Suppoſition that the King's Army were Maſters there, and probably the Iriſh REBELS were to re-inforce it. About the ſame Time Sir Hardreſs Waller reduc'd Exmouth Fort, where Colonel Arundel commanded. General Fairfax took in Dennis Fort, near which Colonel Rich defeated Major General Pert, and took 300 Horſe. The whole Field Force of the Enemy being reduc'd, the Lords Hopton, Wentworth, and other Perſons of Quality embark'd for Scilly. The General march'd his Army back to beſiege Exeter in Form; but firſt he wrote a Letter to Sir John Berkley the Governor, March the 31ſt, to offer Terms, and Sir John in Anſwer nam'd his Commiſſioners to treat: Sir Henry Berkley, Mr. William Aſhburnham, Sir George Carey, Mr. John Weare, Colonel Godolphin, Captain Fitzgarret, Mr. Robert Walker, Mr. Thomas Knight, Mr. Thomas Kendal, Mr. Thomas Foard.

General Fairfax's Commiſſioners.

Lieutenant General Hammond, Commiſſary General Stane, Sir Hardreſs Waller, Colonel Lambert, Colonel Harley, Colonel Fry.

The Treaty laſted ſix Days, and was concluded the 9th of April: The Hoſtages for Berkley were Sir John Coventry, Sir James Thynne and Colonel Croker. Whitlocke obſerves that his Commiſſioners had moſt at Heart the preſerving the Cathedral from Damage. As the Governor was very frank in anſwering the General's Summons, ſo the General was very fair in the Conditions he granted him; one of which was, that the Princeſs Henrietta, afterwards Dutcheſs of Orleans, a Native of this City, Her Governeſs and Houſhold ſhould have Liberty to paſs with their Plate, Money, Goods, &c. to any Place in England or Wales, at her Deſire, in 20 Days.

Barnſtable taken and Dunſter.

The next Day after the City was ſurrender'd the General march'd to Barnſtable, ſummon'd the Town and receiv'd a civil Anſwer from Sir Allen Apſley, who yielded on much the ſame Terms as Sir John Berkley. Dunſter Caſtle, the Seat of the ancient Family of Lutterel in Somerſetſhire was ſurrender'd by Colonel Windham to the famous Colonel Blake, afterwards Admiral. The General returning to Exeter the 14th of April, made Lieutenant General Hammond Governor, and left with him Part of the Country Regiments of Colonel Shapcot, Colonel Fry and Colonel Weare, who had done good Service at Tiverton and Exmouth.

Gen. Fairfax's great Actions in one Year.

On the 18th of April General Fairfax began his March towards Oxford, having in leſs than a Year obtain'd more Victories and taken more Towns than ever did any General in ſo ſhort Time, in a War where the Number and Valour of the Troops on both Sides were ſo equal.

On the 24th of May, 1645. he took Godſtow in Oxfordſhire.

On the 14th of June he gain'd the glorious Victory at Naſeby.

On the 18th of June he took Leiceſter.

On the 27th of June he took Highworth.

On the 3d of July he oblig'd the Lord Goring to raiſe the Siege of Taunton.

On the 10th of July he fought and won the Battle of Lanport.

On the 23d of July he took the ſtrong Town of Bridgwater by Storm.

On the 15th of Auguſt he took the ſtrong Caſtle of Shirburn by Storm.

On the 10th of September he took the City of Briſtol by Storm.

On the 23d of September he took the Town of Devizes.

On the 20th of October he took Tiverton by Storm.

On the 16th of January he rais'd the Siege of Plymouth.

On the 19th of January he took Dartmouth by Storm.

On the 15th of February he fought and won the Battle of Torrington.

On the 25th, 28th, 29th of February, and March the 3d he took Saltaſh, Leskard, Mount Edgecomb, Fuoy.

On the 14th of March he oblig'd the Lord Hopton to disband all the King's Weſtern Army.

On the 10th of April, 1646. he took the City of Exeter.

On the 20th of April he took the Town of Barnſtable. And,

On the 1ſt of May he came before Oxford, being that Day Twelvemonth from his leaving the Siege of that City to take the Field. And what Hiſtory can produce a General who in a Twelvemonth did ſo many glorious Actions, and obtain'd ſo many Victories?

The King did not ſtay for his coming, but as ſoon as he heard of his Intention made his Eſcape, as will be ſeen hereafter. We muſt now look into ſome other Parts of the Kingdom, where the Royaliſts were in the Agonies of a dying War.

Cheſter taken.

We left the City of Cheſter beſieg'd by Sir William Brereton, who met with a gallant Reſiſtance; but the Hope of Relief from the Iriſh failing, and Colonel Mitton having hinder'd the Junction of ſome Troops that were marching to relieve it, the Beſieg'd deſir'd a Treaty, which was concluded, and the City ſurrender'd to Sir William, where he found great Store of Proviſions and Ammunition. Sir Jacob Aſtley now made a Lord too, had got together 2000 Horſe and Foot, which were intended to join Sir William Vaughan; and ſome Forces landed in Wales from Ireland, for the Relief of Cheſter, which being ſurrender'd, Sir William Brereton march'd to meet the Lord Aſtley, who hearing of the Surrender would have ſhelter'd himſelf in Oxford; but Sir William Brereton's Troops being join'd by thoſe of Colonel Morgan, Governor of Glouceſter, and Colonel Birch, fell upon the Lord Aſtley at Stow on the Woald, in Glouceſterſhire, March the 22d, and after a very ſharp Engagement routed them, took the Lord Aſtley and 1600 Horſe and Men, all their Carriages, Arms, Bag and Baggage. Brereton's Word was God be our Guide; Aſtley's Word was St. Patrick and St. George, two ſpecial Saints and hopeful Patrons for ſo hopeful a Cauſe: About 200 Cavaliers were kill'd, many of them Gentlemen of Quality, as Colonel Caſſey Bentall, a Papiſt. A few of the King's Forces eſcap'd to Oxford and Farrington; and the Lord Aſtley ſaid to ſome of the Parliament's Officers, Now you have done your Work and may go play, unleſs you fall out among your ſelves, which the Royaliſts expected, and no Body more than the King himſelf, who having now no Body of Men in the Field to oppoſe the Parliament's Armies, plac'd all his Hope in their falling out with one another or with the Scots. A Company of Welſhmen were got together in Glamorganſhire for the King, under Sir Charles Keymes, who makes but a ſcurvy Figure at the Fag-end of the War. Major General Langhorn, Sir Trevor Williams, and Colonel Morgan ſoon drove him and his Company out of the Country. Echard who is wonderfully delighted with the Earl of Clarendon's Political Myſteries, attributes the Hopes of the King and his Counſellors to the Miſunderſtandings between the Parliament and the Scots Army. But the Parliament had done their Work, and could drive the Scots out of England with as much Eaſe as they had driven Hopton out of Cornwal, had they been forc'd to it. The true Reaſon is in Ludlow, who writes thus on the above mention'd Saying of the Lord Aſtley; "It deſerves the more Reflection be-

"cauſe he being well acquainted with the "King's Secrets, was not ignorant that many
"amongſt us, who at the Beginning appear'd
"moſt forward to engage themſelves, and to "invite others to the War againſt the King,
"finding themſelves diſappointed of thoſe Pre-
"ferments which they expected, or out of ſome
"particular Diſguſts taken, had made Conditi"ons with the King, not only for their Indem-
"nity, but for Places and Advancements under "him, endeavouring by a Treaty, or rather by "Treachery, to betray what had coſt ſo much
"Blood to obtain. Theſe Men to ſtrengthen
"their Intereſt, apply'd themſelves to the Pres- "byterian Party, who jealous of the Increaſe of "Sectaries, of which the Army was reported
"chiefly to conſiſt, readily join'd with them,
"by which Conjunction moſt of the new elect-
"ed Members were either of a neutral Spirit,
"and willing to have Peace upon any Terms,
"or ſuch, who though they had engag'd againſt
"the King, yet finding Things tending to a "Compoſition with him, reſolv'd to have the "Benefit of it and his Favour, though with the "Guilt of all the Blood that had been ſhed in "the War upon their Heads, as not requiring "Satisfaction for the ſame, nor endeavouring to "prevent the like for the Future." This was the Party whom the Royaliſts courted, and who were not a little pleas'd with their Courtſhip. But however, as much as the Diviſions in the Houſe were fomented, it would all have come to nothing, and the Cavaliers would never have had another Card to play, had not the Army, at leaſt the Chief of it, Cromwel, acted an under Plot, and betray'd, and even depos'd his Maſters; and it is a juſt though not a common Obſervation, that as all the Diſgraces, Defeats, Calamities, and Diſtreſſes of the Royaliſts, were owing to their Raſhneſs, Weakneſs, Pride and Obſtinacy; ſo all the Good that happen'd to them afterwards, was owing to the Jealouſies, Animoſities, Diviſions and Quarrels of their Enemies. In a Word, their Miſeries were owing to their own Folly, their Happineſs to the Folly of others.

Diviſions.

Corfe Caſtle ſurpriz'd.

About this Time a Party of the King's ſurpriz'd Wareham in Dorſetſhire, and carry'd the Governor, Colonel Butler, into Corfe Caſtle, whence Butler made his Eſcape with Major Laurence a Royaliſt, who reſolv'd to come in to the Parliament, and ſoon after Corfe Caſtle it ſelf fell into their Hands thus; Lieutenant Colonel Pitman, who was in Garriſon there, had formerly ſerv'd under the Earl of Inchiquen in Ireland, and being weary of the Service he was in, intimated that if he might have Protection he would deliver the Place to the Parliament, which being promis'd him, he told Colonel Anketill the Governor, he would fetch 100 Men out of Somerſetſhire to reinforce the Garriſon, and would get Leave of the Commander of the Forces who lay before the Caſtle under Pretence of procuring an Exchange for his Brother, who was their Priſoner, for a Parliament Officer in the Caſtle. The Governor conſenting to it, Leave was had from Colonel Bingham, who commanded thoſe Forces, and gave Pitman 100 Men to carry with him into the Caſtle, who were no ſooner enter'd than the Beſiegers began to ſtorm, and Pitman's Men ſoon poſſeſs'd themſelves of the chief Towers, which they made good againſt the Garriſon, who ſeeing this yielded upon Quarter.

A. D. 1646.

The Siege of Newark was carry'd on by the Scots on one Side of the River Trent, and Major Gen. Pointz on the other. Gen. Leven, who commanded the Scots, had ſome Difference with the Parliament's Commiſſioners in his Army about Pay; and the Scots Parliament and Army finding they were not careſt ſo much now the Parliament of England did not want them as when they did, grew daily more diſcontented, pretending however 'twas only out of Concern for the Presbytery and the Covenant. The Parliament were diſcontented at General Leven's raiſing Money in England by his Warrants, and granting Commiſſions for makng Levies of Men in this Kingdom.

All the Stir the Royaliſts could make was by ſpiriting up Mobs and Mutinies in City and Camp; and there were not wanting a great Number, who over valuing their Merit, thought themſelves not ſufficiently rewarded, and were ready to take hold of any Occaſion to be troubleſome. Whitlocke informs us that the King's Party was ſuppos'd to ſet on Soldiers Widows and Creditors of the Parliament to come to the Doors of the Houſe and cry out, Pay us our Money, we are ready to ſtarve, and when any of the Members came by they ſeem'd as if they would tear their Clothes off their Backs. A ſmall Game; but the Cavaliers were unwilling to ſtand out.

Royaliſts impotent.

The King remain'd ſtill at Oxford, and from thence ſent another Letter to the Parliament, January the 16th, deſiring, That Church Government may continue as it was in the Days of Queen Elizabeth; a Name dear to all good Proteſtants for her Zeal againſt Popery: But the Meaning of continuing Church Government as it was in her Days, was the Continuance of Spiritual Courts, Forms, Ceremonies and Superſtition, which 'tis very well known were the only Blemiſh of her Reign. His Majeſty was content that the Directory of Worſhip ſhould be uſed in ſome Churches in London, but not all; which muſt neceſſarily have bred the utmoſt Confuſion. In a following Letter he charges them with violating the known Laws to draw to themſelves an exorbitant Power over their Fellow Subjects: A very likely Stile this, to engage them in a Treaty of Peace in the Height of their Proſperity. He preſs'd again for it the 26th of January; but the Parliament proceeded in the ſame Way ſtill, and prepar'd the following Bills, to which if he would aſſent, they were willing he ſhould come to London.

King's Meſſage about the Church.

1. For ſettling Presbyterian Government, and extirpating Epiſcopacy. 2. For proſecuting the War againſt the Iriſh REBELS. 3. For the Militia to remain in the Power of the Parliament. 4. For Payment of the Debts of the Kingdom. 5. For bringing Delinquents to Puniſhment, of whom Mr. Hyde, afterwards Earl of Clarendon was always named to be one. 6. That no Honours be given but to ſuch as have teſtify'd their Affections to the Publick.

A. D. 1646. 7. Concerning the Privileges of London.

His Majeſty offer'd the Militia for ſeven Years; That the Parliament ſhould nominate Officers of State, Judges, &c. That Liberty of Conſcience ſhould be granted to thoſe that were ſcrupulous.

And what is amazing, after the Hiſtory we have read of it, he diſclaim'd the Earl of Glamorgan's Commiſſion as falſe, which General Fairfax ſaid was ſo clear and certain. How this agrees with the pious Sentiments in Eikon Baſilike, and how the double Dealing in the Treaties mention'd by the ſame General, whom his Enemies allow to be a Man of ſtrict Honour, agrees with them, is what no Body can underſtand but Echard and his Brethren. The Parliament of Scotland wrote to the Parliament of England to ſettle Religion as the Aſſembly deſir'd, to forward the Propoſitions for Peace, and pay the Scots Army their Arrears by the third of May. The Committee of both Kingdoms were order'd on the 26th of February, to deſire the Scots Commiſſioners to bring in their Accounts. This was long before any one had the leaſt Suſpicion that the King would put himſelf into the Hands of the Scots Army, and when he did ſo, and theſe Accounts were made up, and their Arrears paid, the whole Herd of Cavalier Hiſtorians bellow out againſt it as a Bargain and Sale for the delivering up of the King. Let us have Recourſe to Ludlow here; "Another Sort of Men there was amongſt us, who "having acquir'd Eſtates in the Service of the "Parliament, now adher'd to the King's Party "for the preſerving of what they had got; who "together with ſuch as had been diſcharg'd "from their Employments by the Reform of "the Army, or envy'd their Succeſs, com-"bin'd together againſt the Common-wealth. "This Party was encourag'd and ſupported up-"on all Occaſions by the Scots, and the City of "London. The firſt of them, though they be-"gan the War, and though their Aſſembly of "Miniſters had declar'd the King guilty of the "Blood of Thouſands of his beſt Subjects, "their Covenant engaging them in the Preſer-"vation of his Perſon, ſo far only as might con-"ſiſt with the Laws of the Land and Liberty of "the Subject; yet having had many good Op-"portunites in England, and hoping for more, "ſuppoſing it to be in their Power to awe the "King to whatſoever they ſhould think fit, "they were content to ſwallow that Ocean of "Blood that had been ſhed, preſſing the Par-"liament by their Commiſſioners to conclude "upon ſuch Terms with the King as ſhew'd "them rather Advocates than ſuch as had been "Enemies to him. The City of London had "had their Treaſure much waſted in the War, "and their Trade long interrupted; beſides the "Influence the Scots had upon them by the "Means of their Miniſters: The Common "Council being alſo debauch'd by Sergeant "Glyn and others of that Party in the Houſe of "Commons; it was not much to be wonder'd "at, if they earneſtly ſollicited for the ſpeedy "Determination of the Difference by a Treaty. "The King alſo perceiving Judgment to be gi-"ven againſt him by that Power, to which both "Parties had made their ſolemn Appeal, "thought it adviſable to make Uſe of the "Fox's Skin, and for a Time to lay aſide that "of the Lyon, ſending Meſſages to the Parlia-"ment, to deſire of them a ſafe Conduct for "his coming to London in Honour, Freedom "and Safety, there perſonally to treat with the "two Houſes, The Parliament for divers Rea-"ſons thought it not convenient to comply with "the King's Propoſitions, and demanded of the "Scots an exact Account of what was due to "them", which, as I have already obſerv'd, was before the King went to their Army; and the Parliament had promis'd to pay them their Arrears upon their withdrawing their Garriſons out of England, which they pretended to keep as cautionary Towns. The Parliament had ſome Difference with the Scots Commiſſioners concerning the Propoſitions about the Militia, the Education of the King's Children, the Disbanding of the Army, the Act of Oblivion, in which Matters the Parliament would not let them interpoſe; and this occaſion'd a Remonſtrance from them to the two Houſes, containing Expreſſions highly reflecting on the Parliament, who declar'd them to be injurious, ſcandalous, and order'd the Remonſtrance to be burn'd by the Hands of the common Hangman, the 14th of April; ſo far were they from being in the leaſt Dread of the Scots, which the Earl of Clarendon and his Shadow Mr. Echard, all along intimate, though in a Manner which diſcovers that they knew very little of the Things they wrote of, or did not write according to their Knowledge. True it is the two Houſes were very deſirous to preſerve a good Correſpondence with the Scots, on Account both of Religion and Intereſt; but they were not for preſerving it at the Expence of their Honour: And the Scots finding them ſo reſolute, thought fit to abate of their Demands, and leave the Parliament to their own Management. Theſe Animoſities, ſays Mr. Archdeacon, and the Scots Pretenſions to have a Right in their King, were thought very advantagious to his Majeſty's ſinking Cauſe, and there ſeem'd to be ſome Life in it. 'Twas thought, and there ſeem'd; By whom? By thoſe who had been thinking and ſeeming his Majeſty into the moſt deplorable Condition a Prince could be reduc'd to; and yet in the midſt of all this Miſery the Hiſtorian preſents us with a Vow made by the King, That he would reſtore Abbey Lands, if ever it pleas'd God to reſtore him to that Sovereign Power which he had ſo well exercis'd before the Rupture. Archbiſhop Sheldon gave it under his Hand that he kept a Copy of that notable Vow under Ground thirteen Years, though if he had kept it above Ground, it was not ſuch a Treaſure that he needed be afraid of loſing it; and a little more Diſcretion would have hinder'd Mr. Echard's publiſhing it in print, and calling ſuch Things as the demoliſhing St. Becket's Tomb at Canterbury Sacrilegious Incroachments. What a Parcel of Words have theſe Men got to make Uſe of inſtead of Reaſon? Schiſm, Rebellion, Sacrilege, and if you take down a Rood or melt down a Chalice, though by Act of Parliament, you are as guilty of Sacrilege, according to this good Proteſtant, as if you ſtole the Church Bible or Common Prayer Book. To hedge in an Acre of a Monk's Glebe, though allow'd by the Statute, is as damnable a Sin, according to the Reverend Hiſtorian, as to break open a Houſe. He tells us the King made an extraordinary Vow, in the Preſence of Almighty God, to give back to God's Church; to what ſhocking Uſes do they put that tremendous Name! all Lands belonging to any Abby, Religious Houſe, &c. This Vow was made at the moſt improper Juncture of Time which could happen; for 'twas when Monſieur Montreuil was ſent to England by Cardinal Mazarine, and two Popiſh Queens, the Regent of France and Conſort of England, to perſwade the King to aboliſh Biſhops, and ſet up Presbyters, as the only Means to ſecure to himſelf and Poſterity the Poſſeſſion of the King's Vow about Abbey Lands.

Throne. About the ſame Time too as he vow'd this, his Majeſty ſent another Meſſage to the Parliament, offering "to come in to his two "Houſes upon their Aſſurance for the Safety of "his Perſon, provided all thoſe that had ad-"hear'd to him might return home, and live "in quiet without taking the Covenant, or ha-"ving their Eſtates ſequeſtred: He will then "diſband his Forces, diſmantle his Garriſons, "and paſs an Act of Oblivion, which was do-"ing nothing." The Parliament knew very well that his Garriſons and Forces would be diſbanded and diſmantled in a few Weeks without him, and that his Friends wanted an Act of Oblivion much more than they. There is a Reſerve in all theſe Meſſages which ſhews that the King never ſent them with Expectation of Succeſs; for without Presbytery the Militia and Juſtice on Mr. Hyde and the other Delinquents he knew well they would not receive him again. The judicious Acherly ſays, The Parliament argu'd that now the King had no Power but what they ſhould give him, and how he, who had continu'd ſo obſtinate, would uſe his Power did plainly appear by his Declaration after the taking of Briſtol, and therefore their Reſolutions about receiving him were for the preſent ſuſpended. We ſhall ſee what Life there ſeem'd to be in the King's Cauſe by the Parliament's Anſwer to this Meſſage, as it is in Larry. "They "were very much prejudic'd againſt him as to "his Sincerity, and deſir'd him not to think of "coming to London till he had firſt given his "Aſſent to the Bills that would be ſent to him. "They added, if he attempted to come not-"withſtanding this Remonſtrance, they would "give Orders to ſecure his Perſon, and ſieze on "all his Retinue." They alſo order'd that all Perſons who had born Arms againſt the Parliament ſhould immediately withdraw out of London, and without the Lines, under Pain of being treated as Spies. 'Tis ſaid Cromwel, who was come from the Army, was in a great Meaſure the Occaſion of this Anſwer and Order, which ſufficiently convinc'd his Majeſty that he muſt either throw himſelf upon the Parliament, or have Recourſe to the Scots, whoſe Difference with them was magnify'd, and himſelf made believe it was much greater than he found it. Fairfax's Approach quicken'd his Majeſty in this laſt Reſolution, the worſt he could have taken. There had not yet been a Hint in Parliament againſt the King's Perſon, but it was reſented. The major Vote was then for a Peace on Terms of Security for Religion and Liberty, and his Preſence at London would moſt certainly have encreas'd that Party, but by his throwing himſelf upon the Scots he irritated both Parliament and Army, and gave the Enemies to his Perſon an Opportunity to accompliſh thoſe Deſigns which till then they durſt not think of. I take no Manner of Notice of the Earl of Clarendon's long Account of Montreuil's Negotiations with General Leven for his kind Reception of the King before his Majeſty left Oxford, becauſe it is quite contrary to Fact. For the Earl of Leven and the Committee of Eſtates of Scotland wrote to the Committee of both Kingdoms, That they were aſtoniſh'd at the Providence of the King's coming to the Scots Camp, which was ſo private that it was long e'er they could find him there. They declar'd, there hath been no Treaty betwixt his Majeſty and them; and add, We believe your Lordſhips will think it Matter of much Aſtoniſhment, ſeeing we did not expect him to come to any Place under our Power, and we do ingeniouſly affirm that there hath been no Treaty nor Capitulation between his Majeſty and us, nor any in our Names. The King came to our Army in ſo private a Way, that after we had made ſome Search for him upon the Surmiſes of Perſons who pretended to know his Face; yet we could not find him in ſome Hours. Among others this was ſign'd by General Leven, to whoſe Quarters, as Echard informs us, the King was conducted by a Troop of Scots Horſe upon his Arrival at their Camp, and to prove that General Leven, the Earl of Dumferling, the Earl of Lothian, &c. wrote ſo ſhameful a Falſity to the Committee of both Kingdoms; he quotes Biſhop Guthry, which I mention to ſhew what Authority his Biſhop Guthry is in other Caſes. The Scots Commiſſioners in their Declaration tell the Parliament, the King came to their Army without Capitulation or Treaty; yet the Earl of Clarendon's and Echard's Hiſtories, as well as Guthry's, enlarge upon Montreuil's Negotiations, in Purſuance of which the King made his Eſcape in Diſguiſe, April the 27th, his Hair cut after the Roundhead Faſhion, with a Portmanteau behind him, as Mr. John Aſhburnham's Servant. Their Guide was one Hudſon a Parſon of the Militant Order, who conducted them to Henley, by Croſs Roads, Brentford, Harrow on the Hill, where his Majeſty ſtaid ſome Time; thence by St. Alban's to Harborough in Leiceſter, where Echard aſſures us the French Agent Montreuil, was to meet him with ſome Scots Horſe, according to a Treaty which the Scots Lords ſay he never made with them, and indeed no Scots Horſe came thither. 'Tis probable Montreuil met with Encouragement from the Scots as to the King's coming amongſt them, but that they ſign'd any Treaty is neither propable nor credible; and though the King ſays in his Letter to the Marquis of Ozmond, April the 13th, Having lately receiv'd very good Security that we and all that do or ſhall adhere to us ſhall be ſafe in our Perſons, Honours and Conſciences in the Scottiſh Army; yet there ſeems to be no other Security for any Thing than the French Agent's Word, and one of the firſt Things that the Scots did after he came to their Army was to prohibit by Proclamation all thoſe that did or ſhould adhere to him to come near his Perſon. From Harborough the King and his Companions went to Stamford, and thence croſs the Country to Downham in Norfolk, where he arriv'd April the 30th; and his Travels were not kept ſo private but that it was ſaid in London, he was gone to the Aſſociated Counties, upon which Colonel Wharton was ſent by the Parliament to Lynn, to take Care for the Security of the Aſſociation. Clarendon, Echard, Sanderſon, and all their Hiſtory Writers throw the Parliament into the moſt terrible Conſternation, on News of the King's having made his Eſcape: They make them more afraid of him now he is riding about the Country as Mr. Aſhburnham's Man, than when he had diſarm'd General Eſſex's Army in Cornwall: Whereas they were in no farther Concern about it than it might be a Hindrance to a Peace, which if he had been taken in Oxford, they hop'd he might have been prevail'd upon to hearken to, and as eſcaping in ſo clandeſtine a Manner could not be with any good Deſign, they declar'd by Beat of Drum and Sound of Trumpet, that what Perſon ſoever ſhall harbour or conceal, or know of the Harbouring and Concealing of the King's Perſon, and ſhall not reveal it immediately to the Speakers of both Houſes ſhall be proceeded againſt as a TRAYTOR, forfeit his whole Eſtate, and die without Mercy. From Downham the King went to Montreuil's Quarters at Southwell, where Part of the Scots Army quarter'd, and perhaps there was a Whiſper of his being there before he diſcover'd himſelf, and after it was known, ſome Horſe might be ſent to bring him to General Leven. This Hiſtory will ſhew that 'tis impoſſible to read it, and have a very good Opinion of King Charles's Counſellors and Counſels. He has hardly taken one prudent Step either before or after the War; and there have many Opportunities offer'd when one ſuch Step would have preſerv'd him on the Throne with Safety and Honour. Had he now thrown himſelf upon Sir Thomas Fairfax inſtead of General Leven, he would have puzzled his Enemies, and prepared the Way for a Concluſion of a happy Peace; whereas by going to the Scots Camp, he ſhew'd that his Intention was to divide them from the Intereſt of the Two Houſes to engage them in his own, and renew the War, which gave too much Occaſion to People to think there could be no Security in any Treaty with him. He was brought to the Earl of Leven's Quarters the 5th of May, eight Days after he left Oxford. On News of which the Parliament voted, That the Commiſſioners and the General of the Scots be deſired that his Majeſty's Perſon be diſpoſed of as both Houſes ſhall deſire and direct, and that he be ſent to Warwick Caſtle; alſo, That Mr. Aſhburnham and Hudſon be ſent for as Delinquents. The Former made his Eſcape, but Hudſon was brought up by the Serjeant at Arms. The Scots, who had a ſtrong Appetite for their Arrears, reſolv'd to delay the Delivery of the King till they were paid. The Account between the Parliament and them, was adjuſting by Mr. Bond the Auditor; and as their Demands for Damages and Charges, as well as Pay, were exorbitant, it could not be ſtated with the Diſpatch they inſiſted upon.

The King orders the Surrender of Newark.

They immediately oblig'd the King to ſend to the Lord Bellaſis to ſurrender Newark to the Parliament's Commiſſioners in their Army, and march'd farther North with their Prize, being afraid of having him taken from them by Force. Their receiving him without Conſent of the Two Houſes, had brought them under Suſpicion, and their diſputing the Delivery of him, made many, eſpecially among the Soldiery, to wiſh that Sir Thomas Fairfax had been order'd to demand him, rather than the Parliament's Commiſſioners. Warwick is not ſo weak but he could obſerve the Parliament were a little too forward in their Treaty with the Scots: If the Engliſh Army had been left to themſelves, they would ſoon have ſhorten'd the Taylor's Bill. 'Tis Sir Philip's courtly Way of Writing. Fairfax would have made up the Account ſooner than Auditor Bond. The Parliament knew it well enough, and order'd Forces to march from ſeveral Quarters to the North, to let the Scots ſee they would vindicate their Demand of the King's Perſon in another manner, if they attempted to keep him; but the Scots meant only to quicken the paſſing their Account, and his Majeſty ſoon found when he was at Newcaſtle, that he might as well have truſted himſelf with the Engliſh Army as with the Scots. The Latter began their March from Newark, May the 7th, the King being ſuffer'd to ride before them as their General, the Earl of Leven by his Side, and the Scots Lords around him. The Bells rung in the Towns and Villages thro' which they march'd; but tho' there was an Appearance of Joy, there was no Appearance of Liberty for the King; and when he came to Newcaſtle, May the 13th, he was lodg'd in the ſame Houſe with General Leven, but with no Solemnity; and Leven iſſu'd a Proclamation, That no Papiſt or Delinquent ſhould come near him, and that all Perſons do conform to the Orders and Ordinances of Parliament, who preſs'd the Scots Commiſſioners to ſettle their Army's Account, that they might be paid, which ſhews that the Two Houſes were deſirous to pay off the Scots, and diſmiſs them, before any Bargain was made for the Sale of the King's Perſon, which the Ignorant and the Vulgar talk much of; tho' it is certain that according to the Stipulations between the Two Houſes and the States of Scotland, for the levying and maintaining a Scots Army for the Aſſiſtance of the Parliament of England, there was near twice the Money coming to the Scots, including their Loſſes and Damages by the War, as the Parliament agreed to pay, and even of that Agreement, they had not above half paid them.

A. D. 1646.

The King at Newcaſtle.

His Majeſty from Newcaſtle wrote another Letter to the Parliament, May the 18th, expreſſing that he was not come into the Scots Army out of any Intent to divide the Kingdoms in Affection, or prolong the War; whereas it was an expreſs Article in Montreuil's Negociation, if there was any ſuch Negociation, That the Scots ſhall really and effectually join with the King of Great Britain, and employ their Armies and Forces to aſſiſt him. His Majeſty proceeds, but to ſecure his Perſon, and labour to compoſe the Differences between him and his Kingdoms, and ſettle all well, he deſir'd Religion might be firſt inſiſted on, and ſettled according to the Advice of the Aſſembly of Divines of both Kingdoms. Before we ſay more of this Letter, it is worth remarking, that the pretended Martyrdom of this King for the Church, is indeed nothing but a very poor and groundleſs Pretence; for here he offers to ſettle Religion as an Aſſembly of Presbyterian Divines ſhall adviſe, it being moſt notorious that England and Scotland at that Time had no other Divines in Aſſembly. As to the Militia, he was willing to concur with what had been propounded at Uxbridge. After the Nation had been involv'd in War and Waſte twenty Months longer, he would agree to what he had agreed to before: For Ireland, he will do what he can to ſatisfy Deſires of that Kind. How tenderly this is touch'd! The Deſires of that Kind were to purſue the Iriſh Maſſacrers with Slaughter and Deſtruction, till the innocent Blood of two or three hundred thouſand Proteſtants was reveng'd, and the Proteſtant Religion and Intereſt in that Kingdom ſufficiently eſtabliſh'd and ſecur'd. He will disband and diſmantle his Armies and Towns, if he has any, ſhould have been added, and conſent to the Payment of the Debts of the Nation, which the Parliament were reſolv'd to ſee paid, whether he conſented or not. Such Propoſitions were but Waſte of Time and Paper. The Parliament have the Power, and conſequently will have the Terms. He knew what they were, and the endeavouring to evade them was equally vain and dangerous.

City Remonſtrance for Perſecution.

The Royaliſts, playing their laſt Cards, were in the mean while very induſtrious in fomenting Differences in the Parliament, Army, and City; and they were all blind enough not to ſee it and guard againſt it. Ambition, Avarice, Pique, Reſentment, Revenge, and falſe Zeal began to operate, now their Work with the King was pretty well over: The Cavaliers durſt not ſpeak out, but under various Pretexts increas'd the Miſunderſtandings between all of them. The Lord-Mayor Sir John Gayer, the Aldermen and Common-Council of London, preſented a Remonſtrance to both Houſes of Parliament, the Twenty-ſixth of May, deſiring a ſtrict Courſe for ſuppreſſing all private and ſeparate Congre-

Congregations; that all Anabaptiſts, Heretricks, &c. as not conform'd to the publick Diſcipline, may be declar'd and proceeded againſt. Theſe worſhipful Perſons were themſelves perſecuted five or ſix Years ago; and now having the Power, as they thought, in their Hands, are themſelves very eager for Perſecution. This ought to have been a Leſſon to their Brethren in our own Days, who could not but have heard how many thouſand Reverend Divines had been ruin'd for not ſubmitting to the Tyranny of Subſcription after the Reſtoration, and yet they themſelves a few Years ſince were very zealous to compel Miniſters to ſubſcribe. The Citizens proceed, That all be requir'd to obey the Government ſettled, or to be ſettled; That none diſaffected to the Presbyterian Government be imploy'd in any Place of Publick Truſt. If I had learnt Echard's Partiality by reading him, I would have ſunk this Remonſtrance, it highly reflecting on a Body of Men whom I reſpect; but I am ſenſible this narrow Spirit is what they are now aſham'd of, and this will be no Example to them for the future. It was levell'd directly againſt the Army, where Cromwel, Ireton, Lambert, Harriſon, and almoſt all the chief Officers, were diſaffected to the Presbytery; and finding themſelves ſtruck at, began to think of ſecuring and maintaining themſelves. Again, That the Propoſitions of Peace may be haſtned. This Article was very Cavalier. By haſtning the Peace was always underſtood the receiving the King. Again, That the Privilege of Parliament may be ſo qualify'd, that Men may recover their Debts; which was a tacit Reproach to the Houſe of Commons, as if the Members of it defrauded their Creditors by that Privilege. That the Publick Revenues may be employ'd to publick Uſe, and the City Taxes abated; another Reproach that the Members of Parliament miſapply'd the Money that was rais'd for the Service of the Common Wealth. That the Compoſitions of Delinquents may be employ'd to pay the Debts owing the City; That the Committee of Haberdaſhers Hall may be diſſolv'd: A kind of Committee for Taxes, who were impower'd to compound with Delinquents, to proſecute ſuch as refus'd or delay'd to pay the Contributions requir'd by Ordinances. This was a very popular Article among the Royaliſts and Diſaffected, Haberdaſhers Hall being as terrible to them as the High Commiſſion Court was to the Puritans. However, in the Cloſe of their Remonſtrance they ſoften the Matter, and ſay, They would not have it interpreted to intrench upon the Privilege of Parliament, whom they are ready to ſerve; whereas they intrench'd upon their Government from the Beginning to the End of their Remonſtrance, and directed them what they ſhould do. The Houſe of Commons expreſs'd great Offence at it, and, according to Whitlocke, "many ſober Men were unſatisfy'd with this "Action of the City, looking upon it as wholly "a Deſign of the Presbyterian Party; but the "Houſe of Lords acknowledg'd the great Ser-"vice and Merit of the City, and gave them "Thanks for this Teſtimony of their Duty and "good Affections." Tho' the Royaliſts were no further the better for this Miſunderſtanding between the Houſe of Commons and the City, than that they were both the worſe for it, yet they were wonderfully elated at it, and by their bold Behaviour ſo incens'd the Parliament and Army, that they compleated their own and their Maſter's Ruin.

The King's laſt Propoſitions were approv'd of by many of the Houſe of Commons, and in Truth they were a good Foundation for a Treaty, had the Point of Security been a little better explain'd, and had not the Weakneſs and Raſhneſs of the Royaliſts exaſperated the major Part of the Parliament and Army, and put Thoughts into their Heads of which they had not till then been ſuſceptible. For nothing can be more obvious, than that a little more Moderation, Diſcretion, Forbearance, and Compliance in the King and the King's Followers, would have prevented the tragical Cataſtrophe of the Civil War.

A Counter Remonſtrance.

The above-cited Remonſtrance produc'd a counter one, intituled, A Petition from many Thouſands of London, ſetting forth the Power of Parliaments, and the Labour and Succeſſes of the preſent Parliament, which cauſe the more Oppoſition againſt them, and praying them to proceed in managing the Affairs of the Kingdom according to their own beſt Wiſdoms, and the Truſt repoſed in them, and to puniſh Delinquents and procure Peace. That they would never ſuffer the free-born People of England to be inſlav'd, upon what Pretence ſoever, nor any other to ſhare with the Parliament, or preſcribe to them in the Government or Power of this Nation, and the Petitioners will ſtand by them with their Lives and Fortunes. This Petition was counter to the former from the City, and now, ſays Whitlocke, the Deſigns were to make Diviſions, Arms beginning to fail. The Royaliſts were ſoon detected in their Politicks, which ſeldom had any Depth in them. The Parliamentarians ſaw as plainly as the Quarter of the Wind, whence came the Differences and Diviſions that were riſing among them like ſo many Clouds; but the Variety of particular Intereſts to be reconcil'd before the general one could be ſecur'd, render'd it impoſſible to hinder the Effects which always attend Diſcord, Confuſion, and Overthrow. Theſe Petitioners were thank'd by the Houſe of Commons, as the Remonſtrancers had been thank'd by the Houſe of Lords; and is it not great Pity that their Lorpſhips ſhould not have more conſider'd their own Dignity and Safety, than to give into Deſigns which led ſo directly to their Ruin? For what could be more natural than to foreſee that the Party in the Houſe which were againſt the Remonſtrancers would be ſupported by the Army; That all Oppoſition againſt them would be in vain; and that the only Way to a ſafe and laſting Peace, was to unite heartily in the moſt proper Methods of procuring it.

In all Propoſitions of Peace the Affair of the Church was the firſt Article, but that of the Militia the moſt important; for can there be in Reaſon and Argument greater Nonſenſe and Contradiction, than that the King, who had utterly extirpated Epiſcopacy in Scotland, ſhould ſacrifice his Life for it in England, where alſo we ſhall find, when it is too late, that he conſents to aboliſh it? The Militia was a Conceſſion which ſecur'd the People's Liberty againſt future Invaſions, and without the Militia the Parliament could not ſecure their Presbytery againſt the Zeal and Power of the King, who being reſolv'd to have the Power ſtill in him to govern after the Civil War as he had done before, was obſtinate in the Point of the Militia, but ſtruck at the Church firſt, it being the firſt Article.

Sir William Davenant ſent to the Queen for Presbytery.

The Earl of Clarendon informs us, that Sir William Davenant, whoſe Poetry and Politicks were much of a Piece, was ſent to the Queen to prevail with the King to give up the Church, as he terms it, and then explains what is to be underſtood by it, the Lands belonging to Cathedrals. He adds, That to ſet up Presbytery was profane and ſacrilegious, and to gratify the Luſt and Impiety of the Scots, which the Marquis

A. D. 1646. quis de Bellievre, the Miniſter of France, very much preſs'd the King to do; but he was too conſcientious, ſays the Earl, for if he had given up the Church, he muſt have given up the Earl, with the other Delinquents, and that would have been as profane and ſacrilegious as the other, conſidering how his Lordſhip very modeſtly commends himſelf, where he makes the King ſay of him, He is an honeſt Man, and will never deſert me nor the Church.

I have often obſerv'd upon what rotten Foundations the Royaliſts built their magnificent Fabricks, and now the Earl tells us, IF the Prince of Wales had ſtaid in Cornwall, his Reſidence might have been ſecure: Scilly and Pendennis might always be reliev'd by Sea, where the Parliament were Maſters, and Oxford, Worceſter, Wallingford, and Ludlow, were not taken, which upon any Diviſions among them might have turn'd the Scale; that is, thoſe Garriſons, which were all impatient to ſurrender, might have beaten Sir Thomas Fairfax's victorious Army. If there had been better Politicks in any one Page of his Lordſhip's Hiſtory, this ſhould have been ſpar'd for the Sake of it.

The King and the Scots.

His Majeſty continuing reſolv'd not to yield to the Parliament's Propoſitions, the Scots told him by their Lord Chancellor Lowdon, "That the "Parliament, after many bloody Battles, had "got into their Hands the ſtrong Holds and "Forts of the Kingdom; That they had his "Revenues, Exciſe, Aſſeſſments, Sequeſtrations, "and Power to raiſe all the Men and Money of "the Kingdom; That they had gain'd Victory "over all, and had a ſtrong Army to maintain "it, ſo that they might do what they would "with Church and State; and without he "granted their Propoſitions, the Kingdom and "his People could not be in Safety; That if he "refus'd his Aſſent, he would loſe all his "Friends in Parliament, loſe the City, and loſe "the Country; and if he left England, he "would not be admitted to come to reign in "Scotland, which had been declar'd by the "General Aſſembly of the Kirk." The King, according to the Lord Clarendon, bad them proceed their own Way, and tho' they had all forſaken him, God had not. Pagan Hiſtory has nothing like it. To ſay it is Noonday at Midnight is Modeſty to it; for is there the leaſt Appearance that can be, that Arbitrary Power, Oppreſſion, Perſecution, Superſtition, are a Cauſe that God will not forſake. But the Argument was as good as the Prophecy, and it is very probable his Majeſty never ſaid it. The Parliament had voted, That the King, in going to the Scots Army, intended to prolong the War, and to make a Difference between the Two Kingdoms. They alſo voted, June the 9th, That this Kingdom hath no more Need of the Scots Army, and that the Scots Commiſſioners ſhould be deſired to take Orders that their Army might be withdrawn out of this Kingdom. Upon which the Scots Commiſſioners deliver'd a Paper, containing in Subſtance, "That they deſire to depart, "and will deliver up ſuch Towns and Caſtles "as they have: They deſire to have Conſide- "ration for their Loſſes and Hazards, Charges "and Damages, Part in preſent Money, and Se- "curity for the reſt; and his Majeſty not ha- "ving conſented to the Propoſitions, that a Way "may be thought upon, by joint Advice, for "the Security of both Kingdoms.

Votes concerning the Scots.

The Way which the Parliament of England thought of, was reduc'd to Nineteen Propoſitions.

1. "To take away all Oaths and Proclama- "tions againſt the Parliament and their Ac- "tions.
2. "To ſign the Covenant, and an Act for "the general taking of it.
3. "To paſs an Act to aboliſh Biſhops, &c.

A. D. 1646. The 19 Propoſitions at Newcaſtle.

Theſe Particulars to be paſs'd by ſeveral Acts of Parliament.

The Commiſſioners appointed to attend the King with theſe Propoſitions, were for the Lords, the Earls of Pembroke and Suffolk; for the Commons, Sir John Hippeſley, Sir Walter Earl, Mr. Robinſon, and Mr. Goodwin, who arriv'd at Newcaſtle the 25th of July, and were well receiv'd by his Majeſty, as was alſo Duke Hamilton; but, ſays the judicious Echard, at the very Moment he kiſs'd the King's Hand, there happen'd a prodigious Storm of Thunder and Lightning, without any preceding Appearance, in the Midſt of a fair Day. What then! What did this preſage! His Blazing Star in Libra prognoſticated that Queen Anne would die of a Dropſy, which had long afflicted her: But what doth this Thunder and Lightning prognoſticate! Duke Hamilton loſt his Head for the King, whoſe Hand he kiſs'd. The Sillineſs of this Remark is without Example. When the Commiſſioners deliver'd the Propoſitions to his Majeſty, the Earl of Pembroke told him, He knew well what a Spokeſman he was, therefore he deſir'd Mr. Goodwin might ſpeak for him. The King preſently ask'd, If they had any Power to treat. They anſwer'd, No. Then ſaid he,

A. D. 1646.

Saving the Honour of the Buſineſs, an honeſt Trumpeter might have done as much. I hope you expect not a preſent Anſwer to this high Concernment. The Air is always the ſame; his Majeſty had been often told, that the Parliament would proceed by Bills, and not a Treaty. Sir Thomas Fairfax, in the Letter already mention'd, gives the Reaſon for it, the Inſincerity of former Treaties; yet the Parliament's Commiſſioners could get no other Anſwer, than an Offer for a Perſonal Treaty at London, which had been ſo often rejected.

Of the ſame Authority with Eikon Baſilike, is what the Archdeacon inſerts of the King's Diſpute with Mr. Henderſon, the Scots Presbyterian Miniſter, who, according to the Earl of Clarendon, dy'd of Grief, and Heart-broken, for his having taken the Covenant and acting againſt Epiſcopacy. Sanderſon, who was as zealous a Churchman as the Earl, aſſures us, He fell into a Diſtemper at Newcaſtle, and therefore was ſent home to Scotland, where he dy'd; and Whitlocke, That he dy'd of Grief, becauſe he could not perſwade the King to ſign the Propoſitions. 'Tis very hard that one can't have one Word of Truth from them, Echard again, IF his Majeſty's Army had been as ſtrong as his Arguments, he had been every Way invincible. Henderſon's Arguments were Texts of Scripture, the King's the Authority of the Fathers, which, as we are told by Mr. Archdeacon, triumph'd over the Word of God.

When the Parliament's Commiſſioners came to Newcaſtle, his Majeſty was engag'd with the famous Mr. Henderſon; and in Whitlocke we read of another ſort of Engagement about the ſame Time, and that was with the Iriſh REBELS, Sir Robert King, one of the Parliament's Commiſſioners in Ireland, bringing thence the Marquis of Ormond's Treaty of Peace with thoſe Butchers, which however had not the intended Effect, for the Pope's Nuncio and the moſt bigotted of the REBELS, diſclaim'd the Treaty made by their Commiſſioners, and proſecuted the War to their Deſtruction. Whitlocke informs us, that the Commiſſioners of both Kingdoms begg'd the King on their Knees to ſign the Propoſitions, but he was inflexible, of which more hereafter.

Ireland.

We have ſeen already, that the Earl of Clarendon was of Opinion, that IF Pendennis Caſtle, Ragland Caſtle, Wallingford, Ludlow, &c. had not ſurrender'd ſo ſoon, their ſtanding out might have turn'd the Scale, after every other City, Town and Caſtle in England were reduc'd; and both the Earl and the Archdeacon make it a wonderful Condeſcenſion in his Majeſty to ſend Warrants to Sir Thomas Glemham Governor of Oxford, Sir Thomas Tilſley Governor of Worceſter, Col. Waſhington Governor of Banbury, Col. Blague Governor of Wallingford, and all other Governors of Cities, Towns, Caſtles, and Forts in England and Wales, to quit the Places, and disband their Forces, neither of which could they have maintain'd much longer. Sir Thomas Fairfax came before Oxford the 1ſt of May, and having ſettled the ſeveral Quarters of the Army in order for an Attack, he ſent a Summons to Sir Thomas Glemham the Governor the 11th of May, who deſir'd a ſafe Conduct for Sir John Monſon and Mr. Philip Warwick, the renown'd Memoir Writer, to confer with him, or whom he pleas'd to appoint, who were Col. Rainsborough, Col. Harley, and Col. Lambert. All that Monſon and Warwick propos'd, was to ſend to the King to know his Pleaſure about the Surrender of that chief City of his Reſidence, this being ſome Weeks before the Warrant for the general Surrender arriv'd at Oxford or elſewhere, that Propoſal being only to delay Time. Sir Thomas Fairfax's Commiſſioners repreſented to Sir Thomas Glemham's the Vanity of ſuch a Delay, and the Advantage of treating before the Attack was begun. But they having no Power to treat, a Trumpet was ſent back with them for a poſitive Anſwer; and in the mean Time the Line went forward, and Order was given for drawing up of the Batteries. Upon which on the 14th of May the Governor made known his Deſire to treat, which was agreed to, and Mr. Crook's Houſe at Marſton appointed to be the Place.

The Commiſſioners named on both Sides were,

For the King.

Sir John Monſon, Sir John Heydon, Sir George Bynion, Sir Thomas Gardiner, Sir Richard Willis, Sir Stephen Hawkins, Col. Goſnold, Col. Tyllier, Dr. Zouch, Thomas Chriſty, Eſq; Mr. John Dutton, Mr. Jeffery Palmer, Capt. Robert Mead, M. A. Mr. Philip Warwick.

For the Parliament.

Lieutenant General Hammond, Col. Ireton, Col. Lambert, Col. Rich, Col. Harley, Col. Watſon, Major Desborough, Major Harriſon, Mr. Herbert, Mr. Waller.

The General excepted againſt Sir George Bynion, as being exempted from Pardon by the Parliament's Propoſitions; and it is obſervable that this Perſon had been only an ordinary Silkman in Cheapſide, but ſuch another buſy Fellow as Jones the Gun Man in Sacheverell's Time. Being oblig'd to leave the City of London, he was well receiv'd by the Court at Oxford, made not only a Knight, but a Politician, and advanc'd from a Counter to a Court. The Parliament were oblig'd to content themſelves with the Quality of their People as they found it; and the Earl of Clarendon does not a little value his Cauſe on the Dignity of thoſe who eſpous'd it. The Parliament indeed could make nothing but Soldiers, but the King made Knights and Lords too, tho' the Parliament would not own them, as well in the War Time as out of it. Mr. Herbert, one of the Commiſſioners for the Parliament, is the ſame who was afterwards Sir Thomas Herbert, who with Mr. Harrington waited on the King as Groom of his Bed-Chamber from his Confinement at Holdenby to his Death. The Treaty for the Surrender of Oxford commenc'd before his Majeſty arriv'd at Newcaſtle, and was almoſt concluded before Sir Thomas Glemham, the Governor, could know his Majeſty's Pleaſure in it. It ſpun out to ſuch a Length of Time, about five Weeks, on Account of the General's ſending the Articles to London to be conſider'd, and confirm'd by the Parliament.

While the Treaty laſted, Radcot Houſe was ſurrender'd by Colonel Palmer to Colonel Saunderſon, and Farringdon by Sir George Liſle and Sir William Coventry, to Sir Robert Pye, on Condition to have the Benefit of the Oxford Articles, which were very beneficial to the Royaliſts. The City had been fortify'd with the utmoſt Art and Induſtry, and the Parliament were not willing their Army ſhould be detain'd by the Siege while the Scots were in the North, and had the King's Perſon with them. Little Incidents very often give great Turns to the Fortune of States; and wiſe Stateſmen will leave as little as poſſible in her Power. The Parliament Army were ſure enough of doing the Work they Radcot House ſurrender'd, and Farringdon.

A. D. 1646. they were upon; but the doing it without Bloodſhed was thought moſt eligible, and therefore the Commiſſioners on their Part were the more generous in their Terms, which being concluded, the City was ſurrender'd on Midſummer Day. The Articles were ſign'd by the General on one Part, and by Sir Richard Lane, the King's Lord Keeper, Francis Lord Cottington, the King's Lord Treaſurer, William Marquis of Hertford, Edward Earl of Dorſet, Thomas Earl of Southampton, Francis Earl of Chicheſter, Francis Lord Seymour, Sir Thomas Glemham, and Sir Edward Nicholas on the other. On Wedneſday, June the 24th, there march'd out Eaſtward 3000 Soldiers in a Body, 500 march'd Northward, and a little before and after them 500 more moſtly Horſemen and private Perſons engag'd in the War. On the Monday before Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice, with their Attendants, departed. The Duke of York was to remain till he could more decently be remov'd to London. Whitlocke obſerves that no Injury nor Affront was offer'd by the Parliament's Soldiers to thoſe of the Garriſon, but all the Articles were punctually perform'd. There went forth ſeveral Iriſh Men and Iriſh Women, and after the Governor was march'd away, the Keys of the City were preſented to the General, who order'd three Regiments of Foot to enter the Town, between whom and the Citizens was courteous Language, not a reproachful or uncivil Word by any of the Army to them, nor the leaſt Diſorder. There was little Proviſion found in the Town, either for Man or Horſe, which ſhews that the Garriſon could not have held out much longer. The Conditions, ſays Sanderſon, upon which Echard builds much of his ſtately Edifice, were but ſlenderly perform'd. "Surely, ſays Whitlocke, no Action or Agree-"ment, either of War or Peace was ever more "punctually obſerv'd than was this of Oxford "Articles," which were firſt broken on the King's Side by Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice, in coming ſo near London as Oatlands, upon which the Parliament ſent an expreſs Order to them to tranſport themſelves beyond Sea in 10 Days. The Two Princes return'd a very reſpectful Anſwer, That they were ſorry they had given the Parliament any Offence; had no Intention to do it, and would obey their Order: Then had the Prince Elector leave to go to ſee them; and if you will believe Echard or Sanderſon, they receiv'd his Viſit with Scorn. They had been juſt mortify'd with this Rebuke from the Parliament, and juſt order'd to be gone out of the Kingdom. They muſt needs be in a very ſcornful Humour; and their elder Brother the Prince Elector, knew little of it, or he would not have made a Journey on purpoſe to ſee them, and to be ſo ſcornfully treated by them.

Notwithſtanding the mutual Civilities between the Parliament's Soldiers and the Citizens of Oxford, as reported by Whitlocke, A. Wood repreſents the Place as thrown into the utmoſt Diſtraction by the Miniſters in General Fairfax's Army, who preach'd raſcally Doctrine, one of them a diabolical Villain; There was nothing but Confuſion and Darkneſs: Hell was broke looſe, and the Orthodox overrun by Blaſphemers. I am not at all ſurpriz'd to meet with this Way of Thinking and Speaking in an Oxford Writer. I know what is the Eloquence, Elegance, Politeneſs and Temper of a College Spirit, ſuch as A. Wood's, reckon'd an Ornament to this Seat of the Muſes; and though the Earl of Clarendon's and Archdeacon Echard's Language is ſomewhat more purify'd, yet the Sentiments in their Hiſtories agree exactly with thoſe of A. Wood the Oxonian.

Faſt Oxon. p. 58.

In the City were left the Sword of State, the Great Seal, the Privy Seal, the Chancery, the King's-Bench, the Exchequer Seals, which being carry'd to London were all broken by a Blackſmith, in the Preſence of the Two Houſes, who were extraordinarily aſſembled on Purpoſe to aſſiſt at that Ceremony, Auguſt the 11th.

A. D. 1646.

About the Time of Faifax's coming before Oxford, Archbiſhop Williams betook himſelf to his ſtrong Houſe of Puryn, near Conway in North Wales, and put a Garriſon into it, declaring for the Parliament. Whatever was the Occaſion of his Diſguſt, whether it was his being ſuſpected by the King, or reſenting the large Contributions that were rais'd by the Royaliſts in his Precincts; it is moſt certain he apply'd himſelf to Major General Mitton for Aſſiſtance againſt the Lord Byron. We are told by Whitlocke, "He perſwaded the Country againſt pay-"ing Contribution to the King; and the Lord "Byron hearing of his Revolt ſent out a Party "from Conway, to beſiege him; but the Arch-"biſhop ſending to Major General Mitton for "Aſſiſtance, the latter drew out a Party to in-"terpoſe, and wrote to the Parliament how "ready the Archbiſhop was to promote their "Affairs, particularly for reducing the Caſtle of "Conway, in which, and in all other Matters, "he was very active for them." After we have read this in ſuch authentick Memoirs as Whitlocke's, how muſt one be diverted with the Pains taken by Biſhop Hacket, Mr. Ambroſe Philips, Harmar, and others, to prove the Archbiſhop never took Arms for the Parliament. The Earl of Clarendon could not have minc'd the Matter better than a Welſh Author; he only garriſon'd his own Houſe, and diſcountenanc'd ſome ſtragling Cavaliers. Indeed the Uſage he had met with was enough to provoke a more moderate Man than the Archbiſhop of York; for in the Beginning of the War he had fortify'd his Caſtle of Aberconway for the King, in which A. Wood and others, tell us, He ſpar'd not any Coſt or Labour to make it tenable; but then his Majeſty and Privy Council ſuſpecting he would not be faithful to him, they put a Commander therein, Sir John Owen, and in a Manner, thruſt the Archbiſhop out of his own Houſe, which is not the only Inſtance of the prodigious Effects of the Oxford Counſels. Whereupon taking theſe Matters in high Diſdain, he retir'd to his Houſe at Puryn, not far from Aberconway, and afterwards obtain'd ſome Forces from a Parliament Colonel, with which he ſet upon Aberconway Caſtle, took it, and kept Poſſeſſion of it to his dying Day; and he was for ſo doing call'd Perfidious Prelate, Apoſtate Archbiſhop, Shame of the Clergy, &c. by the King's Friends, whom we have had too much occaſion to blame for being foul mouth'd, eſpecially the Academicks. Sanderſon ſays he was bold, malepert, petulant, impudent. One would think their writing and reading ſo much courtly Hiſtory, their being converſant with ſuch well bred Perſons, ſhould have taught them a little more Manners; but the Truth is, their Breeding was no better than their Bravery, and they were always in too great a Rage to obſerve Decorum.

It is hardly worth while, after ſo many illuſtrious Actions, to beſtow Pains on ſmall Sieges and Skirmiſhes, which remain unrelated. Banbury, after a long Siege, was ſurrender'd by Sir William Compton to Colonel Whalley, and ſoon after Colonel Waſhington deliver'd up the City of Worceſter to Colonel Rainsborough; but it was not in Obedience to the King's Order, for for that was publiſh'd ſix Weeks before. On the 22d of July, Wallingford Caſtle was ſurrender'd by Colonel Blague, to the General, whoſe Forces in Cornwall reduc'd Pendennis Caſtle, valiantly defended by John Arundel of Trerice, Eſq; but not as valiantly attack'd by Colonel Forteſcue, at the Cloſe of the Siege, there being no likelihood of that Garriſon's receiving any Relief, Captain Batten blocking them up by Sea. Colonel Forteſcue's Patience was exercis'd to prevent the Shedding of more Blood, a Conſideration which had very little Weight with the Royaliſts; however it did at laſt work upon Arundel, the Governor of Pendennis, and he deſir'd a Treaty, which was granted, and Commiſſioners nam'd.

Not far off it is the Mount which Sir William Baſſet the Governor ſurrender'd to Colonel Hammond, who found there Duke Hamilton, and gave him a Paſs for London, where that Duke waited at the Door of the Houſe of Commons, and thank'd the Members for his Liberty. Salcombe Fort had before been deliver'd up to Colonel Welden, by Colonel Forteſcue, a Cavalier, and Borſtal Houſe by Sir William Compton, to the General, who had before given it a ſhort Viſit in his March to Naſeby, and becauſe he would not be interrupted in his Purſuit of the King, and did not at that Time continue the Siege, Echard and all their Hiſtorians cry out, He was beaten off from Borſtal.

All that remains to be reduc'd, is Ragland Caſtle, except three or four petty Garriſons in North Wales, which were not minded, Major General Mitton being order'd to ſtarve them rather than hazard his own Men about them. The old Marquis of Worceſter ſtood out ſtill at Ragland, againſt Colonel Morgan, who commanded the Blockade there. At laſt General Fairfax went thither in Perſon from Bath, where he had been for his Health; and after ſeveral Letters had paſt between him and the Marquis, the latter ſurrender'd his Caſtle, Auguſt the 19th, in great Glory, that it was the laſt Place which held out for the King, though he had ſomething elſe to boaſt of, as that he had ſpent in Money, and ſuffer'd in Loſſes and Damages 300000 Pounds in the Cauſe of the Star Chamber Court, High Commiſſion Court, Book of Sports, Ship Money, &c. which his Poſterity no Doubt will always take more Pride in telling than we do. General Fairfax ſent to Mitton, he would ſend him more Men if he wanted them; but the latter reply'd there was no Need of them, as was apparent in the Sequel; for within a few Days the King had not a Man in Arms for him in any Part of England or Wales. The Parliament ſent Orders to the General to disband Major General Maſſey's Brigade at the Devizes, which he did, and in eight Days diſbanded 2500 Horſe. The Major General himſelf and Colonel Cooke aſſiſting him; but I cannot believe what a certain Roundheaded Writer ſays, That divers of the Disbanded came from very remote Countries, and had Paſſes, ſome for Egypt, ſome for Meſopotamia, ſome for Ethiopia: I cannot, I ſay, believe that the Ethiopians, Meſopotamians and Egyptians came to fight for the Parliament; but I do verily believe that Iriſh and French Papiſts came to fight for the King.

Maj. Gen. Maſſey's Brigade disbanded.

The Civil War being thus ended in four Years Time, from the King's Beginning it, by ſetting up his Standard at Nottingham the 22d of Auguſt, 1642. to General Fairfax's Ending it by taking Ragland Caſtle, Auguſt the 19th, 1646, the General as ſoon as he was recover'd of a ſore Fit of the Stone, went to London: He was met ſome Miles off by the Militia of the City, and many Thouſands of Citizens, and the next Day, November the 12th, both Houſes of Parliament congratulated him; the Lords by their Speaker, the Earl of Mancheſter, the Commons by their Speaker, William Lenthall, Eſq; which was done with very great Ceremony.

End of the Civil War.

Gen Fairfax returns to London.

The Parliament having now no Enemy in England, to divert them from the Affairs of Ireland, began to take them into ſerious Conſideration, and order'd the Forces in the Counties of Oxon, Berks and Bucks, to be diſpos'd of for that Service, being Forces that had ſerv'd in Garriſons, and not Part of Sir Thomas Fairfax's Army. If they had continu'd to complement that Army thus, there is no Doubt but they would have been obedient to them; but as ſoon as the Parliament ſhew'd a Jealouſy of their Continuance, and talk'd of disbanding them, the Soldiery let them ſee that it muſt be done with their own Conſent. Major General Langhorn's Forces lying about Milford, were thought moſt proper to be tranſported to Ireland, which was order'd accordingly; and that all Soldiers in the ſeveral Counties, who would liſt for the Service ſhould have a Month's Pay extraordinary, and thoſe that would not liſt be disbanded, which began to create ill Blood; but the Diſtemper broke not out till the grand Reſolution paſt, that 12000 Men of the Army ſhould be tranſported to Ireland; and to pleaſe the Soldiers, Major General Skippon, who was much in their Favour, was appointed to command them.

Ireland.

Parliament and Army differ.

In the mean while the Scots Arrears and Demands were under Audit, the Sum amounting to above a Million; but ſome of the Articles were ſo extravagant that they admitted much Litigation; and to ſhorten the Matter, the Scots Commiſſioners offer'd to lump it at 500000 Pounds: The Engliſh Commiſſioners offer'd 200000 Pounds down, and 200000 Pounds at ſeveral after Payments, which the Scots accepting, Major General Skippon was order'd to convoy that vaſt Sum to Newcaſtle in ready Caſh, for which there were about forty Waggons loaden with Silver. The Money was lent by the City of London to be repaid out of Delinquents Eſtates and Biſhops Lands. The Engliſh Parliament were oblig'd in Honour to pay the Scots their Arrears, and make good the Agreement with them upon their coming to their Aſſiſtance. It is not pretended there was not 200000 Pounds due to them, and they never receiv'd a Penny more. But becauſe as a Conſequence of this new Compact,

A. D. 1646. pact, much ſhort of the Debt to the Scots, the latter were to deliver up their Garriſons, and march out of the Kingdom without the King, it is very whimſically call'd a Selling of him. The Parliament appointed a new Committee of both Houſes, September the 22d, to treat with the Scots Commiſſioners about diſpoſing of the Perſon of the King, which the Scots aſſerted they had an equal Right to with the Engliſh: To which the Parliament of England made a very good Anſwer in their Arguments to juſtify this Aſſertion; We do affirm that the Kingdom of Scotland hath no Right of joint Exerciſe or Intereſt in diſpoſing of the Perſon of the King in the Kingdom of England: To which the Scots Commiſſioners made ſeven Objections, and the Parliament's Anſwers ſhew them to be weak enough. But there is an Argument in the Declaration of the Houſe of Commons, which neither the Author of the four laſt Reigns in the Compleat Hiſtory of England, nor Mr. Archdeacon Echard, nor any other Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorian, nor Cavalier Writer ſay a Word of: "The "Queſtion is, Who ſhall diſpoſe of the Perſon of "the King in England? and not after what Man- "ner his Perſon ſhall be diſpos'd; and it is to "be conſider'd in what Condition the King now "is; That he hath deſerted his Parliament and "People, enter'd into and continu'd in a bloody "and dangerous War againſt them, hath not "granted thoſe Propoſitions that were ſent "to him by both the Kingdoms of England, "and Scotland, as the Means of a ſafe and well "grounded Peace, and therefore is not for the "preſent in a Condition to exerciſe the Duties "of his Place, or be left to go or reſide where "and when he pleaſeth; and your Lordſhips, "the Scots Commiſſioners, did your ſelves de- "clare, that it was prejudicial to both King- "doms for the King to go into Scotland." The new Committee brought the Scots to a Compliance in this Matter, and it was agreed that the Scots Army ſhould march out of England, and leave the King at Newcaſtle, where Commiſſioners from the Two Houſes ſhould be ready to wait upon him, and conduct him to the Place nam'd in their Inſtructions. The King and his Party car'd not what Blood was ſhed, what Treaſure waſted, what Spoil and Devaſtation were made, if the Struggle in their Behalf could be kept on Foot. Warwick and every one about the King knew that Fairfax's Army could have driven him and the Scots Army out of Great Britain, if the Parliament of England had not wiſely conſider'd that the Scots were their Brethren, and their Intereſts, as Proteſtants, inſeparable; that the Money they were to receive was their Due, and a great deal more had the Account been ſtated with Rigour, and that it would be both unreaſonable and unjuſt to obtain that by Force which they could have by Treaty. This Treaty is what the Cavalier Hiſtorians exclaim againſt as a Bargain and Sale, which is equally abſurd and ridiculous. The Scots Convention confirm'd the Agreement made by their Commiſſioners: The Money to be paid them was due to them long before the King came to their Army: Add to this, it was not poſſible for the Scots to keep him without a War, and they were not ſo enamour'd with the Cauſe as to enter into one with the Conquerors, to eſpouſe it when it was deſperate; for the Spirits as well as Fortunes of the Royaliſts were broken: They were in Deſpair and Impotence, and in no likelihood of being able to give them ſuch Aſſiſtance as would enable them to cope with the Power of the Engliſh Parliament. If they had ſuffer'd the King to make his Eſcape, the Place he would have gone to was Ireland, and the Party he would have rely'd upon the Iriſh REBELS, whom of all Creatures upon Earth the Scots moſt abhor'd, and who indeed were the Abhorrence of every good Man who ever heard of them. There was not a Prince nor State in Europe that was diſpoſed to eſpouſe the King's Quarrel. The Parliament's Army was a Terror to all the Nations around them. France was in a Minority, Spain in Declenſion, the Dutch hated Epiſcopacy, for which the King had been fighting with his People; Denmark was weaken'd by her late Loſſes in Germany, and at the beſt in no Condition to defy the Common-wealth of England, Sweden was all along a Well-wiſher to the Parliament, out of Jealouſy of the Dane, who now and then talk'd big againſt the Swede. What would theſe fine Politicians have had the Scots do with the King? Or what would he have done with himſelf better than a Compliance with the Two Houſes, while they were in Temper to receive it? Should they have ſent him to Montroſe, that the Plunderings and Burnings might be renew'd in Scotland, as when that Lord was riding Poſt there with Victory behind him?

The Situation of foreign Affairs.

On the Eighth of December a full Agreement was made with the Scots Commiſſioners, that when 100000 Pounds came to Topcliff in Yorkſhire, the Scots ſhould give Hoſtages to quit all their Quarters, Poſſeſſions and Garriſons on the South Side of Tyne, within 10 Days, when the Hoſtages were to be re-deliver'd; and upon the Delivery of the other 100000 Pounds on the North Side of Newcaſtle, the Scots ſhould give Hoſtages to march out of England, and quit the Garriſons of Berwick and Carliſle, within 10 Days. There was another 200000 Pounds talk'd of; the Scots were to take the Parliament's Word for it; and probably they would have paid them if they had not fooliſhly invaded England, a few Months after to procure the Liberty of that Prince whom they now deliver'd up to Priſon. General Fairfax was order'd to appoint the Convoy for the Caſh, and he appointed Major General Skippon, Sir William Selby, Mr. Delaval, Sir Edward Loftus, Sir Thomas Trollop, Sir Henry Mildmay, Sir William Broughton, who were agreed upon to be Hoſtages with General Leven for Performance of the Stipulations on the Parliament's Side, who appointed the Earl of Stamford for the Lords, and Mr. Aſhurſt and Mr. Goodwin for the Commons, to go to Edinburgh, and ſatisfy the Scots Convention as to all Proceedings.

Agreement with the Scots.

About this Time the Presbyterians ſtickled much to have Church Government ſettled after the Scots Model; and the Royaliſts, who hated Presbytery, privately inſtigated them to inſiſt upon it: The latter had no other Game to play but to ſow the Seeds of Diſcord, which in Time produc'd them a plentiful Harveſt. Whitlocke obſerves this Debate about Church Government was intended to raiſe Diviſions, which were the Cauſe of all the Miſchiefs that befel the Presbyterians and their Diſſenting Brethren afterwards. Had they now ſeriouſly conſider'd that the Laudean Perſecution had created all thoſe Diſcontents which ended in the Ruin of the Perſecutors, and that the creating new Diſcontents could not fail of the like ill Conſequence; That all the Denominations could not ſupport themſelves againſt the Church, but by the Power of the Army, they would certainly have come to an Underſtanding with thoſe Miniſters, and that People whoſe Principles the Army eſpous'd, and have yielded them full Liberty of Conſcience, and the full Privilege of Engliſhmen, which it

Diviſions.

A. D. 1646. they had done without inſiſting on the Suppreſſion of Independants and Baptiſts, they might have ſupported their Superiority by their Numbers, and their Wealth, and have prevented thoſe Diviſions that naturally grew out of Jealouſy and Oppoſition. It is moſt certain they were the Aggreſſors by their ſo frequent troubling the Parliament with Petitions againſt their Proteſtant Brethren, who daily got Ground in the good Will of the Soldiery, as the Soldiery daily got Ground in their Influence on the Parliament, who appointed a Committee to conſider of a new Petition in Agitation in the City by the Presbyterian Party, which they ſaid might tend much to endanger the publick Peace. One Sir David Watkins was very forward in this Buſineſs, and reported on the Exchange, that Sir John Evelyn, a Member of Parliament ſhould ſay, Since the Citizens of London intend to come to the Houſe of Commons in a tumultuous Manner, he thought Sir Thomas Fairfax's Army ſhould be ſent for to quell them, which was falſe, and he was queſtion'd for it, as done with a Deſign to exaſperate the Citizens, and increaſe the Miſintelligence between the Parliament and them. Sir David being examin'd, ſaid he was told ſo by one Mr. Drake, and Mr. Drake upon Examination, declar'd he had it from one Dr. Aldwyn; by which one may eaſily perceive from what Quarter the growing Jealouſies and Diviſions came, and that the Cavaliers, though they had not Wit enough to do themſelves Good, had enough to do Miſchief to others. They were like Moles working under Ground, and turning up the Earth in the fineſt Borders of the Garden.

The City Petition again. The Petition was preſented by the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, Common Council, and ſeveral Citizens, December the 19th, firſt to the Lords, from whom they had Thanks; then to the Commons, who after much Debate thank'd them for their good Services in general, and appointed a Day to conſider of the Petition, which in Fact was not the true Senſe of the City, but of a Party under the Direction of the Lord Mayor, Sir John Warner, and Serjeant Glyn, the Recorder; for another Petition from a Conſiderable Party, as we are told by Whitlocke, Counter-Petition. was obtain'd againſt it, as there was againſt the Remonſtrance a few Weeks before: And thus did both Parties, blinded by Paſſion or Zeal, drive one another into the Snare which the common Enemy had prepar'd for them. The Houſe of Commons voted that the Petition was a Breach of their Privilege, and then appointed a Committee to conſider the Particulars of it, who to pleaſe the Petitioners, agreed that no Miniſter ſhould preach unleſs he was regularly ordain'd by the Presbytery, which farther diſguſted the Independants, and made them throw themſelves intirely upon the Army for Protection.

King's Perſon. In the Diſpoſal of the King's Perſon, there was a Diſagreement between the Lords and Commons, and the like Diſagreement happen'd too often when they had no Body to quarrel with but themſelves. The Lords voted that the King ſhould come to Newmarket, the Commons that he ſhould come to Holmby Houſe in Northamptonſhire, and the Lords at laſt agreed to it. Things being ſo ripe for Execution, the Scots Commiſſioners in London ſent to the Parliament to acquaint them with their ſpeedy going home to Scotland, and deſir'd to know what farther Service they had to command them to the Parliament of Scotland. Both Houſes agreed Scots Commiſſioners depart. that Thanks ſhould be given the Scots Commiſſioners for all their Pains and good Services, and Notice taken of their laſt Reſpect to them. The Scots talk'd very ſturdily, ſays the Earl of Clarendon, as appears by theſe Votes of their Parliament at Edinburgh. A. D. 1646.

Scots Votes againſt the King.

1. That Scotland ſhall be govern'd as it hath been for the five laſt Years, all Means being uſed that the King may take the Covenant, and paſs the Propoſitions.

2. That the taking the Covenant and paſſing the Propoſitions doth not give Warrant to aſſiſt him againſt England.

3. That upon bare taking the Covenant the Scots may not receive him.

4. That the Clauſe in the Covenant for Defence of the King's Perſon, is to be underſtood in Defence and Safety of the Kingdom.

5. That the King ſhall not exerciſe any Power in Scotland till he hath granted the Propoſitions concerning Religion and the Covenant, and given a ſatisfactory Anſwer to both Kingdoms, in the reſt of the Propoſitions preſented him at Newcaſtle.

6. That if his Majeſty refuſe to paſs thoſe Propoſitions, he ſhall be diſpoſed of according to the Covenant, &c.

How ſturdily they talk in Behalf of the King? Theſe Votes were paſt by the Lords and Commons of Scotland; yet Echard's Biſhop Guthry affirms, there were a hundred to one againſt them in the Parliament, and out of it. I gueſt at the Authority of this Guthry before I came to this ſingular Evidence of it; and he has no better Buttrices for his ſuperb Edifice. I ſuppoſe it is after him or ſome other ſuch Hiſtorian that he tells us how the 200000 Pounds was diſpoſed of, 30000 Pounds to the Marquis of Argyle, 15000 Pounds to ſome Body elſe, for Argyle's ſake, Sir Archibald Johnſtone 3000 Pounds, one round O more had made it Thirty, and been every whit as true. Duke Hamilton 30000 Pounds: Here's near half the Money gone to three or four Perſons; ſeveral of the Kirk Miniſters were inrich'd. How honeſt and ingenuous is this ſame Biſhop Guthry? How judicious the Archdeacon, to write after him, what appears at Sight to be miſerable Fable.

We ſhall in the Beginning of the next Year ſee how the Perſon of the King is diſpos'd of, and muſt now wait upon the Prince of Wales, and look a little into the Affairs of Ireland and Scotland.

The Prince of Wales. We have mention'd his Royal Highneſs's keeping his Court at Briſtol and Bridgwater; from whence he remov'd to Exeter with his Council, the Earl of Berkſhire, the Lord Wentworth, the Lord Colepepyr, and Sir Edward Hyde, whoſe Names are ſufficient to give every good Engliſhman a Concern for his being in their Hands. Not one of them ſince Colepepyr's Apoſtacy, having any Diſpoſitions to inſtil other Principles into him than thoſe that had brought his Father into ſuch a deſperate Condition, and will bring himſelf into almoſt as bad a one, when it is his Turn to reign. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, who is his own Hiſtorian, gives himſelf the moſt advantagious Poſition in his Picture; and if there is any Defect in Polilicks, as humane Wiſdom cannot be always perfect, it does not come from Sir Edward Hyde, though the Truth is, they had not had a great deal of Buſineſs on their Hands, and the moſt they had was to keep Matters quiet among themſelves. The Character the Lord Clarendon gives of Sir Richard Greenvile, is monſtrous, not in the Painting but in the Figure; and what elſe could one expect from a Perſon, who having receiv'd a great Sum of Money of the Parliament to raiſe Men, ran away with it, and took a Commiſſion from the King? Country

A. D. 1646. Country Attorney would not have deſerv'd much Notice, if he had had a better Plea for it than that he had been concern'd in a Suit againſt him: His throwing the Mayor of Leſtwithiel into the common Goal, for Fiſhing in a River which was not his own: His impriſoning great Numbers for not grinding at his Mill: His impoſing Fines of 2, 3, 4, and 500 Pounds on Men, under Pretence of Diſaffection: His ſending the Mayor of St. Ives to the common Jail for not paying him Fifty Pounds when he did not owe him a Farthing, and the Mayor's Son to Jail for petitioning in Behalf of his Father, are ſome of the Piccadillo's he was guilty of. His Rapine and Cruelty about Taunton are as infamous as Goring's, and theſe two Heroes are the Generals in the Weſt, who ſerve under his Royal Highneſs, who being preſs'd by Sir Thomas Fairfax's March towards Cornwall, was advis'd to ſend a Letter to that General for a Paſs for the Lords Colepepyr and Hopton, to go to the King about a Peace; which Letter and the General's Anſwer have been mention'd in the preceding Pages. But as the General advis'd the Prince to have ſuch Counſellors as the Parliament ſhould approve, and as Sir Edward Hyde would then infallibly have loſt his Seat at his Royal Highneſs's Council Table, one may be ſure he gave him no Counſel of that kind. Sir Thomas Fairfax advancing into Cornwall, the Prince paſs'd over to Scilly, from thence to Jerſey, and thence to France, where, as the Earl of Clarendon repreſents it, he was receiv'd in a manner that ſhew'd he was not welcome, and had little to expect from the Friendſhip of that Court. The ſame Hiſtorian gives us ſeveral original Letters from the King to the Prince, written in the Stile of Eikon Baſilike, and as if they had been ſo written on purpoſe to be printed, as that of the 22d of March, 1645. from Oxford: I command you upon my Bleſſing to be conſtant to your Religion, neither hearkening to Roman Superſtitions, nor the ſeditious and ſchiſmatical Doctrines of the Presbyterians and Independents. Schiſm and Sedition are taken out of the Cavalier Lexicon, and mean Liberty and the Reform'd Religion; for know that a perſecuted Church is not thereby the leſs pure, tho' leſs fortunate. Moſt certainly, if it was the leſs pure by Perſecution, the Proteſtants in France and other foreign Countries, the Church of Scotland, and their Brethren in England, would have been moſt abominably defil'd in this King's Reign, and his Son's, to whom he writes, For all other Things, I command you to be totally directed by your Mother, whoſe Directions had contributed more than any thing elſe to his own Misfortunes.

Earl of Eſſex's Death. Before we leave England, it will be convenient to remember a few other Occurrences, and none more worthy of Remembrance than the Death of the Earl of Eſſex, who dy'd the 14th of September at Eſſex Houſe, in a melancholy diſcontented Manner, ſays the Archdeacon, as falſly as he ever ſaid any thing elſe; for General Ludlow aſſures us, his very Death was occaſion'd by his too great Appetite after Sport. "The Earl of Eſſex having over-heated himſelf "in the Chace of a Stag in Windſor Foreſt, de- "parted this Life. His Death was a great Loſs "to thoſe of his Party, the Presbyterian, who, "to keep up their Spirits and Credit, procur'd "his Funeral to be celebrated with great Mag- "nificence, at the publick Charge, 5000 Pounds, "the Lords and Commons, with a great Num- "ber of Officers, accompanying him to the "Grave;" which the Marquis of Hertford, his Brother-in-law, offer'd to do, as did others who had born Arms againſt the Parliament: But as it was thought to be an Artifice to wheedle the Presbyterians, the Houſe order'd that none ſuch ſhould go with the Earl's Corpſe at his Funeral. Upon News of his Death, both Houſes in Compliment adjourn'd to the next Day. His Effigies was ſet up in Weſtminſter Abbey; and as the Party he oppoſed have never wanted a Set of diſorderly baſe Wretches fit for ſuch vile Purpoſes, certain Perſons, to ſhew their Loyalty, broke off the Head of the Effigies in the Night, tore his Sword, Spurs, Arms, and Eſcutcheons. Thus did the Inheritors of their noble Principles and Practices treat the Memory of the two greateſt Princes in the World, King William and King George, by defacing their Statues; and thus may all glorious Names expect to be treated when dead, by thoſe who fled every where before them when living. The Marquis of Hertford, or ſome one elſe, having ſeiz'd ſome Writings and Monies in Eſſex Houſe, the Parliament order'd them to be reſtor'd to the Earl's Executors, who were the Earl of Northumberland, the Earl of Warwick, and Mr. Solicitor St. John. Echard informs us Devereux Earl of Eſſex ended his Name: A ſmall Error in ſuch a Hiſtory as his! Contrary to this, the Lords order'd a Writ to be ſent to Sir Edward Devereux, the new Viſcount Hereford, to ſit in Parliament, that Honour and Seat deſcending to him on the Death of the Earl of Eſſex, whoſe Counteſs being diſaffected to the Parliament, they order'd 4500 Pounds, Part of his Penſion then due, to be paid to his Servants, and for Publick Uſes. They alſo voted 5000 Pounds a Year for Sir Thomas Fairfax and his Heirs. They appointed Sir Rowland Wandeſford, Sir Thomas Bedingfield, and John Bradſhaw, Eſq; to be Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, and order'd an Ordinance to be brought in to take away Privilege from Members of Parliament as to Titles to Eſtates and Debts, reſerving only Privilege for Perſon, which was done on the Lord Munſon's deſiring to wave his Privilege, and to have a Suit againſt him proceed.

A. D. 1646. Proceedings in Parliament.

We are now to take a View of the Affairs of Ireland, which could not be ſo well attended as the State of them requir'd during the War in England. But now the Parliament ſet themſelves to it, and appointed Sir Thomas Wharton, Sir Robert King, Sir John Clotworthy, Sir Roger Meredith, and Mr. Salway, to be their Commiſſioners for that Kingdom, of which the Lord Liſle was Lieutenant; and Supplies being about to be ſent thither, the Lords acquainted the Commons by a Meſſage, that Col. Monk, a Priſoner in the Tower, had taken the Covenant, was ready to take the Negative Oath, and their Lordſhips conceiv'd him a fit Man to be employ'd in the Service of Ireland, on Account of his military Qualifications, deſiring a Commiſſion might be given him, which was agreed to with one Negative Voice only, Mr. Cawley's, who was of Opinion not to employ a Man who had before ſo baſely deſerted that Service. Ireland.

The Treaty of Ceſſation has been ſpoken of, and of my Lord Inchiquin's ſtanding out againſt it, for which he was highly extoll'd by the Parliament, and Forces were ſent to his Aſſiſtance as faſt as they could ſpare them. In the mean time the Earl of Ormond was empower'd by the King to conclude a Peace with the Maſſacrers, on Condition they would oblige themſelves to ſend over an Army to aſſiſt him againſt the Parliament of England. The ſupreme Council of Kilkenny invited the Lord Ormond to that City to treat, and his Lordſhip being willing to ſee his Relations and Eſtate in thoſe Parts, as alſo to expedite

A. D. 1646. expedite that Service, accepted of the Invitation, and march'd thither with about 4000 Horſe and Foot for his Guard, which by the Advice of the Lord Mount Garret and the ſupreme Council, were diſpers'd into Quarters in the Villages thereabouts; but Sir Francis Willoughby, who commanded that Party, ſuſpecting Treachery, intimated it to the Marquis, and deſir'd he might encamp in the Field, to which his Lordſhip conſented; and the Enemy being diſappointed of their Deſign to deſtroy the Engliſh by Surprize, reſolv'd to attempt it by Force; and all the Favour the Marquis of Ormond could obtain, was Notice from his Relations to ſhift for himſelf, which he did, and order'd Sir Francis Willoughby to return to Dublin; but before they could get there, the Country roſe upon them in ſuch Numbers, that if Col. Bagnal, Governor of Laughlin, had not permitted them to paſs the Bridge there, they had in all Appearance been cut off. The Iriſh ſeiz'd the Marquis's Plate, and whatever elſe he left at Kilkenny; and by this Uſage his Zeal for the Proſecution of the Treaty abating, the Earl of Glamorgan was commiſſion'd to proſecute it. The Lord Ormond had been very active in giving all manner of Oppoſition to the Parliament of England, having receiv'd a Commiſſion from the King to be Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, in the Room of the Lord Liſle, to whom however the Two Houſes continu'd that Commiſſion. It was Ormond who made the infamous Ceſſation with the Iriſh Maſſacrers: It was he, who ſent the Forces which came from England to aſſiſt the Iriſh Proteſtants back to England to deſtroy the Proteſtants there. He forbad the taking the Covenant in Ireland, was Impeach'd as a Traytor againſt the Three Kingdoms, diſabled of his Lieutenancy, and all Command in Ireland, where the Earl of Inchiquin and the Lord Broghill commanded in Munſter, out of which Province they drove the Iriſh REBELS, and wrote to the Parliament for Supplies. Thus 'tis plain, that if the Engliſh Forces ſent to reduce thoſe Rebels had not been recall'd by the King, but had join'd the Earl of Inchiquin and the Lord Broghill, the War in Ireland had been over, and the Proteſtants in Safety many Years before the Commonwealth of England put an End to it. One of the moſt conſiderable Actions in Ireland, till General Cromwel landed there, was that at Sligo in November, the Year preceding. The Rebels, to the Number of 2000 Foot and 300 Horſe, lay before that Town, and block'd up all the Out-Garriſons, with other Forces. Lieutenant Colonel Sanderſon, who commanded in Sligo, Capt. Richard Coot, and Capt. Cole, reſolv'd to ſally out upon them; and having given Notice of their Reſolution to Sir William Cole and Sir Francis Hamilton, they came very opportunely to their Aſſiſtance with two Troops of Horſe; and falling upon the Enemy at the ſame Time that Col. Sanderſon attack'd them, the Iriſh were ſoon put into Confuſion, and fled. The Engliſh had Execution upon them for five Miles, kill'd above 200, took 150 Horſe, their Arms, Tents, Baggage, Ammunition, and much Spoil. Amongſt the Slain was the Popiſh Archbiſhop of Tuam, in whoſe Carriage were found ſome Papers which diſcover'd the Endearments between the Court at Oxford and the Iriſh REBELS. The Engliſh loſt but one Man, and took 28 Officers of Note, as, Dom. O Flaherty Lieutenant Colonel to Richard Bourck, Couſin to the Earl of Clanckard, Lieutenant Colonel Gerdy, Major Richard Bourck, —— O Neal, Grandſon to Sir Terlagh Mac Henry O Neal, Capt. Browne, Brother to their famous Lawyer Jeffry Browne, Capt. William O Shagniſe, Brother to Sir Roger O Shagniſe, Capt. Dillon, Son to Sir Lucas Dillon, Capt. Caſtlelogh, the Popiſh Archbiſhop of Tuam, Preſident of the Province of Connaught, and Chief of the Supreme Council of Kilkenny. Among his Papers were found the Pope's Bull, and the Earl of Glamorgan's Commiſſion to treat with thoſe bloody Butchers, and the execrable Treaty it ſelf made with Richard Viſcount Mountgarret, Preſident of the Supreme Council of Catholicks, Donnogh Viſcount Muskerry, Sir Robert Talbot, Alex. M. Donnel, Eſq; Nicholas Plunket, Eſq; Dermot O Brian, Eſq; John Dillon, Eſq; Patrick Darcy, Eſq; Jeffry Brown, Eſq; A. D. 1646.

Rebels routed at Sligo.

By Virtue of his Majeſty's Authority, under his Signate and Royal Signature, dated at Oxford the 12*th Day of* March, in the 20*th Year of his Reign.* The Treaty with the Iriſh Rebels.

By the Firſt Article, " The Popiſh Prieſts " were to be put in Poſſeſſion of all Lands, Te" nements and Tithes, to which they laid Claim, " and all Papiſts have the free and publick Ex" erciſe of their Religion.

By the Second Article, " They were to hold " and enjoy the Churches they had been for" merly poſſeſs'd of.

By the Third Article, " The Papiſts were ex" empted from the Juriſdiction of the Proteſtant " Clergy, and the Popiſh Clergy not to be mo" leſted in the Exerciſe of their Juriſdi" ction, &c.

All which was to be confirm'd by Act of Parliament in Ireland.

Theſe Papers were ſent to the Parliament by Sir Robert King and Mr. Arthur Anneſley, afterwards Earl of Angleſey, who was then a very zealous Parliamentarian; and it appear'd by certain Hints in ſome of thoſe Papers, that the King's Hopes were from the Iriſh Nation.

The Parliament ſent Forces from England to join the Lords Inchiquin and Broghill in Munſter, where and elſewhere in Ireland the Proteſtants had frequent Advantages of the Iriſh, but were not ſtrong enough to meet them in the Field. Sir Charles Coot and Sir Robert Steward engag'd a Party of Rebels, and ſlew 500. The Lord Liſle was order'd to repair to his Government with all Speed, and 1200 Pounds a Month Pay allow'd him; but the Supplies came too ſlow, and the Iriſh, who were apprehenſive of their coming, were induſtrious to improve the Advantage of their Numbers, before their Arrival. Major General Monroe, who commanded under the Lord Inchiquin in Ulſter, drew the Forces out of ſeveral Garriſons to attack the Rebels: He had about 5000 Foot and 600 Horſe. The REBELS were about twice the Number; and ſeeming to retire before him, the Engliſh follow'd them in too much Diſorder, and fell into their Ambuſcades, which ſo gall'd them, that they were forc'd to retreat with the Loſs of 500 Men, and moſt of their Arms and Ammunition. The Lord Montgomery and the Lord Blaney were taken. This was the greateſt Blow the Parliament's Forces receiv'd in any Engagement with the REBELS. The Two Houſes wrote to the King, then in the Scots Army, to ſend Order for Delivery of the Garriſons in Ireland; but his Majeſty anſwer'd, If a Peace were ſettled, that would follow of courſe. In June this Year the Rebels took Roſcommon, and put all the Engliſh there to the Sword. They alſo took Bonratty, which held out three Months,

A. D. 1646. Months, and put the Engliſh and Scots to the Sword. On Advice of which the Parliament order'd 12000 Men of their Army for the Service in Ireland. The Lord Inchiquin took Pilborn Caſtle, and put the Iriſh Garriſon to the Sword.

The Pope's Nuncio, and the moſt guilty of the Maſſacrers, were againſt Glamorgan's Peace, as advantagious as it was for the Iriſh. They had no other Reaſon for it, than that the Proteſtants were to have Liberty of Conſcience for a while at leaſt. Ormond join'd the Iriſh Rebels, and they made together an Army of 20000 Men, who were to oblige all Ireland, as well Proteſtants as Papiſts, to ſubmit to the Peace. But neither Papiſts nor Proteſtants were pleas'd with it; and as it was built on no ſolid Foundation, ſo it had no long Continuance: For the Nuncio's Papiſts became ſo formidable, that Ormond himſelf was convinc'd it could not laſt, and that the Engliſh muſt either unite all their Forces, and procure farther Aſſiſtance from England, or the Iriſh Papiſts would extirpate them, as was the Intention of the Nuncio and his Party. Ormond therefore ſent Sir Francis Willoughby with Propoſitions to the Parliament, and to deſire Supplies of Men and Money, he having left the Rebels, and ſhut the Gates of Dublin againſt them. He offer'd to come to London in Perſon, or ſerve in Ireland, as the Two Houſes pleas'd, as alſo to ſurrender the City of Dublin to them, which the Nuncio's Papiſts had very much ſtreighten'd, and thoſe with whom he had ſo lately made Peace abandon'd him. But the Supplies which the Parliament ſent arriving with their beforemention'd Commiſſioners to Dublin, and a Party of Engliſh under Sir Charles Coote breaking thro' the Rebels Army, they drew farther off from that Capital. However the Marquis of Ormond refus'd to deliver up the Government, under Pretence he had no Command from his Majeſty; upon which thoſe Commiſſioners went to Belfaſt with the Money and Men they brought from England. The good Lord Digby ſtaid all the while with the Nuncio and his Maſſacrers; and taking upon him to reprove the Pope's Miniſter for giving the Iriſh ſome Advice which he did not like, the Nuncio gave his Lordſhip the Lye three Times. With the Commiſſioners came Col. Monk, who having been before employ'd by the Parliament, deſerted their Service; and having afterwards been employ'd by the King, deſerted his Service, and will deſert two or three Services more before they make a Duke of him. Two thouſand Soldiers were now brought over, who with other Supplies kept the Iriſh at Bay till the Army arriv'd from England, and made thoſe bloody Rebels a dreadful Example of Juſtice and Vengeance. Sir Roger Manley, as weak a Writer as his Daughter was a wicked one, tells us, the King had commanded Ormond to deliver up Dublin to the Parliament, when the Nuncio's Army became prevalent; and he argues upon it with the ſame Sobriety which we meet with in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion and Echard's Hiſtory; an irrefragable Teſtimony againſt the black Calumnies of the Engliſh Rebels. He modeſtly means the Two Houſes of Parliament; for they have all that Cant, and could not carry on their mighty Work without it. Ormond ſaid he had no Command from the King; but it will not be expected from me to animadvert on ſuch Memoir Writers as Warwick, Manley, &c. And indeed if I excus'd my ſelf from that Task with reſpect to Echard's Hiſtory and that of the Rebellion on the ſame Account, I ſhould not be blam'd by thoſe who know their true Character. If Ormond had any Order, 'twas a colluſive one, nor did he ſubmit to it and quit the Government and the Capital till ſome Months after, hoping to perplex the Parliament's Affairs by his Stay there; but he had no Opportunity, ſo he left the Kingdom, paſs'd over to England, and thence to France, from whence he return'd to Ireland, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. A. D. 1646.

Whitl. p. 233.

If you will believe Wiſhart Biſhop of Edinburgh, who wrote Montroſe's Life, or Mr. Archdeacon, who copy'd it, the Lord Montroſe was a perfect Drawcanſir, who, as Dryden, an orthodox Poet, ſays, Sotland and Montroſe.

At once beat thoſe without and thoſe within.

The Accounts they give of him ſpoils the Hiſtory, which is really incredible enough of it ſelf. This Caledonian Hector being reinforc'd by a ſtrong Body of Iriſh Papiſts under Kalketo, the Marquis of Antrim's Brother, took the Field, and with about 2000 Men beat the Lord Elcho and Earl of Tullibardin at Tippermoor, killing 2000, and taking as many as his own Army conſiſted of. This Battle was fought in September, 1644. Biſhop Wiſhart, as good an Authority as Biſhop Guthry, aſſures us, that Montroſe's Men were not half the Number of Elcho's; and further, that as few as they were they had no Arms, but threw Stones at the Rebels with ſuch Activity, that they ran away immediately. Montroſe then repaſs'd the Tay, and underſtanding the Lord Burghley was at Aberdeen, he paſs'd the Dee, and found him drawn up in Battle Array, 2000 Foot and 500 Horſe poſted on advantagious Ground, with Cannon at the Head of his Army. Montroſe had only 1500 Foot, 44 Horſe, and no Cannon; yet at the Firſt Charge the Enemy was defeated, ſlaughter'd, routed. I chuſe to take the Hiſtory from Sir Roger Manley, becauſe he takes it from the Biſhop, but it is never the truer for that. Sanderſon, as orthodox as the beſt of them, owns it was not at the Firſt Charge: It was a Fight of four Hours Space equal, till Montroſe's Men got the Advantage. We muſt not wonder that they contradict one another. Hiſtorians who do not make Truth their Guide will not always walk the ſame Way. As Perth was the Prize of the Battle of Tippermoor, ſo is Aberdeen the Prize of this Fight. After which he put on his Wings again, and flew with incredible Speed and Diligence into Argyle, where having forc'd the Marquis to ſave himſelf in a Boat, he did, what I verily believe is the trueſt Part of the Hiſtory, deſtroy and fill the Province with Blood, Slaughter, Rapine and Fire, to uſe Manley's own good Words, for which he will ſurely have his Reward. Nor were the other neighbouring Countries, as Lorn and the reſt that acknowledge the Dominion of Argyle, better us'd. He then met the Marquis at Innerlochy with an Army thrice the Number of his own, charg'd them with ſuch Fury, that he broke their Ranks and defeated them with a great Slaughter, killing above 1500 on the Spot. The Prize of this Victory was the City of Elgin. He then forc'd Hurrey, who now again was in the Parliament's Service, to retreat, and offer'd Bayly, who was juſt come out of England, Battle; Bayly gave an Anſwer like a Man in his Wits to one out of them, When I fight, it ſhall be at my own Choice, and not at another's. After this, notwithſtanding he was deſerted by the Gordons, the Marquis of Huntley probably calling back his Sons on ſome Diſguſt at Montroſe's imperious Behaviour, which was intolerable, he march'd with incredible Speed to Taodun, and with 150 Horſe and 600 nimble or running Footmen, he aſſaulted, took and plunder'd

A. D. 1646. the Town. Having done this, he made a Retreat of threeſcore Miles, without Sleep, without Meat, or any other Refreſhment, from Bayly and Hurry, who purſu'd him with 3000 Foot, and 800 Horſe; but as the Presbyterians could not live without Meat and Sleep, he got from them, and was reinforc'd by the Lord Gordon, a Name which in the Huntley Family has diſtinguiſh'd it ſelf in the Cauſe of Popery, as much as it has done in the Family of Sutherland in the Cauſe of the Proteſtant Religion. This Lord Gordon brought him 1000 Foot and 200 Horſe, and were a proper Band to join with the Mackdonalds, Iriſh Papiſts. There is no need of giving any Appellation to theſe Gentry, the Simplicity of their Names is enough to ſhew, without Epithet, what fine Heroes were employ'd in the Field, while the Earl of Clarendon and his Brother-Counſellors were at work in the Cabinet. The Reader will obſerve how Montroſe has in every one of theſe Actions made as much uſe of his Heels as his Head, Heart and Hand; That he has done a great deal of Miſchief to his Country, without doing his Maſter any Good; That he has not a Town nor a Houſe to hide in when the Scots Army comes up with him; That he has no Way to feed his Men but by Robbery and Rapine: Yet now it was that he wrote the King the fatal Letter, which hinder'd the Concluſion of the Treaty of Peace at Uxbridge. He has conquer'd from Dan to Beerſheba, as he told the King; but it was ſuch a Conqueſt as the Barbarians were wont to make in the Roman Provinces in the Bas Empire, when they would ſometimes plunder the Country for 3 or 400 Miles together, and come and go as ſwift as a Tempeſt.

Montroſe being now 2000 ſtrong, fought Hurrey at Alderne, and defeated 3000 Foot and 500 Horſe, the 4th of May, 1645. and coming to Alford, where General Bayly lay, the Latter left his Foot at his Approach, and fled with his Horſe, who, according to Biſhop Guthry and Sir Roger Manley, could not have got off, if the Lord Gordon had not been kill'd. Montroſe was afterwards join'd by the Lord Aboyne, another Gordon, and the Earl of Airly, with 300 Horſe, and a numerous Recruit of Highlanders, forming in all an Army of 4 or 5000 Men, with which he reſolv'd to penetrate into the inmoſt Parts of the Kingdom, and diſperſe the Convention at Perth. He paſs'd the Forth, and incamp'd at Kylſithe, where he found the REBELS. If we muſt write after ſuch Hiſtorians, we muſt make uſe of their Words, or the Force and Beauty of their Hiſtories will be loſt, being 6000 Foot and 800 Horſe. Montroſe's Men, animated by the old Earl of Airly, rais'd a great Shout, and the Presbyterians fell down as did the Walls of Jericho when the Gideonites blew their Horns: "The Montroſians ran upon the "Enemy, beat down ſuch as reſiſted, and "ruin'd all, ſcarce 100 of the 6000 Foot eſca-"ping, with the Loſs of 6 Men only." I have follow'd Biſhop Wiſhart and Sir Roger Manley, becauſe they will be allow'd to be two great Adorers of Montroſe's Heroiſm, and here are indeed many adventurous Deeds, which were the Effects rather of Fury than Valour, for heroick Valour has always Wiſdom and Temper in its Company. Theſe Victories ſeem rather to be dreamt than perform'd: Here's not an Inch of Ground got, but what is loſt again as ſoon as it is left. Montroſe is no ſooner gone from Perth, than the States appoint their Convention there, and he has not a Garriſon in the Kingdom that could reſiſt the Covenanters a few Hours only. Yet the King in the Decline of his Fortune, was kept more in Heart by Hopes of Montroſe's making his Way to him, than by any other Hope, unleſs it was from the Army of Iriſh REBELS. After the Battle of Kylſithe, Glaſgow and ſeveral Cities ſent Deputies to compliment the Marquis, that they might not be plunder'd and burnt, as was the Way of his War; for having no Proſpect of keeping any Place, his Buſineſs was to pillage it and ſpoil it. His Soldiers were the greateſt Robbers that ever infeſted a Proteſtant Kingdom. Montroſe fac'd Edinburgh, but did not enter it on Account of the Plague. He ſent in the Lord Nappier to demand the Priſoners of his Party, who were deliver'd to him; and now he receiv'd his Commiſſion to be Generaliſſimo of the Royal Armies in Scotland, after which we do not find he did any thing conſiderable; for the Scots, who were ſurpriz'd, but not intimidated by him, and as yet had only oppos'd him with raw Men, rais'd in haſte, ſent for David Leſley out of England, who advancing with a Body of 3000 Horſe, diſciplin'd Troops, the very Noiſe of it blaſted all the Blaze of Montroſe's Glory. His Followers ſhrunk away from him, and to excuſe the entire Rout he met with at Selkirk, his Panegyriſts ſay he had but 500 Men left, when the Covenanters fell upon him, cut his Men to Pieces, and himſelf very narrowly eſcap'd at that Time; but ſome of his Followers were taken, as Sir William Pollock, Sir Philip Nesbit, Alexander Ogilvie, Col. O Cahan, and Col. Laglin, the two latter Iriſh REBELS, who were executed for their treaſonable Practices. The Lord Clarendon makes a great Merit of the King's ſending an Order to Montroſe to lay down his Arms, which I do not find to be ſo meritorious, for David Leſly had routed him before that Order came, and his future Exploits ſhew that his continuing in Arms would only have led him to a more honourable Death than the Covenanters had doom'd him to. A. D. 1646.

A. D. 1647. The Engliſh and Scots being agreed as to the Diſpoſal of his Majeſty's Perſon, the Parliament of England appointed Commiſſioners, January the 6th, to go to Newcaſtle, and receive the King and attend him to Holmby, a Royal Palace which they order'd for his Reſidence. Theſe Commiſſioners were the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Denbigh, Lord Montagu, Sir James Harrington, Sir William Armyne, Sir John Holland, Sir John Cooke, Sir Walter Earl, John Crewe, Eſq; and Major General Browne, the Latter of chief Note for being one of the moſt deteſtable Apoſtates of thoſe variable Times. I ſhall ſay a little of him to open his Character, and prepare for what muſt be ſaid of him after the Reſtoration, when we ſhall find his Hands ſtain'd with the Blood of his deareſt Friends and Companions, as he now term'd them.

Some Account of Major General Browne.

His baſe Birth and Education fitted his Mind for Corruption; and tho' the Lord Digby did not ſucceed in his Attempt to get Abington from him, yet his Ear being us'd to Temptation, convey'd an Impreſſion the eaſier to him when it was offer'd a ſecond Time. Being nominated for this Commiſſion, he turn'd about to General Ludlow, who ſate behind him in the Houſe of Commons, and cry'd, I will be ever true to you. The General adds, "And truly "I then believ'd him, having met with him at "the Beginning of the War buying Horſes in "Smithfield for the Service of the Parliament, "where he ſpoke very affectionately concerning "this Undertaking, and ſerv'd them after-"wards very ſucceſsfully, eſpecially at Abing-"ton; but this wretched Man ſoon diſcover'd "the Corruption of his Nature, and the Malig-"nity that lay conceal'd in his Heart; for no

" for the King:" All which noble Qualities have recommended him to a Share of the Earl of Clarendon's Panegyricks; He was a ſtout and diligent Commander, a Man of great Name and Intereſt. The Parliament voted 3000 Pounds for the Charge of his Majeſty's Journey to Holmby, about 200 Pounds a Day, and 50 Pounds a Day for his Expence there, with the following Perſons to attend him in ordinary, as Sir Fulk Greville, Sir Patrick Marel, Mr. Herbert, Mr. Harrington, Mr. Maxwel, Mr. Aſtley, Mr. Middleton, Serjeant at Arms, Dr. Wilſon, a Phyſician, Mr. Marſhal, Mr. Caryl, Miniſters. But the two Miniſters were unwelcome to his Majeſty, who had form'd a Project to eſcape in concert with Dr. Hudſon, his Guide from Oxford to the Scots Camp. Hudſon wrote to Major General Langhorn, Governor of Pembroke, offering an immenſe Sum if he would be Aſſiſtant in that Deſign. This Letter was convey'd to Mr. Gibb of Lincolns-Inn, by him to Mr. Price in Wales, and by him to Langhorn; though this Offer did not operate now, it did next Year to his Shame and Confuſion. Another Project was for a Ship to lye off Shields, and upon the firſt Opportunity for his Majeſty to eſcape, that he ſhould embark in it for Holland. But the Parliament having Information of it, and Captain Batten being order'd to obſerve that Ship, the King ſubmitted to go with the Parliament's Commiſſioners, who arriv'd at Newcaſtle the 22d of January, and his Majeſty appointed the 24th for their Audience.

The King's Servants at Holmby.

Projects for his Eſcape.

The Lord Pembroke, who was no great Orator, told his Majeſty his Children were well at St. James's, and they were commanded by both Houſes to attend him to Holmby. The King put off giving them an Anſwer at that Time, and the Earl of Lanerick arriving from Scotland, with the Votes of that Parliament againſt his Majeſty's coming into that Kingdom, he told his Lordſhip and other Scots Lords at Newcaſtle, That he came to their Army for Protection, and had it, but now he perceiv'd it would be otherwiſe: And they being to deliver up the Garriſons he deſir'd to know how he was to be diſpos'd of? adding, Go into another Room and conſider of it, which they did, and returning acquainted the King, that ſince his Majeſty had refus'd to take the Covenant and ſign the Propoſitions, they were to deliver him to the Commiſſioners of the Parliament of England: The next Day thoſe Commiſſioners waited on him for his Anſwer, who only ſaid he ſhould not be ready for ſome Days. And Sanderſon aſſures us he told the Earl of Pembroke, he had bely'd him in many Things, but if this Journey pleas'd him he ſhould be much miſtaken. Pembroke reply'd, If he had the leaſt Doubt of it ſome other ſhould have come of the Errand; and if this his good Service diſpleas'd the King he was like to diſpleaſe him more: To which his Majeſty anſwer'd, The Scots are beholding to you for travelling ſo often on their Errands. Six Days after the Scots march'd out of Newcaſtle, and the Engliſh Troops entring it as ſoon as they were gone, the Parliament Commiſſioners receiv'd the King the 3d of February, lodg'd in the ſame Houſe, and watch'd by Turns. They had intimated to his Majeſty their Deſign to remove to Durham, and he ſeem'd to comply with Chearfulneſs, but could not help this ſevere Reflection on the Scots, That he was better ſatisfy'd to be with thoſe that dearly bought him than with thoſe that had baſely ſold him; which was the Cry of the Cavaliers then and a long while after. Though the Scots were ſo far from receiving any Purchaſe Money, that they had not receiv'd their Pay. Dr. Calamy tells us they receiv'd but half of it; yet the Earl of Clarendon, Archdeacon Echard, Manley, Sanderſon, Walker, Warwick, Dugdale, Guthry and others as excellent for Sincerity and Truth, ſtill to be nam'd, as Perenchefs, Heylin, Nalſon, Ryves, Symmons, Wagſtaff, Heath, Hollingworth, do affirm that the Scots did ſell the King for ſo much Money, in as direct a Bargain as ever was made for African or Sword-Blade Stock.

The Parliament's Commiſſioners, the King in their Company, went from Newcaſtle to Durham, February the 8th, under Convoy of 900 Horſe, where Proclamation was made that none who had deſerted the Parliament ſhould come near his Majeſty, and one Mungo Murray attempting it was diſcover'd, and impriſon'd at Nottingham. General Fairfax, with many of his Officers, met the King, who at his coming ſtop'd his Horſe: The General alighted and kiſs'd his Majeſty's Hand, and then mounting, talk'd with him ſome Miles, the King giving his Excellency this Character, That he was a Man of Honour, and had kept his Word in obſerving Articles. However good Words he gave him now, in one of his Letters to the Queen he call'd him the Parliament's brutiſh General. Upon which the Conjurer Lilly ſeverely, if not brutiſhly reflected; " A moſt uncivil Term and " Epithet to beſtow upon ſo brave, ſo civil, ſo " valiant, and ſo much a Gentleman as Fairfax " was and is: Aſſuredly the Progenitors of the " Lord Fairfax were Gentlemen, and of good " Eſtates, when the Anceſtors of the Stuarts " were but poor Stewards to a Family in Scot- " land." There's a great deal more of it but 'tis not ſo beautiful as to make one in Love with it. One of the above-mention'd Hiſtory Writers tells us that the People where the King came, cry'd out, Hoſanna, but the milder Sort wept and fell a Propheſying.

Gen. Fairfax abus'd by the King. P. 10.

The Scots march'd over the Tyne ſixteen Days before the King arriv'd at Holmby; from whence his Majeſty wrote a Letter to the Houſe of Lords, deſiring he might have two or three Divines out of theſe following to attend him: Dr. Juxon, Biſhop of London, Dr. Duppa, Biſhop of Salisbury, Dr. Lany, Biſhop of Peterborough, Dr. Sheldon, Dr. March, Dr. Sanderſon, Dr. Hammond, Dr. Taylor, Dr. Bailey, Dr. Haywood, Dr. Beal, Dr. Fuller. The Parliament anſwer'd, That all theſe Chaplains were diſaffected to the eſtabliſh'd Government of the Church, and had not taken the Covenant; but for others that had, if his Majeſty pleaſes, they ſhall be ſent to him, which has given Occaſion for this ſeraphick Meditation in Eikon Baſilike; My Agony muſt not be reliev'd with the Preſence of any one good Angel, for ſuch I account a Learned, Godly, and Diſcreet Divine; ſuch as Sheldon, of whom I never heard any Thing better than that he took great Delight in Hunting, and in Archbiſhop Laud, or Juxon, whom Whitlocke commends as one of the keeneſt Sportſmen in England, and the beſt Breeder of Dogs. I ſhould not touch upon ſuch mean Particularities, as true as they are, had I not been provok'd to it by the Lord Clarendon's untrue Character of Caryl, the Divine, whom the Parliament order'd to attend on the King,

A. D. 1647. King, and whom his Majeſty intimates to be an evil Angel, though his Enemies allow he had all the King's Characteriſticks of a good One, he was Learned, Godly, Diſcreet.

Lord Clarendon of Mr. Caryl.

The Earl of Clarendon avers he was a Man of mean Parts, of moſt impertinent troubleſome Confidence and Importunity, which errs as much againſt Truth as againſt Charity and good Manners. As to his Parts, A. Wood his bitter Enemy owns he was in his younger Years a noted Diſputant; and if his Parts had been ſo mean, it is not likely the honourable Society of Lincolns-Inn would have choſen him to be their Preacher. As to his Learning, Dr. Calamy tells us, He had univerſally the Character of a learned Man. And as to his Impertinence, his troubleſome Confidence and Importunity, his Meekneſs and Patience were ſuch that 'twas a common Thing to compare him with Job, on whoſe Book he wrote a Comment, which is not excell'd by any other in any Language; though all the Lord Clarendon's Characters have not ſo many Infirmities, yet there is not one but has its Share: And when the Presbyterian Miniſters or their Religion comes in the way, his Lordſhip, or the Doctors his Editors, loſe all Patience, and fall upon them without the leaſt Regard to Truth or Decency. What fine Notions theſe Gentlemen have of true Piety and Devotion one may ſee by the Earl's complaining that the King was forc'd to pray for himſelf; and he tells us how and where he did it; He read the Common Prayer in his Bed-Chamber. How many of theſe Doctors do really know no more of Divinity than that the Reading the Common Prayer Book in a Bed Chamber is as much an Act of Devotion as the divine Communication between God and a pious Soul in holy Contemplation and Prayer? This is either Cant or Enthuſiaſm with them; but they are very well read in the Rights, Prerogatives, Powers, Revenues and Dignities which are annex'd to their Doctorſhips. The King would not allow Mr. Caryl ſo much as to ſay Grace, according to Mr. Echard, which agrees very little with the Effuſion of the holy Spirit, ſo much affected in Eikon Baſilike, ſaid to be written in this and other Solitudes, but in Fact written in this and the next Year, by Dr. John Gauden, a Covenanter. Manley vouches for it, that though it was written by a Presbyterian, it ſurpaſſes all other Books except the Bible, in Piety. Notwithſtanding all the Care of the Commiſſioners at Holmby to prevent the Delivery of Papers to his Majeſty, yet Colonel Boſvile, formerly of the King's Party, diſguis'd like a Countryman, as the King and the Commiſſioners were paſſing over a Bridge going to the Bowling Green at Harrowden, put a Packet of Letters into his Majeſty's Hand, which the Commiſſioners obſerving, cauſed the pretended Countryman to be apprehended, and he confeſs'd the Letters came from France, and as he was inform'd, from the Prince, to deſire Leave that he might make a Campaign in the French Army under the Duke of Orleans. The Commiſſioners had not known of the Delivery of the Packet if a Miller, who ſtood by and ſaw it, had not cry'd out, Nobles and Gentlemen, there's a Man gives the King Letters. Boſvile offer'd the Miller Gold to hold his Tongue, but he would not take it: His Majeſty being deſir'd to let the Commiſſioners know the Contents of the Letters, anſwer'd, He was not to give an Account to any Man living.

The Royal State was kept up at Holmby, and the Commiſſioners made good Chear, having a plentiful Allowance. The Dutch Ambaſſadors had Audience of the King there, to notify the Death of the Prince of Orange; and People flock to him to be cur'd of the King's Evil, a pleaſant Impoſition on the Populace, from the Time of Edward the Confeſſor, who according to Manley receiv'd the Gift from Heaven, to the Time of James the Confeſſor, and after the Revolution, when that good Presbyterian Mr. Harley took the Church into his Protection. The Parliament order'd a Declaration to be drawn, informing the People of the Superſtition of being touch'd by the King for the Evil. Every one has heard 100 Stories of the Cures by this Touch, which were not more talk'd of than the Cures by the Stroak of Greatarakes the Stroaker in Lincolns-Inn Fields, in the next Reign. The Alderſtick, the Key in the Bible, the Ague Charm have done the like Wonders, and had doubtleſs as much Efficacy; but the Notion was kept up after the Reformation by thoſe of the Prieſthood, who were for returning back again to Popery, under which they were in Poſſeſſion of Miracles of Exorciſing, Abſolution, &c. very beneficial to them both in Profit and Credit. A. D. 1647. King's Evil.

The Lady Cave, attempted as Boſvile had done, to deliver Letters from France to the King, but being alſo diſcover'd ſhe was apprehended, and Boſvile ſent to Newgate. King's Anſwer to the Propoſitions.

His Majeſty told the Commiſſioners he had long expected the Propoſitions to be ſent to him. As for thoſe he receiv'd at Newcaſtle, if there were no other to come he would ſend his Anſwer, which ſince they did not allow him a Secretary he would ſcribble over himſelf. The Contents were his Conſent, That Presbyterian Government be ſettled for three Years, and to ratify the Aſſembly of Divines, propounding a certain Number of his own Miniſters to be added to them, to conſider what Government ſhould be after the three Years. In the mean Time he and his Houſhold to be free to uſe the Common Prayer Book. He yielded the Militia for 10 Years, and after to return to him. He is not ſatisfy'd in the Covenant, and would have ſome of his own Miniſters ſent him to ſatisfy his Scruples. He will confirm the great Seal and all done by it, himſelf to have it for the Future as formerly. He grants what is deſir'd for the City Militia; interpoſes for his Party; promiſes to recal the Prince, and deſires to come to London. He aſſents to an Act againſt Jeſuits and Prieſts, and for educating the Children of Papiſts in the Proteſtant Religion; as alſo for Penalties againſt Papiſts, when he is ſatisfy'd what they are to be. He propoſes a general Act of Oblivion and Pardon to all on both Sides: The latter would have ſav'd Sir Edward Hyde and other Delinquents, whom the Parliament reſolv'd to make Examples of, as faſt as they could come at them: It was for that they drew their Swords, and the Inflexibility of the King in that Article, gave too much Reaſon to ſuſpect that he would not protect ſuch notorious Offenders ſo obſtinately, unleſs he intended ſtill to make Uſe of them or of others equally exceptionable, when he had the Power in his Hands. Theſe evil Counſellors eternally cry'd up his Majeſty's Conſtancy to his Servants, who had conſtantly advis'd him to take thoſe Meaſures which had brought this Miſery upon him, but their Hearts were harden'd againſt his Preſervation, and they had rather expoſe his Life than their own. King's Counſellors ruin him.

The King flatters himſelf with Hopes that after the Treaty of Weſtphalia was concluded, and France and Spain were reconcil'd, one or both of thoſe Kings would aſſiſt him, and his wiſe Counſellors encouraging thoſe vain Hopes very much con-

A. D. 1647. contributed to the before-mention'd Conſtancy. A Letter to him from Mr. Aſhburnham was intercepted, adviſing him to forbear making an abſolute Agreement with the Parliament, for now that the Peace beyond Sea was almoſt concluded, the King might rely upon the Aid of 40 or 50000 Men; equally ſilly and incredible; for as has been obſerv'd already, the Power of the Parliament by Land and Sea was become formidable and terrible to all the Nations around them. Was any Thing more eaſy than to imagine that the very Name of a Foreign, eſpecially a French Army, would have reconcil'd all Parties againſt the common Enemy? and was it a proper Time for them to invade England, when there was a victorious Army of 10000 Horſe and 30000 Foot ready to knock them on the Head as faſt as they landed, if they eſcap'd the victorious Fleet at Sea? Beſides, What was it to Foreigners by what Title the Government of England went? The Alliance was as good, if not better to them, under one Title as under another, and Nations do not uſe to go to War in earneſt about Words, when the Things are the ſame.

Diviſions between ſeveral Parties.

While the King remain'd at Holmby the Two Houſes of Parliament were as little at Eaſe as his Majeſty. The Lords and the major Vote of the Houſe of Commons, together with the City of London, were for cloſing with the King on the Terms he propos'd, with ſome Amendment as to the preſent Eſtabliſhment of the Presbytery and Directory, and ſettling the Militia in them for 20 Years, with ſome Security that it ſhould not afterwards be employ'd againſt the Rights and Liberties of the People. The Party in the Houſe of Commons, who thought ſuch Security was not practicable, fortify'd themſelves with the Favour of the Army, which the other Party reſolv'd to break, and began with too much Precipitation. If it be pretended that the Intrigues of the Royaliſts ſow'd the Seeds of Diviſion between the Parliament and Army, it is falſe: Thoſe Seeds were ſown by the Bigotry of ſome, and the Ambition of others: The Royaliſts had neither Heads to contrive, nor Hands to execute much Miſchief; they doubtleſs look'd on with Pleaſure, or in more homely Phraſe, with gaping Mouths, in Hopes that ſomething would drop into them. Ludlow tells us the Party in the Houſe that were for betraying the Cauſe of their Country became Encouragers of ſuch Petitioners as came to them from the City of London, and other Places, for a ſpeedy Peace, and to ſuppreſs Sectaries; Complaints were made againſt the Army, both Officers and Soldiers as ſuch, who held erroneous and ſchiſmatical Doctrines contrary to the true Doctrine; and that they took upon them to preach and expound the Scripture, not being learned or ordain'd. "Thus, ſays Whitlocke, "Thoſe, who were ſo lately in the higheſt E- "ſteem and Reſpect, as Freers of their Country "from Servitude and Oppreſſion, are now by "the ſame People look'd on as Sectaries and "Oppreſſors themſelves. Thus we may ſee the "Inconſtancy of the giddy Multitude, and the "Uncertainty of worldly Affairs. When their "Turns are ſerv'd, their Minds change. Their "beſt Friends when they relieve them, are "counted their Enemies when they are reliev'd.

Army offended.

The Lords receiv'd all theſe Petitioners very graciouſly; but the Oppoſition they met with in the Houſe of Commons gave Occaſion to doubt the Succeſs of their Petitions, the Army being offended with them. The next City Petition ſet forth their Zeal to the Parliament and Covenant, and their Apprehenſion of the Advance of the Army, not yet disbanded, nearer the City. They pray the Army may be remov'd, and take Notice of a dangerous Petition counter to theirs, a foot in the City. The Houſe anſwer'd, That thoſe Particulars and that Petition were under Conſideration. Mr. Tocliday, who was a Promoter of the counter Petition, was ſent to Jail by the Committee to whom it was referr'd. Though many excus'd him, according to Whitlocke, it being as lawful for thoſe of one Judgment as of another, to Petition the Parliament. Nothing could be more obvious than that this Jarring among the Parties would in Time be fatal to them; and that if they had now united heartily in Endeavours to ſettle Religion and Liberty according to their firſt Profeſſions, they might eaſily have obtain'd their Ends of the King; and that reſtleſs Faction, who by their Diviſions recover'd Strength, would never have held up their Heads againſt them any more, nor have had it again in their Power to ruin their Country, which they almoſt accompliſh'd in the two next Reigns. A. D. 1647.

The Petition from Eſſex deſir'd that the Soldiers quarter'd in that County, might be remov'd, and it was referr'd to the General: But the Army took great Offence at it, as a Reflection upon their Conduct; nor were they leſs offended with the Votes about their going to Ireland, againſt which they were preparing a Remonſtrance; but Major General Skippon, Colonel Harley, and the more moderate Party hinder'd it for the preſent, and Commiſſioners were ſent to the Army, the Earl of Warwick, Sir William Waller, and Sir John Clotworthy, to ſee what could be done towards their Embarkation for that Kingdom: Theſe Commiſſioners met Sir Thomas Fairfax and his Field Officers at Saffron Walden, where it was propos'd to ſhip 8000 Foot and 4000 Horſe for Ireland. The Officers excus'd their engaging poſitively, but ſaid, whether they went or not they would endeavour to advance that Service among thoſe under their reſpective Commands. A general Anſwer which determin'd nothing; but they afterwards came to Particulars, and deſir'd to be inform'd, 1. Under whoſe Command they were to go. 2. What Regiments, Troops or Companies were to be continu'd in England. 3. What Aſſurance for Pay and Subſiſtence for thoſe that go to Ireland. 4. What Satisfaction in Point of Arrears, and Indemnity for paſt Services, People beginning to threaten them with Proceſſes for what they had done in the War, againſt which it highly behov'd them to be indemnify'd. A Petition was drawn up by the Officers of the Army for the General to deliver it to the Parliament if he thought fit. 1. For Indemnity. 2. For Arrears. 3. Againſt Preſſing to ſerve. 4. For Relief of Widows and maim'd Soldiers. 5. For Pay till disbanded. All theſe Particulars were reaſonable, and had probably been granted ſooner without a Petition than with it; for the Parliament began to think themſelves under Direction by thoſe Army Petitions, which were rather Remonſtrances or Demands. Cromwel and Ireton encourag'd theſe Petitions behind the Curtain, that they might get the Army to be at their Beck, and reſtore the King or deſtroy him, as they thought it moſt for their Intereſt.

Cromwel and Ireton's Intrigues.

The Parliament being inform'd of this Petition, ſent to the General to uſe his Endeavours to put a Stop to it, and declar'd the good Eſteem they had of the Army, who were not to be appeas'd with ſuch Declarations. For Colonel Harley and Colonel Roſſiter, Members of the Houſe of Commons, receiv'd Letters from them, that the Petition ſhould go forward, and thoſe that refus'd to ſubſcribe were threaten'd to be caſhier'd. When it was ready Lieutenant General Hammond, Colonel Ireton, and Colonel Rich, engag'd to deliver it to the Parliament, whoſe Commiſſioners went a ſecond Time to Saffron Walden, to treat with the Officers; but they found none of them complying except Colonel Harley and Colonel Forteſcue: Upon which both Houſes voted, That the Army Petition was ſet on Foot by evil Spirits, purpoſely to raiſe Diſtempers among the Soldiers; that they forgave what is paſt, and forbid farther Proceedings in it. Which Vote was communicated to the Officers by the General; and in Anſwer to it, They expreſs a deep Senſe of their Unhappineſs in being miſunderſtood in their clear Intention, which was no other than by way of Petition to repreſent to the General thoſe Inconveniencies which would neceſſarily befal moſt of the Army after Diſbanding. They deſir'd that as much as he thought fit of their Petition might ſubmiſſively be made known to the Houſe of Commons, and aſſur'd him they would wholly acquieſe in whatſoever he ſhould think fit to offer. The General ſent up Colonel Hammond, Colonel Lilburn, Colonel Pride, and other Officers, to give the Houſe a full Account of the Buſineſs, and acquaint them that he doubted not of the Army's Obedience. But Fairfax knew no more of it than they told him, which was plauſible enough. The Secret lay in the Breaſts of Cromwel and Ireton. The Officers were call'd into the Houſe, where Pride was charg'd with reading the Petition at the Head of his Regiment, and threatning thoſe that would not ſubſcribe, which he deny'd. The Houſe requir'd the Officers to return to their Charges, and ſuppreſs it, which more irritated the Soldiery, who ſaid it was a hard Caſe that Petitions againſt them were favourably receiv'd, and their own Petition in their Defence, obſtructed. This occaſion'd their Talk of drawing to a Rendezvouz; and to prevent it the Parliament's Commiſſioners had a third Meeting with the General and Council of Officers at Saffron Walden, where were preſent 200 Officers. The Earl of Warwick earneſtly entreated thoſe of them who were appointed for Ireland, to go on that Service; ſetting forth the Neceſſity and Honour of it. General Fairfax alſo much encourag'd them to undertake it: But Colonel Lambert deſir'd to know what Satisfaction the Parliament had given as to Arrears, Indemnity, Maintenance in Ireland, and Conduct: Sir John Clotworthy reply'd, They are all anſwer'd, except Indemnity, of which the Parliament will take Care, and have given Inſtructions to the Judges, not to receive any Indictment againſt Soldiers for Things done, in Tempore & Loco Belli, till an Ordinance can be brought in. Then the Officers ask'd who was to be General? They were anſwer'd that both Houſes had appointed Major General Skippon to be General, and Major General Maſſey Lieutenant General. Colonel Hammond ſaid, If they were ſure Major General Skippon would go, he doubted not a great Part of the Army would engage with him. Upon which there was a Cry, All, All; Fairfax and Cromwel, and we all go. Not many of the Officers would then engage in that Service: On the contrary moſt of them ſign'd a Declaration in the Nature of the Petition before mention'd, and authoriz'd Lieutenant General Hammond, Col. Hammond, Col. Lambert, Colonel Lilburn, Colonel Hewſon and Colonel Rich, to act for them. There were but 7 Horſe Officers, 7 of Dragoons, and 87 Foot Officers, who undertook for Ireland; and the four Regiments that were quarter'd in Norfolk and Suffolk, abſolutely refus'd the Service; but Major Huntington appeas'd them and brought them into a better Temper. Such brave Men as theſe were, muſt have been proud of that Service to revenge the Slaughter of 200000 Proteſtants, if an evil Spirit rais'd by Cromwel and Ireton had not poſſeſs'd them. The Parliament however could not think they had ſo far renounc'd Subjection to them as to uſurp Superiority over them, and voted, That the Army, Horſe and Foot, ſhould be disbanded with all convenient Speed, and four Officers were ſent for in Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms, for obſtructing the Engaging for Ireland: But this Activity was like the Blaze of a dying Light. Some Officers in the Name of themſelves and their Fellow Officers, preſented to the Houſe a Vindication of their late Petition, ſetting forth the great Senſe they had of ſome Miſrepreſentations lately made to the Houſe of their Actions and Intentions, by which, as it is conceiv'd, Endeavours are uſed to alienate the Houſes of Parliament from their ever truſty and obedient Army; the Accompliſhment of which would much rejoice their and the Kingdom's Enemies; they deſire the Liberty to Petiton as Soldiers now, and hereafter as Members of the Common Wealth; and that their Integrity might be vindicated from ſuch falſe Suggeſtions and Reports as had been made and rais'd againſt them, and ſuggeſted to the Houſes.

Army Petition.

A. D. 1647.

Whitlocke obſerves, that a victorious Army out of Imployment is very inclinable to aſſume Power over their Principals; and this occaſion'd the Parliament's growing ſtill more eager to have them employ'd in Ireland, which the Army being ſenſible of, were averſe to that Imployment; and eight Regiments of Horſe enter'd into a Sort of Aſſociation to ſtand by one another in endeavouring to obtain Satisfaction. They choſe Agents out of the Troopers, two for every Regiment, who were term'd Agitators, and were a Sort of Committee to conſider of what was proper to be done towards obtaining their Ends: The Chief of theſe Agitators was one Allen, afterwards Adjutant General, one Sexby, afterwards Colonel, Shepherd and Philips, who drew up a Declaration, ſhewing the Reaſons why they could not engage in the Service of Ireland under the preſent Conduct, and complaining of the many Scandals and falſe Suggeſtions that were of late againſt the Army and their Proceedings; that they were taken as Enemies, and Deſigns form'd againſt them, which would not permit them to leave the Kingdom till they were ſatisfy'd in their Expectations, and their juſt Deſires were granted. Sexby, Allen, and Shepherd, brought this Declaration to Major General Skippon, who deliver'd it to the Houſe; and the three Agitators were call'd in and examin'd, touching their drawing and ſubſcribing it. They were ask'd, Whether their Officers were concern'd in it? and they anſwer'd, It was drawn up at a Rendezvous of the Eight Regiments, and afterwards ſign'd at ſeveral Meetings by their Agitators, but few of the Officers knew or took Notice of it. They were then ask'd, Whether none of them had been Cavaliers? and Major General Skippon atteſted for them, That they had conſtantly ſerv'd the Parliament, from the Beginning of the War. It being demanded, What was the Meaning of ſome Expreſſions in the Petition? they anſwer'd, It was a joint Act of thoſe Regiments, and they could give no punctual Anſwer, being only Agents; but if they might have the Queries in Writing, they would ſend or carry them to thoſe

Agitators choſen by the Soldiers.

D. 1647. thoſe Regiments, and return their own and their Anſwers. One of the Members mov'd, That the Agitators might be committed to the Tower; and Cromwel whiſper'd Ludlow, Theſe Men will never leave till the Army pull them out by the Ears. For which Expreſſion that gallant Officer ſays, He would have call'd him to Account in another Poſture of Affairs. The Agitators were told, It did not belong to the Soldiers to meddle with Civil Affairs, nor to prepare or preſent any Petition, without the Advice and Conſent of their General, to whom the Houſe order'd a Letter to be ſent, to deſire his Care therein for the future; with which acquainting the three Agitators, and requiring their Conformity to it, they were diſmiſs'd.

But this not ſatisfying, another Petition was carry'd on in the Army much to the ſame Effect as the former, only the Agitators obſerv'd the Order of the Parliament in directing it to their General, and deſiring him to preſent it Col. Edward Harley, a ſtaunch Presbyterian, Father of thoſe two ſtaunch Churchmen Robert and Edward in Queen Anne's Time, told the Houſe that his Regiment was highly diſſatisfy'd with the Proceedings of the Petitioners, and ſome Members mov'd that they might be declar'd Traytors, alledging they were Servants, who ought to obey, not capitulate. Others were not wanting to ſuggeſt the Cauſe of theſe Diſtempers to be Cromwel, and that he ought to be ſecur'd; but he being advertis'd of it, went out of Town immediately, and repair'd to the Army. The Parliament appointed him, Major General Skippon, Col. Ireton, and Col. Fleetwood, to acquaint the Soldiers, That the Houſe would provide for them before diſbanding, have their Arrears audited, and paſs an Ordnance of Indemnity. Cromwel did not as yet ſhew himſelf a Malecontent, and acted with Skippon in declaring the Votes of Parliament to the Army; adding, They were enjoin'd to quell all Diſtempers, which he ſaid to aggravate Things, and hinder a Reconciliation. Some Officers deſir'd to know, What was meant by Diſtempers in the Army? If Grievances, which the Soldiers had alſo Cauſe to complain of, they had then ſomething to offer, but were unwilling to declare the Senſe of the reſpective Troops, Regiments and Companies, without firſt acquainting them therewith. They took great Offence at the Vote, declaring thoſe to be Enemies, who perſiſted in the Petition. This Vote was put when the Houſe was weary with long ſitting, by Mr. Denzil Hollis, who drew it up upon his Knee, and the Soldiery never forgave him for it. 'Twas oppos'd by ſeveral Members, who foreſaw and fear'd the ill Conſequences of it. But the Majority carry'd it and ſome other Articles, which the Agitators of the Army perceiv'd were preparatory to their Puniſhment, and reſolv'd to prevent it as ſoon as they could. They declar'd, There was no Diſtemper in the Army, but many Grievances; and being inform'd that the Parliament had voted to diſband all ſuch as would not engage for Ireland, they came to a ſudden Reſolution to poſſeſs themſelves of the Perſon of the King, and cut the Matter ſhort, by depriving them of the Means of coming to any Terms with him to their Prejudice. So they ſent Cornet Joyce with a ſtrong Party of Horſe, and an Order in Writing to take the King out of the Hands of the Parliament's Commiſſioners.

Crom-wel's double Dealing.

Who ſeize the King's Perſon.

There were ſeveral Officers in the Army who did not approve of the Proceedings of the Agitators, as Sir Robert Pye, Col. Forteſcue, Col. Greaves, Col. Sheffield, Col. Butler, all of Hollis's Party. Theſe were contented their Regiments ſhould be diſbanded. Others thought it might prove dangerous to both Parliament and Army. Theſe objected that the Latter would not ſubmit to it. Moſt of the Members who were piqued at the Army had been thrown out of their Poſts by the Self-denying Ordinance, and complain'd, that notwithſtanding that Ordinance, Cromwel and Skippon continu'd in their Commands, and others, as Rich and Harriſon, had been choſen Members ſince, and were admitted to ſit. Hollis's Party did not directly declare againſt the Army, but pretended to eaſe the People of Taxes by diſbanding them, and once more Commiſſioners were appointed on both Sides, to try whether any Accommodation could be made. For the Parliament were the Earl of Nottingham, the Lord Wharton, Sir Henry Vane, Major General Skippon, Sir Thomas Widdrington, Col. White, Mr. Scory, Mr. Pury. For the Army were Col. Ireton, Sir Hardreſs Waller, Col. Rich, Col. Lambert, and Major Desborough. Theſe Commiſſioners met at Wickham, and probably had accommodated Matters, if the Agitators had not in the mean time ſent Joyce to take Poſſeſſion of the Perſon of the King, which he did the 5th of June. The Cornet came to Holmby the Night before, and drew up his Troop, ſome ſay 50 and ſome 500 Horſe before the King's Lodgings, at about Eleven a Clock, and then demanded Entrance of Col. Greaves and Major General Browne, who upon this Alarm immediately doubled the Guards, and ask'd him his Name and Buſineſs. He told him his Name was Joyce, a Cornet in Col. Whaley's Regiment, and his Buſineſs was to ſpeak with the King. Being ask'd, From whom? He ſaid, From my ſelf; my Errand is to the King, I muſt and will ſpeak with him. Greaves and Browne bad the Soldiers Stand to their Arms, and be ready to fire at the Word. But thoſe Soldiers finding Joyce's Men were their old Companions, open'd the Gates to them, and receiv'd them as Friends. Joyce plac'd Centinels at the Chamber Doors of the Commiſſioners, and by the Back-Stairs, went up to the Door of the Chamber where the King lay, at which he knock'd ſmartly. The Grooms in waiting deſir'd him to forbear, the King being aſleep; but the Noiſe wak'd him, and being inform'd of the Matter, he ſaid, He would not riſe to ſpeak with him till the Morning, when he ſent for Joyce, who told his Majeſty he was order'd to remove him to the Army. The King demanded a Sight of his Inſtructions, and Joyce pointing to the Court-Yard where his Troop was drawn up, ſaid, There are my Inſtructions. His Majeſty looking out at the Window, and ſeeing them to be tall, ſtout, and well arm'd, reply'd with a Smile, Your Inſtructions are in fair Characters, legible without ſpelling. The Cornet then preſs'd the King to go along with him. His Majeſty told him, He would not ſtir, unleſs the Commiſſioners went alſo. Joyce anſwer'd coldly, He was indifferent as to that; and promis'd his Majeſty ſhould be civilly us'd, and his Servants and other Conveniences continu'd to him. Upon which the King conſented to go. But the the Parliament's Commiſſioners coming to him after Joyce was gone to his Troop, they perſwaded him to alter his Reſolution; which the Cornet perceiving when he return'd, put his Majeſty in Mind of his Promiſe, acquainting him, That he was obliged to execute his Orders. The King reply'd, Since I have given you my Word, I will go with you. But he bid the Earl of Dumferlin, who was preſent, tell the Parliament, That he was taken thence unwillingly; and that tho' he might ſign to many Things, Things, being in this Condition, yet it was not to be believ'd till further Notice given them. The Commiſſioners ask'd Joyce, Whether he had any Orders from the Parliament, and whether he was ſent by the General? To which he bluntly reply'd, No. Two of them, Major General Browne and Mr. Crew, publickly declar'd, That the King was forced out of their Hands. His Majeſty went into his Coach, and the Parliament's Commiſſioners follow'd him whither Joyce thought fit to carry him and them; and except that the Cornet was ſomewhat blunt in his Language, the Lord Clarendon owns he behav'd civilly enough towards the King.

His Officers who waited on him were continu'd, and S r Robert Pye, a Colonel in the Army, ſupplying the Place of Equerry, rode bare before him. General Fairfax knew nothing at all of this unwarrantable Proceeding; and as ſoon as he did know it, he ſent Col. Whalley, with a Party of Horſe, to uſe all Means but Conſtraint to cauſe his Majeſty to return to Holmby. The King was come to Sir John Cuts's at Childerley near Cambridge before Whalley could get up with him; and when Whalley would have perſwaded him to return to Holmby, he abſolutely refus'd it, flattering himſelf that he ſhould find better Uſage from the Army than he had found from the Parliament: So Whalley was only added to his Convoy; and Joyce frankly own'd, That Lieutenant General Cromwel had given him Orders at London to do all he had done.

Cromwel was return'd from the Army to the Parliament while this was doing. He at firſt diſown'd it both to the Two Houſes and the General: But the Feint did not laſt long. Both Houſes were terribly ſurpriz'd at this bold Action of Joyce's. The Earl of Clarendon is extremely delighted with it; but his Lordſhip's Jeſts have too much Gravity in them to have too much Wit. So they are generally taken from Religion; Mr. Marſhall was ſent for to pray with the Parliament. The General could with great Sincerity aſſure them, That Joyce acted without his Privity; That it was his and the Army's Reſolution to ſtudy to ſettle Peace and the juſt Liberties of the People; and the Parliament's ſpeedy Application to theſe, will further the diſbanding of the Army, whoſe Senſe is clear from oppoſing Presbytery, or having an Independent Government, or holding a Licentiouſneſs in Religion, but to leave all to the Wiſdom of the Two Houſes. Fairfax meant as he ſaid, but it was not in his Power to perform it. To excuſe the taking away the King from Holmby, 'twas given out by the Soldiers, that the Parliament intended to have him remov'd to London, and to make Peace with him: It was even ſaid, that Col. Greaves had receiv'd Orders from them to that Purpoſe. But Cromwel was beforehand with them. The Stroke being ſtruck, the Parliament thought it the wiſeſt way to temporize with the Army till a better Juncture offer'd, and wrote to their Commiſſioners appointed to treat with the Army's Commiſſioners, to go to the General, and confer with him about further Satisfaction for the Soldiers. Theſe Commiſſioners met Joyce on the Road as he was conveying the King to New-Market, and one of them told the Cornet he deſerv'd to be hang'd; but Joyce was not in the leaſt ſtartled at it, and gave them to underſtand, That he from whom he receiv'd his Orders, was able to protect him in the Execution of them. When Cromwel came to the Army, which he had promis'd the Parliament to bring to Reaſon, he repreſented to Fairfax, that nothing could have been done of greater Advantage to the Army and their Generals, to the Church and State, than what Joyce had been doing; That the King was on the Point of making an Accommodation with the Parliament, who had determin'd to ſend Col. Greaves to fetch him; and if Joyce had not fetch'd him, there would have been an End of both Officers and Army, and all the Pains they had taken for the Publick Good, would not only have been uſeleſs, but criminal. Theſe Reaſons appeas'd the General, and Cromwel had others which appeas'd the King, to whom he promis'd the beſt Services that were in his Power, not without Intimation that he would procure him better Terms than had yet been propos'd by the Parliament, which he confirm'd with much outward Reſpect and Ceremony, and the King really thought his Condition was alter'd for the better.

Fairfax impos'd upon.

During theſe Tranſactions, the City of London petition'd again, That all honourable Means may be us'd to avoid ſhedding of more Blood; That Satisfaction might be given to the Army; That the Covenant may be kept, and his Majeſty's Perſon preſerv'd; That the Parliaments of England and Scotland may have Acceſs to him; That Ireland may be relieved, and the Ordinance to prevent Tumults and Dangers to the Parliament and City be removed; which was immediately order'd, and the Petitioners had the heartieſt Thanks the Houſe could expreſs for their conſtant Affections to the Parliament; who order'd an Ordinance to be brought in for making void the Declaration againſt the Army, who had appointed a general Rendezvous at Triploe Heath near Cambridge, which probably was the Occaſion of the laſt Ordinance: But whatever the Parliament did, the Army took no more Notice of it than they thought fit. Colonel Sands, Col. Devereux, and Col. Wiltſhire, coming to the Houſe, inform'd them, that meeting with a Major lately come from Triploe Heath, he told them the Army was upon their Advance, and the Horſe would be here To-morrow by Noon. The Sheriffs and Common Council came to the Houſe ſoon after, with a Letter ſent from the Army to the ſame Purpoſe as the Major ſaid, which threw both Parliament and City into the moſt terrible Conſternation. Now they fear that their Votes were Brutum fulmen, againſt an armed Power, whom they had irritated, and could not appeaſe, without ſubmitting to be directed by them, and permitting them to ſhare in the Sovereignty. True enough it is, they were both out in their Politicks. The Cavaliers were the Common Enemy; they had ſubdu'd them indeed, but there was no Security that they ſhould not again be able to re-act their Tyranny. The King always underſtood himſelf to be the Law, and the People knowing that the Conſtitution was monarchical, were eaſily impos'd upon to believe that his Counſels were the Laws. 'Twas neceſſary to have his Conſent to thoſe Bills that were moſt likely to ſecure the Rights and Liberties of the People againſt future Invaſions; and there was no Likelihood of his conſenting to ſuch Acts, while Parliament and Army were both courting him to be of their Party. The Parliament were ſincere in their good Diſpoſitions towards him, after Proviſion was made for their Security. Part of the Army thought as they did. Major General Fincher, Major Alſop, Major Huntington, and many other Officers, expreſs'd their Readineſs to fall in with the Parliament's Meaſures, and were ſo forward as to ſeparate from their Brethren who were of the Party of Agitators; but this

Sepa-

A. D. 1647. Separation hurt the Cauſe they intended to ſerve, for their Places were preſently fill'd up by Cromwel, who govern'd Fairfax, with Men fit for his Purpoſe, and the Army Party made ſtronger and more imperious. The General to Appearance ſeem'd compliable with the Parliament, but Cromwel had ever ſome Reaſons or other to lead him contrary to his Intentions. Fairfax order'd a general Rendezvous at Royſton, where the Parliament's Commiſſioners were preſent, and it was reſolv'd to go from Regiment to Regiment to have their Reſolution as to Compliance with the Votes for Ireland and Disbanding. They began with the General's own Regiment, and were ſo ill ſatisfy'd with their Succeſs, that they went no farther, for they cry'd No to all their Queries, and added Juſtice, Juſtice. Nor were they without their Partiſans, who procur'd Petitions from ſeveral Counties, as Eſſex and Norfolk, that they might not be disbanded. After the Rendezvous, the Army, to ſhew they were in earneſt, drew nearer to London; and the Citizens, who had new modell'd their Militia to defend the Parliament and themſelves, began to be apprehenſive that ſuch Defence would ſtand them in little ſtead againſt 30000 Horſe and Foot, fluſh'd with Victory. The Train'd Bands were order'd out on Pain of Death; but alas! the moſt ſerviceable of them had ſerv'd in the Army; and tho' Sir William Waller, Sir Philip Stapleton, General Maſſey, and other Officers who were Members of Parliament, promis'd to head them, tho' ſeveral hundred Soldiers who had deſerted with their Commanders on the Diviſions between the Parliament and Army, were in a Readineſs to join them, yet the Terror of Cromwel's Approach diſpirited both the Train'd Bands and Citizens. The Shops were ſhut up, and thoſe who had been active in getting Petitions and Votes againſt the Army, were more afraid of them than ever they had been of the Cavaliers. The Common-Council, with Approbation of both Houſes, ſent a Deputation to the Army to treat with the General and Officers, about a right Underſtanding between them and the City. The Parliament ſent Sir Thomas Widdrington to the General with a Letter, deſiring him not to advance nearer London; but he was come near St. Alban's before Widdrington deliver'd his Letter; and he told him, he doubted not he ſhould ſend ſuch Reaſons for the Soldiers advancing as would ſatisfy both Houſes, whoſe Panick increas'd ſo much, that they ſaid and unſaid, did and undid Things, as they were hurry'd on by Fear and Confuſion. They ſent for the Militia of Weſtminſter to come and guard them: They might as well have ſent for the Veſtry of St. Margaret's! However, upon the Appearance of theſe Train'd Bands under Capt. Falconbridge and Capt. White, they recover'd themſelves a little, and made a bold Order, That the General be requir'd to deliver the Perſon of the King to ſuch Perſon as both Houſes ſhall appoint, who were their Commiſſioners in the Army, and Col. Roſſiter's Regiment was order'd to be his and their Guard. But the Army were as buſy as the Parliament, and ſent ſeveral haughty Demands to them; the Fruit of which was, that Eleven of their Members, Denzil Hollis, Eſq; Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir William Lewis, Sir John Clotworthy, Sir William Waller, Sir John Maynard, Major General Maſſey, Serjeant Glyn, Col. Walter Long, Col. Edward Harley, Anthony Nichols, Eſq; be ſuſpended. The Charge againſt them was ſign'd by Sir Thomas Fairfax and the other Officers: The General being led on ſo far by Cromwel, without conſidering whither he was leading him, which he conſider'd much too late. The Charge was, for obſtructing the Buſineſs of Ireland, which they had moſt vigorouſly forwarded, and the Soldiers had themſelves oppos'd, for acting againſt the Army, which was their juſt Endeavour to keep them within their due Obedience, for being againſt the Laws and Liberties of the Subject. The Army now had gotten the King's Phraſe, who in all his Declarations, and Meſſages, reproach'd them with acting againſt the Laws, for obſtructing Juſtice. No-body can tell what they meant by that. After the reading of the Charge, the Members ſeverally made ſome Defence, and deſir'd to be brought to a ſpeedy Trial: But this Charge was follow'd by a Declaration from the Army, deliver'd by Col. Scrope, Col. Okey, Col. Hewſon, Col. Pride, and five Captains, Berry, Clark, Carter, Rolph, and Sexbie; deſiring, That the Perſons impeach'd be ſuſpended till they are brought to Trial; That no Forces be rais'd, and none drawn together, with Deſign to begin another War with the Army. With which the Parliament comply'd. The Eleven Members found the Houſe of Commons too hot for them, and abſented themſelves. Mr. Hollis went to France, and return'd not till after the Reſtoration. Sir Philip Stapleton went to Calais, but was not permitted Entrance into the Town, being ſuſpected to have the Plague. Glyn was ſo conſcious of his Innocence, that he ſtood it out, and demanded Trial; but the Army not having prepar'd Matter for it, the Houſe, to pleaſe them, expell'd him, and committed him to the Tower. Nichols was order'd into Cuſtody, but he made his Eſcape from the Meſſenger. Maynard was impeach'd of High Treaſon, and impriſon'd in the Tower. Maſſey went beyond Sea; and the reſt of the Eleven Members retir'd to their Eſtates in the Country, and concern'd themſelves no more in publick Affairs, with which the Army were content. The Common-Council of London, who lately would be ſatisfy'd with nothing leſs than having the Militia of the City put into their Hands, and who talk'd of raiſing Men to defend them againſt the Army, chang'd their Tone a little, on the Report of their Commiſſioners, whom they had ſent to the General, and voted a Letter to him, with Leave of the Parliament, to acquaint him that no Forces ſhould be rais'd againſt the Army, and that they would move the Parliament for Money to pay them. Cromwel's Enemies gave him all Advantages againſt them they could, by their ill Conduct: For to detain the Soldiers Pay after they had ſerv'd them ſo faithfully and ſo ſucceſsfully, was univerſally condemn'd as ungrateful as well as unjuſt; yet ſuch was the Hatred of the Hollis Party to that of the Army, that they added Inſolence to their Injuſtice and Ingratitude, and talk'd of them always as Enemies, taking not one regular Step to reconcile Matters, which might eaſily have been accompliſh'd by paying the Officers and Soldiers well, giving them good Words, and gradually diſperſing them by ſeparate Services in Ireland, and other Places where they might be employ'd or disbanded at Pleaſure. But they were blinded by Pique and Paſſion, and a vain Hope of Support by the City and the Scots. The laſt Declaration brought from the Army was follow'd by another: 1. That the Houſes may be purg'd of ſuch as ought not to ſit there. 2. That the Perſons who had abus'd the Parliament and Army may be ſpeedily diſabled from doing the like. 3. That ſome Time may be ſet for the Continuance of this and future Parliaments. 4. That Proviſion be made that future Parliaments may not be diſſolv'd at the King's Pleaſure.

Whitlocke tells us, that theſe Declarations were generally drawn up by Col. Ireton, who held the Pen for his Party, and having been bred in the Inner Temple, had acquir'd good Knowledge in the Laws, as had alſo Col. Lambert by the like Education. Ludlow, tho' a Republican in Principle, did not like the mutinous Proceedings of the Army, it being viſibly done with Deſign to ſubject the Civil to the Military Power, which he abhorr'd. The Army having their Head Quarters at Maidenhead, Ludlow went thither to viſit the Officers, and particularly Ireton, the Commiſſary General, who ſuſpecting that theſe Things might occaſion Jealouſies of them in Ludlow and others of their Friends in the Houſe, deſir'd him to be aſſur'd of their ſtedfaſt Adherence to the Publick Intereſt, and that they intended only to diſpenſe with ſuch Things as were not material, in order to quiet the reſtleſs Spirits of the Cavaliers, till they could put themſelves into a Condition of ſerving the People effectually. We have hinted that the Militia of London was ſettled by an Ordinance in the Management of the Presbyterians, who were very induſtrious in compleating their Companies: but, as we have alſo hinted, this gave Offence to the Army; and Fairfax on the 10th of June ſent a Letter to the Parliament, That the Militia of London might be put into the Hands of Perſons that were better affected to the Army; which was done, and the Ordinance revers'd two Months after 'twas made. This ſo diſguſted the City, that a Petition was preſented by 1000 Apprentices, ſetting forth, That the Command of the Militia of the City was the Birth-right belonging to them by Charters confirm'd in Parliament, for Defence whereof they had adventur'd their Lives as far as the Army. They deſir'd the Militia may be put again into the ſame Hands in which it was put with the Parliament's and City's Conſent, by the before-mention'd Ordinance. Some of theſe Apprentices were ſo rude as to ruſh into the Houſe of Commons, keeping the Door open, and their Hats on, crying out, Vote, Vote; in which arrogant Poſture they ſtood till the Votes paſs'd as they would have them. In the Evening, July 26. ſome of the Common-Council came down to the Houſe, and underſtanding that the Apprentices had forc'd the Speaker and the Members to put the Queſtion for repealing the Ordinance, they order'd them to diſperſe, which they did immediately. This Petition was got by the Management of Hollis's Party, and ſo were ſeveral others too tedious to repeat. Contrary Petitions were procur'd by the Army Party, and both Parties had always Hands ready to ſubſcribe to what they would have them. Thus the Parliament were held in continual Amuſement, ſometimes by the City, ſometimes by the Army. They could not pleaſe both, nor themſelves; and in this Perplexity Men of leſs Capacity than the Earl of Clarendon's moſt capable Counſellors might have taken ſome Advantage for the King, if their Wiſdom had been ſo great as their Zeal, or their Care of their Maſter in any Compariſon with their Care of themſelves.

Diviſions in the City.

The Houſe of Commons grew pretty thin at this Time, becauſe many of the moſt able Members appear'd the leſs there, for that they reſented the Uſurpations upon them by the City and Army, who were perpetually making Demands and giving Directions. There were Commiſſioners appointed by the Army, Lieutenant General Cromwel, Col. Ireton, Col. Fleetwood, Col. Rainsborough, Col. Harriſon, Sir Hardreſs Waller, Col. Rich, Col. Lambert, Col. Hammond, and Major Rainsborough, to treat with the Parliament's Commiſſioners concerning the Parliament's Votes, and the Army's Petitions. The Army had their Head Quarters at Reading, and the King was lodg'd at Cauſham, the Lord Craven's Seat, near that Town.

We left his Majeſty at Royſton, from whence he mov'd with the Army to Hatfield, where two of his Chaplains, Dr. Hammond and Dr. Sheldon, were admitted to attend him, and great Ceremony was obſerv'd towards him by the Officers. Some of them went ſo far as to give out, That they intended to eſtabliſh his Majeſty in his juſt Rights; which good News was ſent to the Queen and Prince of Wales in France; and tho' Mr. Hyde was with them to ſearch into the Depths of every Stratagem of their Enemies, yet he was ſo impos'd on by the Artifices of the Officers, that he counſell'd the ſending away Sir Edward Ford, Brother-in-law to Commiſſary General Ireton, into England, to ſound the Deſigns of the Army, whether or no they did really intend to reſtore the King to the full Exerciſe of the Sovereign Power, for which they were themſelves now contending with the Parliament. Sir John Berkley follow'd Ford on the ſame hopeful Errand, as did alſo Mr. William Legg. They both landed at Haſtings, and being on their Way towards London, were met by Sir Allen Appſley, who had been Lieutenant Governor to Sir John Berkley at Exeter, and by whom he underſtood that he was ſent to him from Cromwel and other Officers of the Army, to put him in Mind of ſome Diſcourſe which Sir John had with Col. Lambert at a Conference on the Surrender of Exeter, wherein Berkley took Notice of the bitter Invectives of thoſe of the Army againſt the King's Perſon; and preſuming that ſuch Diſcourſes were encourag'd in order to prepare Mens Minds to receive an Alteration of the Government, he had ſaid it was not only a moſt wicked, but difficult Undertaking, if not impoſſible, for a few Men, not of the greateſt Quality, to introduce a popular Government againſt the King, the Presbyterians, the Nobility, Gentry, and the Genius of the Nation, accuſtom'd to Monarchy for ſo many Ages; adviſing Lambert and the other Officers, that ſince the Presbyterians, who had begun the War upon divers ſpecious Pretences, were diſcover'd to have ſought their own Ends, by which Means they had loſt almoſt all their Power and Credit, the Independent Party, who had no particular Obligations to the Crown, as many of the Presbyterians had, would make good what the Presbytery had only pretended to, and reſtore the King and People to their juſt and ancient Rights, to which they were oblig'd both by Prudence and Intereſt, there being no Means under Heaven more likely to eſtabliſh themſelves, and obtain as much Truſt and Power as Subjects are capable of; whereas if they aim'd at more, it would be accompany'd with a general Hatred and their own Deſtruction. Sir Allen added, he had Orders to let Sir John Berkley know, that tho' to this Diſcourſe of his they then gave only the Hearing; yet they had ſince found by Experience, that all, or the moſt part of it, was reaſonable, and that the Officers were reſolved to act accordingly, as might be perceived by what had already paſt, that Cromwel and the Officers deſired he would preſent them humbly to the Queen and Prince, and be a Suitor to them in their Names, not to condemn them abſolutely, but to ſuſpend their Opinions of them and their Intentions,

If this Relation, taken from a Manuſcript written in Sir John Berkley's own Hand be true, the Advice given the Independents to make themſelves Maſters of the Army and Parliament, came from the Cavaliers, and conſequently to them may more reaſonably be imputed the Death of the King than to the Presbyterians, who always adviſ'd the quite contrary: For if Cromwel had not hearken'd to Berkley, the Army had never uſurp'd the Power of their Maſters the Parliament; and had they never uſurp'd it, the King had never been put to Death. His Majeſty was then at Hatfield, and the Parliament, the major Vote, being ſtill Presbyterians, voted that he ſhould be remov'd to Richmond, and that they would ſend the Propoſitions for Peace, reduc'd to Bills; but the Army, very ſenſible of what was intended by it, declar'd againſt his Majeſty's being remov'd to Richmond, at which the King took great Offence, and when after his reſolute inſiſting upon it he was remov'd to Windſor, he would not paſs by the Army's Head Quarters at Maidenhead, nor ſee the Officers in his Way. The Parliament to ſweeten the Army a little, voted, That they do own this Army as their Army, and will make Proviſion for their Maintenance and Pay, which had ſo good Effect, that the Head Quarters were remov'd from Uxbridge to Wicomb, and thence to Maidenhead, and thence to Reading, as is above mention'd. While his Majeſty lay at Cauſham, he was viſited by the Elector Palatine, with Conſent of the Parliament, who at the Requeſt of Sir Thomas Fairfax, voted that the Earl of Northumberland ſhould attend the King with his Children at Cauſham, and ſee them ſafe back again to the Palace of St. James's, where they were lodg'd. The General removing his Head Quarters to Aylesbury, his Majeſty was remov'd to Woburn, and thence to Latimers, within the Eye ſtill of the Army, who had admitted the Duke of Richmond as well as Dr. Sheldon and Dr. Hammond, to wait on the King, but the Parliament ſent an Order to diſmiſs them; and the General wrote a Letter to the Parliament, complaining of the late Petition of the Apprentices, and the Force put upon them by mutinous Aſſemblies, inſinuating that it was neceſſary he ſhould bring the Army to Town, to free them from ſuch Inſults; which being rumour'd in the City, the Citizens were at firſt ſpirited by Hollis's Party to ſtand to their Defence; Sir William Waller, Major General Maſſey and Major General Points appear'd among them, and offer'd to command their Militia, and new rais'd Men. The Army Party in Parliament finding Things were come to an Extremity, and that it would fare ill with them if they ſtaid longer at London, where all Things for a while tended to a Rupture with the Soldiery, left the two Houſes, and put themſelves under the Protection of General Fairfax, who order'd a General Rendezvous of the Army on Hounſlow Heath, where were preſent the Earls of Northumberland, Salisbury, Kent, the Lord Grey of Werke, the Lord Howard, the Lord Wharton, the Earl of Mulgrave, and the Lord Say, and ſix Lords more with the Earl of Mancheſter, their Speaker: There were alſo preſent about 100 Members of the Houſe of Commons, with their Speaker, Mr. Lenthal, and both Speakers with their Maces as in full Parliament, the Army being drawn up in Battalia. The General accompany'd with the Lords and Commons took a Review of them riding along the Line from Regiment to Regiment. The Soldiers made great Acclamations, crying, Lords and Commons, and a free Parliament. His Highneſs the Prince Elector came alſo to the Army, who were ſtill more provok'd by the Proceedings of thoſe Lords and Commons who remain'd at Weſtminſter, and call'd themſelves the Parliament of England, as indeed they were the major Vote in both Houſes. The Lords choſe the Lord Hunſdon, and the Commons Henry Pelham, Eſq; for their Speakers, and then proceeded to vote, 1. That the King ſhould come to London. That the Militia of the City have Power to raiſe what Forces they think fit. That they chooſe a Commander in Chief, and other Officers: Accordingly the Common Council made Choice of Major General Maſſey, and their Forces, Trained Bands, Auxiliaries, and Reformades were muſter'd in St. James's Fields. In the mean Time the General enter'd into Communication with the Members of both Houſes, and then at his Head Quarters wrote to the City, That he was tender of them; but laying to Heart thoſe unparallel'd Paſſages of entring the Houſe of Commons, and compelling the Members to vote; he is ſenſible of his Obligations to the Parliament, and that the Army are reſolv'd, what other Neglect ſoever hath been, for their Security to uſe their beſt Endeavours, as God ſhall enable them, for the Preſervation of the Parliament from Violence. Graveſend Blockhouſes were ſecur'd for the Army, and the Borough of Southwark fell off from the City in this Conteſt. Moſt of the Eleven impeach'd Members retook their Seats in the Houſe of Commons, and Sir William Waller, Major General Maſſey, and Major General Points, continu'd Liſting of Reformades for the Defence of the City. The Citizens were even ſo bold as to publiſh a Declaration againſt the Armies fetching away the King from Holmby; againſt Breach of Privilege with Reſpect to the impeach'd Members. For delivering the King out of the Hands of the Army, &c. We ſee that this Party are loſt to all Politicks: They fire with Powder only, and will not be able to keep themſelves together a Minute on News of the Army's advancing; yet they voted, That the Ordinance which puts the Command of all Land Forces under Sir Thomas Fairfax, does not give him Power over the Militia. And thus have they erected a new General, Major General Maſſey, and a new Army, the London Train'd Bands, Auxiliaries and Reformades, with a Commiſſion equal to General Fairfax's; and it is not owing to their Prudence if theſe two Armies do not renew the War. For the People of Southwark petitioning the Common Council that they might not be liſted under Points or Maſſey; ſome of the Train'd Bands fell upon the Petitioners in Guild-Hall Yard, cruelly hack'd and diſpers'd them. The Army advancing to Colnbrook, his Majeſty was lodg'd at Stoke Abbey. Col. Rainsborough was ſent on Kingſton Side, with a Brigade to aſſiſt the well affected in the Borough of Southwark. The next Head Quarters were at Iſleworth; and Maſſey's Scouts meeting ſome of the Parliament's at Brentford, there was a ſmall Skirmiſh, in which the Citizens had the worſt of it, which much appall'd the moſt reſolute of them in the Council at Guild-hall, where when the leaſt good News came, the City was One and All; but when Intelligence was brought that the Army was on the March, the Cry was loud to Treat, Treat, Treat, and at laſt both the Common Council and Council of Mili-

The Perplexity of the City.

A. D. 1647. Militia, agreed to ſend a Letter to the General, beſeeching him that there might be a Way of Compoſure. He demanded to have the Forts on the Weſt Side of London immediately deliver'd up to him, for he was coming to Town with thoſe Members of both Houſes of Parliament who had been driven thence by the Violence of the mutinous Multitude, which was preſently comply'd with, and the next Day, being the 6th of Auguſt, the Army march'd to London. At Hide Park Corner the Lord Mayor and Aldermen met the General, and congratulated him on the late Compoſure between the Army and City. Then he proceeded towards Weſtminſter in the following Order: Firſt, Colonel Hammond's Regiment of Foot, then Colonel Rich and Colonel Cromwel's Regiments of Horſe. Then the General on Horſeback with his Life-Guard, then the Speakers and Members of the Houſe of Lords and Houſe of Commons in Coaches. Colonel Tomlinſon's Regiment of Horſe brought up the Rear. The General was accompanied with many Officers and Gentlemen, and every Soldier had a Laurel Branch in his Hat. As they paſs'd by Charing Croſs the Common Council, who ſtood there, ſaluted them, and in the new Palace Yard, Weſtminſter, the General alighted, and the Lords and Commons went to their ſeveral Houſes. The Lords ſent for Sir Thomas Fairfax, and gave him Thanks for his good Service in reſtoring the Members of Parliament. A Chair was plac'd for him in the Houſe of Commons, and with much Importunity he was prevail'd upon to ſit in it while the Speaker gave him Thanks for his great and faithful Services, and in particular, for reſtoring the Members of both Houſes to their former Freedom and Privileges. An Ordinance paſs'd immediately, to make him Conſtable of the Tower; and another to make void all Acts done by ſome Lords and Gentlemen, Members of both Houſes at Weſtminſter, when the Speakers and Members were driven away by Tumults. The next Day the General and Army, Horſe and Foot, with a gallant Train of Artillery, march'd through the City of London in ſo orderly and civil a Manner, that not the leaſt Offence or Prejudice was offer'd by them to any Man, either in Word, Action or Geſture, as they marched along, which confuted the Surmiſes of ſome of their Enemies, that the Deſign of the Soldiers was to plunder the City. The General quarter'd at Croydon, and the Army in Kent, Surrey, and Eſſex. He took Poſſeſſion of the Tower, turn'd out the Trained Bands, and put Colonel Pride's Regiment of Foot into it. The Tone of the City is now ſtrangely alter'd. The Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council, came to the Tower, to wait on his Excellency, where Alderman Gibbs made a Speech to him, To thank him and his Army for their Love and Care of the City, and to invite him and his Officers to dine at Guildhall, which he excus'd on Account of the great Affairs with which he and his Officers were at preſent taken up. They preſented him with a Baſon and Ewer of Gold, of a thouſand Pounds value. A Committee of Lords and Commons were appointed to examine the Force put upon the two Houſes by the Apprentices, and find out the chief Actors. The latter were ſet on by Hollis's Party, who whether to eſtabliſh Presbytery excluſive of all other Denominations, or to advance themſelves by making their Peace with the King, encourag'd Tumults as much as before the Civil War, and ſeem'd diſpos'd rather to ſacrifice the promis'd Security againſt future Tyranny, than not to have their Revenge on thoſe that promoted the Self-denying Ordinance, by which ſo many of them were diſplac'd. They puſh'd their Reſentments ſo far, that ſome of them, as Maſſey, Brown, Anneſley, &c. turn'd rank Cavaliers, and their Bigotry and Ambition did certainly deprive the Nation of the good Settlement which muſt have been the Conſequence of their Union with the Army. The Committee before mentioned voted that Sir John Gayer, Lord Mayor, Alderman Bunce, Alderman Langham, Alderman Cullum, and Alderman Adams, were Actors in the late Force put upon the Parliament, for which they were impriſon'd and impeach'd of High Treaſon. The ſame Impeachment was order'd againſt Lieutenant Colonel Chapman, Lieutenant Colonel Bains, Captain Muſgrave, Mr. Malory a Miniſter; and of high Crimes and Miſdemeanors againſt Colonel Vaughan, Colonel Lawrence, Colonel Hooker, Captain Jones.

Army enter London.

A. D. 1647.

His Majeſty was removed to Oatlands, and Sir Thomas Fairfax's Head Quarters were at Hampton, from whence the Army ſent a Remonſtrance to the Parliament, requiring the Purging the Houſe, by ſecluding all the Members who acted and voted when the Speakers and other Members were driven away by the Tumult of the Apprentices; in which Remonſtrance General Fairfax concurr'd as well as Cromwel, and this Purge was the Beginning of the Revolution which made the Cataſtrophe of the other ſo tragical. The City Militia which had been the Occaſion of this Buſtle, was put into the Hands of the old Commiſſioners, whom the Hollis Party had turn'd out, as Alderman Pennington, Alderman Wollaſton, Alderman Atkins, Alderman Warner, Alderman Fouke, Alderman Gibbs, Alderman Ven, Alderman Allen, Alderman Foot, by which 'tis evident, that the Party in the City which ſided with the Army, were not the beggarly Rabble, as the Earl of Clarendon repreſents them, but the moſt wealthy Citizens and Magiſtrates, and that their Opponents were in Truth a Faction ſpirited up by the eleven Members to promote Deſigns which they durſt not own, and therefore pretended to have nothing at Heart but the Purity of Religion, and Uniformity of Worſhip and Diſcipline.

I muſt confeſs this Party to me are worſe than the Cavaliers. They had by their Clamours and Intrigues brought on the Civil War for Redreſs of Grievances, and now they might have had every Grievance ſo effectually redreſs'd, as not to be in any Danger of being renew'd again, they out of Pique about Places and Penſions fall off from the Common Cauſe, and would have deſtroy'd that Army on which entirely depended not only the Well-being, but the very Being of the Parliament, from whom the Nation expected Liberty and Security.

Hollis's Party worſe than the Cavaliers.

His Majeſty from Oatlands was remov'd to Sion, when the Army's Head Quarters were at Putney, and ſoon after to Hampton Court, where the Princes and Princeſſes, his Children, were admitted to him, when and as often as he pleas'd. The Nobility were allow'd their Viſits, and his Houſhold was ſettled in ſo much Order, that there was no Appearance of any Want either in Expence or Ceremony. It was inſinuated to the King, that he was indebted for all theſe good Offices to Cromwel and Ireton. The Houſe of Commons impeached the Earl of Suffolk, the Earl of Lincoln, the Earl of Middleſex, the Lord Willoughby of Parham, the Lord Hunſdon, the Lord Maynard, the Lord Berkley, of High Treaſon, who were put into ſeveral Priſons, but upon their Submiſſion and Repentance they were diſcharg'd, and the Impeachment dropt. The

The King at Hampton-Court.

A. D. 1647. Forts and Lines caſt up for Defence of the City were demoliſh'd, and the Party which had given Offence to the Army were ſo humbled that they durſt not ſhow themſelves, otherwiſe than in ſnarling Pamphlets, as no Merlin, no Mercurius Bellum Hibernicale, &c.

During theſe Commotions the Propoſitions of Peace ſtopt in both Houſes, and the King diſcover'd on all Occaſions his good Wiſhes to the Party of Hollis, who had voted his Return to London. Theſe Sentiments hinder'd him from giving Ear to the Whiſpers of Cromwel's Creatures, that he might expect the beſt Services from him. Ireton taking Notice of the Change of his Majeſty's Temper, with reſpect to the Army, whom he at firſt careſs'd, told him, Sir, You have an Intention to be Arbitrator between the Parliament and us, and we mean to be ſo between you and the Parliament. His Majeſty finding himſelf courted on all Hands, became ſo confident of his Intereſt, as to think himſelf able to turn the Scale. And in theſe Sentiments Sir John Berkley found him when he deliver'd the Queen's Letters to him, with Permiſſion from Cromwel, who had confirm'd what Sir Allen Appeſley had told him, with this Addition, That he thought no Man could enjoy his Life and Eſtate quietly unleſs the King had his Right, which he ſaid the Army had already declar'd to the World in general Terms, and would more particularly very ſpeedily, by Propoſitions which ſhould comprize Royaliſts, Presbyterians, and Independents, as far as they were conſiſtent with one another, Sir John Berkley endeavour'd to perſwade the King to diſſemble with the Army, and permit Mr. Peters to preach before him, to converſe freely with the Officers, and cajole the Agitators, whoſe Intereſt encreas'd. But this good Advice, which certainly would have ſav'd him, made no Impreſſion upon his Majeſty.

Deceiv'd ſtill by Cromwel. Ludlow tells us, Cromwel ſaid, Never Man was ſo abus'd as he in his ſiniſter Opinion of the King, who he thought was the moſt Upright and Conſcientious Man in the Kingdom. That the Independents had infinite Obligations to him; for not conſenting to the Propoſition ſent to him at Newcaſtle, which would have totally ruin'd them, and which his Majeſty's Intereſt ſeem'd to invite him to. Concluding with this Wiſh, That God would be pleas'd to look upon him according to the Sincerity of his Heart towards the King. But his Majeſty firmly believing Cromwel talk'd after this Rate from a Neceſſity he and the Army had of him, ſlighted all theſe good Offers: And notwithſtanding the Myſteries on which the Lord Clarendon founds this Part of Cromwel's Hiſtory, it is certain he had not as yet form'd any Deſign againſt the Perſon of the King, whoſe Miſtake concerning him prov'd ſo fatal. His Majeſty was wont to ſay, when any mention was made of Cromwel and the Army, They can do nothing without me; which Opinion was the more reaſonable in Appearance, for that ſome of the Agitators came to Sir John Berkley, and expreſs'd their Jealouſy that Cromwel was not ſincere with the King, deſiring that if Berkley found him falſe they might be acquainted with it, and they would endeavour to ſet him right, either with or againſt his Will. Major Huntington was a Confident of Cromwel, and therefore entruſted with the Command of the Guard about the King, yet he was ſo well convinc'd of his Patron's Intentions to ſerve his Majeſty, that to do the King what Service he could, he brought two General Officers to Sir John Berkley to aſſure him, that the King was univerſally deſir'd by the Army, and Cromwel and Ireton were great Diſſemblers, and not real; but the Army was ſo bent upon it at preſent, that thoſe two Generals durſt not appear otherwiſe. They proteſted, that however Things might happen to change, and what ſome others might do, they would for ever continue faithful to the King. They told Sir John, that Propoſitions were drawn up by Ireton, wherein Epiſcopacy was not requir'd to be eſtabliſh'd, nor any of the King's Party wholly ruin'd, nor the Militia to be quite taken away. They adviſ'd, that his Majeſty would with all Expedition agree to them, while the Army was in this Diſpoſition, which they could not be ſure would laſt always. This Matter went ſo far, that Sir John Berkley had a Conference with Ireton himſelf, in which they debated the Propoſitions a whole Night, and Berkley alter'd two of the Articles in the moſt material Points, but upon his endeavouring to alter a Third, about excluding Delinquents from Pardon, Mr. Hyde always one, Ireton ſaid, There muſt be a Diſtinction made between the Conquerors and thoſe that had been beaten, and he himſelf ſhould be afraid of a Parliament where the King's Party had the major Vote. He conjur'd him, as he tender'd the King's Welfare to endeavour to procure his Conſent to the Propoſitions, that they might with more Confidence be offer'd to the Parliament, and all Differences be accommodated. Cromwel and Ireton did not forget themſelves in the private Articles; we are told Cromwel was to be made Earl of Eſſex, and Vicar General of England, as Cromwel Earl of Eſſex was in Henry the VIII's Reign, and Ireton was to be Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

Ireton treats with Berkley.

Upon the whole, we have no Reaſon to believe, but that this Relation is true, and that in caſe his Majeſty had comply'd with theſe Propoſitions, the Army would have oblig'd the Parliament to paſs them. Whitlocke ſays, The King's Biſhops, always unfortunate to him, perſwaded him againſt what he was inclin'd in his own Judgment to have agreed to, and ſo ruin'd him and themſelves. Contrary to this, the Earl of Clarendon aſſures us, he was never inclin'd to agree to any Thing againſt Epiſcopacy. It is in vain to take Notice of the various Petitions preſented to the two Houſes, they are ſo numerous and ſo oppoſite to each other. The Borough of Southwark petitions, That the Houſes might be purg'd of ſuch as aſſiſted in the late Tumults. The City of London, where thoſe Tumults were hatch'd, petition the ſame. The like do the Counties of Somerſet, Oxon, Bucks, Hartford, &c. Thus we ſee again, that the Purge attributed to, and accompliſh'd by Pride, as will be ſeen hereafter, was not only the Deſire of the Army but of the People. Both Houſes of Parliament agreed, that in the Settlement of Church Government and Worſhip, Liberty of Conſcience ſhould be allowed to all Perſons, except Papiſts, and thoſe that us'd the Common Prayer. The Houſe of Commons voted, That a Period ſhould be put to this Parliament, within a Year after his Majeſty had paſs'd the Bills that were form'd out of their Propoſitions, and that the King ſhould be reſtor'd to his Rights, to his Queen and Children. Theſe Votes did not ſatisfy the Army, whoſe Council of General Officers ſent a Paper to the Parliament, directing how future Elections, Times of Seſſion, and Adjournments ſhould be regulated. They offer'd other Regulations, and took upon them to direct the two Houſes in their Proceedings towards the Settling of the Nation, which made the Parliament the more deſirous of coming to Terms with the King, without their Interpoſition. Cromwel ſaw this, and in all his Conferences with Sir John Berkley, appear'd moſt zealous for a ſpeedy Agreement to Ireton's Propoſitions, which were lower than the Parliament's in the Articles of Epiſcopacy and the Militia. He wiſh'd Sir John would act more frankly, and not tie himſelf up by narrow Principles, always intimating, he doubted the Army would not perſiſt in their good Intentions towards the King. When thoſe Propoſitions were preſented to the King, he was much diſpleas'd with them, expecting from the Diſcourſe he had had with the Officers, that they would have been ſtill lower. His Majeſty ſaid, If they had any Intention to come to an Accommodation, they would not impoſe ſuch Conditions on him. To which Sir John Berkley anſwer'd, That he ſhould rather ſuſpect they deſign'd to abuſe him if they had demanded leſs, there being no Appearance that Men who had through ſo many Dangers and Difficulties acquir'd ſuch Advantages, would content themſelves with leſs than was contain'd in thoſe Propoſitions, and that a Crown ſo near loſt was never recovered ſo eaſy as this would be, if Things were adjuſted upon theſe Terms. The Articles the King objected to were, 1. The Excluſion of 7 Perſons, Mr. Hyde always one, from Pardon. 2. The Incapacitating any of his Party from being elected Members of the next enſuing Parliament. 3. The leaving Church Matters unſettled, that all but Papiſts and Laudeans might have Liberty of Conſcience. When Arguments were us'd to his Majeſty for his Compliance, he breaks away from Berkley and others, ſaying, Well, I ſhall ſee them glad e'er long to accept of more equal Terms.

Berkley perſwades the King to comply with the Army.

About this Time Mr. John Aſhburnham arriv'd from France, to the King's great Contentment, and his Inſtructions referring to Sir John Berkley's, which they were to proſecute jointly, Sir John gave him what Light he could into the State of Affairs, but he ſoon departed from the Methods propos'd by Sir John Berkley, and entirely complying with the King's Humour, declar'd openly, That having always us'd the beſt Company, he could not converſe with ſuch ſenſeleſs Fellows as the Agitators. That if the Officers could be gain'd there was no doubt but they would be able to command their own Army, and he would wholly apply himſelf to them. Upon this there grew a great Familiarity between him and Whalley, who commanded the Guards that waited on the King in Turn with Huntington, which produc'd a cloſe Correſpondence with Cromwel and Ireton. With theſe Encouragements, and others from the Presbyterian Party, the Lord Lauderdale, and ſeveral of the chief Citizens of London, aſſuring the King, They would oppoſe the Army to the Death, he was ſo much elevated, that when the Propoſals were ſent to him, and his Concurrence humbly deſir'd, he, to the great Aſtoniſhment not only of Ireton, but even of his own Party, entertain'd them with very ſharp and bitter Language, ſaying, No Man ſhall ſuffer for my ſake, I repent of nothing ſo much, as that I paſs'd the Bill againſt the Earl of Strafford, and the Church muſt be eſtabliſh'd according to Law. To which thoſe of the Army reply'd, That it was not their Work, and that his Majeſty had already conſented to the Abolition of Epiſcopacy in Scotland. The King ſaid, I hope God has forgiven me that Sin, repeating frequently theſe and the like Words; You cannot be without me. You will fall to Ruin if I do not ſuſtain you. This Manner of Courage was obſerv'd with the utmoſt Amazement by many Officers of the Army, who were preſent, and at leaſt in Appearance were Promoters of the Agreement. Sir John Berkley taking Notice of it, look'd with much Wonder upon the King, and ſtepping to him, ſaid in his Ear, Sir, You ſpeak as if you had ſome ſecret Strength and Power which I do not know of, and ſince you have conceal'd it from me, I wiſh you had done it from theſe Men alſo. Upon this his Majeſty recollected himſelf, and began to ſoften his former Diſcourſe, but it was too late, for Colonel Rainsborough, who of all the Army ſeem'd the leaſt to deſire an Agreement, having obſerv'd theſe Paſſages, went out from the Conference, and haſten'd to the Army to inform them what Entertainment their Commiſſioners and Propoſitions had found with the King. Sir John Berkley, to allay this Heat, demanded of Ireton, and the reſt of thoſe Commiſſioners, What they would do if the King ſhould conſent? Ireton reply'd, We will offer them to the Parliament for their Approbation. His Majeſty having thus bid Defiance to the Army, thought it neceſſary to bend all his Force againſt them, eſpecially to ſtrengthen their Enemies in the Parliament, to which End the Apprentices Petition was contriv'd, and the Militia in London new modell'd, but when it appear'd that the Citizens could not defend themſelves againſt the Parliament, and that the King, notwithſtanding the Votes for his coming to London by the Lords and Commons, who remain'd at Weſtminſter when the Speakers went to the Army, would not be able to carry his Point by that Party, his Majeſty was well adviſ'd to write a Letter to the General and Officers before it was known that London would ſubmit, to renew the Propoſitions, but he would not ſign it till after three or four Debates, which loſt one whole Day's Time. At laſt Mr. Aſhburnham and Sir John Berkley going with it, met with Meſſengers from the Officers to haſten it. But before they could come to Sion Houſe the City Commiſſioners were arriv'd, and the Letter was out of Seaſon, for coming after it was known with what Difficulty it was obtain'd, and that Matters were like to be adjuſted between the Parliament and Army, it loſt both its Grace and Efficacy. Notwithſtanding all which, the Officers being reſolv'd to do what they could, propos'd, while the Army was in the very Act of giving Thanks for their Succeſs, that they ſhould not be too much elevated with it, but keep ſtill to their former Engagements with the King, according to the Propoſitions, which was reſolv'd upon, but that Reſolution, broken by the Indiſcretion and Precipitancy of ſome of the General Officers, who to ingratiate themſelves with the King, gave all Liberty to the Cavaliers, and made Speeches in his Behalf in the Council of War at Putney. Some of the ſame Party did the like in the Houſe of Commons, where one of them ſaid, He thought God had blaſted their Counſels for their Severity to the Cavaliers. The Agitators, who ſuſpected that thoſe Officers were bargaining for themſelves, complain'd to Cromwel and Ireton, that their Doors were open to Berkley and Aſhburnham, when they were ſhut to them. Cromwel was ſtartled at their Complaint, and deſir'd thoſe two Gentlemen to forbear coming to him, at leaſt not ſo publickly, for he ſhould not be ſafe in his Quarters if they did. His Majeſty now was ſo complying with the Army, that he refus'd the Propoſitions which the Scots Commiſſioners preſented to him, being thoſe that were deliver'd at Newcaſtle, with ſome Alterations relating to Scotland, and demanded a perſonal Treaty. Cromwel, Ireton, and many of their Party in the Houſe of Commons, ſpoke for it, but contrary to their Expectation, found a vigorous Oppoſition from ſuch as had already conceiv'd a Jealouſy of their private Agreement

The Agitators complain'd openly againſt them in the Council of War at Putney, ſaying, Since the King had rejected their Propoſitions, they were not engag'd any further to him; and that it was not juſt to ſacrifice the general Good to the Intereſt of particular Perſons; but they ought now to conſult their own Safety, and that of the Commonwealth. That having the Power devolv'd upon them by the Deciſion of the Sword, to which both Parties had appeal'd, and being convinc'd that Monarchy was inconſiſtent with the Proſperity of the Nation, they reſolv'd to uſe their Endeavours to reduce the Government of England to the Form of a Common-wealth. This was the firſt Time that this Party in the Army declar'd themſelves for a Republick; and it ſtruck ſo great a Terror into Cromwel, that he and his Creatures thought it neceſſary to draw the Army to a general Rendezvous, pretending to engage them to adhere to their former Propoſitions, but indeed to bring the Army into Subjection to him and his Party, that ſo they might make their Bargain by them, deſigning if they could carry this Point at the Rendezvous, to diſmiſs the Council of Agitators, to divide the Army, and to ſend thoſe to the moſt remote Places who were moſt oppoſite to them, retaining near them ſuch only as were fit for their Purpoſe. This Deſign being diſcover'd by the Agitators, amongſt whom Col. Rainsborough had the principal Intereſt, they us'd all poſſible Induſtry to prevent the general Muſter, which was appointed to be at Ware. Cromwel repreſented this their Oppoſition to the King, as a Deſign to break of all Agreement with him, and proteſted it was not in his Power to undertake for his Security in the Place where he was, aſſuring him of his real Service, and deſiring the Lord to deal with him and his according to the Sincerity of his Heart towards his Majeſty. Some adviſ'd the King to go to London and appear in the Houſe of Lords: To this it was anſwer'd, That the Army being Maſters of the City and Parliament would undoubtedly ſeize his Perſon again; and if there ſhould be any Blood ſhed in his Defence he would be accus'd of beginning a new War, which if he had not begun even the Army would not probably have thought of putting an End to it by his Death. Others counſell'd him to quit the Kingdom, againſt which the King objected, that the Rendezvous being appointed for next Week, he was not willing to quit the Army till that was over; becauſe if the ſuperior Officers prevail'd, they would be able to make good their Engagements; if not they muſt apply themſelves to him for their own Security. 'Twas alſo propos'd that he ſhould conceal himſelf in England; but that was thought unſafe, if not impoſſible. Some mention'd Jerſey for a Place of Retreat; but there were no Ships ready to convey him thither. At laſt his Majeſty reſolv'd to go to the Iſle of Wight, being, as is moſt probable, recommended thither by Cromwel, who as well as the King had a good Opinion of Col. Hammond, the Governor there.

Common-Wealth talk'd off.

King makes his Eſcape.

To this End his Majeſty ſent for Mr. William Legg, Sir John Berkley and Mr. Aſhburnham, requiring them to aſſiſt him in his Eſcape, for which Horſes were laid at Sutton in Hampſhire. On the following Day, November the 10th, Sir John Berkley and Mr. Aſhburnham waiting with Horſes, the King with Mr. Legg came out towards the Evening, and being mounted, they deſign'd to ride through Windſor Foreſt, his Majeſty their Guide, but they loſt their Way; and the Night proving thick and ſtormy, and the Roads bad, they could not reach Sutton before Break of Day, and his Majeſty would not ſtay there, being inform'd the County Committee was there ſitting by Order of Parliament. The King went to Titchfield Houſe, a Seat of the Earl of Southampton's, and ſent Sir John Berkley and Mr. Aſhburnham, to Colonel Hammond, with the Copy of the Letter he left on the Table in his Chamber at Hampton-Court.

A. D. 1647.

That Liberty, the Thing now generally pretended and aim'd at, was as neceſſary for Kings as any other. That he had a long Time endur'd Captivity and Reſtraint, hoping it might tend to the Settlement of a good Peace; but finding the contrary, and the Unfixedneſs of the Army, and new Guards ſet upon him, he had withdrawn himſelf.

That whereſoever he ſhould be he would earneſtly labour the Settlement of a good Peace, and to prevent the Effuſion of more Blood; and if he might be heard with Honour, Freedom and Safety, he would inſtantly break through his Cloud of Retirement, and ſhew himſelf ready to be Pater Patriæ.

CHARLES REX.

With this he ſent two other Letters he had lately receiv'd, one without a Name, expreſſing great Fears and Apprehenſions of the ill Intentions of the Republican Party againſt him; the other from Cromwel, much to the ſame Purpoſe, with this Addition, That a new Guard was deſign'd the next Day to be plac'd about his Majeſty, conſiſting of Men of real Principle. Echard, who knew as little of theſe Matters as any Man that ever pretended to know them, aſſures us, that this Relation of Cromwel's private Treaty with the King is told by his Majeſty's Enemies with much Confidence, but with little Authority. One would wonder how theſe Words much Confidence and little Authority could drop from that Pen; for this Account was really written by Sir John Berkley himſelf, one of the King's beſt Friends, in a MS. which General Ludlow receiv'd at Geneva of Berkley's own Hand writing, which MS. is mention'd by the Lord Clarendon: Yet Echard adds, After a careful Search, we can find nothing to ſupport or indeed to countenance ſuch a Story among the moſt authentick Writers: Ludlow, a much more authentick Writer than any of his moſt Authenticks, of Genius, Quality, Fortune and Spirit, ſuperior to the moſt noble of them, if Anceſtry gives Quality, tells us upon his Honour, that Sir John Berkley left that MS. in the Hands of a Merchant at Geneva, where he ſaw and read it. If Falſities were not ſo common with this Hiſtorian, there would hardly be any Confidence ſteady enough to ſupport ſuch a one as this. The King ſent a Letter to Colonel Hammond, by Berkley and Aſhburnham, wherein after he had expreſs'd his Diſtruſt of the levelling Part of the Army, and the Neceſſity lying upon him to provide for his own Safety, he aſſur'd him, "That he did not intend to deſert the Intereſt of "the Army, and had choſen him of all the Of- "ficers to put himſelf upon him, whom he "knew to be a Perſon of good Extraction, and "though engag'd againſt him in the War, yet "without any Animoſity to his Perſon, to which "he

" he was inform'd he had no Averſion. That " he did not think fit to ſurprize him, and " therefore had ſent theſe two Gentlemen to ad- " vertiſe him of his Intentions, and to deſire his " Promiſe to protect him and his Servants to the " beſt of his Power, and if it ſhould happen " that he was not able to do it, then to oblige " himſelf to leave them in as good a Condition " as he found them." With theſe Inſtructions Sir John Berkley and Mr. Aſhburnham went to the Iſle of Wight, and met the Governor, Col. Hammond, on the Road between Carisbrook Caſtle and Newport: When they had told him their Errand, he cry'd out in a Sort of Aſtoniſhment, Oh Gentlemen! You have undone me in bringing the King into this Iſland; if at leaſt you have brought him. If you have not, pray let him not come, for that between my Duty to his Majeſty, and Gratitude to him, upon this freſh Obligation of Confidence, and the Diſcharge of my Truſt to the Army, I ſhall be confounded. The two Gentlemen told him, the King intended a Favour to him and his Poſterity, in giving him this Opportunity ſo highly to oblige him, and that it was not at all inconſiſtent with his Relation to the Army, who had ſolemnly engaged themſelves to the King; but if he thought otherwiſe his Majeſty would be far from impoſing his Perſon upon him. The Governor reply'd, If the King ſhould come to any Miſchance, what would the Army and his Majeſty ſay to him, that had refus'd to receive him. They anſwer'd, You have not refus'd him, for he is not come to you. Colonel Hammond ſeem'd ſomewhat ſatisfy'd, and deſir'd to know where the King was, wiſhing that he had thrown himſelf abſolutely upon him. The two Generals did not like this Heſitation, but Aſhburnham fearing his Majeſty might be diſcover'd before they had come to any Concluſion with the Governor, took him aſide, told him where he was, and prevail'd with him at laſt to declare, he believ'd the King rely'd upon him as a Perſon of Honour and Honeſty, and therefore he did engage himſelf to perform whatſoever could be expected from a Perſon ſo qualify'd. Aſhburnham reply'd, I will ask no more. Then ſaid the Governor, Let us all go to the King and acquaint him with it. When they came to Cowes Caſtle, where a Boat lay to carry them over, Colonel Hammond took Captain Basket, Governor of that Caſtle with him, and order'd a File or two of Musketeers to follow them in another Boat. Upon their Arrival at Titchfield Houſe, Aſhburnham leaving Sir John Berkley below with Colonel Hammond and Captain Basket, went up to the King, and gave him an Account of what had paſt between the Governor and him, adding, Hammond is come with us, to make good what he has promis'd. At which the King ſtriking his Hand upon his Breaſt, cry'd, What have you brought Hammond with you! Oh, you have undone me, for I am by this Means made faſt from ſtirring. Aſhburnham then told him, If he miſtruſted Hammond he would undertake to ſecure him. His Majeſty reply'd, I underſtand you well enough, but if I ſhould follow that Counſel, it would be ſaid, and be believ'd, that he had ventur'd his Life for me, and that I had unworthily taken it from him. It is now too late to think upon any Thing but going through the Way you have forc'd upon me, but I wonder how you could make ſo great an Overſight. At which Expreſſion Aſhburnham having no more to ſay, wept bitterly. In the mean Time Colonel Hammond and Captain Basket beginning to be impatient of their long Attendance below in the Court, Sir John Berkley ſent a Gentleman of the Earl of Southampton's to deſire the King and Mr. Aſhburnham to remember they were below. About half an Hour after his Majeſty ſent for them up, and before Colonel Hammond and Captain Basket had kiſs'd his Hand, he took Sir John Berkley aſide, and ſaid to him, Sir John, I hope you are not ſo paſſionate as Jack Aſhburnham. Do you think you have follow'd my Directions? Berkley anſwer'd, No indeed, but it is not my Fault, as Mr. Aſhburnham can tell you if he pleaſe. It was now too late to take other Meaſures, and the King received Colonel Hammond very cheerfully, who repeated to him what he ſaid before, which was no Promiſe, for as he was intruſted by the Parliament, it was not conſiſtent with a Man of Honour and Honeſty, in any wiſe to betray that Truſt, or to give his Majeſty any other Protection than was ſuitable to his Diſcharge of it. Colonel Hammond conducted the King, and the Gentlemen who were with him to Cowes, and the next Morning his Majeſty went with him to Carisbrook Caſtle, being met on the Way by ſeveral Gentlemen of the Iſland, by whom he underſtood that the Iſlanders were unanimouſly for him, and that if Hammond did not anſwer his Expectations, it would be eaſy for him at any Time to make his Eſcape, which Information was like what had been too often given the King ſince his Misfortunes came upon him, very ill grounded both in Fact and in Reaſon.

Berkley and Aſhburnham's Diſcourſe with Col. Hammond

The King in the Iſle of Wight.

The Earl of Clarendon is angry with Colonel Whalley for putting a Force upon his natural Temper in his Cruelties to the King, the Colonel being by Nature rude and brutal, and his Majeſty every Day receiv'd Billets or Letters of wicked Deſigns upon his Life, which put him upon Thoughts of eſcaping from the Army. The Letter which he left for Colonel Whalley, ſhews what a faithful Painter the Lord Clarendon is.

Colonel Whalley,

I Have been civilly us'd by you and Major Huntington. I cannot but by this parting Farewel, acknowledge it under my Hand, as alſo do deſire your protecting my Houſhold Stuff and Moveables of all Sorts, which I have left behind me in this Houſe. I aſſure you it was not the Letter you ſhow'd me to Day that made me take this Reſolution, nor any Advertiſement of that kind, but I confeſs that I am loath to be made a cloſe Priſoner under Pretence of ſecuring my Life. So being confident that you wiſh my Preſervation and Reſtitution,

I reſt your Friend,
Charles Rex.

The firſt News the Parliament had of the King's Eſcape was by a Letter from Lieutenant General Cromwel, who about an Hour after it was known, that his Majeſty had withdrawn himſelf from Hampton Court, wrote to the Parliament, That the King was this Night expected at Supper, and the Commiſſioners entring his Chamber with Colonel Whalley, found his Cloak careleſly caſt on the Ground, by the Way into the Entry Chamber that leads to the back Stairs, and down into the Vaults to the River ſide. As neither Parliament nor Army was in the Secret of his Eſcape, they were both terribly alarm'd at it, and the more for that each was afraid of the others coming to a ſeparate Agreement with him, and conſequently jealous of every Step that was taken. The Houſe of Commons read Cromwel's Letter early the next Morning, and voted, That it ſhall be Loſs of Eſtate and Life for any one to detain the King's

A. D. 1647. Perſon, and not to diſcover it to both Houſes of Parliament. Colonel Whalley brought them the Letter his Majeſty left upon the Table, and to excuſe himſelf, inform'd them that Aſhburnham had broken his Parole of Honour with him, that the King ſhould not leave the Army without his Privity and Conſent. Great Search was made for his Majeſty in the City of London, where it was reported he had conceal'd himſelf, and Meſſengers were ſent every Way in queſt of him. But no News came till a Letter arriv'd from Colonel Hammond giving an Account of his Majeſty's having put himſelf upon him in the Manner before related. "At which he being "exceedingly ſurpriz'd did not know at firſt "what Courſe to take, but weighing the great "Concernment that the Perſon of the King is "to the Settlement of the Peace of the King-"dom, he thought it his Duty to the King, the "Parliament and Kingdom, to uſe the utmoſt "of his Endeavours to preſerve his Perſon from "any horrid Attempt with which he had been "threaten'd, and to bring him to a Place of "Safety, where he may be alſo in a Capacity of "anſwering the Expectation of the Parliament "and People in the Settlement of the preſent "Diſtractions." They receiv'd another Letter from Captain Basket, and order'd Rewards to the Meſſengers who brought them. They alſo order'd a Letter of Thanks to Colonel Hammond, who a Day or two after wrote them, That he caus'd a Mutiny of the Gentry of the Iſland, who expreſs'd their Readineſs to preſerve his Majeſty's Perſon, and to obey the Authority of Parliament; which ſhews that my Conjecture was right as to the Unanimity of the Iſland in the Cavalier Cauſe, That he had given Order to reſtrain any from going out of the Iſland, or coming in, without Paſſes, or being examin'd. He deſir'd Accommodations for his Majeſty, and 5000 l. was order'd him, which he complain'd of as too little, and had the former Allowance of 50 Pound a Day continu'd beſides that advanc'd Money. Meſſengers were ſent to the Iſle of Wight, to bring up Sir John Berkley, Mr. Aſhburnham, and Col. Legg, but Col. Hammond excus'd the not Delivery of them, in a Letter to the Earl of Mancheſter, ſubmitting, however, to the Pleaſure of the Parliament if his Excuſe was not thought ſufficient. His Majeſty had not been a Week at Carisbrook before he had himſelf drawn up a Meſſage for the Parliament. Wherein in the firſt Place, he again refus'd to aboliſh Archbiſhops, Biſhops, &c. which however he conſented to afterwards in his Treaty with the Scots, for renewing the Civil War. The King avows he is ſatisfy'd in his Judgment, that this Order was plac'd in the Church by the Apoſtles themſelves. That is, that Bp. Timothy and Bp. Titus were Lords Temporal as well as Spiritual', had Miters, Croſiers, Chancellors, Spiritual Courts, Manors, &c. for if the King and his Chaplains had meant nothing elſe by Epiſcopacy, but Preaching, Praying, Ordaining and Super-intending in Eccleſiaſtical Government, the whole Body of the Presbyterians would gladly have been govern'd by primitive Biſhops, as ſettled in Archbiſhop Uſher's Reduction. His Majeſty however conſents, that the Presbyterian Religion be eſtabliſh'd for three Years, and in the mean Time the Divines at Weſtminſter, with 20 of his own Nomination, to determine as to Church Government after the three Years are expir'd, and then Toleration to ſcrupulous Conſciences to be granted to all Perſons, except Papiſts, Atheiſts, Blaſphemers, and all thoſe that do not ſay the Athanaſian Creed, which all that do ſay it do ſo perfectly underſtand. His Majeſty gives the Power of the Militia to the Parliament, during his Reign; and alſo that of the Diſpoſing of the great Officers of State and Privy Counſellors, for the ſame Term, which were certainly very large Conceſſions, and ſuch as ought to have given Satisfaction to reaſonable Men. And probably they would have ſatisfy'd every one, had not new Provocations ariſen by a new War, and the Minds of the People been more and more imbitter'd by the deſperate Attempts of the Cavaliers and their Abettors. The King having no Anſwer to this Meſſage in 10 Days, ſent another to remind the Parliament of it, and a perſonal Treaty. But the Parliament had reſolv'd to have their Propoſitions turn'd into Acts, and paſs'd, before they conſented to the King's coming to London. And it is to be noted, that the four Propoſitions which were agreed to be ſent to him, had their Riſe in the Houſe of Lords, and conſequently could not be the Contrivance of the Republican Party to obſtruct the Peace. The four Bills for the King to paſs, were, 1. A Bill for Settling the Militia of the Kingdom. 2. A Bill for calling in all Declarations, Oaths, and Proclamations, againſt the Parliament, and thoſe who adher'd to them. 3. A Bill that thoſe Lords who were made after the great Seal was carry'd to Oxford, ſhould be incapable of ſitting in the Houſe of Peers. 4. That Power be given to the two Houſes of Parliament to adjourn as they ſhall think fit. Which Bills being paſt, they agree to a perſonal Treaty for the reſt of the Propoſitions. His Majeſty wrote a Letter to Sir Thomas Fairfax, informing him, He had appointed a Copy of his Letter to the Parliament when he left Hampton Court to be deliver'd him, and now had ſent him a Copy of his laſt Meſſage to both Houſes from the Iſle of Wight, in order to the Settlement of a good Peace. He deſires him to employ his Credit with them, that Dr. Sheldon, Dr. Oldiſworth, and Dr. Hammond, may be protected in coming to him. The Houſe of Lords appointed the Earls of Kent, Northumberland, Rutland, Pembroke, Denbigh, and Salisbury, to be their Commiſſioners, to carry the four Bills to the King. The Commiſſioners for the Commons were, Mr. Bulkely, Mr. Liſle, Mr. Robert Goodwin, Mr. Kemp. And the Scots Commiſſioners having preſs'd very much to have the Propoſitions more accommodated to their Nation and the Covenant; they were anſwer'd, That Bills paſt both Houſes were not to be alter'd; and that the Parliament were reſolv'd to ſend away their Commiſſioners, deſiring the Scots Commiſſioners to ſend their Propoſitions at the ſame Time, inſtead of which they proteſted againſt the Bills, and preſs'd for a perſonal Treaty with ſo much Vehemence, that it was ſuſpected they intended to make the Refuſal of it a Pretence for another War, about which they were then privately treating with the King; and doubtleſs, their flattering him with Hopes of Deliverance by the Aſſiſtance of that Nation, very much obſtructed the King's ſpeedy Compliance with the Parliament. The Commiſſioners arriving at the Iſle of Wight on the 24th of December, preſented the four Bills to the King, who ſaid, He was aſſur'd they did not expect a preſent Anſwer, but he would take them into Conſideration, and give his Anſwer in a few Days; which immediately daſh'd all Hopes of any Succeſs from this Commiſſion, the Commiſſioners having but four Days allow'd them to ſtay for the Anſwer. The Scots Commiſſioners had probably been conſulted, for preſently after they preſented a Proteſtation againſt the four Bills to the King, in the Name of the whole whole Kingdom of Scotland; upon which his Majeſty founded his Anſwer to them, That ſince the Scots Commiſſioners diſſented from them, it was not poſſible for him to give ſuch an Anſwer as might be the Foundation of a laſting Peace, and no Suffering and no Peril ſhould induce him to conſent to any one Act, till the Conditions of the whole Peace ſhould be concluded. To which End he again earneſtly urges a Perſonal Treaty. It was a wild Imagination to hope for Reſtitution by a Scots Army, for which Cromwel and his Party had a hearty Contempt. Yet, as wild as it was, it hinder'd the King from paſſing the Four Bills, as Echard himſelf confeſſes; and Ludlow owns, that thoſe who were for ſetting him aſide, dreaded his paſſing them, it being viſible, ſays he, that had he been reſtored to the Throne, he might eaſily have gratify'd his Friends, and reveng'd himſelf upon all his Enemies. But the Delinquents were ſo afraid of their Necks, and the Clergy of their Power and Revenues, that whatever Diſpoſition his Majeſty was in to do any thing for his own Safety, they always found ſome Means or other to fruſtrate it in Conſideration of their own; and now they adviſe him to come to Terms with the Scots, who in ſuch Caſe engag'd to bring an Army into England to join with the Presbyterians and Royaliſts for his Reſtitution.

Inſurrections for him.

Several ſmall Enterprizes were ſet on foot in and about London, in Wales, and in the North, with the ſame View; all which put together admitted a Glimmering of Light thro' a very dark Cloud of Adverſity; and by this falſe Light did thoſe weak Counſellors conduct his Majeſty to the tragical End of all his Miſeries.

The Lord Clarendon takes a great deal of needleſs Pains, and waſtes Abundance of fine Words and round Periods, to ſhew the Monſtrouſneſs of the King's Treaty with the Scots, and the infamous Conceſſions. How courtly it is! But the Courtier is loſt in the Delinquent, and the Apprehenſion he was in of perpetual Exile abroad, or a ſhorter Fate at home, has thrown thoſe two handſome Epithets, monſtrous and infamous, into his Oratory. The King, in a Word, oblig'd and bound himſelf down by all the Sanctions of a Treaty, To confirm the Solemn League and Covenant by Act of Parliament; To confirm alſo Presbyterian Government, The Directory of Worſhip, and The Aſſembly of Divines at Weſtminſter, the very ſame whom the ſame Earl calls infamous, vicious, and ignorant, for three Years, and then to ſettle theſe Things for ever as ſhould be agreed upon by that Aſſembly of Divines, to which Twenty of the King's Nomination ſhould be added, and a Number from the Kirk of Scotland; which proving as plainly as Proof can render a Thing, that his Majeſty had given up Epiſcopacy for ever, With what Front can it be ſaid that he dy'd a Martyr for it? Let a Man have the leaſt Foreſight imaginable, and the greateſt Degree of Stupidity next to Bigotry or Idiotiſm, could he not have aſſur'd himſelf, that the Aſſembly of Divines, with 40 or 50 zealous Kirkmen from Scotland, would have been much too hard in a Vote for Dr. Sheldon and 19 more ſuch Doctors, whom the King was to name. Here the Earl of Clarendon labours like a Stag in the Toils, the more he ſtruggles, it faſtens him the more; he is faſt in the Argument, and knowing that the Cauſe is given up, and the Martyrdom for the Church entirely loſt, he ſtrives to avoid and evade it, he ſtrives hard againſt a very ſimple Fact, and would come off the ſame Way which the Roundheads always urg'd the King would take to clear himſelf of all Treaties, by alledging the Conceſſions were extorted by the Scots. There was no need of Honour to hinder an Hiſtorian's concealing ſuch an Argument; a little Diſcretion and Temper would have done it, for it confirms beyond Diſpute what ever the Parliamentarians ſaid of the Inſecurity and Inſincerity of the King's Treaties. Whenever any ingenuous Perſon has a Mind to object to this Paſſage, he ſhall find that I could eaſily have lengthen'd it ſeveral Pages, and have ſhewn that the Lord Clarendon was himſelf ſenſible that this Treaty of the King's with the Scots, knock'd all the Zeal for Church and Churchmen on the head: And what was extraordinary beyond Conception in this Treaty, his Majeſty oblig'd himſelf to pay the very Money with which the Parliament bought him, and which was never paid, tho' ſuch Clamour has been made by ſtaunch Writers and Thinkers againſt that Bargain and Sale. This Treaty for a new Invaſion of England, and a new vain unaccountable War, was ſolemnly ſign'd at Carisbroke Caſtle while the Parliament's Commiſſioners were there, with the Four Propoſitions; and what can be more evident than that the King reſolv'd to argue as the Earl does, that thoſe Conceſſions, and all Conceſſions which hinder'd his Return to arbitrary Power, ſhould be declar'd extorted, when he could maintain ſuch a Declaration? Ludlow informs us, that the Scots Treaty was manag'd chiefly by Dr. Gough a Popiſh Prieſt in London, in Concert with the Earls of Loudon, Lanerick, Lauderdale, Sir William Fleming, and others, on the Part of the Scots; and that while the Engliſh and Scots Commiſſioners were at one and the ſame Time at Carisbroke Caſtle walking with the King, they obſerv'd him to throw a Bone before two Spaniels that follow'd him, and to take great Delight in ſeeing their conteſting for it, which ſome of them thought to be intended by him to repreſent the Bone of Contention he had caſt between the Two Nations; a Piece of ſuch ſuperficial undiſguis'd Politicks, that if both Nations had not been infatuated with mutual Prejudices, they would have ſeen and avoided it. The Earl of Clarendon's Reflections on the Treaty with the Scots, and the Conduct of the Presbyterians and Independents, agree as much with the Facts, as Things can agree which are made on Purpoſe for them, and are as agreeable to Truth as Dreams and Viſions. I could with a great deal of Pleaſure divert my ſelf and the Reader with them, but I have not Room, and am afraid I have already too much offended the Gravity of Hiſtory, which the Earl maintains amidſt as much Mirth as is produc'd by a Man's believing he is impoſing on another, when he is all the while himſelf impos'd upon. One Paſſage ſhall ſerve for all: The Scots Army in England did as much againſt the King as the Parliament. The Scots were beaten at Marſton Moor, where the Parliament's Army obtain'd the Victory. The Parliament's Army obtain'd all the other Victories without the Scots, and took all the Towns except two or three on their own Borders; yet they took themſelves to have equal Merit with the Engliſh. One would indeed think the King and the wiſe Counſellors took them ſo, or this fatal Treaty had not been enter'd into, which gave the Parliament Army a very ſignal Opportunity of ſhewing how equal the Scots were to the Engliſh in the Merit of the War, when Cromwel with 8 or 9000 Engliſh routed and diſpers'd above 20000 Horſe and Foot, which were rais'd to ſupport this notable Treaty. The King's Anſwer to the Four Bills was deliver'd to the Parliament's Commiſſioners ſealed up, at which the Earl of Denbigh, who was the principal Commiſſioner, took

Offence,

A. D. 1647. Offence, alledging they were requir'd by their Inſtructions to bring an Anſwer, and they knew not whether the Contents of that Paper were an Anſwer or not; and when they had their next Audience of the King, the Lord Denbigh ſaid, I have been your Ambaſſador, and in that Employment would never have deliver'd any Letter without a preceding Sight of it. His Majeſty ſaid, I have employ'd twenty Ambaſſadors, and none of them ever dar'd to open my Letters: But underſtanding that what the Earl of Denbigh ſaid was the Senſe of the other Commiſſioners, he told them, Well then I will ſhew it you, on Condition you will promiſe not to acquaint any one with the Subſtance of it before you have deliver'd it to the Parliament. To which they conſenting, he deſir'd the Company might withdraw. The Commiſſioners propos'd that Governor Hammond might be permitted to ſtay, which the King was not willing to allow; but not thinking it convenient to refuſe it, he gave way, and by this Means the Governor as well as the Commiſſioners came to underſtand that the King had wav'd the Intereſts both of the Parliament and Army to cloſe with the Scots againſt both of them. The Impreſſion which the Diſcovery of theſe Things made upon the Governor was ſo great, that before he departed from Carisbroke to accompany the Parliament's Commiſſioners to Newport, he gave Orders for a ſtrict Guard to be kept in his Abſence, and at his Return commanded the Gates to be lock'd up, and the Guards to be doubled, ſitting up himſelf with them all Night, by which the King's intended Eſcape was obſtructed. The next Morning he order'd his Majeſty's Servants to remove, not excepting Dr. Hammond his own Kinſman, who taking Leave of the King, acquainted him that there was a Frigate ready to take him aboard. The Removal of the King's Servants, and the obſtructing his Eſcape, made a great Noiſe; and one Burley, a diſcarded Sea-Officer, caus'd a Drum to be beaten to draw People together and reſcue the King; but, ſays Ludlow, there were few beſides Women and Children that follow'd him, having but one Musket amongſt them, ſo that the King's Servants thought not fit to join them. Whitlocke adds, The Mayor of Newport where Burley beat his Drum, and the Inhabitants, ſhew'd their Affection to the Parliament, and were thank'd for it. Now, according to the Earl of Clarendon, the whole Iſland fell into the Mutiny under Capt. Burley, of a good Family; they ſaid, They would not endure to ſee the King ſo us'd: Every Word of which is invented, as is what follows. That the King's own Servants, thoſe very Servants that had been put out of the Caſtle, quieted the People. The Ground we walk on is all as rotten as this, and every Step we take gives Way under us! The poor Gentleman, the honeſt Tarpaulin, paid dear for his ill-adviſed Loyalty, the Term he gives to the Drum-beating; and the Parliament without Delay, above three Weeks after, ſent down a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, with an infamous Judge, Wylde, a Gentleman of as good Extract and as great Fortune, of better Practice in the Law, and of as fair Character in Morals, as Mr. Hyde, who ſo ſcurrilouſly uſes him, and ſo falſly repreſents the Fact; whom they made Chief Baron of the Exchequer for this Service, whereas he was not made Lord Chief Baron till nine Months after; Whit. p. 337. who caus'd poor Burley to be indicted of High Treaſon. He did not cauſe it. The Parliament order'd Burley to be try'd by a Commiſſion of 290. Oyer and Terminer, and the Jury found him guilty. A pack'd Jury, according to the Hiſtorian, that he may be out in every Word of his Hiſtory. Upon which their Judge condemn'd him, and the honeſt Man was forthwith executed. Whitlocke ſays, Judgment was given againſt him, but Execution reſpited. I defy all Readers of Hiſtory to produce any Paſſage in any Hiſtory, from Herodotus to Echard, which teems with Falſities like this; and what follows is as teeming, and for Want of Wit, excites Indignation rather than Mirth, for there is not the leaſt Appearance of Conſcience in it; and a Man who was capable of writing at that Rate, was well qualify'd to palm ſo many Sham-Plots on the World as were contriv'd after the Reſtoration, when many honeſt Men were hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd, with all Circumſtances of Barbarity and Cruelty, with which he charges the Execution of poor honeſt Burley, tho' not one of them did ever offer to beat a Drum. A. D. 1647.

The King's Negative being return'd to the Four Bills, it was debated in Parliament, Jan. 3. The Debate was begun by Sir Thomas Wroth, Burgeſs for Bridgwater in Somerſetſhire, whom a Member of the ſame Parliament calls Jack Pudding to Prideaux the Poſtmaſter. Wroth ſpoke to this Purpoſe: Bedlam is appointed for Madmen, and Tophet for Kings. Our Kings of late have carry'd themſelves as if they were fit for no Place but Bedlam. My humble Motion ſhall conſiſt of three Parts. 1. To ſecure the King, and keep him cloſe in ſome Inland Caſtle, with ſure Guards. 2. To draw up Articles of Impeachment againſt him. 3. To lay him by, and ſettle the Kingdom without him. I care not what Form of Government you ſet up, ſo it be not Kings and Devils. C. W. p. 69. Sir Tho. Wroth's Speech.

Commiſſary General Ireton ſpoke after him: The King has deny'd Safety and Protection to his People by denying the Four Bills. Subjection to him is but in Lieu of his Protection, which being deny'd, they may well deny any more Subjection to him, and ſettle the Kingdom without him. This is what is now expected. After ſo long Patience, we ſhould now ſhew our Reſolution, and not deſert thoſe valiant Men who have engag'd for us beyond all Poſſibility of Retreat, and will never forſake the Parliament, unleſs the Parliament forſake them firſt. The Debate continu'd with great Warmth from Nine a Clock in the Morning to Seven at Night; and when the Houſe was ready for the Queſtion, Lieutenant General Cromwel ſtood up and ſaid, It is now expected the Parliament ſhould govern, and defend the Kingdom by their own Power and Reſolutions, and not teach the People any longer to expect Safety and Government from an obſtinate Man, whoſe Heart God has harden'd. Thoſe Men, who have defended the Parliament from ſo many Dangers, will defend them therein with Fidelity and Courage againſt all Oppoſition. Teach them not, by neglecting your own and the Kingdom's Safety, in which their own is involv'd, to think themſelves betray'd, and left hereafter to the Rage and Malice of an irreconcilable Enemy, whom they have ſubdu'd for your Sake, and therefore are likely to find his future Government of them inſupportable, and fuller of Revenge than Juſtice, leſt Deſpair teach them to ſeek their Safety by ſome other Means than adhering to you, [Here he put his Hand on his Sword] who will not ſtick to your ſelves; and how deſtructive ſuch a Reſolution in them will be to you all, I tremble to think, and leave you to judge. Here's an Energy that's truly Roman. Yet the Lord Clarendon and Echard repreſent Oliver's Language as the Dregs of Enthuſiaſm and Cant. The Queſtion being put, That no farther Addreſſes ſhould be be made to the King, or any other Perſon, without the Leave of the Houſe, and that if any preſum'd ſo to do, they ſhould incur the Guilt of High Treaſon. The Houſe divided upon it, and it was carry'd in the Affirmative, by juſt 50 Voices, Yea's 141, Nay's 91. The King's Condition was now worſe than ever; for in the Midſt of the laſt Deſpair he exaſperated the Powers that had him in their Cuſtody by Double-dealing, treating with the Parliament for Peace, and with the Scots for War, at the ſame Time. The Folly of which Counſels was as apparent as the Danger of them.

Vote for no farther Addreſſes to the King.

The ſame Day the Houſe voted to revive the Committee of Safety, held at Darby Houſe, by which Title it ſometimes went. This Committee was firſt eſtabliſh'd by an Ordinance the 7th of February, 1643. and Scots Commiſſioners were joyn'd with the Engliſh, to act as a Council of State, but under the Name of a Committee of Safety, which had been laid down for ſome Time, and was now reviv'd: The Members were, Algernon Earl of Northumberland, Robert Earl of Warwick, Henry Earl of Kent, Edward Earl of Mancheſter, William Lord Say and Sele, Philip Lord Wharton, John Lord Roberts, William Pierrepoint, Eſq; Sir Henry Vane, ſen. Nathaniel Fiennes, Eſq; John Crew, Eſq; Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Sir William Armine, Sir Arthur Haſſelrigg, Sir Henry Vane, jun. Robert Wallop, Eſq; Oliver St. John, Eſq; Oliver Cromwel, Eſq; Sir John Evelyn, Samuel Brown, Eſq;

Committee of Safety.

When the Vote for Non Addreſſes was ſent to the Lords it paſt a hot Debate, and upon a Diviſion there were 10 to 10; but the Majority on a ſecond Thought gave it the Affirmative; and the Army ſent a Declaration, January the 15th, to thank the Parliament for paſſing that Vote. The Houſe of Commons wrote a Letter the Day before to Sir Thomas Fairfax, to ſend a convenient Number of Foot to garriſon White-hall, and a Party of Horſe to quarter in the Mews.

Several Counties ſent Addreſſes of Thanks to the Parliament, for the Vote of no Addreſſes to the King, particularly Somerſetſhire, guided then by Prideaux, Poſt-maſter General, a very fierce Republican, who got a great Eſtate by his Zeal againſt the Church and Churchmen: Prideaux employ'd Col. Pyne in this Buſineſs, and the Somerſetſhire Addreſs; after thanking the Parliament promis'd to live and die with them and the Army. But the Addreſſers were ſo aſham'd of what they had done, that moſt of them retracted it in a counter Addreſs.

About this Time the Parliament reſtor'd the Earl of Pembroke to an Office, of which he had been unjuſtly depriv'd. Upon the King's making a Garriſon of Oxford, the Marquis of Hertford was remov'd, and the Lord Pembroke made Chancellor of that Univerſity. One cannot read what the Earl of Clarendon writes on this Occaſion without Pity. The Earl of Pembroke was contented to be imploy'd as Chancellor, who had taken an Oath to defend the Rights and Privileges of the Univerſity, notwithſtanding which, out of the extream Weakneſs of his Underſtanding, and the miſerable Compliance of his Nature, he ſuffer'd himſelf to be made a Property, &c. One can think no other by the Hiſtory, but that the Author was as well born as Hampden, and as rich as Northumberland, by the Air that is given it from one End to the other. The great Quality of the Earl of Pembroke cannot defend him from Libel. This ſame Earl of Pembroke was regularly choſen Chancellor of the Univerſity ſeven Years before, on the Reſignation of Laud, and moſt irregularly turn'd out of his Office by the King's Command, two Years after. Thus it appears he was only now reſtor'd to what he had been unjuſtly deprived of; and the inſolent and daring Oppoſition he met with from thoſe very Doctors who had choſen him Chancellor, ſhows how devoted they were to Duty and Obedience, for which the Earl of Clarendon ſo much flatters them, or elſe for chooſing himſelf their Chancellor ſome Years after; though he himſelf too was turn'd out in a few Years, being, as A. Wood ſays, accus'd of divers Crimes. In ſpeaking of the Univerſity he ſpeaks of the Covenant, againſt which he aſſures us the Convocation of Oxford publiſh'd Reaſons ſo invincible, that no Man, no not the Aſſembly of Divines then ſitting at Weſtminſter, and forming a new Scheme of Religion, ever ventur'd to anſwer it. If this had been true, theſe Reaſons would have had better Luck than any which were ever publiſh'd by Convocations. I have as much Contempt for the Covenant as the Hiſtorian or any of his Admirers, though not for the ſame Reaſons: The Severity, Formality, and Subſcription render it contemptible to me; ſo does the Force it puts upon the natural Liberty which every Man has and will have in the Way of Thinking. I would have Subſcription abandon'd to thoſe that never had any Thing on their Side but Coercion. The Falſity of the Aſſembly being then on a new Scheme of Religion, is as abſurd as malicious; for that Synod made not the leaſt Alteration in Matters of Faith and Doctrine which are only religious, though the Hiſtorian thinks that Diſcipline is only religious. He alſo aſſures us they were then ſitting about a Catechiſm, which they had preſented to the Parliament two or three Years before. The Truth is, the Covenant was eſtabliſh'd by a Law; and the Legiſlators would have been greater Fools than their Enemies, if they had ſuffer'd the Aſſembly, or any one elſe to enter into Diſputation about it with the Doctors of Oxford, who could not but have the laſt Abhorrence for a Law which would deprive them of all the Honours and Emoluments, to which their Doctorſhips intitled them, ſo they prov'd the Covenant to be full of Illegality, Wickedneſs and Perjury: They might as eaſily have prov'd it to be full of Brimſtone and Fire. His Lordſhip telling us very gravely, that the Gates of Hell were never open'd wider than when Biſhop Wilkins was made Warden of Wadham, and Biſhop Reynolds Dean of Chriſt-church. King Charles II. ſolemnly took that Covenant no leſs than three Times. They plac'd in the Room of the learned, couragious and loyal Heads of Houſes, Fellows and Scholars, A. Wood adds, Trencher Scrapers, factious Presbyterians, according to the Lord Clarendon. A. Wood draws their Pictures with more Likeneſs and as much Malice; They had mortify'd Viſages, puling Voices, Eyes lifted up, Hands lying on their Breaſts, ſhort Hair, quirpo Clothes, and Looks like Prentices. This Wood is the wittieſt of them all, as the Hiſtorian is the moſt florid. A. Wood too tells us, Hell was broke looſe. Before they came to Oxford, there was no Place in England ſo happy in Obſervance of religious Ceremonies; but after the factious Presbyterians came, there appear'd nothing but Confuſion and Darkneſs; there being nothing in the World ſo illuminating as Altars, Tapers, &c. The Earl proceeds, Theſe factious Presbyterians ſow'd the Seeds of Ignorance, Prophanation, Atheiſm and Rebellion.

I might have ſwell'd this Liſt to a great Bulk, if I would have remembred all the eminent Names that took the Covenant in the Univerſity of Oxford; but I choſe rather to mention thoſe that will be allow'd to be as good Churchmen as the Lord Clarendon, than thoſe that may be thought to favour the reform'd Religion as profeſt, in Scotland, France and Holland, &c. There are not Men more eminent for Learning, Quality, Piety and Genius, in the Hiſtory of that Univerſity; yet the Earl of Clarendon affirms, that Ground was unskilfully cultivated that Weeds grew up, that poiſonous Seeds were ſown; that all the Governments were tyrannical, and as his Lordſhip and A. Wood handſomely phraſe it, Hell was broke looſe, and Hell Gate wide open'd.

Now let us read ſome of the Names that took Degrees in this Univerſity, when King Charles the Iſt. was there in Perſon, when the Learned, Couragious, and Loyal, were its Ornaments, and the full Obſervances of Ceremonies its Glory, according to our two moſt excellent Hiſtorians. Edward Shireburn, Eſq; Edward Windham, Eſq; Capt. Roger Sanders, Mr. Anthony Lightfoot, Capt. John Miller, Sir Francis Chalk, Mr. William Jay, Charles Whittaker, Eſq; Dr. Edward Buck, Dr. William Croot, Mr. John Gurgany, Sir Henry Moody, Sir Troylus Turberville a Papiſt, Capt. John Merret, Dr. George Morley, Dr. Edward Wolley Biſhop of Clonfert, Mr. John Lakenby a Papiſt, Mr. John Douch, Mr. Martin Lewillyn, Mr. William Joyner Papiſt, Sir John Lamb, William Killingtree, Eſq; and a greater Number more, Men of equal Worth and Eminence. The Truth is, every Word which the Earl of Clarendon and A. Wood ſay of the Ignorance and Confuſion in the Univerſity, after the Earl of Pembroke's Viſitation without Ground, may with good Ground be ſaid of it before that Viſitation; A. Wood himſelf owns as much: "Notwithſtanding the chief Members of the Univerſity had "put up a Petition to his Majeſty againſt the "promiſcuous conferring of Degrees, and the "Danger that the Univerſity was like to fall into, if ſome Remedy in that Matter was not taken; as namely, That the ſolemn Arts and "Sciences would be deſtroy'd, the Fountains "of the Univerſity dry'd up, hopeful Scholars "be diſcourag'd, and the Univerſity diſhonour'd; yet nevertheleſs his Majeſty recommended the ſame Sort of Perſons:" By which it appears, that even while the King was on the Spot, the Confuſion and Darkneſs thicken'd; the Arts and Sciences were in Danger of being deſtroy'd, and the Univerſity was diſhonour'd ſeveral Years before the Pembrokian Viſitation. So unhappy is the Lord Clarendon in his Hiſtory, as to be moſt fierce againſt the Parliamentarians in thoſe Caſes, where his Friends themſelves gave the moſt Offence. He takes no Manner of Notice that by the Articles for the Rendition of Oxford, that Univerſity was ſubjected to this Viſitation, but goes on declaiming againſt the Injuſtice of it, when it was a Condition of their being taken to Mercy.

Cavalier Doctors.

The Univerſity of Cambridge was all along within the Parliament's Juriſdiction, as being the Capital of the Eaſtern Aſſociation; and therefore they ſent the Earl of Mancheſter thither, almoſt as ſoon as the Ordinance paſt for taking the Covenant, to tender it to the Heads, Fellows and Scholars of that Univerſity: He took with him his two Chaplains, Mr. Aſh, and Mr. Good, who have very hard Words given them for accompanying him in that Miſſion, which was to adminiſter the Covenant to the Members of the Univerſity, and to remove ſuch as would not comply, many of whom were in Arms againſt the Powers that impos'd that Oath on them as the beſt Security they could take for their peaceable Behaviour. The Conteſt was left to the Deciſion of the Sword, between King and Parliament. His Majeſty in the Beginning of the War bid very fair for the Succeſs of it; and the Academicks were afraid that their taking the Covenant would hinder their Church Preferments, which are the Inducements to their very hard Studies; ſo moſt of the Maſters, Fellows, and Scholars refus'd it; and ſome took it, as Dr. Edward Rainbow, afterwards Biſhop of Carliſle, Dr. Thomas Bamburg, Dr. Thomas Eden, Dr. Richard Love, Maſter of Bennet College: And the Earl of Mancheſter's Behaviour is much commended for his Mildneſs; but the invincible Obſtinacy of the Maſters, ſuch as Coſens, Stern, Cumber, was ſo well imitated by the Youngſters, that great Numbers refus'd to obey the Ordinance. Moſt of the Heads were outed of their Headſhips, and yet the Lord Mancheſter's two Chaplains, as we read in Fuller, were complain'd of, That their over Remiſneſs would obſtruct Reformation both in Church and Univerſity. The Alterations made on this Occaſion are as follow,

If one could break in upon Decency with as much Pleaſure as does the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, one might offer the Compariſon, and demand whether the Univerſity loſt any Thing by the Exchange, in taking Cudworth, Arrowſwith, Whichcot, Palmer, Tuckney, Minſhall: The Names of the other are before the Reader, and thoſe of them whoſe Characters are moſt known, make up what is otherwiſe wanting in Bigotry and Zeal.

I do not enter into the Detail of Parliamentary Proceedings, having not Room for them within my Compaſs, eſpecially conſidering what Sir Simons D'Ewes ſays, That the Orders and Ordinances of this Parliament, in Bulk and Number did not only equal, but exceed all the Laws and Statutes made ſince the Conqueſt. I ſhall inſert one of their Orders, becauſe it ſhews us how impartial and upright the Earl of Clarendon is in repreſenting this Parliament as a Company of Neroes and Diocleſians, who perſecuted the Clergy of the Church as the Pagans did the Chriſtians, and turn'd them out of their Livings to beg and ſtarve; whereas by a Law they made Proviſion for the Wives and Families of ſuch Clergymen who choſe rather to quit their Benefices than worſhip God as the Proteſtants do abroad.

Die Jovis, Nov. 11, 1647.

Order'd,

THAT the Wives and Children of all ſuch Perſons as are, or have been, or ſhall be ſequeſter'd, by Order of either Houſe of Parliament, ſhall be comprehended within the Ordinance, that allows the fifth Part for Wives and Children, and ſhall have their fifth Part allow'd unto them; and the Committee of Lords and Commons for Sequeſtrations, and the Committee of plunder'd Miniſters, are requir'd to take Notice hereof, and yield Obedience hereunto accordingly.

H. ELSING,
Cler. Dom. Com.

But when the Lord Clarendon procur'd that charitable Act, which turn'd out 2 or 3000 pious, worthy Divines, as Mr. Locke calls them, there was not one Penny allotted to them, their Wives and Children, nor any Allowance for any Layings out and Improvements, but they muſt all Starve or Subſcribe; and I can very well remember, that great Numbers of Families, as well Laity as Clergy, were beggar'd by infamous Proceſſes in Spiritual Courts, purely for Conſcience ſake, and preſuming to have more Religion than their Neighbours.

A. D. 1648. Levellers. We have mention'd the Diviſions and Diſturbances in the Army, occaſion'd by the Agitators, and now there grew out of them another Party, who were call'd Levellers by Way of Deriſion only, for what is ſaid of their being againſt all Degrees of Honour or Riches, and levelling the Count with the Cobler is falſe. They were for a Commonwealth, and that not being to be accompliſh'd without the Death of the King, and Renouncing all the Royal Family; thoſe Fanaticks firſt enter'd into thoſe wicked Counſels, which were afterwards ſo wickedly executed. Col. Rainsborough, Col. Harriſon, Col. Eyre, Major Scot, Lieut. Col. Lilburn, Capt. Reynolds, Capt. Bray, were the chief Movers in this Levelling Party, which had infected 9 Regiments of Horſe, and 7 Regiments of Foot, who beſides their Officers, had a Council of Agents to manage their Affairs, and they were ſo bold as to require the Parliament to diſſolve themſelves in a Year's Time, and to alter the Method of Elections to Biennial Parliaments, and otherwiſe, that it be declar'd, that the King's Conſent is not neceſſary in paſſing of Laws, the firſt direct Attack upon the Royal Authority; that Liberty of Conſcience be eſtabliſh'd, Popery and Prelacy excepted; that Birth and Place do not confer any Exception to the Law; whence they were term'd Levellers, and not for their Hatred to Titles and Offices, Major General Harriſon, and Col. Rainsborough, having as much Gallantry that way as Waller or Hollis. This Party publiſh'd two ſmart Pamphlets, one call'd, The Caſe of the Army, which was voted to be deſtructive to the Privileges of Parliament, and the fundamental Government of the Kingdom. The other entituled, The Agreement of the People. And at the general Rendezvous at Ware, ſeveral Regiments diſtinguiſh'd themſelves by Papers in their Hats with that Inſcription. General Fairfax ſpoke ſeverely to thoſe and the other Regiments; and to give a Check to this mutinous Spirit, order'd Col. Eyre and Major Scot to be committed. In Lilburn's Regiment there was but one Captain left, all the reſt being driven away by the Mutineers, and the remaining one, Capt. Bray, complied with them, for which General Fairfax order'd him to be ſeiz'd at the Head of the Regiment. He alſo call'd a Council of War, before which ſeveral of the Offenders were brought, of whom 3 were condemn'd to be ſhot, and one of them executed at the Head of Lilburn's Regiment, which ſo terrify'd the reſt, that they promis'd to be more obedient for the future; and Col. Harriſon and Col. Rainsborough's Regiments ſaw their Errors and ſubmitted. Col. Rainsborough, who had been order'd to command the Fleet as Vice-Admiral, was requir'd to clear himſelf of this Mutiny before he went to Sea, and Major Scot to give an Account of his Conduct. But this did not hinder a Repreſentation to the General, under the Hands of Col. Lilburn and his Officers, Acknowledging and promiſing their Obedience due to him, and praying him to mind the Parliament of conſidering and reſolving thoſe Things which have been preſented to them from the Army; and as ſoon as the neceſſary great Affairs firſt to be ſettled ſhall be tranſacted, that a Period may be ſet to this Parliament. Whitlocke tells us, "'Twas thought a Piece of high Aſ- Inſolence of the Soldiery.

Cromwel's Art and Diſſimulation.

The Part that Cromwel acted at this Juncture was very artful; he had at firſt play'd behind the Curtain, and ſet on the Agitators, without appearing in their Agency; but when he was treating with the King he drop'd them as utter Enemies to that Treaty, and at the laſt mentioned Rendezvous declar'd himſelf ſo openly againſt them, that he rode up to one of the mutinous Regiments, accompany'd with his Officers, and ſeeing the Papers in their Hats, commanded them ſternly to throw them away, which they not obeying, he immediately ſhot one of them dead on the Spot, and order'd others to be ſeiz'd and brought to Trial. When he return'd to the Parliament he valu'd himſelf much on this Service. He had not long before countenanc'd the Army in Oppoſition to the Parliament, who were about treating with the King; and now that Treaty is, as he thinks, in his own Hands, he oppos'd the Agency, and labour'd to obſtruct it, pretending his ſo doing was only in order to keep the Army in Subjection to the Parliament, who being very deſirous to have this Spirit ſuppreſs'd in the Army by any Means, not only approv'd what he had done, but gave him their Thanks for it. To which, ſays Ludlow, I gave as loud a No as I could though ſingle. The King then was in Treaty with the Scots Commiſſioners, as has been related, which made him refuſe the four Bills which Cromwel's Party in the Houſe had promoted, as the Ground-work of the Agreement he was to make with the King, whom Col. Hammond prevail'd with to ſend Letters of Compliment to Fairfax and Cromwel, congratulating their Succeſs againſt the Agitators, and conjuring them by their Engagements, their Honour and Conſcience, to agree with him, and not expoſe themſelves to the fantaſtick Giddineſs of the Mutineers in the Army. Sir John Berkley carry'd theſe Letters, and had Orders to explain his Majeſty's Sentiments further viva voce.

King's Trial firſt propos'd.

The Governor had before ſent his Chaplain Mr. Troughton on the like Meſſage to the Generals, and as Sir John was going to the Head Quarters, then at Windſor, he met Troughton about Bagſhot, who acquainted him, he had no good News to carry to the King, the Army having taken new Reſolutions touching his Perſon. Riding a little further he met with Cornet Joyce, who told him, he was aſtoniſh'd at his Deſign of going to Windſor, for that the general Council of Agitators there had declar'd for bringing the King to a Trial, and their Declaration was likely to ſucceed. Sir John coming to Windſor deliver'd his Letters to the General, who order'd him to withdraw, and after half an Hour's Attendance he was call'd in, and told in a ſtern Manner, That they were the Parliament's Army, and therefore could ſay nothing to the King's Motion about Peace, but muſt refer thoſe Matters and the King's Letters to their Conſideration. Cromwel and Ireton receiv'd him very coldly, and ſhew'd him the Letter which Troughton brought from Col. Hammond with a diſdainful Smile. At Midnight he had a private Conference with another General Officer, ſuppos'd to be Scout-Maſter-General Watſon, who ſaid, You know that I and my Friends engag'd our ſelves to you, that we were zealous for an Agreement, and if the reſt were not ſo we were abus'd. That ſince the Tumults in the Army we did miſtruſt Cromwel and Ireton, of which I inform'd you, and come now to tell you that we miſtruſt neither, and that we are reſolv'd, notwithſtanding our Engagement, to deſtroy the King and his Poſterity; to which End Ireton has made two Propoſitions this Afternoon; one, That you ſhould be ſent Priſoner to London. The other, That none ſhould ſpeak with you on Pain of Death; and I do now hazard my Life by doing it. The Way deſign'd to ruin the King is to ſend 800 of the moſt diſaffected in the Army to ſecure his Perſon, and then to bring him to a Trial, and I dare think no further. This will be done in 10 Days, and therefore if the King can eſcape let him do it as he loves his Life. He then told him the Reaſon of this Change, which was, that notwithſtanding the pretended Suppreſſion of the Mutineers, the Agitators had ſtill two Thirds of the Army in their Intereſt, and had told Cromwel and Ireton they would leave nothing unattempted to bring the whole Army to their Senſe, and if all fail'd they would ſeparate from the reſt, and join with any who would aſſiſt them in the Deſtruction of thoſe that ſhould oppoſe them, upon which Cromwel and Ireton argu'd thus; if the Army divide the greater Part will join with the Presbyterians, and will in all likelihood prevail to our Ruin, by forcing us to make our Applications to the King, wherein we ſhall rather beg than offer any Aſſiſtance, which if the King ſhall give, and afterwards prevail, if he ſhall then pardon us, it will be all we can pretend, and more than we can certainly promiſe our ſelves. The Concluſion was, that in caſe they could not bring the Army to their Senſe, it would be beſt to comply with them, a Schiſm being utterly deſtructive to both. In purſuance of this Reſolution Cromwel bent all his Thoughts to make his Peace with the Party that was moſt oppoſite to the King, acknowledging, as he knew well how to do on ſuch Occaſions, That the Glory of this World had ſo dazled his Eyes, that he could not diſcern clearly the great Works that the Lord was doing. He ſent comfortable Letters to the Mutineers who were in Cuſtody, aſſuring them nothing ſhould be done to their Prejudice, and by theſe and the like Arts he perfected his Reconciliation.

King contrives to eſcape.

His Majeſty was well adviſ'd by Berkley to make his Eſcape as ſoon as poſſible, and the Queen had ſent a Ship to lie off the Iſle of Wight to that Purpoſe, which ſhe earneſtly preſs'd, but the King was determin'd to finiſh the Treaty with the Scots firſt, and that obliging him to deny the four Bills, Col. Hammond ſuſpected he would not have done it without ſuch Intentions, upon which he took ſo much Care of the Guard about him, that no Opportunity offer'd, and the Scots Invaſion, and the Inſurrections of England, in a word the ſecond Civil War begun by the King's Agents, having not the leaſt Probability of ending otherwiſe than it did, in the Deſtruction of all that engag'd in it, the Death of the King is again chiefly to be imputed to raſh and weak Counſellors, who put him upon appealing again to the Sword, which had before decided the Cauſe againſt him. In common Policy there were but two Ways to ſave his Life, after the fatal Reſolution taken at Windſor was known, either frankly to paſs the four Bills, and fall in with both Parliament and Army, or to make his Eſcape, which his evil Counſellors had render'd impracticable, by delaying his Agreement with the two Houſes, who were ſo provok'd by his rejecting their Bills, that they came to the beforemention'd Vote, of making no further Addreſſes to him. Coke gives another Turn to the Alteration of Cromwel's Mind as to his concluding with the King, and that it was occaſion'd by a Letter one of his Spies intercepted from his Majeſty to the Queen, wherein he told her, That tho' he aſ-

sented to the Army's Proposals, yet if by assenting to them he could procure Peace, it would be easier then to take off Cromwel, than now he was the Head that govern'd the Army; which is agreeable enough with what Oliver said in Parliament, That the King was so great a Dissembler, and so false a Man, that he was not to be trusted. He alledg'd many Particulars, and E-

Ech. chard very wisely tells them too, as if there was no Truth in them, "That while the King so-"lemnly profess'd that he referr'd himself whol-"ly to the Army, and depended only upon "them for composing the Kingdom's Distracti-"ons, at the same Time he had secret Treaties "with the Scots Commissioners how he might "embroil the Nation in a new War, and destroy "the Parliament, the Lords concurr'd with the "Commons in the Vote of No more Addresses, "on the 17th of January." Echard calls this a surprizing Vote, one of his insipid Epithets, there being no Surprize in it at all; and in the Declaration publish'd by the Parliament to justify that Vote, he tells us, They loaded the King with lending Ships to the French King to reduce Rochel, with a Design to bring over German Horse, with grinding the People by Loans, Privy Seals, Coat and Conduct Money, Patents, Monopolies, and that one Compendium of Slavery Ship Money; every Syllable of which is as true as Truth it self, and so is what follows; With torturing Mens Bodies by Whipping, slitting Noses, cutting off Ears, burning Cheeks, filthy Imprisonments, with lording it over Souls by the Oath ex Officio, Excommunications, Ceremonies, Articles, New Canons, and Canon Oaths; with a scandalous Declaration for dissolving the Parliament in 1640. with writing Letters to the Pope, with an unparallel'd Way of coming to the House of Commons, &c. Every one is by this Time satisfy'd what a very small Historian this same Mr. Echard is, and yet see how erect is the Look of his History! This Declaration, and their Grand Remonstrance, are the original mighty Libels from which the whole Swarm of little Libellers seem to have since copy'd. There is no need of appealing to him, because his Judgment and his Evidence will not be much minded; but I appeal to every the least Dabbler in History, even less than himself, whether every Tittle of that Declaration is not Fact, and whether the Parliament had not Reason to say, as they did, We could give many Reasons more, why we will make no more Addresses. He thinks he has something on his Side when he quotes Mr. Hollis, who hated Cromwel as much as Mr. Hyde did, and had been persecuted by the Independent Party more than Mr. Hyde had been by the Presbyterians, which gives one good Reason to suspect he had more Regard to Pique and Revenge than to Sincerity and Impartiality, and steer'd by such another Compass as the Lord Clarendon did. The above-mention'd Declaration was drawn up by Mr. Fiennes with much Asperity, 'tis true, but with as much Truth: It charges his Majesty with rejecting all Offers of Accommodation after six several Applications to him, and the Charge is well enough grounded. The Lords agreeing with the Commons in the Vote for no more Addresses, the Council of the Army declar'd, That they resolv'd to endeavour to preserve the Peerage, and the Rights of the Peerage of England, notwithstanding any Scandal upon them to the contrary. Among the rest who spoke against the surprizing Vote, according to the Earl of Clarendon, was Sir John Maynard, who was then a Prisoner in the Tower;

Whitl. p. 270, 271, 277. Voted the 7th of September, 1647. That Sir John Maynard be discharg'd from being a Member ber of the House, and be committed to the Tower during the Pleasure of the House; and further, That an Impeachment of High Treason be drawn up against him. On the 8th of September Sir John Maynard was sent to the Tower; and on the 28th of October, Impeachments against the 7 Lords were argu'd upon, and an Impeachment against Sir John Maynard. Thus we find him fast in the Tower, and under an Impeachment for High Treason. But granting that it was the Pleasure of the House that he should be at Liberty to practise the Law in Westminster-Hall in Term-time, he had been expell'd the House of Commons four Months before the Vote for Non-Addressing past, on the 3d of January; and besides, he was remanded to the Tower before the Declaration past: Yet the Lord Clarendon has not only restor'd him to his Seat in the Parliament House, but made a Speech for him, and assures us he spoke it with Vehemence, and that his Argumentation made a great Impression upon all Men who had not prostituted themselves to Cromwel. Is it not great Pity that this good Argumentator was all the while in the Tower, and arguing with the Lords, by a Paper he sent them from thence, against their being competent Judges of him, who ought to be try'd by a Jury. But what is most pleasant in this Piece of History is, that his Lordship tells us, Maynard, a Prisoner in the Tower for High Treason, and expell'd the House, was so disgusted at the Parliament for not hearkening to him, that he withdrew, and came no more to the House in very many Months, nor could he come without Leave of the Lieutenant of the Tower, nor had he any Business there, having been discharg'd from being a Member of Whitl. p. the House at the same Time that Serjeant Glyn 270. was. I have digress'd the longer on this Passage in the History of the Rebellion, because it will convince every one, that the same Imagination which could take a Man out of Prison, place him in the Parliament House, and make a Speech for him, must work finely when it is giving Beauty or Deformity to a Picture. The Historian taught Echard to labour his Matters with Epithets, as this monstrous Declaration, this monstrous Determination, produc'd the Second War, the People were so generally offended with it; whereas the second War was produc'd by the King's Treaty with the Scots, and the Intrigues of the Presbyterians and Royalists, who were now alike afraid of the Army. The first Rumour of a Revolt from the Parliament came from Wales, where Major General Langhorn, who had been very serviceable to them, was seduc'd from their Service by the Temptations and Offers of certain Agents for the King. The General having some Suspicion of his holding Correspondence with the Cavaliers, order'd Col. Fleming to relieve Col. Poyer, Governor of Pembroke Castle, who was in the Secret with Langhorn; but Poyer refus'd to deliver it, and the Parliament pass'd on the 4th of March an Ordinance for reducing the Castle, and bringing Poyer and his Adherents to Justice. Orders were sent to Major General Langhorn to disband his Forces, but the Soldiers would not obey them, suppos'd to be encourag'd in their Disobedience by Langhorn, who soon after declar'd himself, and seiz'd the Parliament's Commissioners who were sent to disband his Army.

A. D. 1648.

In the mean time there was a very dangerous Tumult in the City of London; it began in Moorfields, about Tipling and Gaming, on Sunday, April the 9th, contrary to that Ordinance which suppress'd the impious Book of Sports. The Rabble set upon and overpower'd the Train'd Bands about Finnesbury, from thence

A. D. 1648. they went to White-Chapel, where they ſeiz'd the Colours of a Company of Foot. Others went to Smithfield, and ſome to Whitehall, but the Horſe-Guards diſpers'd them. Next Day, the 10th of April, they increas'd, ſurpriz'd Newgate and Ludgate, took the Keys, went to the Lord Mayor's, and took thence a Drake, in which Action ſome of them were ſlain. They remov'd the Drake to Ludgate, and became ſo numerous, that the Lord Mayor left his Houſe, and remov'd to the Tower. Their Number ſtill increaſing, they were very earneſt to get Arms. They broke open a Houſe in Milk-ſtreet, and other Houſes, to arm themſelves with the Weapons they found there. They poſſeſs'd themſelves of the Magazine at Leadenhall, beat up Drums, and cry'd out, For God and King Charles. The General, now Lord Fairfax by the Death of his Father, call'd a Council of War, where the Queſtion was put, Whether they ſhould hazard the Two Regiments at the Meuſe and Whitehall, or ſtay for more Force? And it was agreed, rather than delay the Buſineſs, which muſt needs be dangerous, and hazard much Blood, they would engage with thoſe two Regiments only. Accordingly the next Morning the Two Regiments enter'd the City at Alderſgate, and march'd to Leadenhall, where they attack'd the Mutineers, who fir'd their Drake, wounded Capt. Merriman and his Lieutenant, and kill'd a Woman. The Soldiers wounded ſeveral of the Rabble, and a Waterman who ſhot off the Drake was kill'd. Many of the Rout were apprehended, and the reſt diſpers'd themſelves. The City Gates were ſet open, and all Things quiet before Ten a Clock in the Morning. 'Tis very ſurprizing that a Perſon who has no greater Share of Common Senſe than Mr. Echard has, ſhould pretend to Wit as he does: Theſe young Perſons with Stones and Clubs took the Colours from the Train'd Bands, and in a childiſh Bravery marching into the Street, frighted Warner the preſent Lord Mayor. Fairfax entring with ſome Regiments of Horſe and Foot, eaſily diſpers'd them, becauſe no great Man would undertake to be their General. The Citizens were forc'd to raiſe 1000 Pounds for a Gratuity to the Two Regiments, juſt now it was ſeveral Regiments of Horſe and Foot, their new Deliverers. There's nothing ſo ridiculous as a Man's pretending to be witty without Wit. Theſe young Perſons were other People and Malignants, as well as Apprentices, according to Whitlocke; and the ſeveral Regiments of Horſe and Foot only a ſmall Part of the Army, who behav'd themſelves with much Gallantry and Reſolution againſt a great Multitude of Men, not Boys and Girls, as in Echard; and it was no ſmall Happineſs to the Parliament that this Inſurrection was well quieted, which in thoſe Times of Diſcontent and Diſtraction, if it had not been ſo ſoon appeas'd and nipp'd in the Bud, might have prov'd of moſt dangerous Conſequence to the Parliament and all their Friends. Whitlocke afterwards reflects thus gravely upon it: "We may "take Notice of the Inconſtancy of worldly Af- "fairs: When that Parliament and their Army "had ſubdu'd the Common Enemy, then they "quarrell'd amongſt themſelves, the Army a- "gainſt the Parliament. When they were pretty "well pieced together again, as upon the Votes "for Non-Addreſſes, then the Apprentices and "others make an Inſurrection againſt the Par- "liament and Army." Theſe are the Reaſonings of a wiſe and ſober Man, and inſtead of ſuch Wiſdom and Sobriety, the Archdeacon preſents us with Drollery and Grimace. The City petition'd the Parliament for a Thankſgiving on Occaſion of their Deliverance from the late Tumult. They humbly thank'd the General and the Committee of the Militia for their great Care and Pains in ſuppreſſing it. We have mention'd what the Earl of Clarendon ſays of the miraculous Effects of the Parliament's monſtrous Declaration and monſtrous Determination, that it made them univerſally deteſtable. The firſt Inſtance of it in true Hiſtory, is the Addreſs of the Gentlemen of the Grand Jury in Hampſhire, wherein they acknowledge the Goodneſs and Wiſdom of the Parliament, in the Votes of no further Addreſſes to the King. The next is the Addreſs which Sergeant Weld brought from the Gentlemen of the Grand Jury of the County of Somerſet, where the Earl told us they were Cavaliers to a Man, excepting two Gentlemen, wherein they acknowledge the great Care and Pains of the Parliament for the Peace of the Nation, particularly in their late Votes touching the King, deſiring the Judges to return their humble Thanks to the Parliament. This is the Univerſality of the People's Deteſtation of thoſe Monſtroſities which the Earl talks of. The Somerſetſhire Grand Jury complain of Malignants, Apoſtates, and Neutrals; of Alehouſes, of Cavaliers being in Offices, and practiſing as Counſellors and Attornies. The Occaſion of Complaint as to Perſons in Offices, Counſellors and Attornies, has continu'd there ever ſince; and indeed it is a crying Grievance, as clothing Inſolence and Oppreſſion with the Robe of Authority and Law.

The Storm gathering in Scotland was ſoon perceiv'd. The Parliament's Commiſſioners at Edinburgh, the Earl of Nottingham, Mr. Goodwin, Mr. Aſhhurſt, Mr. Stapleton, and Colonel Birch, ſent Information that the Parliament in Scotland had appointed a Committee of Danger preparatory to their Deſign of invading England, from whence came Capt. Wogan, a Revolter from the Parliament, with about 400 Horſe, and was follow'd by Sir Thomas Glemham, Sir Philip Muſgrave, Sir Marmaduke Langdale, and other Delinquents, who ſtaid in Scotland till the Scots Army march'd for England, againſt which the Earl of Argyle and ſeveral Lords proteſted. The Parliament's Commiſſioners demanded to have Wogan and the Delinquents deliver'd up, but the Scots gave no ſatisfactory Anſwer to them in that and all other Demands.

About this Time the Earl of Kent and the Lord Grey, Sir Tho. Widdrington, and Bulſtrode Whitlocke, Eſq; whoſe Memorials are ſo uſeful to me in detecting the Falſities in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, were appointed Lords Commiſſioners of the Great Seal. The Lord Pawlet was order'd to be try'd for killing one Henry Illery, on whoſe Widow the Parliament beſtow'd 100 l. Dr. Clark, Dr. Exton, and Dr. Doriſlaus, were made Judges of the Admiralty. Sir Oliver Cromwel's Compoſition was remitted for his Kinſman Lieutenant General Cromwel's ſake; and the Lords acquainted the Commons at a Conference, that the Duke of York, with the Duke of Glouceſter and the Lady Elizabeth, being together playing in a Room after Supper by themſelves, the Duke of York privately ſlip'd from them down the Back Stairs, without Cloak or Coat, in his Shoes and Stockings, by Way of the Privy Garden, having got a Key of the Door, by which he eſcap'd thro' the Park, and could not be found, none of his Servants who attended him being miſſing. 'Twas ſuppos'd that he went off by private Inſtructions from his Father, tho' it is not eaſy to diſcern the Wiſdom of it, the Duke having a Princely Allowance from the Parliament, who were better able to keep him than thoſe he had recourſe to;

In the mean while Col. Poyer increas'd in Strength: Col. Powel was come into him: Sir Nicholas Keymis had ſeized Chepſtow Caſtle, with ſome Welch Gentry and Peaſantry, whoſe Underſtandings were of the ſame Size with that valourous Knight's, of the ſame Order with him of Mancha. Major General Langhorn had put himſelf at the Head of a greater Parcel of ancient Britons, againſt whom Lieutenant General Cromwel was order'd to march with two Regiments of Horſe and three Regiments of Foot. Col. Horton, who commanded the Parliament's Forces in South Wales, publiſh'd a Declaration to ſatisfy the Country People as to the Parliament's Proceedings in disbanding Langhorn's Forces, to eaſe them of free Quarter, and of the Danger Poyer had brought them into; but Whitlocke ſays the Welchmen did not underſtand what he ſaid. Keymis had not been long poſſeſs'd of Chepſtow Caſtle before he was beſieged by Col. Herbert and Col. Horton, who with about 3000 Horſe and Foot of the Parliament's Forces, met Major General Langhorn, Major General Stradling, Col. Powel, and other Revolters and Cavaliers, to the Number of 8000 Men, attack'd and routed them. Stradling was taken Priſoner, Langhorn wounded, many ſlain, 26 Captains and 100 Subalterns and 3000 Soldiers taken, with their Colours and Arms. The Parliament had beſtow'd Lands to a good Value on the ungrateful Langhorn, which were now given to Col. Horton. Mr. Elkenhead and Mr. Parker, two Lawyers, were made Judges to try the Mutineers in Wales, and their Leaders were ſent up to London to be try'd by a Council of War. Thus was another Civil War begun, and Blood ſpilt, with no more Proſpect of Succeſs, than if Sacheverel's Mob ſhould have attack'd the Duke of Marlborough's Army; and every reaſonable Man muſt with Indignation behold a Company of Deſperadoes involving their Country in new Miſeries out of Pique and Revenge. Theſe Doings were not likely to make Men have more Compaſſion for the King's calamitous Condition. The North Welchmen were to have riſen at the ſame Time with the South, and the Lord Clarendon vouches for the Lord Byron, that he had diſpos'd all North Wales to be ready. How this agrees with Whitlocke? The Counties of Flint, Denbigh, and Montgomery, the beſt half of all North Wales, enter'd into an Aſſociation for ſecuring thoſe Counties againſt the Enemy, for which the Parliament order'd them hearty Thanks. The Earl of Clarendon muſters thoſe Mutineers every where to the greateſt Advantage, tho' they are ſo ſoon to be reduc'd and ſhip'd off to America, where they liv'd better than ever they had done before. He gives a notable Account of a notable Inſurrection in Kent, carry'd on by Roger L'Eſtrange, who made this Government this Requital for ſaving him from the Gallows. He was chief Counſellor to one Hales, who went by the Name of Squire Hales, and expected to be General to the Kentiſh Gentlemen, as the Lord Clarendon calls them; but Whitlocke calls them Kentiſh Rioters, whoſe Intention was to plunder, which they executed with the greateſt Outrage where they had the Power: But upon General Fairfax's moving towards them with ſeven Regiments of Horſe and Foot, the Rioters would have enter'd into a Treaty, which he refus'd, ſaying, he knew no Authority they had to appoint Commiſſioners; and truly the beſt Authority they had was Roger L'Eſtrange's Warrant, as the Lord Clarendon owns, and yet they became ſo formidable, that he aſſures us, they had Horſe and Foot enough to meet any Army that was like to be brought againſt them, tho' as numerous as they were, theſe Gentry were then running away as faſt as they could run from General Fairfax, who indeed had not ſo many Men, but thoſe he had were old Soldiers, and the Rioters a Crew got together rather to rob than to fight. They barricaded a Bridge which led to Graveſend, but were driven from it by Major Husbands; and Whitlocke tells us of whom this Royal Army conſiſted, of Peaſants, Farmers, and London Prentices, with ſome Knights, Gentlemen and Cavaliers. The General came up with them at Maidſtone, and, after a very warm Engagement, forc'd his Way into the Town, kill'd 200 of the Mutineers, took 1400 Priſoners, and 400 Horſe. Thoſe of them that were left made towards London under their General the Lord Goring, now Earl of Norwich, for the Royaliſts could riſe in Title, tho' they ſunk in Fortune. Their main Hope was, that the City of London would have favour'd them, but the Citizens had been too lately mortify'd to venture again on ſuch a rotten Bottom; and General Fairfax having order'd a Body of Horſe to keep cloſe to their Rear while he came after them ſlowly, the Lord Goring ſlip'd over to Eſſex Side with about 500 Rioters, or, as the Lord Clarendon words it, young Gentlemen grown up in Loyal Families, who had been too young to appear before, and now were not likely to grow much older. Sir Richard Hardreſs, with about 2000 more Kentiſh Rioters, had laid Siege to Dover Caſtle, and taken the Block Houſes; but upon the Approach of Sir Michael Liveſay and Col. Rich, he rais'd the Siege and fled. The firſt Action by which Goring and his Army diſtinguiſh'd themſelves in Eſſex, was the ſeizing Sir William Hicks at Bow, and plundering ſome Gentlemens Houſes. Sir Charles Lucas had been very active in that County, and the Lord Capel in Hertfordſhire, and, with as many more Rioters as they could raiſe, they join'd Goring, whoſe Numbers, by the Junction of the Suffolk Men, exceeded General Fairfax's, who, not without much Trouble, paſs'd over from Graveſend to Eſſex, having quieted the County of Kent; and Goring with his Company, got into Colcheſter, where Fairfax had them ſafe enough; and the boaſted Defence of that Town was occaſion'd purely by that General's Humanity and good Conduct to ſave Mens Lives, and the Effuſion of Blood. He knew they would be obliged to ſurrender without Storm for want of all Sorts of Proviſions, and he was reſolv'd it ſhould be at Diſcretion, which ſpun out the Siege to a greater Length than was uſual with that Army. There were ſo many of the Rioters, that Fairfax did not think fit to attack them before the Forces which were gathering in Norfolk, Cambridge, and the Aſſociated Counties, came up. General Ireton compar'd the Town and thoſe therein to a great Beehive, and the Parliament Army to a ſmall Swarm of Bees ſticking on the Outſide of it. But the more the Enemy were, the ſooner would the Proviſions be ſpent, and Reinforcements came daily to Fairfax. The Scots being about to enter England, Sir Marmaduke Langdale ſeiz'd Berwick, and Sir Thomas Glemham and Sir Philip Muſgrave took Carliſle. There was a Deſign to ſeize York, but it was prevented by the Folly and Raſhneſs of ſome Cavaliers in that City, who miſtaking a Troop of Parliament Horſe for ſome of Langdale's Company, cry'd out, King Charles, and ſo were diſcover'd and ſuppreſs'd.

Colcheſter Siege.

A. D. 1648. Major General Lambert, and Sir Arthur Haſlerigg had about 3000 Men in the North, on the Borders of Scotland, which were ſcarce ſufficient to hinder the Countries joining with Langdale; but being join'd by four Regiments of Foot, and two of Horſe, they ſhut up Langdale and Muſgrave in Berwick and Carliſle, and diſpers'd a Regiment of new rais'd Men, which Langdale himſelf was marching to Carliſle. While theſe Mutinies were tranſacting in theſe Parts, Dr. Hudſon, to ſerve the Cauſe in the Field as well as the Pulpit, got a Company together in Lincolnſhire. For theſe Doctors having plac'd the Eſſence of Religion in Manors, Titles, Prerogatives, Powers, and other worldly Matters, could with as much Decency fight as preach for them. Col. Waite overtook Hudſon and his Military Rabble near Stamford, fell upon them, kill'd him and others of his Company, took ſome of the principal Mutineers to be made Examples, and diſcharg'd the reſt.

Dr. Hudſon killed.

Sir John Owen laid Siege to Carnarvon Caſtle, in North Wales, wherein were Col. Maſon and Col. Mitton. Owen hearing that Col. Carter, and Lieut. Col. Twiſſelden were coming from Cheſter, to the Relief of Maſon and Mitton, drew off from the Siege. The Number of his Men was about equal to that of Carter's, and both Parties meeting, the Parliament's Forlorn was forc'd to a diſorderly Retreat. The Enemy purſu'd with their whole Body upon the Reſerve of the Parliament's, who receiv'd their Charge; and after a hot Diſpute, routed them. Capt. Taylor ſingly encounter'd Sir John Owen, after he had broken his Sword upon his Head clos'd with him, diſmounted and took him Priſoner; upon which his Party immediately fled. About 30 of them were kill'd, and 80 taken Priſoners, ſeveral of them Perſons of Diſtinction. After the Rout of Langhorn, the Royaliſts retreated to Pembroke, and defended it againſt Cromwel himſelf for a few Days; but upon offer of Conditions, the Soldiers oblig'd their Officers to ſurrender, and Langhorn, Poyer, Powel, Matthews and Bowen were ſent Priſoners to London, to take their Trial, for the Blood they had ſpilt in this chimerical Inſurrection. Cromwel was in haſte to give the Scots a Meeting, or he would not have given ſo good Terms to the Welſhmen, who were permitted to return to their Homes.

Earl of Holland riſes.

There was another doughty Enterprize of the Earl of Holland's, who had receiv'd a Commiſſion from the King to be General of as many Men as he could get together in ſo hopeful a Cauſe. Indeed Whitlocke calls it a raſh Action, and ſpeaks of ſome Diſcourſe between the Earl of Holland and himſelf before he attempted it. His Lordſhip ſaid, Peoples Hearts were generally ſet on a Perſonal Treaty; and he did believe if a conſiderable Party ſhould ſhew themſelves in Arms for it, they would ſoon riſe to a great Body, and be able to bring the Parliament to Reaſon. He was anſwer'd, "The Parliament's Army is a fram'd Bo"dy of old Soldiers, proſperous in their Acti"ons, and well provided of all Things neceſ-
"ſary; and it will be a raſh and deſperate At"tempt for any to imagine to make Head againſt
"them, and raiſe a new Body. There is no Truſt
"to be given to Peoples Minds or Promiſes in "ſuch Deſigns: They will not ſtir except they
"ſee the Tide turning, and ſome precedent Suc-
"ceſs, which cannot be in this Caſe; but thoſe
"who ſhall adventure upon ſuch Buſineſs, will "certainly be loſt in it. The Earl of Holland
"argu'd earneſtly to the contrary, and how
"honourable, juſt and pious a Thing it would "be to reſcue our Country from the Miſery and
"Slavery they are now under, eſpecially if it
"were done by thoſe who in the Beginning had,
"perhaps, too much Hand in the bringing theſe
"Streights upon us." The Reply was, "It would "be worſe in thoſe Men than in any others;
"for that it would be look'd upon in them as "Breach of Faith and Treachery to thoſe who "had before intruſted them." For he had engag'd in it at firſt, and deſerted the Parliament to ſerve the King at Oxford, where he was ſoon weary of the Management, and return'd a Penitent to London, publiſhing a Declaration, that he left the King becauſe he ſaw Iriſh Rebels ſo eminently favour'd by him. In this heroick Action join'd the young Duke of Buckingham, and his Brother, in Gratitude for the Parliament's taking off the Sequeſtration of the Duke's Eſtate on Account of his Minority, when he firſt engag'd with the King. The Diſcourſe between the Earl of Holland and Mr. Whitlocke confirms what I have obſerv'd of the Timerity and Raſhneſs of every one of theſe Undertakings, which were no farther conſiderable to the Parliament, than as they diſturb'd the publick Peace, and poſtpon'd the Settlement of the Nation, and the Service of Ireland; yet the Earl of Clarendon gives Importance to the leaſt Stir on the Side of his Party; and now he informs us, that both the Parliament and Army were apprehenſive of the Lord Holland's Motions, which at the ſame Time they deſpis'd ſo much as to know of the very Day and Hour of his ſetting out with 100 Horſe, and yet made no Attempt to ſtop him in London. The Earl of Holland intended to poſſeſs himſelf of Reygate in Surrey; but Major Gibbon, and a Part of Col. Riches Horſe enter'd the Town the Day before, which cut off his Communication with the Malecontents in Kent. The Earl retreated towards Kingſton, and was purſu'd by the Parliament's Forces, who took ſeveral of his Men Priſoners between Ewel and Nonſuch; the reſt haſten'd their March towards Kingſton; but being overtaken by the Parliamentarians, a hot Skirmiſh enſu'd, in which the Lord Francis Villiers, Brother to the Duke of Buckingham, was ſlain, and the Earl of Holland's Band routed; the Remainder fled over Kingſton Bridge to Harrow on the Hill, and were hunted ſeveral Ways by ſeveral Parties of the Parliament's Troops; the greater Number of them kept with the Earl of Holland, who got as far as St. Neots, intending probably for Colcheſter or the North, if the Enemy would have given him Time; but Col. Scrope, who quarter'd at Hertford, and had Intelligence of Holland's Flight, purſuing him, his Forlorn came up with the Cavaliers, attack'd and routed them, before the main Body enter'd the Town. The Duke of Buckingham, with 60 Horſe eſcap'd into Lincolnſhire, and went beyond Sea. The Earl of Holland was taken in his Chamber; and the reſt of his Followers were made Priſoners, by which Scrope's Men were enrich'd with Plunder, there being many Gentlemen in their Company, as the Earl of Peterborough, Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Col. Skemiſher, Col. Howard, Col. Legg, Lieut. Col. Goodwin, Major Holland, Major Stepkin, and 100 others. Col. Dalbier, who deſerted the Parliament, and Mr. Digby, Son to Sir Kenelm, were kill'd. Pray mind how the Earl of Clarendon repreſents the killing of them; Whether out of former Grudges, or that they offer'd to defend themſelves, was not known; whereas it was notoriouſly known that they fought, and were routed according to Sanderſon. The Lord Andover who was in this Party, made his Eſcape, but was taken as he was about tranſporting himſelf to Holland: And thus we have clear'd the Country of theſe Troopers.

Ships revolt to the Prince of Wales.

The Induſtry of the King's Friends had got them ſome Intereſt at Sea as well as at Land; and Col. Rainsborough being ſent to command the Fleet in the Room of the Earl of Warwick, the Seamen taking Offence at it, and Batten Vice-Admiral offended alſo at Rainsborough's being put over his Head, revolted to the Prince of Wales with ſeven or eight Men of War. The Seamen having put Rainsborough aſhoar, ſail'd with the revolted Ships to Holland, and the Parliament to humour the Revolters, voted that the Earl of Warwick ſhould again be Lord High Admiral, upon which his Lordſhip going down to the Fleet, kept the other Ships from revolting, and oblig'd the Prince, who was in the Downs, to return with great Expedition to the Coaſts of Holland, whether Warwick purſu'd him, it is thought, with too much Reſpect, conſidering the two Fleets were at War. The Earl of Clarendon makes the moſt of this Revolt of the Fleet, and throws the City of London into a terrible Panick on the Prince's coming into the Downs; though the Expedition amounts to no more than the taking a Cloth Ship, and a Sugar Ship, a Ranſom of 12000 Pounds from London, and a Quarrel about dividing the Spoil.

Scots Invaſion.

The Duke of Hamilton, who had been kept ſo long in Priſon by the King's Order, without ſufficient Proof of the Charge againſt him, and was diſcharg'd by the Parliament when their Forces took the Mount in Cornwall, having by his Intereſt and Intrigues in Scotland, prevail'd with the Convention of Eſtates to raiſe an Army and make him General of it, he undertook to redeem the King from his Captivity, as Knights of Romance were wont to go on Adventures to deliver Captives from enchanted Caſtles. This Army conſiſted of 20000 Foot, and 5000 Horſe, well accommodated with all Neceſſaries. The Kirk did not approve of this Undertaking, and refus'd to give it their Bleſſing, as having no Proſpect of a good Iſſue, when it was to protect ſuch Men as Langdale, Muſgrave, Morris, Goring, L'Eſtrange, Keymis, Owen, and others, the moſt inveterate Enemies to the true Reform'd Religion, as they term'd it in Scotland. The Earl of Calendar was made Lieutenant General of this Army, under whom commanded Major General Middleton, as General of the Foot, Gen. Bayly, Major Gen. Maſſey, and other Officers, who had ſerv'd the Parliament well, came now on this Service, but their Succeſs chang'd with the Cauſe; and Men who fought well out of Principle, ſeldom fight as well out of Pique or for Pay. Monroe, who had commanded the Proteſtant Forces in Ulſter, was ſent for to join Duke Hamilton, the reducing the Iriſh Rebels being not now judg'd ſo neceſſary a Work as the reſtoring of Epiſcopacy in England. The Scots Presbyterians muſt have been Mirrors of Stupidity, if they flatter'd themſelves that the King and the Biſhops would ever have eſtabliſh'd the Presbytery in England, or if they did eſtabliſh it, that ſuch an Eſtabliſhment would laſt a Minute longer than till it was in their Power to deſtroy it. I do not make uſe of the Earl of Clarendon's Obſervations on the ill Conduct of the Scots Army, nor ſhall I rack my Invention to find out Excuſes for their being beaten; they might have ſeen, if they had had Eyes, that Cromwel and the Parliament Generals had either a very great Contempt of them, or intended to draw them as far forward into the Country as they could, that they might have the more Difficulty to get out of it again, and that in both Caſes they made ſure of beating them whenever they could come at them, which was very mortifying to an Army, which the Arch-deacon's Biſhop Guthry ſays, Was the greateſt and beſt furniſh'd that ever Scotland ſent forth. A. D. 1648.

Cromwel, after the Reduction of South Wales, reſolv'd to join Lambert, though 300 Miles off, and give Battle to thoſe gallant Invaders. Lambert was therefore order'd to keep them in play till Cromwel came up, which he did very well, by skirmiſhing with the Scots daily, and ſending timely Intelligence of their Advances, Lambert fell upon Langdale, who had join'd the Scots with 2000 Engliſh, within 2 Miles of Preſton, and routed him, and Cromwel entring the Town, charg'd the Scots in the Streets, which the Parliament's Forces clear'd of the Enemy, who were put into Diſorder, many ſlain, and many more taken Priſoners. Duke Hamilton, with moſt of the Scots Horſe and Foot, retreated over the Bridge, and the Parliament's Horſe and Foot following them, after a warm Engagement they were beaten from the Bridge. Cromwel's Men ſtill purſuing the Scots poſſeſs'd the Bridge over Darwent, and a few Houſes. The Enemy drew up within Musket Shot of them, but Night coming on they march'd off, having had about 1000 kill'd, and 4000 taken. The Duke retreated with 8000 Foot and 4000 Horſe. Cromwel follow'd him with 3000 Foot, and 2500 Horſe and Dragoons, and skirmiſhing with him at Wiggan, took Major General Vandruske, Col. Hurrey, and Lieut. Col. Ennis Priſoners. The Enemy march'd haſtily towards Warrington, and made a Stand at a Paſs, which was diſputed with great Reſolution on both Sides for 2 or 3 Hours, at laſt Cromwel beat them from their Poſt, kill'd 1000, and took 2000 Priſoners. The Scots poſſeſs'd the Bridge at Warrington, but upon Cromwel's Approach he receiv'd a Letter from Lieutenant General Bayly deſiring to capitulate, which being agreed to, the Terms were for him and his whole Body to ſurrender themſelves Priſoners of War; accordingly 4000 Men and Arms were taken, and Duke Hamilton's Infantry entirely ruin'd. The Duke with 3000 Horſe made towards Nantwich, where the Gentlemen of the County took 500 of them, and Lieutenant General Cromwel ſent an Expreſs to the Lord Gray, and Sir Edward Read, to gather all the Strength they could and purſue the Enemy, which they did, and overtook the Duke at Utoxeter in Staffordſhire with about 2000 Horſe, who were fatigu'd and tir'd, and expecting Cromwel to be nearer at Hand than he was, deliver'd themſelves up to the Lord Gray, Col. Waite, and the other Parliament Officers, who ſent them Priſoners to Aſhby de la Zouch, and the other Scots Generals were elſewhere confin'd in order to be examin'd by whoſe Invitation they came into England, for now the Parliament Army was ſo near the End of their Buſineſs, it was rational to think that a Time of Payment was approaching, when thoſe that had given them ſo much Trouble, and occaſion'd a ſecond Loſs of ſo much Blood, was to be accountable for it. The evil Counſellors who hinder'd the Negotiations for a Peace, to ſave themſelves and the Biſhops, had been great Fomenters of the New Civil War, and when they are brought to Puniſhment the Parliament, according to Clarendon and Echard, were ſatiating their Thirſt of Blood. The Committee of Safety which ſat at Derby Houſe to take Care of the Affairs of the Commonwealth, had Orders to make Inquiſition for the chief Agents and Movers in the Scots Invaſion, and the ſeveral Inſurrections in England. To this Committee was given Power to ſuppreſs all

Had the evil Counſellors conſider'd the King's Danger as much as they did their own, or had their Conſiderings been as weighty as the Lord Clarendon would have us believe, ſuch Attacks on the Supream Power then in being, as was that of the Committee of Safety, would have pointed out to the laſt dreadful one on the Sovereign, and have ſoften'd their hard Hearts to a Compliance with the Parliament's Propoſitions of Peace. Echard tells us, that after Cromwel had routed Hamilton's Army, he had Carliſle and Berwick deliver'd up to him, and then he enter'd Scotland, whereas he enter'd Scotland at the Invitation of the Marquis of Argyle and his Party, and Berwick and Carliſle were deliver'd, and Monroe tranſported himſelf into Ireland, by Command of that Marquis and the governing Power in Scotland, who came to an Agreement with Cromwel about ſettling the Government. Another Convention was call'd, who condemn'd the Proceedings of the laſt Aſſembly, and the Miniſters declaim'd againſt the late Expedition as ſinful. A Day of Humiliation was appointed to implore God's Pardon, and the chief Agents, particularly the Lord Chancellor Loudon, made his Recantation and Submiſſion with Tears. There could not be a more monſtrous Mixture than the Kirk Faction with the Cavaliers. What Milton ſays of the Generation between Sin and Death, has produc'd nothing more horrid and unnatural, yet Echard took no Notice of it, and now the Birth is deſtroy'd, he only jeſts aukwardly on the Uſe of ſcriptural Phraſes in the Language of thoſe Presbyterians, who complimented Cromwel as their Deliverer, and he laying his Hand on his Breaſt, Return'd as good Scripture, ſays the Reverend Hiſtorian, demurely looking on their grave Countenances, and ſmiling to ſee what Idiots he had made of theſe Politicians at their own ſanctify'd Weapons. Every Word of which is as falſe as it is profane and inſipid; nor is what follows truer, that there the Marquis of Argyle and Cromwel concerted concerning the Ruin of the King, and Extirpation of Monarchy, and the very Form of the future Regicide. The moſt ancient and honourable Houſe of Argyle, as illuſtrious for their Love and Services to their Country, as for their Nobility and Anceſtry, have not been ſpar'd by Echard, though at the Expence of Truth and good Manners. This Charge here is ſo notoriouſly falſe, that the Lord Marquis was at his Trial clear'd by his very Enemies of being concern'd in the King's Death, as we read in Burnet. Every one knows, and Sir John Berkley in his M.S. acknowledges, that the Ruin of the King was concerted at a Council of Officers at Windſor, ſeveral Months before Cromwel went to Scotland, and if there was no Reſpect among them to Truth, there ſhould have been more Decency obſerv'd towards ſo great a Name as that of Argyle, but the Miſchief of it is, the Marquis was a Presbyterian, and the Archdeacon obſerves Decorum and Truth alike, when he ſhews his laudable Zeal for the Laudean Prelacy, which he and his Heroes would have maintain'd at all Ventures, and matter not what Sacrifices they made to it. His Account of the Surrender of Colcheſter is worthy all his other Accounts, and has not one Blemiſh of Sincerity. I have taken Notice, that the Lord Fairfax being deſirous to ſpare the Lives of the Soldiers both within and without the Town, made a Blockade of it, and there were few Actions as long as it laſted but Skirmiſhes and Picquerings. The Lord General was reſolv'd to ſtarve them, and this gave Occaſion to Echard to extol the Bravery of the Cavaliers in eating Horſes, Dogs, and Cats, rather than ſubmit to be executed, they having no Hopes of better Conditions than at Mercy. The Behaviour of Goring, Lucas, &c. had been very barbarous and daring in this mad Enterprize. Lucas broke his Parole to the General in taking Arms againſt him, whoſe Priſoner he was, and therefore, as Whitlocke ſays, not capable of Command or Truſt in martial Affairs, yet ſo ſturdy, that when the Lord General having Intelligence that the Soldiers and Townſmen were hinder'd from ſurrendering purely by the Obſtinacy of their chief Commanders, ſent the latter a Summons; Lucas ſaid, If any more Letters came of that Kind they would hang up the Meſſenger. But he was more ſturdy when he put to Death with his own Hand ſome of the Parliament's Soldiers in cold Blood, as we read in Whitlocke. The Lord Goring when he firſt came to Chelmsford, ſeiz'd Sir William Maſham, Mr. Barnardiſton, and the Committee of Eſſex ſitting there, carry'd them with them to Colcheſter, and made them Partakers of the Hardſhips of the Siege, notwithſtanding the Parliament had offer'd the Lord Capel's Son, Col. Legg, and many other Gentlemen of like Quality, in Exchange for them, and had a hundred to one in their Cuſtody for ſuch Uſes. But theſe Men of Wiſdom and Honour wanted Diſcretion and Generoſity, or they would not in their deſperate Circumſtances have carry'd away Members of Parliament, or if they had carry'd them away, they would not have us'd them unhandſomely, nor have refus'd to exchange them, when the Parliament had it in their Power to make Numbers ſuffer the like Extremities which the Committee Men ſuffer'd in Colcheſter, from whence Goring turn'd out the Women, and expos'd them to the Fire of Fairfax's Men, who ſpar'd them as much as they could, and the General let the Cavalier Commanders know, that if they did not take them in again, they ſhould be anſwerable for their Blood. When at laſt they were compell'd by Famine to deliver up the Town, as was the Lord Fairfax's Intention, his Lordſhip would give them no other Terms than Quarter for their Lives, at the Entrance of the Parliament's Forces, but not to exempt them from Execution by Martial or other Law. Accordingly General Fairfax being poſſeſs'd of the Town, held a Council of War, who condemn'd Sir Charles Lucas, Sir George Liſle, and Sir Bernard Gaſcoyn, to be ſhot, for Satisfaction to Military Juſtice, as the Lord General wrote the Parliament, and in Part of Revenge, for the innocent Blood they had caus'd to be ſpilt, and the Trouble, Damage, and Miſchief they had brought upon the Town, the County, and the Kingdom. Inſtead of ſuch Reaſoning, the Earl of Clarendon and the Archdeacon launch out into Panegyricks on Lucas, Liſle, and Gaſcoyn an Italian Papiſt. Sir Roger Manly, as ſober and judicious an Author as the beſt of them, aſſures us, The Stone Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Liſle fell upon, being ſprinkled with their Blood, could not be cleanſed of it, but continues ſtill a Monument of this horrid Impiety. What admirable Hiſtorians they be!

The Earl of Clarendon affirms, the News of this bloody Reſolution reaching the Lord Goring, the Lord Capel, the Lord Loughborough, and the other Priſoners of Quality, they wrote a Letter to the General that they might be ſhot with them, which is extremely probable. The two Knights being thus murder'd, and the bloody Sacrifice made, the Italian Papiſt Sir Bernard Gaſcoyn was ſav'd, and the Earl gives us as notable a Reaſon as is given in his Hiſtory for many other Things: The Council of War were afraid as ſoon as they knew who he was, one of the Great Duke's Subjects, that the Great Duke would have ſuffer'd Reprizals on their Friends and Children who travell'd into Italy, who might pay dear for it for many Generations. The Marquis Palcotti, an Italian of much greater Quality, and Brother to an Engliſh Dutcheſs, was hang'd here a few Years ago, but No-body was afraid of travelling into Italy after it. Such Fact and ſuch Argument tally to a Nicety. The Lord Goring, the Lord Capel, Lord Loughborough, Sir William Compton, Sir Abraham Shipman, Sir John Watts, Sir Lodowick Dyer, Sir Henry Appleton, Sir Donart Strutt, Sir Hugh Onelly, Sir Richard Maleverer, were put into ſeveral Priſons; and by this Liſt we ſee what Force there is in another of the Earl of Clarendon's Reaſons: The Council of War condemn'd Sir Bernard Gaſcoyn, only that being a Knight, it might make three of that Order Examples. We ſee there were Knights enough beſides him; but the Truth is, he being a Papiſt, they thought it juſt that he ſhould be an Example to the Romaniſts, and ſpar'd him only becauſe he had done and could not do ſo much Miſchief as Lucas and Liſle. The General having ſettled that Town, Yarmouth and all the County of Suffolk, which began to be in a little Motion on the late Appearance of the Prince's Fleet on that Coaſt, return'd to his Head Quarters at St. Alban's; and thus were all the Inſurrections entirely ſuppreſs'd in about 4 Months Time, except Pomfret Caſtle, which, as has been obſerv'd, was ſurpriz'd by the Treachery of one Morris, formerly a Parliament Officer, and the Weakneſs of the Governor, who plac'd entire Confidence in Morris. That Deſerter ſhew'd again how well he deſerv'd the fine Character that is given him by Echard, in contriving and executing a Deſign to aſſaſſinate Col. Rainſborough in his Lodgings at Doncaſter, one of the braveſt Things the Cavaliers have to boaſt of in the firſt or ſecond Civil War.

The laſt Commotions had given Spirit to the Hollis Party in the Houſe of Commons. The Officers and Soldiers were buſy in ſubduing their Enemies, and in their Abſence Mr. Denzil Hollis, Sir John Clotworthy, Sergeant Glyn, Mr. Walter Long, impeach'd Members, retook their Seats in the Houſe of Commons, but were ſoon forc'd to quit them. Several Counties were put upon petitioning for a Perſonal Treaty with the King, as the only ſure Method of curing the preſent Diſtempers. The City of London, who had a Set of Petitioners Pro or Con always ready, was not backward on this Occaſion, but preſented a Petition to the ſame Purpoſe. 1. That the King may be free from Reſtraint. 2. Invited to a Treaty. 3. The Armies disbanded, and the Self-denying Ordinance be effectually obſerv'd, every Article of it ſtruck at the victorious Cromwel, his Party, and Principles. Cromwel had not then beaten the Scots, nor were the other Riſings ſuppreſs'd, which embolden'd thoſe that wiſh'd well to them to ſpeak their Minds the more freely; and now the Two Houſes reſolve again, That a Meſſage be ſent to the King, to acquaint him, that they deſire a Treaty with his Majeſty in what Place of the Iſle of Wight he ſhall appoint. The Lords choſe the Earl of Middleſex, and the Commons Major Bulkley and Sir John Hippeſley to go to the King on this Meſſage.

Parliament ſend to the King to treat.

His Majeſty had liv'd in much Solitude ſince the laſt Commiſſioners left the Iſland; he expected great Things from the Scots, and from every one elſe that had undertaken to do any thing for him; it being his Misfortune that his Counſellors and chief Agents were never deficient in Promiſes and Schemes, however they fail'd in Performances. It was now during his Confinement in Carisbroke Caſtle, according to Echard, that he finiſh'd Eikon Baſilike. The modeſt Author does not ſay, It is ſaid, It is thought, but affirms poſitively, Here he compleated his celebrated Book, which he never began. There is not ſo good Evidence for any one hiſtorical Fact, as for Dr. Gauden's writing that celebrated Book, which I muſt confeſs I never read with thoſe Emotions that are attributed to the Readers of it by certain Enthuſiaſts. For as I am well acquainted with this King's Reign, and have been taught by the Lord Clarendon that it was full of Male-Adminiſtration, there would be ſome Penitence, ſome Sorrow for it, were the Author's Sentiments really ſo devout and pious as is there affected. The Language, as far at leaſt as I am capable of judging, is entirely Clerical, and not in the leaſt agreeable to King Charles's Manner in his Meſſages and Declarations, moſt of them drawn by himſelf, in a cloſe ſuccinct Stile; whereas that of Eikon Baſilike is redundant and declamatory, and as little becoming the Majeſty of a Prince, as a Caſſock would become a crown'd Head. To hint one Thing only; The moſt pious Prayer in the Book, ſtil'd a Prayer in Time of Captivity, is taken almoſt Word for Word from the Prayer of Pamela, to a Pagan Deity, in Pembroke's Arcadia, a Romance. Edit. 1647. p. 248. But there is no need of Conjecture where the Proof is ſo plain. Dr. Walker, a pious Divine of our Orthodox Church aſſures us, that Dr. Gauden gave him the original Book, in his own Hand Writing, to convey it to the Preſs, and that he actually gave it to one Peacock, who deliver'd it to Royſton, the King's Printer. The Earl of Angleſey left a Writing ſign'd by him, to undeceive the World, and inform them who it was that wrote Eikon Baſilike.

Eikon Baſilike.

" KING Charles II. and the Duke of York, " did both (in the laſt Seſſions of Parliament, 1675. when I ſhow'd them in the " Lords Houſe the written Copy of this Book, " Eikon Baſilike, wherein are ſome Corrections " and Alterations written with the late King " Charles the Firſt's own Hand) aſſure me, that " this was none of the ſaid King's compiling, " but made by Dr. Gauden, Biſhop of Exeter; " which I here inſert for the undeceiving others " in this Point, by atteſting ſo much under my " Hand,

ANGLESEY.

Dr. Gauden, as the Reverend Dr. Walker informs us, acquainted him with the Deſign of writing the Book before he wrote it, ſhew'd him the Heads of ſeveral Chapters, and ſome of the Diſcourſes, asking him his Opinion of it after Peruſal; Dr. Walker reply'd, It will be much for your Reputation, Honour and Safety; but I ſtick at the Lawfulneſs of it, as a pious Divine muſt neceſſarily do, ſaying, How can you ſatisfy your ſelf in ſo impoſing on the World: Gauden anſwer'd, Look on the Title, 'tis the Portraiture, &c. and no Man draws his own Picture. Walker ſome Time after ask'd Gauden, If the King had ever ſeen the Book, which the Reverend Hiſtorian avers was inconteſtably prov'd to be his own writing by a Cloud of Witneſſes. To which Dr. Gauden reply'd, " I know " it certainly no more than you, but I us'd my " Endeavours that he might; for I deliver'd a " Copy of it to the Marquis of Hertford, when " he went to the Treaty at the Iſle of Wight, " and

" and entreated his Lordſhip if he could obtain " any private Opportunity, that he would deliver " to his Majeſty, and humbly deſire to know his " Pleaſure concerning it :" But the Violence which threaten'd the King haſtening ſo faſt, Gauden ventur'd to print it, and never knew what was the Iſſue of his ſending it. He told Walker, He could not certainly ſay King Charles II. knew that he wrote the Book, becauſe he never took expreſs Notice of it ; but added he, I take it for granted he does know it, and am ſure the Duke of York does, for he has often ſpoke of it to me, and own'd it as a ſeaſonable and acceptable Service. Dr. Walker concludes, " Mrs. Gauden, the Biſhop's Wife, " Mr. Gifford, who tranſcrib'd the Copy that was " ſent to the Iſle of Wight, and my ſelf, believ'd " Dr. Gauden wrote it, as much as we could " believe any Thing ; and when we ſpake of it " in his Preſence or in his Abſence, did it with- " out the leaſt Doubt of his having wrote it, " being as much aſſur'd of it as poſſible we " could be of any Matter of Fact : And 'tis un- " accountably ſtrange that all we who had the " beſt Reaſon and faireſt Opportunites to know " the Truth, ſhould all be deceiv'd or impos'd " upon, which we were to the higheſt Degree " imaginable if Dr. Gauden wrote it not. Then mentioning the Printing of it, he tells us, he had ſix of the firſt Impreſſion given him by Dr. Gauden for his Trouble in the Matter, one of which, to uſe his own Words, I have ſtill by me. Fact is not capable of plainer Evidence, eſpecially as it ſtands corroborated by Dr. Burnet, Biſhop of Salisbury, who wrote thus of it ; " In " the Year 1673. in which I had a great Share " of Favour and free Converſation with the then " Duke of York ; as he ſuffer'd me to talk very " freely to him about Matters of Religion, and " as I was urging him with ſomewhat out of " his Father's Book, he told me, That Book " was not of his Father's writing ; that the " Letter to the Prince of Wales was never " brought to him, and that Dr. Gauden writ " it, who after the Reſtoration brought the " Marquis of Hertford, then Duke of Somerſet, " and the Earl of Southampton, to the King " and the Duke, and both Somerſet and South- " ampton affirm'd Dr. Gauden wrote it. That " the Earl of Southampton ſhew'd it to the King " at the Iſle of Wight Treaty, who read it and " approv'd of it as containing his Senſe of " Things ; upon this the Duke of York told " Dr. Burnet, that though Sheldon and the other " Biſhops oppos'd Gauden's Promotion, becauſe " he had taken the Covenant ; yet the Merits " of that Service carry'd it for him." The learned Prelate adds, There has been a great deal of diſputing about this Book ; ſome are ſo zealous for maintaining it to be the King's, that they think a Man falſe to the Church that denies it to be his : Dr. Burnet of the Charter-houſe expreſs'd to a Perſon of Honour, now living, his Suſpicion, that the Book was not the King's writing, and Lilly beſides ſaying, that he doubted it, a little after it came out, adds ſeveral Reaſons for it, which I think are not wanted. The Biſhop of Salisbury takes Notice with what View it was written, and why held in ſo much Adoration by the King's Friends The Piety of the Prayers made all People cry out againſt the Murder of a Prince who thought ſo ſeriouſly of all his Affairs in his Meditations before God : And was it not very likely that ſuch Piety and Meditations ſhould co-operate with the Treaty with the Iriſh Rebels, with the Treaty with the Scots for the ſecond Civil War, with the Variety of Inſurrections in all Parts of the Kingdom, and the Blood that was ſpilt in them, and with his Majeſty's arduous Deſire, and frequent Contrivances to make his Eſcape from his Impriſonment : The latter miſcarrying, and in Part by the Diligence of an Officer of the Garriſon, one Major Rolph, an Agitator, the Royaliſts charg'd him with a Deſign to aſſaſſinate the King ſome how or other. I don't wonder that the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Echard exert themſelves on this monſtrous Plot, though there is not a Word of Truth in it ; nor that Sir Roger Manly, another fair Gentleman-like Author, call'd Rolph, Parricide and Villain ; but the Wonderment is, that the Lords ſhould give ſo much Credit to Osborn, who inform'd againſt Rolph as to commit him to Priſon ; Osborn was in the Depth of the Contrivance for the King's Eſcape : The Iron Bar of his Majeſty's Window was fil'd through ; and Larrey ſays, the King had his Head out of the Window, when he heard a Noiſe, which oblig'd him to go to Bed again ; it was Hammond the Governor, who having had Notice of the Plot from Rolph, who had encourag'd Osborn to engage in it, ran thither to ſee what was doing : The King had not Time to clear himſelf of the Window, ſo he ſlip'd into Bed, where Hammond found him, and ſearching, perceiv'd the Bar of the Window was cut ; Rolph diſcovering it, gave Information, upon which Hammond chang'd and doubled the Watch, leaving no Hopes of eſcaping. Lilly bought the Saw, and ſent it to the King as is ſaid elſewhere more at large. However, Osborn turns the Plot againſt Rolph, and gives Evidence that the latter had concerted his Majeſty's Eſcape with Osborn, that he might murder him when he attempted it. The Earl and Arch-deacon put on grave Faces to cry out againſt the Horror of this Conſpiracy, and the Wickedneſs of the Parliament, who had no Mind to have the Matter examin'd, Hiſt. Reb. but the Clamour of the People was ſo great, that after many Delays, they voted Rolph ſhould be tried at Wincheſter, and thither they ſent their Serjeant Wyld, to be the ſole Judge of that Criminal, before whom the major Part of the ſame Jury, who found Capt. Burley guilty, was impannel'd for the Trial of Rolph. This is a teeming Paſſage, and has many Births to deliver of the Chimera Kind. Sanderſon, who will be allow'd to be as good a Churchman as the Earl or the Archdeacon, owns the King did not believe Osborn's Informations, which is confirm'd by Whitlocke : " His Majeſty declar'd to divers " of his Party, and wiſh'd them to declare it to " others, that the Governor Col. Hammond, was " a Man of Honour and Truſt, and had carried " himſelf civilly and reſpectfully to him ; that " Osborn had unjuſty and ungratefully aſpers'd " the Governor ; for Col. Hammond was charg'd " by Osborn, as well as Rolph." And as touching the Preſervation of his Perſon from Poiſon or any ſuch horrid Deſign, the King ſaid he was ſo confident of the Honeſty and Faithfulneſs of the Governor, that he thought himſelf as ſafe in his Hands as if he were in the Cuſtody of his own Son. I wiſh I could be as confident of the Honeſty and Faithfulneſs of the Hiſtorians. It could not well be the ſame Jury that found Burley guilty, which was impannel'd for Rolph ; Burley's being a Petty Jury, and Rolph's the Grand Jury, who found the Bill againſt him Ignoramus ; and his Indictment never came to the Petty Jury ; tho' the Earl remembers the Speech the infamous Judge Wyld, as he decently terms him, made to them. The Parliament was ſo far from endeavouring to ſink the Matter as his Lordſhip avers that they order'd the Evidence Osborn

Col. Hammond wrote to them, deſiring that Osborn's Charge againſt Rolph may come to a ſpeedy Hearing, it reflecting ſo highly upon the Army and upon him, and being an horrid Scandal, of which he clears himſelf, Mr. Rolph, and all the Officers; but inſtead of clearing them, the Lord Clarendon lays the Charge home againſt not only Rolph, but the Houſe of Commons, who were ſenſible of the Plot, but would have ſcreen'd the Plotter, and have prevented his being brought to a Trial, had it not been for the Clamour of the People, who really made no Clamour at all, nor believ'd a Word of the Charge given by Osborn againſt Rolph, who was committed by the Lords without any Cauſe, as the Commons ſaid, and that they found Reaſon to clear him. They alſo order'd him 150 Pounds for his unjuſt Impriſonment. And ſo far was the King or Hammond from believing any Thing of the Charge againſt Rolph, that he was afterwards, as Sanderſon himſelf acknowledges, appointed the chief Officer in the Guard of his Majeſty's Perſon.

It behov'd the Parliament to make what Diſpatch they could with the Treaty, that it might be concluded before the Army was at Leiſure to interpoſe in it; and it behov'd the King to iſſue it as faſt as he could for the Safety of his Perſon and Government, both ſtruck at by the Army; yet an unſeaſonble Debate about Biſhopricks is ſtarted, and the Peace delay'd on that Account ſo long, that the Soldiery had Time to break off the Treaty, and bring their wicked Purpoſes to paſs; for no farther can any good Engliſhman go with the Parliament in this Quarrel, than the laſt Iſle of Wight Treaty; and no farther do I in the leaſt juſtify the Proceedings of the Parliamentarians, than while they were free, eſpecially from all Military Force. After the Soldiery had garbled the Houſe, the Power was uſurp'd, and illegal, and this illegal uſurp'd Power, and no other proceeded againſt the King. However, the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion and Echard's Accounts of it are ſo full of Ribaldry and Falſity, that they make even this very bad Matter ſtill worſe than it was.

Treaty voted.

The firſt Propoſal of the Treaty came from the Lords, who ſent down theſe Votes to the Commons. That the Vote againſt further Addreſſes be recalled. That ſuch Perſons and Servants as his Majeſty ſhall ſend for, be admitted to wait on him. That the Place of Treaty be Newport, in the Iſle of Wight. That the Inſtructions to Col. Hammond for ſafe keeping the King be recall'd. That five Lords and ten Commoners be nam'd Commiſſioners: To which the Houſe of Commons concurr'd, and new Inſtructions were ſent to Hammond, Auguſt the 25th. That the King be remov'd to Newport. That he be in the ſame Condition and Freedom as at Hampton Court. That no Perſon who had been in Arms againſt the Parliament, nor no excepted Perſon nor Foreigners be admitted to be near him. That his Majeſty paſs his Royal Word not to go out of the Iſland during the Treaty, nor twenty Days after. The Parliament had the Fleet and the City of London on their Side; and the Scots would have given them what Aſſiſtance they could; but all that was little in the Ballance againſt a victorious Army, at the Diſpoſal of two of the beſt Heads of thoſe Times, Cromwel and Ireton, which Conſideration ſhould have quicken'd the Counſels that tended to Peace. Col. Hammond gave his Majeſty the Liberty of the Iſland on his Parole; and the Parliament order'd a liberal Allowance for his Expence. His Chaplains were allow'd to attend him; and Sir Peter Killegrew was ſent with a Letter, and the laſt Votes of both Houſes inclos'd; to which his Majeſty return'd the following Anſwer:

A. D. 1648.

My Lord and Mr. Speaker,

" I Have receiv'd your Letter of the 25th Pre-

The Place Newport in the Isle of Wight.

The House where the Treaty was carry'd on was Sir William Hodges's at Newport, but before the Parliament's Commissioners arriv'd there, a Petition was presented to the House of Commons from Thousands of well affected Persons in and near London, on the 12th of Sept. wherein they gave Reasons why they first assisted the two Houses, and set forth what they expected, That the Parliament would have made good the Supremacy of the People from all Pretences of negative Voices either in King or Lords. That they would have done Justice upon the capital Authors and Promoters of the former or late Wars, &c. They could hardly speak plainer against the King's Person, the Monarchy and Peerage. And it was apparent enough that these Thousands of well affected would have the Army to stand by them, so they were formally thank'd, and not due Care taken to close with the King before the Petitioners had a Strength to back their Petition, as was done 2 or 3 Months after.

On the 12th of Sept. the Parliament kept a Day of publick Humiliation, for a Blessing on the Treaty of Peace, and the King and his Houshold did the same on the 18th, his Majesty drawing up himself the Form of Prayer to be us'd on that Occasion, with the Common Divine Service. The King wrote to the Parliament for blank Passes to be sent by Richard Parsons to Scotland, for Commissioners from thence, which the two Houses would not grant. His Majesty's Letter ends thus, From our Court at Newport in the Isle of Wight, this 8th of Sept. 1648. so that he did not look upon himself as in a Prison but as in his own Palace; and certainly Matters might now have been happily accommodated, had the Laity been a greater Majority in his Counsels. The two Houses refus'd Passes to the Lord Carnegie and Sir Alexander Gibson, but granted one for Sir James Carmichel. After Sermon the Commissioners, who arriv'd at Newport the 15th of Sept. went to the King, the Earl of Northumberland told him they were come to treat. His Majesty said, I am glad of it, and desire God to perfect this blessed Work. I profess I am in Charity with all of you, and not willing to seek Revenge against any, nor give Occasion of Delay. Then the Commissioners presented three Bills to his Majesty, for Religion, the Militia, and Recalling his Majesty's Proclamations. In the Preamble of the latter the Parliament laid the Bloodshed upon him, which the King desir'd might be respited till the End of the Treaty. His Majesty agreed to recall all Declarations against the Parliament. To settle the Militia in the two Houses for 20 Years. To leave 37 Delinquents to be excepted out of the Act of Indemnity. To revoke all Commissions given to raise Men in Ireland, and leave the Management of that War to the Parliament. To abolish Archbishops; and that the Bishops, who remain provisionally should not exercise Authority, Jurisdiction, or Ordination, but with the Advice and Assistance of the Ministers. That the Presbyterian Government should be established for 3 Years, at the End of which the Assembly of Divines, his Majesty naming 20 more, should determine the Case of Church Government for the future. By which as much of Episcopacy was given up as any reasonable and honest Presbyterian ever did, or ever ought desire. And to say after all this, that the King was a Martyr for the Church, seems to be the most egregious Nonsense that ever was offer'd for Argument or Fact.

King's Concessions.

Three Days after the opening of the Treaty the Commissioners wrote to Mr. Lenthall the Speaker for a Remittance of 4000 Pounds to Southampton; Mr. Crescet, who had the Care of the Houshold, having inform'd them, that he could not maintain his Majesty and their Officers at the usual Allowance, and they said, the Honour of the Parliament would suffer without it. The foot the Commissioners treated upon were the Propositions presented at Hampton Court. The Time allow'd for the Treaty was 40 Days. The Demands and Answers to be in writing, and nothing that was not so to be binding, nor till the whole Treaty was concluded. Scotland was not included in this Treaty.

On the 25th of Sept. a Week after the Opening of the Treaty, his Majesty consented to the first Proposition, to vacate all Oaths, Declarations and Proclamations against the Parliament, and to indemnify all their Actions in the War, which the King acknowledges they were necessitated to undertake in their just and lawful Defence. His Majesty the 9th of October, confirm'd the Calling and Sitting of the Assembly of Divines, consented to the Directory of Worship instead of the Common Prayer, which he consented should be taken away out of all Churches and Chapels. He yielded up the Militia for 20 Years. He agreed to the Payment of the Parliament's Debts, to disable all the Lords he had made since the Lord Littleton carry'd away the Seal, to sit in the House of Peers.

During this Treaty the Parliament receiv'd Letters from Colonel Michael Jones in Ireland, giving an Account of the Arrival of the Marquis of Ormond in that Kingdom, with a Commission to conclude a Peace with the Rebels, at the very Time that the King was treating with the Parliament to carry on the War against them. There was also this Letter of Ormond's to the Chief of the Irish Massacrers intercepted.

AFTER our very hearty Commendations, being arriv'd in this Kingdom qualified with Power to treat and conclude a Peace with the Confederate Roman Catholicks, or such as shall be deputed and authorised by them in that Behalf, we have thought fit by these our Letters to desire you, to make the same known to the Assembly now at Kilkenney; as also, that in pursuance of the Paper of the 13th of May last, deliver'd to their Commissioners at St. Germains, we expect to receive from them by Persons fully authorised to treat and conclude, such Propositions as they shall think fit, at our House at Carrick, whether we intend to remain for the better Accommodation, and more speedy Dispatch of this Affair, as soon as we shall be advertised by you of the Time, when we ſhall expect them there, which we deſire may be with all convenient Expedition. We remain at Cork, this 4th of October, 1648.

Your very loving Friend,

ORMOND.

To our loving Friend Sir Richard Blake, Chairman of the Aſſembly of the Confederate Roman Catholicks at Kilkenny.

I deſire the Reader to compare this Letter, wherein Ormond tells the Maſſacrers, he is qualified by the King's Commiſſion to treat and conclude a Peace, with what the King told the Parliament's Commiſſioners at Newport the 1ſt of November, about a Month after Ormond's Letter was written. He declar'd, That ſince the firſt Votes for the Treaty at the Iſle of Wight, he hath not tranſacted any Affairs concerning Ireland but with thoſe Commiſſioners. Now the Vote for that Treaty was the 29th of July, 1648. and Ormond communicated the Commiſſion he had to treat with the Iriſh Rebels to their Chairman at Kilkenny about 9 Weeks after. It cannot be ſaid the King did not treat, but Ormond treated, becauſe whatever a Prince's Plenipotentiary does by his Warrant, the Prince in Effect does it himſelf. And notwithſtanding the very great Encomiums on this King's Integrity, in Clarendon and Echard, it is certain there's great Reaſon to object to it. Lilly, who was not the more a Fool for his being a Conjurer, in the vulgar Acceptation of the Word, ſays of him, He had much of Self-ends in all he did, and a moſt difficult Thing it was to hold him cloſe to his own Promiſe, ſo that ſome foreign Princes beſtow'd on him the Character of a moſt falſe Prince, and one that never kept his Word, unleſs for his own Advantage. Again, Though in a Time of Parliament he often promis'd to redreſs any Grievances, yet the beſt Friend he hath cannot produce any one Act of Good for his Subjects done by him in the Vacancy of a Parliament. I wiſh there had been no Reaſon for him to ſay what he does a little too coarſely. How does this agree with that ſtrict Piety and Devotion for which the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion and Echard pay this Prince ſo much Adoration.

Obſerv. p. 11. K. Charles keeps not his Word. p. 57.

The Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, with his wonted Simplicity and Sincerity, introduces two Divines, Dr. Spurſtow and Jenkins, of whom neither was then preſent, or not authoriſed ſo to be, arguing with his Majeſty about Epiſcopacy; They urg'd the common Allegations, that Biſhops and Presbyters in the Scripture Language ſignify'd one and the ſame Thing, intimating, that the Argument was the worſe for being common and ſcriptural; that if the Apoſtles exerciſed a larger Juriſdiction, it had been granted them as Apoſtles. The Presbyterians could not ſay that; for the Apoſtles could not exerciſe ſo large a Juriſdiction; they could not impriſon, levy Money by diſtreſs, or have any temporal Juriſdiction under Pagan Emperors and Kings. The Earl and the Laudean Prelates, if they know any Thing at all of Hiſtory Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, muſt know, that the Powers of the Earth were declar'd Enemies to Chriſtianity, and made no Grant of temporal Authority to the Apoſtles or their Succeſſors till the Roman Empire became Chriſtian. The King, ſays the Hiſtorian, with exemplary Gravity, preſs'd them with thoſe Texts of Scripture which have been conſtantly urg'd by thoſe who maintain the Jus Divinum of Biſhops, the Authority of the Fathers, and the Government of all Chriſtian Churches for fifteen Hundred Years. Did the King prove by Scripture, that Timothy and Titus were Archbiſhops or Biſhops, had Chancellors, Spiritual Courts, Temporal Baronies, Palaces, Lordſhips, &c. when there was not one of them known, when one of them could not be known in the Chriſtian Church. Indeed the Caſe is very different now, for thoſe temporal Baronies, Palaces, Lordſhips, &c. are annexed to Dioceſes by the Laws of the Land, and are as much the Dioceſan's legal Poſſeſſions as Right can give legal Poſſeſſion to any one. But this argues not that it was exactly ſo from the Beginning, which is all that is controverted. The Hiſtorian again as notably as before, The Government of all Chriſtian Churches could not but be by themſelves acknowledged to be by Biſhops; yes ſuch Biſhops as Titus and Timothy, praying, preaching, ordaining, and ſuperintending Biſhops. Biſhops then travell'd a foot from one Dioceſe to another in the Exerciſe of what the Hiſtorian terms their larger Juriſdictions. He proceeds, The Commiſſioners reliev'd their ill manner'd Clergy, which is ſpoken with a great deal of good Manners, conſidering it is not true, for their Clergy behav'd with as much Decency as their Oppoſites. Dr. Seaman, Maſter of Peter Houſe, Cambridge, for nothing will go down with theſe dignify'd Perſons but ſome Dignity, was the Divine who handled this Argument, and was a Divine of as great Eminence for Controverſial Learning as any of that Age; his Majeſty own'd his ſingular Ability in this Controverſy. Yet the Earl adds, His Majeſty with wonderful Acuteneſs fully anſwer'd all their Arguments; not anſwer'd, but fully anſwer'd, whereas he did not anſwer one of them, and it cannot be anſwer'd till thoſe Men can prove Impoſſibilities, which they do as often attempt as any Men ever did. The King ſaid, Calvin and Beza, and moſt learned Men of the Reform'd Religion, approv'd of Epiſcopal Government, but the King did not ſay what Sort of Epiſcopal Government. They approv'd of praying, preaching, ordaining, and ſuperintending, without temporal Prerogatives, Powers, Principalities, Dignities, &c. It was at this Time and Place that Archbiſhop Uſher preſented the King with his Reduction of Epiſcopacy, which fully anſwer'd every Argument made uſe of in favour of the Laudean Prelacy, by ſhewing how it was to be reduc'd to the Primitive, the Archbiſhop declares, That the Presbyters had a Hand not only in delivering the Doctrine and Sacraments, but alſo in the Adminiſtration of the Diſcipline of the Church with the Biſhop, who was the chief Preſident, ſtil'd by Tertullian, Summus Sacerdos. The reſt of the Diſpenſers of the Word and Sacraments were join'd in the common Government of the Church. Pope Cornelius, or Cornelius Biſhop of Rome, always conferr'd with the Presbytery in the Exerciſe of Church Diſcipline; and the Preſence of the Clergy was thought ſo requiſite in Matters of Epiſcopal Audience, that it was concluded in the Council of Carthage, that the Biſhop might hear no Man's Cauſe without the Preſence of the Clergy, which was inſerted in the Canons of Egbert, Archbiſhop of York in the Saxon Times, and afterwards into the Body of the Canon Law it ſelf. You ſee how fully the King anſwer'd all the Arguments of the Presbytery. Archbiſhop Uſher then directs his Majeſty how he might have proceeded in the Alteration of Church Government without wounding his Conſcience. "True it is, "that in our Church this Kind of Presbyterian "Government has been long diſus'd, yet ſeeing "it

A. D. 1648. " it ſtill profeſſeth that every Paſtor hath a " Right to rule the Church, from whence the " Name of Rector alſo was given at firſt to him, " and to adminiſter the Diſcipline of Chriſt as " well as to diſpenſe the Doctrine and Sacra- " ments, and the Reſtraint of the Exerciſe of " that Right proceedeth only from the Cuſtom " now received in this Realm. We remember " what the Earl ſaid, that it was not from " Cuſtom but Jure Divino prov'd by Texts of " Scripture. No Man can doubt but by another " Law of the Land this Hindrance may be well " remov'd; and how eaſily this ancient Form of " Government, by the united Suffrages of the " Clergy might be reviv'd again, and with what " little ſhew of Alteration." He proceeds to ſet forth, &c. which was the ſame Way of arguing us'd by the Parliament's Commiſſioners: Whatſoever was not of divine Inſtitution might be very lawfully alter'd; for it had its Original form Men, it might by Men be chang'd or revers'd. That Epiſcopacy, as it was eſtabliſh'd in the Church of England, was not that Epiſcopacy that was mention'd in Scripture, and that therefore the Laws which ſupported it, might be juſtly taken away. I do verily believe that the Archdeacon does not know this to be the true State of the Caſe, and that tho' he has written an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, he knows no more of it than he appears to know of the Hiſtory of England during the Reigns of the Royal Houſe of Stuart, tho' he has written that alſo. He tells us, 'tis no Matter after whom, ſince it is falſe, that the King was much better vers'd in the Argument of Church-Government than Mr. Vines, Mr. Caryl, Dr. Seaman, &c. That Jenkins and Spurſtow were like a Couple of Bull-Dogs let looſe upon his Majeſty, when neither Spurſtow nor Jenkins were Aſſiſtants to the Parliament's Commiſſioners; yet Spurſtow very plainly and fiercely told the King, he would be damn'd if he did not aboliſh Epiſcopacy; which beſides that Dr. Spurſtow did not ſay it, is ſo contrary to the Character of that Divine, full of Meekneſs and Moderation, as to bear the Falſity in the Front of it. Dr. Spurſtow, ſays Dr. Calamy, was a Man whoſe Converſation was innocent, chearful, and very acceptable, of a very peaceable Diſpoſition. It is very pleaſant to ſee how the rigid Eccleſiaſtical Writers endeavour to glew their temporal Honours and Emoluments to the ſpiritual Function, and how they ſtrive to make thoſe Things the Eſſence of Religion which have not the leaſt Relation to the Doctrine of Chriſt. If they would ſay that the Laws of the Land give the Eccleſiaſticks as good a Title to their Dignities and Revenues as the Laicks have to their Eſtates, they would, as I have often obſerv'd, talk reaſonably, and nothing could be ſaid to them but what Archbiſhop Uſher ſays; but to pretend that they have a divine independent Right to their Prerogatives and Lordſhips, is an Inſult on common Senſe.

The rare Hiſtory which Echard takes from two rare Hiſtorians, Walker and Wagſtaff, whoſe Names I hardly ever before heard of, being all ſecret and ſuſpected, I leave it where I found it; but this Saying of the King's is very orthodox and politick; I will hold out till I make ſome Stone in this Building my Tomb-Stone, and ſo I will do by the Church of England; and ſo is this other, which could not but endear him to the Laudeans; The concurrent Opinion of the Clergy, as to Sacrilege, is a much better Information to my Conſcience, than any Law of the Land can be; which I do not believe the King ever ſaid, it being ſo contrary to Reaſon and Juſtice. Sacrilege, if underſtood to be ſtealing the Chalice or Pulpit-cloth, is doubtleſs to be abhorr'd by all Men; but to alienate Lands from one Religious Uſe to put them to another, or from a particular to a general Intereſt by the Laws of the Land, may be as well call'd Sodomy as Sacrilege. Theſe Men buttreſs up their Cauſe with Subſtantives and Adjectives, ſuch as Schiſm, Sacrilege, Rebellion, Sedition, Factious, Fanatical, and the like. Echard tells us of a kind of a Hiſtory of this Treaty, written by his Majeſty for the Uſe of the Prince, and of ſeveral other Papers drawn up by the King with great Exactneſs; but neither himſelf, nor Walker his Original, could think juſtly enough to obſerve, as Biſhop Burnet does, King Charles I. minded little Things too much, and was more concern'd in the drawing of a Paper, than in fighting a Battle. Had theſe Men been capable of thinking juſtly, they would not have written Hiſtories, they would have better examin'd their Abilities and Intentions, and have left it to Ruſhworth and Whitlocke to convey the Truth to Poſterity, and if they had ſo done, this Hiſtory had been needleſs. While his Majeſty and the Parliament's Commiſſioners were thus buſied in Debates about Biſhops and Biſhops Lands, the Army were as buſy in ſuppreſſing the Inſurrections; and having done that Work, their Council took into Conſideration who was the Author of the firſt and ſecond War, and who was to be accountable for the innocent Blood which had been ſpilt. They conſider'd it with great Formality, but Cromwel and Ireton had before determin'd that Matter among themſelves and their Creatures. It muſt be confeſs'd that the Lord Fairfax, however he ſhew'd himſelf cool in the Affair afterwards, was now as warm in it as either of theſe two Generals; for the Commiſſioners of the Army having drawn up a Remonſtrance, it was deliver'd to the Houſe of Commons by Col. Ewer and ſeven other Officers; That the King be brought to Juſtice, as the capital Cauſe of all; and Fairfax wrote a Letter to the Parliament, deſiring that Remonſtrance might have a Preſent Reading. The Paper ſet forth the King's Miſcarriages, his double and dilatory Proceedings in Treaties, particularly that now on foot. The Army deſir'd, He might no more come to Government, nor to London; That Delinquents be puniſh'd; That the Prince and Duke of York be ſummon'd in by a Day, and if they do not come, be declar'd Traitors. The Duke of Glouceſter not being nam'd, it gave occaſion to ſurmiſe that the Army intended to chooſe him King, for the early Affection he ſhew'd to the Proteſtant Religion, which neither of his two elder Brothers did at that Time much care for, nor he himſelf afterwards; That no King be hereafter admitted but upon Election. This Petition was preſented the 20th of November, and it was too viſible that the Parliament would be oblig'd to comply with the Army; yet the Diſpute about Epiſcopacy goes on ſtill at the Iſle of Wight with as much Alacrity as if his Majeſty was in no Danger at all. There were ſo many Prelates and Doctors with him, that one would have hop'd ſome of them would have preferr'd his Preſervation to that of their own Preferments, and have adviſ'd him to do as he was adviſ'd by Archbiſhop Uſher. The Remonſtrance occaſion'd a high Debate, which was at laſt adjourn'd, to the great Diſlike of the Army, and much more, when the further Conſideration of it being put to the Vote, it was carry'd in the Negative by 90 Voices, which are the Number of the Secluded Members, ſo much talk'd of in Hiſtory. The Army's Remonſtrance having been preſented to the Parliament, they diſpatch'd Col. Ewer

A. D. 1648.

Council of the Army's Remonſtrance.

A. D. 1648. Ewer to the Isle of Wight with Orders to Col. Hammond to give up that Government and the Custody of the King to Ewer, and himself to attend the General at his Head Quarters at Windsor. The Commons hearing of it, voted that Hammond should continue in both those Charges; but the late Governor thought it the wiser Way for him to obey his General; and so delivering up his Prisoner and his Government to Col. Ewer, he waited upon his Excellency, who, to prevent his Return to the Isle, put him under a Sort of Arrest, from which he was not immediately discharg'd, tho' the Parliament had written to him to suffer Hammond to return to the Isle of Wight in the same Quality as he left it. The Reverend Historians conceal the King's Attempt to escape from Carisbroke Castle, that there may be no Excuse for the Parliament's Officers confining him more strictly; but Lilly, who was the very Person that bought the Saw for him to cut the Iron Bars, at the Request of Mrs. Whorwood before-mention'd, writes thus:

King endeavours to escape from Carisbroke.

" His Majesty laid his Design to escape out of " Prison by sawing the Iron Bars of his Chamber " Window, a small Ship was provided and anchor'd not far from the Coast to bring him " into Sussex; Horses were also provided to " carry him through Sussex into Kent, that so he " might be at the Head of the Army under " Goring. Lady Whorwood came to me and " acquainted me herewith. I got G. Farmer, " an ingenious Lock-Smith in Bow-Lane, to " make a Saw, which I sent, with some Aqua-fortis besides. His Majesty in a small Time " did his Work. The Bars gave Liberty for " him to go out. He was out with his Body till " he came to his Breast, but then his Heart fail- " ing, he proceeded no farther. When this was " discover'd, as soon after it was, he was nar- " rowly look'd after, and no Opportunity could " be devis'd to enlarge him." The Remonstrange was follow'd with a Declaration from the Army, complaining, That they are wholly rejected; That they should rejoice if the Majority of the House of Commons would become sensible of the Destructiveness of the late War, and would exclude from Communication in their Councils all such corrupt and apostatiz'd Members as have obstructed Justice, &c. They desire that so many of them as God had kept upright, would by Protestation or otherwise acquit themselves from such a Breach of Trust, and would withdraw from such as persist in the Guilt thereof, as having materially the chief Justice of the Kingdom remaining in them, and they shall adhere to them, and be guided by them, and that they are drawing to London for these Ends, &c. plainly intimating, that if they did not themselves exclude the Members against whom they had Exceptions, it should be done by the Army when they came to Westminster.

Oliver Cromwel continu'd still to act by his Instruments, and did not as yet publickly appear against the Person of the King more than Fairfax did. I find him at a Place call'd Knottingley at this very Time, as by the following Letter, which being under his own Hand, will be of Importance enough to excite the Reader's Curiosity.

SIR,

I Suppose it is not unknown to you how much the Country is in Arrear to the Garrison of Hull, as likewise how probable it is that the Garrison will break, unless some speedy Course be taken to get them Money, the Soldiers at this Present being ready to mutiny, as not having Money to buy them Bread, and without Money the stubborn Towns-People will not trust them for the Worth of a Penny. Sir, I must beg of you, that as you tender the Good of the Country, so far as the Security of that Garrison is mention'd, you would give your Assistance to the helping of them to their Money which the Country owes them. The Governor will apply himself to you either in Person or by Letter. I pray you do for him herein as in a Business of very high Consequence. I am the more earnest with you, as having a very deep Sense how dangerous the Event may be of their being neglected in the Matter of their Pay. I rest upon your Favour herein, and subscribe my self,

SIR,

Your very humble Servant,

Knottingley, Nov. 25. 1648. O. CROMWELL.

For my Noble Friend Thomas St. Nicholas, Esq;

A. D. 1648.

General Fairfax wrote to the Lord Mayor and Common Council, That he was marching to London in Pursuance of the late Remonstrance and Declaration, and for preventing Disorder, desir'd 40000 Pounds, Part of their Arrears due from the City, to be got ready, which the House of Commons desir'd also, but wrote to his Excellency, That it was their Pleasure he do not remove the Army nearer to London, which the General took no Notice of, but march'd directly thither, and took Quarters for himself and his Army in Whitehall, St. James's, the Meuse, York House, and other vacant Houses, and in the Villages near the City; and the Parliament receiv'd Letters from the Isle of Wight, that the King was remov'd to Hurst Castle, on the Neck of Land projecting from Hampshire to that Isle. The Parliament voted, That the seizing upon the Person of the King, and carrying him Prisoner to Hurst Castle, was without the Advice and Consent of the House; and the next Day, after having debated it all Night, they voted, That his Majesty's Concessions to the Parliament's Propositions, are sufficient Grounds for settling the Peace of the Kingdom. This Vote past the 5th of December. Three Days after the Army had taken Quarters all around them, yet such was the Spirit of the Presbyterians in the Two Houses, that, in Defiance of so great a military Power, they declar'd against the Violence of the Army with respect to the King's Imprisonment, and the threaten'd Proceedings against his Person. How ingrate, how infamous are the vile Reflections of those Eccleiastical Writers and Preachers, who charge the Presbyterians with the Death of the King, which they clear'd themselves of in this so solemn and so dangerous a Manner? 'Tis probable most of the rural Priesthood do not know this, their Knowledge being not always too extensive; but the Archdeacon, and some historical Doctors that have intimated as much in their Writings and Preachments, do know this, and yet, contrary to their Knowledge, declaim against the Presbyterians as King-killers, which it is hop'd they did or will repent of before they give in their last Account at the tremendous Day of accounting.

Fairfax marches to London.

King's Concessions voted sufficient.

On the next Day after this bold Vote, Col. Rich's Regiment of Horse, and Col. Pride's Regiment of Foot were set as Guards on the Two Houses, and the City Train'd Bands discharg'd. Thus in Reality the Parliament were Prisoners to the Army, and whatever they did afterwards was by Constraint, and consequently null. Pride drew Force on the Parliament.

A. D. 1648. drew up ſome Companies of Foot in the Court of Requeſts, upon the Stairs, and in the Lobby, and as the Members ſtood to enter the Houſe, the Colonel ſeiz'd upon thoſe whoſe Names were written in a Paper he held in his Hand, and whom he was directed to ſometimes by one of the Door-Keepers, and ſometimes by the Lord Grey of Groby. As faſt as he ſeiz'd them, they were carry'd away, ſome to the Queen's Court, ſome to the Court of Wards, and other Places, by Warrant from the General and the Council of Officers. The Members thus carry'd away were Sir Robert Harley, Col. Edward Harley, Sir William Waller, Sir Walter Earl, Sir Samuel Luke, Sir John Meyrick, Sir Martin Liſter, Lord Wenman, Mr. Knightley, Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Sir Benjamin Rudyard, Mr. Francis Gerrard, Mr. Swinſin, Sir Edward Partridge, Mr. Crew, Sir Edward Stephens, Mr. Butler, Sir Harbottle Grimſton, Mr. Bulkley, Major General Maſſey, Mr. Walker, Mr. Robert Pye, Mr. Pelham, Col. Leigh, Sir Anthony Irby, Mr. Lane, Mr. Doderidge, Mr. Wheeler, Mr. Drake, Mr. Green, Mr. Boughton, Mr. Prynne, Mr. Vaughan, Mr. Nathaniel Fiennes, Commiſſary Copley, Col. Strode, Mr. Prieſtley, Sir Simonds D'Ewes, Sir William Lewis, Sir John Clotworthy, Sir Richard Onſlow, Sir Thomas D'Acres, Sir Thomas Soam, Mr. Drake, Major General Browne, Mr. Clement Walker.

Col. Harriſon and Sir Hardreſs Waller were very active in this Force put upon the Parliament, who had ſtill a Majority ſufficient to declare againſt it, and ſent their Sergeant at Arms to acquaint thoſe Members, It was the Pleaſure of the Houſe that they ſhould forthwith attend their Service; but the Officers, who were plac'd as Guards upon them, took no Notice of it. A Committee was ſent to the General, Sir John Evelyn, Col. Birch, Sir Thomas Widdrington, Mr. Pierrepoint, Mr. Aſhhurſt, and Mr. St. John, to confer with him, and maintain a good Correſpondence between them. The Lord Fairfax deſir'd Time to adviſe with his Council of War about his Anſwer. The ſame Committee was order'd to attend the General again for it, but inſtead of an Anſwer, Col. Axtel and Col. Whalley brought to the Houſe a Paper, entituled, The Propoſals and Deſires of the Army; wherein they complain, That having formerly impeach'd Denzil Hollis, Eſq; Lionel Copley, Eſq; Major General Maſſey, and other Members, of Treaſon, who had been expell'd the Houſe, and their Seats ſupply'd by new Elections; yet the Faction having taken Advantage of the Abſence of ſeveral Members in the Publick Service during the late Inſurrections, and others who through Tumults could not ſafely attend, thoſe that were ſo impeach'd had been re-admitted to ſit and vote as formerly; That Major General Browne, now Sheriff of London, had with the ſaid impeach'd Members invited the Scots to invade this Kingdom, and they as Adherents to the Scots had been voted to be Traytors; yet theſe Confederates, and other treacherous Members, to the Number of 90 and odd, did by their Counſels and Votes endeavour to hinder the Houſe from declaring againſt their confederate Invaders. They deſire that Major General Browne be ſecur'd, and the reſt of the ninety odd Perſons excluded the Houſe; and the Votes declaring the King's Conceſſions to be a ſufficient Ground for Settlement of Peace, notwithſtanding the Inſufficiency and Defect of them, be recall'd. Echard ſays, The Soldiers deny'd Entrance into the Houſe to 160 Members more, whereupon the reſt of the Presbyterian Party being terrify'd with the Uſage of their Fellow Members, declin'd the Houſe, leaving it in the Poſſeſſion of about 150. He has repreſented this Houſe of Commons as a pack'd Aſſembly of about 150 Members in other Parts of his Hiſtory, and there are now 50 ſeiz'd, 160 deny'd Entrance, 100 at leaſt ſuppos'd to decline, and 150 left? So coherent is this exact Hiſtorian with his own as well as with other Hiſtories. Whitlocke informs us, that ſeveral of the ſecluded Members offering to enter the Houſe, they were forbidden, becauſe ſome Matters were to be debated concerning themſelves; and it has ever been the Practice for Perſons to withdraw while what is in Debate concerns them. The Parliament voted to take the Army's Remonſtrance and Propoſals into Conſideration. But that did not hinder the ſending Col. Dean with two Regiments of Foot and ſome Troops of Horſe into the City, to ſeize the Money in Haberdaſher's Hall, Weaver's Hall, and Goldſmith's Hall, of which his Excellency acquainted the Lord Mayor beforehand, and gave his Reaſons for ſo doing; "Be- "cauſe they had not paid their Arrears of the "Aſſeſſment, nor furniſhed the Money which he "deſir'd of them; and the Army had by Order "of Parliament quarter'd in ſeveral Counties on "thoſe who did not pay the Aſſeſſment till the "ſame was paid, that yet if the City would ad- "vance the 40000 Pounds, Part of their Arrears, "the Soldiers ſhould not be further trouble- "ſome to them.

'Twas at this Time that the Scandal aroſe of turning St. Paul's Church into a Stable, according to Sanderſon; but tho' it can be prov'd that the Cavaliers turn'd ſeveral Churches to as beaſtly Purpoſes, if Slaughter and Blood may be ſo deem'd; yet Whitlocke aſſures us, The Foot were quarter'd in private Houſes, and the Horſe in the Inns, of which there were enough to take in the Horſe without ſetting up Mangers in the Cathedral of St. Paul. A Party of theſe Soldiers by Miſtake went to the Exciſe-Office to ſeize the Money there, for which having no Order, the General recall'd them, and wrote a Letter to the Commiſſioners of the Exciſe to excuſe it, his Intention being only to oblige the City of London to pay the Arrears due from them to the Army, and not to take any Part of the Publick Treaſure appropriated to other Uſes. They took 28000 Pounds out of Weaver's Hall, and the Parliament repaid it. The General and Council of Officers had an Addreſs preſented them, of the Nature of the former, call'd The Agreement of the People, which was a Scheme of future Government ſuppos'd to be drawn up by Ireton, and put it entirely in a Repreſentative of 300 Members, to be choſen after a new Method, and this Parliament to be diſſolv'd in April next. Officers and Malignants to be incapable of electing or being elected, &c. The next Day the 12th of December the Houſe voted, That the Vote for revoking the Order of diſabling the Eleven Members, and re-admitting them into the Houſe when a Charge of ſo high a Nature lay againſt them, was unparliamentary, and of dangerous Conſequence, and was now made null. They alſo voted, That the Vote of this Houſe concurring with the Lords to take off the former Vote, which forbid any more Addreſſes to the King, was highly diſhonourable to the Proceedings of the Parliament, and apparently deſtructive to the Good of the Kingdom: Alſo, That the Vote of Non-Addreſſes ſhall ſtand; and that the Vote for Revocation of them, and that for a Perſonal Treaty with the King in the Iſle of Wight, were highly diſhonourable to the Proceedings in Parliament, and apparently deſtructive to the Good of the Kingdom. In the mean

The Agreement of the People.

Vote of Non-Addreſſes confirm'd.

A. D. 1648. Time the ſecluded Members, who were about 140, by Force or Voluntary in diſguſt for the Excluſion of their Brethren, publiſh'd a Pamphlet, entitled, A ſolemn Declaration of the Members ſecluded the Houſe by the Army, that all Acts, Ordinances, Votes and Proceedings of the Houſe of Commons ſince the Secluſion of the Members and Continuance of the Armies Force upon it, are no way Obligatory, but null and void. The Parliament voted it "to be falſe, ſcandalous, "and ſeditious, tending to deſtroy the Govern- "ment; and that all who had a Hand in it ſhall "be uncapable of any Office or Truſt, or to be a "Member of Parliament, and that every abſent "Member before he ſit ſhall diſavow the ſame." Mr. Prynn was the ſuppos'd Author of it; but Hollis, Brown and the reſt of them, approv'd of it. Lieutenant General Cromwel was now the viſible Head of the Majority in Parliament, and Court was made to him accordingly. He took up his Lodging in White-hall, and lay in one of the King's richeſt Beds. The Lord Fairfax acquieſced in all his Counſels, inſomuch that when the Houſe ſent to him that a Charge might be brought in concerning the ſecluded Members, he anſwer'd ſullenly, The Buſineſs is of great Concernment; and I believe the Houſe will not expect a preſent Anſwer from me, but I will prepare it as ſpeedily as I can; and in the mean Time deſire the Houſe not to trouble themſelves to ſend any more to me about it: But the ſame Day ſixteen of the ſecluded Members were ſet at Liberty by his Order to ſit again in the Houſe if they pleas'd, and ſo might others of them have done, but they neglected their Duty, and gave Cromwel's Majority the better Opportunity to execute what he had moſt wickedly contriv'd, though as yet he did not appear in it, but ſeem'd to be as much Republican as Vane or Ludlow: Mr. Lenthal the Speaker, Lieutenant General Cromwel, Sir Thomas Widdrington, and Mr. Whitlocke had a Meeting the next Day, December the 21ſt, to confer about the preſent Affairs, and particularly the Actions of the Army. Cromwel was very earneſt for a Settlement of the Commonwealth, and deſir'd Sir Thomas Widdrington and Mr. Whitlocke, to draw up a Form of that Settlement, to endeavour to bring the Army into ſome fitter Temper, and to have the ſecluded Members readmitted, which Form was to be preſented to the Houſe, and the Council of the Army. They with much difficulty undertook the Buſineſs, and at the Speaker's Houſe three or four Days after met with ſeveral Gentlemen to conſult further about the Settlement, That all might not be left to the Sword; but here they were left by Cromwel, whoſe Majority having voted to bring the King to a Trial, he reſolv'd to terminate that bloody Affair firſt, and to talk of a Settlement afterwards. When it was debated the 23d of December to bring the King as the greateſt Delinquent to Juſtice, 'twas objected even in this Houſe of Commons, "That he was not capable "of being ſo brought by his Subjects, but by "God alone: That having ſubdu'd him and "his Party, there was no need of any Thing "further, than to ſecure the Parliament from "their Enemies riſing againſt them any more, "and that might be done without bringing the "King to any judicial Trial:" A Thing not read of in any Hiſtory; whether that may be ſo or not, we will leave to Milton, who however has as much Heat as Argument on this Subject; but as the Parliament did not allow their entring into a War to be Rebellion, ſo ſurely the King's taking Arms againſt Tumults and Inſurrections could not be Treaſon. Both King and Parliament ſtrenuouſly deny'd that either of them began the War. If it was not the King, the Guilt of the Blood lay not at his Door; If it was the King, which his Majeſty and all his Hiſtorians do utterly deny; yet what Judicatory could call him to Account? The Lords rejected the Ordinance for his Trial with Indignation, and even that Ordinance was irregularly obtain'd by unheard of Force put upon the Parliament, under the Power of the Soldiery. The Lords Negative is as Fundamental a Part of the Laws of England as the Commons Affirmative; and there can be no Law without their joint Conſent; therefore every Act of the governing Powers, from Pride's Purge to the Death of the King, is illegal, barbarous and tyrannical, and well deſerves an Anniverſary of Humiliation, if ſo many of the ſmaller Clergy did not make ſuch a ſcandalous Uſe of it, as to aſſert Falſities for Truths in the moſt ſolemn Places, and defile Divine Service with Invectives againſt the Preſbyterians, whom they injuriouſly charge with the Death of the King; whereas they only in Form and in a Body proteſted boldly againſt it, as will be prov'd hereafter; and I leave it to the Reader whether Ignorance is an Excuſe for ſo much Malice and Injuſtice, and they have nothing elſe to plead for it.

Trial of the King debated.

William Lilly, who kept a Sort of Correſpondence with the King by Means of Mrs. Whorwood, informs us, "That about September the "Parliament ſent their Commiſſioners with "Propoſitions unto him into the Iſle of Wight, "the Lord William Say being one. The Lady "Whorwood comes again to me from the King, "or by his Conſent to be directed: After Peruſal of my Figure, I told her the Commiſſioners would be there ſuch a Day; I ſelected "a Day and Hour when to receive the Commiſſioners and Propoſitions, and as ſoon as the "Propoſitions were read to ſign them, and make "haſte to come up to London, the Army being "then far diſtant, and the City enrag'd againſt "them. He promis'd he would ſo do. That "Night the Commiſſioners came, and old Say "and his Majeſty had private Conference till "One in the Morning. The King acquaints "Say with his Intention, who clearly diſſwaded "him from ſigning the Propoſitions, telling him "they were not fit for him to ſign; that he had "many Friends in the Houſe of Lords, and "ſome in the Houſe of Commons; that he "would procure more, and that they would "frame more eaſy Propoſitions. This Flattery "of this unfortunate Lord occaſion'd his Majeſty "to wave the Advice I and ſome others that "wiſh'd his Proſperity had given, in Expectation of that which afterwards could never be "gain'd. The Army having ſome Notice hereof, from one who had an Eye upon old Say, "haſted unto London, and made the Citizens "very quiet; and beſides the Parliament and "Army kept a better Correſpondency afterwards "with each other." King Charles ſaid of this William Lilly, That he underſtood Aſtrology as well as any Man in Europe, and never the fitter for that to make him a Counſellor. Say was to have been Lord Treaſurer, and his Son Nathaniel Fiennes, Secretary of State, if his Scheme had ſucceeded. If this Account be true then as has been already hinted, his Majeſty was not ſo entirely devoted to Prelacy, as to be a Sacrifice for it; and 'twas in Expectation of what Lord Say would do for him, that he defer'd cloſing with the Parliament till the Army interpos'd and would not let him.

How the Iſle of Wight Treaty miſcarry'd.

P. 63.

While the Treaty was going forward at the Iſle of Wight, the Cavaliers, as if under a Fatality to deſtroy themſelves and their Maſter, gave gave new Provocations by the moſt execrable and bloody Attempt that ever happen'd in a Chriſtian Country, if ſuch Aſſaſſins deſerve the Name of Chriſtians. Col. Rainsborough had been order'd to command the Blockade of Pomfret Caſtle, ſurpriz'd by the Traytor Morris; and Sir Henry Cholmley, who had that Commiſſion from the Committee of Yorkſhire, thinking himſelf injur'd, complain'd to the Parliament, who had in Conſideration ſome Means to ſave the Honour of Sir Henry, and content Col. Rainsborough; the Latter, while the Affair was in Diſpute, took up his Quarters at Doncaſter, and having no Enemy nearer than Pomfret, he thought himſelf ſo ſecure that there was not ſo ſtrict Guard kept as was convenient: Morris having Notice of it ſent 40 Horſe in the Night from Pomfret to Doncaſter, where they kill'd the Centinel, and three of the Bravoes advancing into the Town, ask'd for Col. Rainsborough's Lodgings, which being directed to, they went up Stairs to his Chamber Door, the Colonel a Bed, and ſaid they had a Letter from Lieutenant General Cromwel; Col. Rainsborough roſe, and open'd the Door to them, expecting ſuch a Letter that Morning, and preſently the three Pomfret Soldiers fell upon him, ſhot him into the Neck, into the Heart, and gave him other Wounds, tho' one of them had been ſufficient to murder him, leaving him dead upon the Place, and making their Eſcape without any Alarm given. Thus Whitlocke tells the Story, and as he is us'd to ſpeak Truth, one may believe him ſooner than the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, who is us'd to ſpeak the contrary. The Parliament highly reſented this barbarous Act; and every generous Mind deteſted it, and the Doers of it. Lieutenant General Cromwel was directed to take ſpecial Care that the Murder of Col. Rainsborough be ſtrictly examin'd into. This deteſtable Murder is repreſented in the Hiſtory as a gallant Action, and the Author is in great Pain for the Murderer Morris, who had deſerted the Parliament Service, and by Treachery got Poſſeſſion of Pomfret Caſtle, abuſing the Confidence the Parliament's Governor, Col. Cotterel had in him, ſo far as to let him lye in the ſame Bed, by which Means he got an Opportunity to ſeize both him and the Caſtle; Morris telling him he ſhould take Courage, for he would get him the King's Pardon. A pretty Fellow to get Pardon for others, who was ſo near the Gallows himſelf. This Deſerter is a Man of Gallantry, Honour, Loyalty and Truſt in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion; and 'tis to be ſuppos'd the Reader will judge of the other Characters there by Morris's, whom Lambert ſoon after beſieg'd, with particular Inſtructions to ſecure the Murderers, if poſſible, that they might have the Reward due to ſuch Criminals. The Hiſtorian then tells us a Romantick Story of the Defence thoſe Aſſaſſins made, how many of them fought their Way through Lambert's Army, and that of the ſix who were to be deliver'd up to Puniſhment by the Articles of Surrender, every one made his Eſcape, as it was permitted them to do, by Battle or otherwiſe, in ſo many Days, all which is Invention to honour the Memory of thoſe Cavalier Worthies, who did indeed make their Eſcape ſome how or other; but poor Morris, as the ſame Author ſtiles him, being afterwards taken in Lancaſhire, was hang'd for the Murder, with one Cornet Blackburn, another of the Murderers, whom for that Merit the Hiſtorian makes a Lieutenant Colonel. There is a Judgment attach'd to the Death of Morris; they hung him in the Place where he had before done good Service for the REBELS.

Col. Rainsborough murder'd.

About the ſame Time a Petition was deliver'd to the General at St. Alban's for Juſtice upon the principal Invaders of their Liberties, namely the King: 'Twas ſign'd by the Officers of Col. Ingoldsby's Regiment, and is the firſt that ſpoke ſo plain, which is the more remarkable, becauſe Col. Ingoldsby is excus'd by the Lord Clarendon as to the Guilt of the King's Death. The Perſons to be excepted out of the Indemnity Act, had the Treaty been accompliſh'd, were at laſt reduc'd to ſeven only; the Lord Digby, the Earl of Newcaſtle, Sir Marmaduke Langdale, Sir Richard Greenvile, Judge Jenkins, Sir John Winter, and Sir Francis Dodington; Sir John Winter was afterwards chang'd for Sir John Biron; this ſmall Exception was another Provocation to the Army, who had demanded Juſtice againſt a very great Number of Delinquents, that the Confiſcations might go to diſcharge the Arrears due to them. The County of Somerſet ſent up ſuch a Petition as that of Ingoldsby's Regiment, which was deliver'd by Sir Thomas Wroth, whom Echard contemptuouſly calls one Wroth. True it is, the fierce Party in the Houſe of Commons proſecuted their Deſign againſt the King with great Eagerneſs, and thoſe of a contrary Opinion, as Widdrington, Whitlocke, Pierrepoint, Popham, &c. durſt not oppoſe the others, knowing that they ſhould be preſently ſecluded the Houſe if they did ſo, or that any Oppoſition would be to no Purpoſe. Thus they remain'd paſſive till the odious Buſineſs was over. The fierce Party in the Houſe were ſo conſcious of the Foulneſs of it, that they endeavour'd to throw it upon the Army, as moſt proper for ſuch Workmen to do ſuch unheard of unwarrantable Work, and for irregular Men to do an irregular Thing: But the Officers ſaw through their Deſign, and reſolv'd they ſhould openly avow and ſhare in it at leaſt, if they would not take it all to themſelves; and in truth they found too many forward enough to engage in it, inſomuch that it was carry'd by Vote in the Houſe of Commons, to name a Committe of thirty eight Perſons, to conſider of drawing up a Charge, and for that Purpoſe to receive all Informations and Examinations of all Witneſſes for Matters of Fact againſt the King, and all other Delinquents that may be thought fit to be brought to condign Puniſhment. The Houſe now did not conſiſt of above 200, and there were hardly ſo many preſent when this Vote paſt; yet the Majority for it was not great, about 20; the reſt of the Members, though they were Republicans, not being for proceeding judicially againſt the King, but for confining him in ſome ſafe Place, and taking the Government to themſelves as a Common-wealth. This terrible Vote paſt the 23d of December, and two Days after the formidable Committee was appointed, Mr. Smith their Clerk came to Sir Thomas Widdrington, and Mr. Whitlocke, Commiſſioners in Chancery, with a Meſſage requiring both of them to attend the Committee that Day, to give them Advice in ſome Matters of Importance; they both knew what the Buſineſs was; and Whitlocke ſaid, He was reſolv'd not to meddle in the Trial of the King, it being contrary to his Judgment as he had declar'd in the Houſe. Sir Thomas Widdrington told Smith, he was of the ſame Opinion, and would have no Hand in it; but he knew not whether to go to be out of the Way, that the Committee might not know whether to ſend to him. When Smith was gone, Whitlocke ſaid to Widdrington, My Coach is ready, and I was this Morning going out of Town, purpoſely to avoid this Buſineſs, if you pleaſe to go with me you may be quiet at my Houſe in the Country till all is over, and I ſhall be glad of your Company, ſo they both went went accordingly. The Committee having prepar'd the Charge reported it to the Houſe, That Charles Stuart had acted contrary to his Truſt in departing from the Parliament, ſetting up his Standard, making War againſt them, and thereby been the Occaſion of much Bloodſhed and Miſery to the People, whom he was ſet over for good, that he gave Commiſſions to Iriſh Rebels, and ſince was the Occaſion of a ſecond War, and had done contrary to the Liberties of the Subjects, tending to the Deſtruction of the fundamental Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom. This ſtrange Experiment was introduc'd, as moſt Things were in thoſe precious Times, with a Day of Faſting and Humiliation, when Mr. Watſon a Presbyterian Miniſter whom I well remember in the Reign of King James II. to be under a ſevere Proſecution for his Religion, preach'd before the Houſe of Commons, and when the Queſtion was put, Whether he ſhould have their Thanks for it, 'twas carry'd in the Negative, becauſe he did not acknowledge the Parliament. Does not the Reader perceive what King Killers the Presbyterians then were? And how honeſt thoſe Writers and Preachers are, who repreſent them, and inveigh againſt them as ſuch. Cromwel's Majority was ſo angry with Mr. Watſon, that it was put to the Vote, Whether there ſhould be any more ſet Faſts? But it drop'd for the ſake of Mr. Brook and Dr. Owen, two other Miniſters, who were more grateful to the Army, as the Army was more grateful to them.

Charge againſt the King.

While Preparations were making for his Trial, his Majeſty was remov'd from Hurſt Caſtle, where he liv'd in a moſt diſconſolate Condition, and wrote this Verſe of Ovid with his Diamond in one of the Windows; a reaſonable Reflection, unaffected and natural, ſhort, like the Reflections of Miſery, and not wordy, like the Sentiments in Eikon Baſilike, which are the more Suſpicious, becauſe Paſſion is an Enemy to Words. Grief never declaims, though it is always complaining, and Sighs, as 'tis ſaid that Book was intended to be call'd, cannot be breath'd out in round Periods of 10 and 12 Folio Lines. Col. Ewer, who brought the King from Carisbrook to Hurſt Caſtle, continu'd Governor there with the Charge of his Majeſty's Perſon, and though there is a mighty Clamour made about the Inſalubrity of the Air, yet Whitlocke very particularly obſerves, that his Majeſty had his Health there, and all good Accommodations, till he was again remov'd to Windſor Caſtle. Col. Harriſon came to Hurſt Caſtle for him with his Regiment of Horſe, and having receiv'd him of Col. Ewer, he went into his Majeſty's Coach, and rode with him all the Way to the greater Grief of the Earl of Clarendon, becauſe he did not keep off his Hat, after the Parliament had voted, that the Knee and other Ceremonies to the King ſhould be forborn. On the 21ſt of December they came to Wincheſter, where as Sanderſon and Echard tells us, the Honourable Mayor and Aldermen met him at the Town's End, and after a Speech preſented him with their Mace. Col. Harriſon gave the honourable Mayor to underſtand, That by the Act of no Addreſs to the King their Worſhips were all Traytors, which threw them into ſuch a Panick, that though they promis'd never to do ſo any more in Terms moving enough to create Pity, yet they could not get out of their Heads the Puniſhment which is due to Treaſon. The Lord Clarendon informs us, that Col. Har- riſon was much given to praying and preaching, which being ſuch merry Things with him, I wonder his Lordſhip ſhould give way to them when his Majeſty was leading to Deſtruction. Another Remark is, that though he was a Butcher's Son, yet as a Colonel of Horſe and Major General, he was very reſpectful to the King, and kept himſelf bare, which contradicts what I ſaid of his keeping on his Hat; but as I took it from Sir Roger Manly, and think one Authority as good as the other, the Matter muſt be left to the Reader. As the King and the Major General rode together in the Coach, his Majeſty expreſs'd himſelf apprehenſive of ſome ill Deſign againſt him, by hurrying him away thus from the Iſle of Wight, and from one Place to another. But the Major General aſſur'd him the Parliament abhorr'd any Thoughts of Proceeding againſt him otherwiſe than in an open Manner, which had been intimated to the King before, and made him very deſirous to make his Eſcape when 'twas too late to attempt it, which Col. Harriſon ſhew'd he was apprehenſive of, and was the more diligent to prevent it. The Lady D'Aubigny had brought herſelf into Trouble by her correſponding with the Cavaliers at Oxford, during her Reſidence at London in the firſt War; and 'twas talk'd that ſhe ſhould be try'd for it. She had lately marry'd the Lord Newburgh, who liv'd in the little Park at Bagſhot, which his Majeſty was wont to take great Delight in, and now expreſs'd a great Deſire to dine with that Lord and Lady at the Lodge there. Harriſon did not at all like it, but the King ſhewing he would not be hinder'd, unleſs it was by force, the Colonel gave way to it, and conſented that his Majeſty ſhould ſend a Servant to let the Lady Newburgh know he would dine with her; for that Lord and Lady held private Correſpondence with him by a Cypher concerted between them, and had given him Notice, that he would be ſent for from Hurſt Caſtle, adviſing him to find ſome Way that he might dine at the Lodge, and if he could, to lame his Horſe, that he might take another out of the Lord Newburgh's Stables, where was kept one of the fleeteſt in England, on which he might mount, and if he could get out of the Company that encompaſs'd him, he might poſſibly, by the Swiftneſs of his Horſe, and his own Skill in the moſt obſcure Ways in that Foreſt, convey himſelf to another Place, and ſo to others, where good Horſes were laid for him. But Colonel Harriſon was the moſt improper Man in the World to be impos'd upon by a ſmall Deſign; he order'd a Party of Horſe to get to Bagſhot before them, and ſearch all the Lodge, and all the Avenues, and the fleet Horſe being juſt then lam'd by a Stroke, the King would not venture upon another, ſo this hopeful Project came to nothing.

Qui decumbit Humi non habet unde cadet.

The King's Deſign to eſcape.

The Lord Clarendon beats the Drum Eccleſiaſtick very often, and now he informs us, That the Preachers, who had at firſt been moſt furious for the War, now preach'd as furiouſly againſt all wicked Attempts and Violence againſt the Perſon of the King, and fooliſhly urged the Obligation of the Covenant, there is ſo much Wiſdom in his Lordſhip's Hiſtory, that one may be ſure when he ſays a Thing is fooliſh, that it is ſo, for the Security of his Perſon. All the Reaſon they had to be ſuch Fools was in the Words of the Covenant it ſelf, Article 3d, We ſhall with the ſame Sincerity, Reality and Conſtancy, in our ſeveral Vocations, endeavour with our Eſtates and Lives, mutually to defend the King's Majeſty's Perſon and Authority. The other Articles of the Covenant had been obtain'd

A. D. 1648. by the King's Conceſſions to the Scots, and at the Iſle of Wight. The War he had begun was ended, the Cauſes of it remov'd by thoſe Conceſſions; and that War to bring Delinquents to Juſtice, and defend their juſt Rights, is declar'd to be lawful by the Parliament, which brought in this King's Son, therefore there remain'd no Obligation ſo ſtrong upon them by the Covenant, as the Preſervation of the King's Perſon; for though the Reſiſtance they gave him was a main Cauſe of his preſent Calamity, yet it cannot be ſaid ſo much to have involv'd him in it, as the evil Counſels of thoſe evil Counſellors, whom to the laſt he ſo obſtinately protected againſt Juſtice.

A. D. 164⅘. On New Years Day the Names of the Commiſſioners for the Trial of the King were reported to the Houſe. Whitlocke informs us, "They "were ſome of the Lords and Commons, Officers "of the Army, Aldermen, and Commanders in "London, and ſome Gentlemen from the Coun-"ties, in all 150 Perſons." But they could not get above 70 or 80 to go through the Drudgery of this wicked Work, and not one of the Peers who were named did meddle in it. Theſe Proceedings were founded on this Vote, That the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament do declare and adjudge, That by the fundamental Laws of this Realm, it is Treaſon in the King of England, for the Time to come, to levy War againſt the Parliament and Kingdom of England. 'Tis ſtrange they ſhould put in for the future, when their Army could as well have ſupported the Vote, had they ſaid, it always was, is, and ever ſhall be, Treaſon. There would have been as much Law in it as in their wording of it. This Vote being ſent up to the Lords for their Concurrence by the Lord Grey of Groby, they rejected it Nemine Contradicente, 17 Lords being preſent, unleſs ſome Heſitation in the Lord Say may be term'd Oppoſition. The Earl of Pembroke hearing his Name was inſerted in the Liſt of Commiſſioners for the King's Trial, he loudly exclaimed againſt it, and refuſed to act, as did the Lord Fairfax, though I can ſee no manner of Reaſon for it, after he had contributed ſo much to that Trial, by ſuffering Pride's Purge to paſs, and recommending the Army's Remonſtrance to the ſpeedy Conſideration of the Parliament, wherein they deſir'd, that the capital Delinquent might be brought to Juſtice. If he could not have hinder'd Cromwel's acting as he did, he might have let him act by himſelf, and his diſcountenancing the Force put upon the Parliament would have gone a great way in preventing it, conſidering what a great Majority the Presbyterians had in the Houſe before the Purge. The Lords adjourn'd for 10 Days, to perplex the Matter as much as lay in their Power, but the Commons voted, That all their Members, and others appointed to act in any Ordinance, wherein the Lords are join'd with them, ſhall be impower'd and injoin'd to ſit, act, and execute in the ſaid ſeveral Committees, notwithſtanding the Houſe of Peers join not with them. They order'd, That the Ordinance for the Trial of the King, and the declaratory Vote from which the Lords diſſented, and which was intended for both Houſes, ſhall now be by the Commons only; and turning themſelves into a grand Committee, they reſolv'd, Nemine Contradicente,

Thus was kingly Government aboliſh'd before the King was put to Death, for which only Forms were wanting, but ſuch Forms as turn'd Juſtice into Farce. On the 6th of January the Ordinance for the Trial of the King paſs'd, and the Scots Commiſſioners ſent a Letter to the Parliament, preſſing for Unity of Counſels between the two Kingdoms, and that they would not proceed to try and execute the King till the Advice of that Nation was had. But it is not ſtrange that neither the Parliament or Army paid any Deference to their Interpoſition, which they ſo ill deſerv'd of them by their late invading the Kingdom in a hoſtile Manner; and it was not likely their Arguments would ſucceed, when they had before try'd their Arms in vain.

Kingly Government aboliſh'd.

The King being brought to Windſor was delivered to the Governor, Colonel Whichcot, by Colonel Tomlinſon, who commanded the Troop that guarded him after Colonel Harriſon left them. The King appear'd to be pretty well ſatisfy'd with his Removal from Hurſt thither; he liv'd more at eaſe, and was more chearful, having ſo little Intelligence, or Apprehenſion of what was doing againſt him, a few Days before his Removal thence to the laſt Stage of his Life, that he ſaid, He doubted not but within 6 Months to ſee Peace in England, and in caſe he was not reſtor'd by his Subjects in England, he ſhould be righted from Ireland, Denmark, and other Places. I can't imagine what Occaſion there was for this Falſity in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, it gives no Strength to the Party the Author eſpouſes, nor Credit to his Cauſe: When the Day came to which the Houſe of Lords adjourn'd, they found their Doors all lock'd. That was not all, They found their Doors faſten'd with Padlocks; when in truth, their Doors were as they us'd to be, and when the Day came they enter'd their Houſe, according to Whitlocke, and paſt ſeveral Ordinances. They debated the laſt Votes about the Trial of the King, and the publiſhing ſomething to ſatisfy the People, upon what Grounds they rejected the Ordinance for his Trial. But they had enough offended the Parliament and Army already, and ſo they came to no Reſolution. The ſame Day Sergeant Dendy, Sergeant at Arms to the Houſe of Commons, and now acting as ſuch to the Commiſſioners for trying the King, rode into Weſtminſter Hall with the Mace on his Shoulder, Officers attending, and ſix Trumpets, all on Horſeback, and Guards of Horſe and Foot in the Palace Yard. The Trumpets ſounded in the middle of the Hall, and the Drums beat in the Palace Yard, after which Proclamation was made, to give Notice, That the Commiſſioners for Trial of the King would ſit to Morrow, the 10th of January, and that all thoſe that had any Thing to ſay againſt him might then be heard. Sergeant Dendy made the ſame Proclamation at the Old Exchange, and in Cheapſide. The Parliament voted, That the Style of any one particular Perſon, ſhould not be inſerted as the Style of any common Writ, or otherwiſe, for the Time to come. That the preſent Great Seal ſhould be broken, and a new one forthwith made. That the Arms of England and of Ireland ſhall be engraven on one Side of the new Great Seal, with this Inſcription, The Great Seal of England. That on the other Side of the Seal ſhall be the

Some there were who ſat a Day or two out of Curioſity, or as one would hope, with good Intention to do the King Service, for as ſoon as they found that their Fellow-Commiſſioners were reſolv'd Men, and that there was no going back if they ſat longer, they deſerted the Commiſſion, and appear'd no more among the Commiſſioners, as the Lord Mounſon, Lord Grey, Sir John Danvers, Col. Laſſells, Col. Harvey, Sir James Harrington, Sir Gilbert Pickering, Sir Henry Mildmay, Henry Wallop, Eſq; Thomas Challoner, Eſq; Mr. Fry, Mr. Dove; though Echard aſſures us, the Lord Grey of Groby, Sir John Danvers, and both of the Temples, ſtay'd to the laſt of the Trial, and ſat when Sentence was given.

High Court of Juſtice.

On the 13th of January the High Court of Juſtice ſat for the Trial of the King. The Names of the Commiſſioners being call'd over, thoſe that were abſent were ſummon'd to make their Appearance, which ſome of them evaded, and others, particularly Col. Rowland Wilſon, poſitively deny'd. They agreed that the Place of Trial ſhould be Weſtminſter Hall, at the End where the Courts of Chancery and King's Bench are kept, both which were thrown into one, and the Term was adjourn'd 14 Days on account of the Preparation for the Trial. Some Members of the Houſe of Commons mov'd, that the Ordinance for Adjournment of the Term ſhould be ſent up to the Lords for their Concurrence, but the Majority oppos'd it, as a waving of their own Authority, they having paſs'd an Act for it without the Lords, who on the 18th of January ſent down an Ordinance which they had paſt, notwithſtanding the Earl of Clarendon had put Locks and Padlocks on their Doors to ſhut them out of their Houſe, to the Commons for their Concurrence. It was to the ſame Effect as to the Adjournment of the Term, but the Commons laid it aſide; as this Ordinance was to forward the Trial of the King; and as the Lords ſat after the High Court of Juſtice was at work, it ſhews that their Lordſhips would have continu'd to ſit if the Commons would have let them, tho' they abhorr'd all the Steps that were taken for putting the King to Death.

On the 19th of January the King was brought from Windſor to St. James's, by Order of the High Court, where Mr. Hugh Peters waited upon him; and his Majeſty deſiring one of his Chaplains might attend for his Satisfaction in ſome Scruples of Conſcience, Dr. Juxon, Biſhop of London, was order'd to go to him the next Day. Col. Tomlinſon continu'd to command the Guard about his Majeſty, who, as Echard writes, was a Man of better Breeding than Colonel Harriſon, but behav'd with greater Rudeneſs and Barbarity. The Earl of Clarendon and the Archdeacon's Hiſtories of the enſuing Tragedy, are ſo larded with Untruth and Libel, that it takes off much of the Horror which the bloody Action naturally excites. Echard introduces it with a State of the Nation, written by a conſiderable Writer, whoſe Name however he is aſham'd of, and ought to have been aſham'd of his Writing, made up of Presbyterians, Rebellion, Malignants, Rebels, Epiſcopacy, Rebellions, vileſt Inſtruments, rotten Members, Traytors, Eſſex, Tower Hill, Covenant,

He says he writes down all these peaceable Things that he may take a little rest, though a sensible Man might as well sleep in a Hurricane.

On Saturday the 20th of January, the Commissioners of the High Court of Justice met in the Painted Chamber, and proceeded thence to the Court erected for them in Westminster Hall; the President, Sergeant Bradshaw, had the Sword carry'd before him by Col. Humphry, the Mace by Sergeant Dendy, and 20 Gentlemen attended as his Guard of Partizans, commanded by Col. Fox. After an O Yes, and Silence made, the Act of the Commons for sitting of the Court was read, an Act of no more Validity than if it had been made by the Clerk who read it, for those Commons were not the Parliament of England, no, not the House of Commons of England, the much greater Number of the Members being driven out, and kept out by the Soldiers. When the Court was call'd, 60 of the 150 Commissioners appear'd and answer'd to their Names. The King was brought from St. James's to Whitehall, and from thence by Water, guarded by Musketeers in Boats, to Sir Robert Cotton's House near Westminster Hall, and from thence to the Bar of the Court, attended by Col. Tomlinson and Col. Hacker, the former afterwards knighted, and the latter hang'd in the next Reign. Thirty Officers and Gentlemen waited with Halberts behind his Majesty's Chair of Crimson Velvet within the Bar. The Commissioners were all cover'd, and so remain'd. The King also kept his Hat on, and paid no Reverence to these pretended Judges, most of whom, as Soldiers, were wont to wear Helmets and Head-pieces, but now they charg'd their Sovereign bare fac'd, arm'd with the Civil and Military Power of England, which they so highly abus'd and dishonour'd, putting the most daring Affront on the very Name of Justice. Echard assures us, that the President Bradshaw was so afraid of being knock'd on the Head, notwithstanding his two Guards of Partizans, and Halberdiers, and 3 or 4000 Horse and Foot surrounding the Hall of Justice, that he wore a thick high Crown'd Bever Hat, lin'd with plated Steel, to ward off Blows, and that this Hat, as much a Nonentity as it apparently is, is kept as a Rarity in the Musæum in Oxford, as well to shew the Sagacity as the Loyalty of that famous University. This high crown'd Hat did not at all become his scarlet Robe, his crimson Velvet Chair of State, his Desk before it with a crimson Velvet Cushion, prepar'd for his judicious Loll, the like of which I have seen in other Places, as Emblems of Authority and Gravity. The Judges knew full well that the King would not submit to such an illegal Tribunal. They knew if he had submitted it would have been of no use to him; for if he had escap'd with Life, that insolent and tyrannical Attempt to try him for it, could not have gone off with Impunity. They had, it is true, got Witnesses enough to prove the King had been in several Actions where much Blood was spilt, and no doubt there were Thousands who could prove, that they had seen him in Arms at Edgehill, Brentford, Newbury, Naseby, &c. But that was not the Case, if the King began the War, of which they were not, and could not be proper Judges, being all of them Parties; he was not then accountable to that Court. If he did not begin the War, every Action which he was in was in his own Defence, and the Blood shed not to be laid at his Door. Instead of talking reasonably upon it, the Earl of Clarendon, Sir Roger Manly, and Archdeacon Echard, declaim in the Stile of the Fish-Market, Rogues, Rebels, Hellish Rogues, Incarnate Devils, Pettifoggers, Brewers, Carmen, Coblers, Goldsmiths, Impudent, Execrable, Impious, Nonsense, Imperious, Impiously Impious, Barbarians, Miscreants, Butchers, Bloody Keepers and Slaughterers, Enthusiasticks, Fanaticks, and a great deal more of it, with such a Confusion of Rage and Ribaldry, as turn this truly tragical Scene, which plainly told dissolves the most obdurate Mind with Compassion and Tenderness, into railing and raving. To shew a just Resentment is natural, but to bellow and foam at the Mouth shews that these Men had some other Wound besides that which was given the Publick. I shall follow Whitlocke's Relation of the King's Trial, who must be better acquainted with it than any one of these Historians.

Whitlocke.

The President made a short Speech to the King, acquainting him with the Cause of his bringing thither in order to his Trial, upon a Charge against him by the Commons of England, which was then to be read, and his Majesty to give his Answer to it. The King offer'd to speak before reading of the Charge. And when Mr. Broughton the Clerk began to read it, his Majesty interrupted him, saying, I am not intrusted by my People, they are mine by Inheritance, as Ludlow words it, who was present, but it is an odd way of wording it; and if one was Heir to Cattle or Swine it could not be more coarsely worded. After this Interruption the Charge was read, by which he was charg'd by the "Name of Charles Stuart, King of England, as guilty of all the Blood that had been "shed at Keinton, Brentford, Newbury, and "other Places where he had been present in "Arms against the Parliament, and other Par-"ticulars very large." The King paus'd at the Reading of the Charge, and after it was read, demanded of the President, "By what lawful "Authority he was brought thither." He was answer'd, as Harry Marten now directed, "In "the Name and Authority of the Commons in "Parliament assembled, and the good People "of England." Cromwel had told the Commissioners, that the King would certainly make that Demand, and Marten immediately help'd them to that Answer. The King reply'd, "He "saw no Lords there, which should make a "Parliament, including the King." He agreed, "That the Kingdom of England was Hereditary and Successive, and he should betray his "Trust if he acknowledg'd or made Answer to "them, for that he was not convinc'd that they "were a lawful Authority." As most true it is, they were not, and the King could not acknowledge them without betraying his Trust. Besides, he had as good have pleaded Guilty as have pleaded at all, for plead or not plead he was sure to be condemn'd and to suffer, and this Formality of a Trial was an Aggravation of the Injustice and Barbarity. The President having requir'd his Majesty again and again to answer, and being always refus'd, as the Court expected, the King was remanded to Sir Robert Cotton's House, and thence to St. James's; while Cromwel and his Companions went to Whitehall to keep a Fast together, which most of them must do with the greatest Impiety and Hypocrisy; for though probably Ludlow, Scroop, and other Republicans, might really believe what they had voted to be true, that the Original of just Power was in the People, and that the Arguments us'd by Milton were sufficient to satisfy their Consciences, I say, tho' in this case Commonwealth's Men might be so far deluded, as to think they were

A. D. 164⅝. were doing a ſolemn Act of Juſtice, and that it was their Duty to implore the Aſſiſtance and Bleſſing of the Almighty, yet Cromwel and his Emiſſaries, who were no Commonwealth's Men, muſt be the greateſt Hypocrites that ever diſſembled with God and Man, in praying for the aboliſhing of what they call'd one Tyranny, on Purpoſe to ſet up a worſe in the Place of it.

Before Cook the Solicitor began to read the Charge, the King held up his Cane, and laid it ſoftly upon Cook's Shoulder three Times, bidding him Hold; and before that, when the Names of the Commiſſioners were to be call'd over, the Firſt in the Act being the Lord Fairfax, and no Anſwer made, he was call'd again, when a ſhrill Voice from one of the Boxes where the Ladies were, was heard, ſaying, He has more Wit than to be here; and afterwards when the Charge was read, In the Name of all the good People of England, the ſame Voice cry'd, No not the tenth Part of them, which I believe was true. This ſurpriz'd and offended both the Court and Officers, who order'd Inquiſition to be made whence and from whom was that Voice, threatning to ſhew their Reſentment, but not to let fly at the Lady, as Echard and other ſuch Writers affirm. Upon Inquiry, it was found to be the General's Wife, the Lady Fairfax, who ſpoke thus, and ſhe was perſwaded to leave the Place after having given ſuch Offence. Manly informs us ſhe ſaid the tenth Part only, Echard that it was the hundredth. He cannot help magnifying and diminiſhing, as he fancies it is for the Glory of his Cauſe. The King leaning on his Cane, the Head made of Gold fell off on a ſudden, which it might very well do by his Majeſty's leaning upon it with more Weight than uſual, conſidering what Attention he might give to the Proceedings of the Court; and yet Echard tells us that Incident made ſo great Impreſſion on the King's Mind, that he could not help diſcovering it to Biſhop Juxon, and neither he nor the Biſhop could diſcover how it happen'd, tho' methinks the Diſcovery was not very difficult. The Reverend Hiſtorians take Notice of the falling off of the Top of his Majeſty's Cane, and tell us that the Commonwealth's Men were ſo brutal, none of 'em would ſtir to take it up, which he was forced to do himſelf. Another notorious Falſity! For Lilly, who was then preſent, ſays, I ſaw the Top of his Staff unexpectedly fall off to the Ground, which was taken up by Mr. Ruſhworth. It was urged to the King, when he inſiſted ſo much on the Authority of the Court, "That the Commons aſ-
" ſembled in Parliament could acknowledge no
" other Sovereign but God, for that upon his
" and the People's Appeal to the Sword for the " Deciſion of their reſpective Pretenſions, Judg" ment had been given for the People, who " conceiv'd it to be their Duty not to bear the " Sword in vain, and had appointed this Court
" to make Inquiſition for the Blood that had " been ſhed in this Diſpute.

On Monday the 22d of January the Court met again, and Mr. Cook, Solicitor General, mov'd, "That whereas the Priſoner had refus'd
" to make Anſwer to the Charge againſt him;
" That now he might be directed to make a po-
" ſitive Anſwer, either by Way of Confeſſion or
" Negation; which if he ſhall refuſe to do,
" That the Matter of the Charge might be taken
" pro Confeſſo, and the Court might proceed ac" cording to Juſtice." The Preſident then requir'd the King to anſwer to the Charge againſt him by the Commons of England. The King confeſs'd, "When he was laſt here he made
" Queſtion of their Authority, and ſhould have
" ſatisfy'd himſelf with the Proteſtation he then " made againſt the Legality of the Court." But A. D. 164⅝. he ſaid, "It was not his Caſe alone that he ſtood
" for, but the Freedom of all the People of " England; for if they without Law may make " or alter Law, no Subject can be ſafe for his " Life, or any thing that he calls his own." Then he ſaid, "He would give his Reaſons why in " Conſcience, and the Duty he ow'd to God firſt,
" and his People next, for the Preſervation of " their Lives, Liberties, and Eſtates, he con-
" ceiv'd he could not anſwer, till he were ſatis-
" fy'd of the Legality of it.

Preſident "Sir, I muſt interrupt you, which " I would not do, but that what you ſay is not
" agreeable to the Proceedings of any Court:
" You appear as a Priſoner before this Court,
" and are not to diſpute their Authority, but to " give a punctual Anſwer to the Charge.

King. "Sir, By your Favour, I do not know
" the Forms of Law; I do know Law and Rea-
" ſon: Though I am no Lawyer profeſs'd, but " I know as much Law as any Gentleman in " England; and therefore, under Favour, I do
" plead for the Liberties of the whole People
" of England more than you do; and there" fore if I ſhould impoſe a Belief upon any
" without Reaſons given for it, it were unrea-
" ſonable; but I muſt tell you, that by the Rea-
" ſon that I have, as thus informed, I cannot yield
" unto it.

Preſident. "Sir, I muſt interrupt you; you
" may not be permitted: You ſpeak of Law
" and Reaſon, it is fit there ſhould be Law and " Reaſon, and there is both againſt you. Sir, the " Vote of the Houſe of Commons in Parliament is
" the Reaſon of the Kingdom, by Law you ſhould
" have rul'd and reign'd. Sir, you are not to " diſpute our Authority: You are told it again
" by the Court. Sir, it will be taken Notice of " that you ſtand in Contempt, and your Con-
" tempt will be recorded.

King. "I do not know a King can be a De" linquent; let me tell you they may put in " Demurrers againſt any Proceedings as legal;
" and I demand that, and to be heard with my " Reaſons. If you deny that, you deny Rea-
" ſon.

Preſident. Sir, you have offer'd nothing to " the Court. I ſhall ſpeak ſomething to you,
" the Senſe of the Court. Sir, neither you,
" nor any Man, are permitted to diſpute that " Point: You are concluded, you muſt not de-
" mur to the Juriſdiction of the Court: If you
" do, I muſt let you know, that they over-rule
" your Demurrer. They ſit here by the Autho" rity of the Commons of England, and all your
" Predeceſſors and you are reſponſible to them.

King. "I deny that, ſhew me one Prece" dent.

Preſident. "You ought not to interrupt while " the Court is ſpeaking to you. This Point is " not to be debated by you, neither will the " Court permit you to do it. If you offer it by " Way of Demurrer to the Juriſdiction of the " Court, they have conſider'd of their Juriſdi-
" ction, and do affirm their own Juriſdiction.

King. "I ſay, by your Favour, that the Com" mons of England were never a Court of Judi-
" cature: I would know how they came to
" be ſo.

Preſident. "Sir, You are not permitted to go
" on in that Speech and theſe Diſcourſes.

Then the Clerk of the Court read this aloud:

"Charles Stuart, King of England, you have " been accus'd on the Behalf of the People of

A. D. 164⅞. " England of High Treason, and other Crimes; " the Court have determin'd that you ought to " answer the same.

King. " I will answer the same as soon as I " know by what Authority you do this.

President. " If this be all you will say, then " Gentlemen, you that brought the Prisoner, " take Charge of him back again.

King. " I do require that I may give in my " Reasons why I do not answer, and give me " Time for that.

President. " 'Tis not for Prisoners to re- " quire.

King. " Prisoners, Sir, I am not an ordinary " Prisoner.

President. " The Court hath consider'd of " their Jurisdiction, and they have already af- " firm'd their Jurisdiction. If you will not an- " swer, we shall give Order to record your De- " fault.

King. " You never heard my Reasons yet.

President. " Sir, your Reasons are not to be " heard against the highest Jurisdiction.

King. " Shew me what Jurisdiction, where " Reason is not to be heard?

President. " We shew it you here, The Com- " mons of England; and the next Time you are " brought you will know more of the Pleasure " of the Court, and it may be their final Deter- " mination.

King. " Shew me wherever the House of " Commons were a Court of Judicature of that " kind?

President. " Serjeant, take away the Pri- " soner.

King. " Well, Sir, remember that the King " is not suffer'd to give in his Reasons for the " Liberty and Freedom of all his Subjects.

President. " Sir, you are not to have Liberty " to use this Language. How great a Friend " you have been to the Laws and Liberties of " the People, let all England and the World " judge.

King. " Sir, under Favour, it was for the Li- " berty, Freedom, and Laws of the Subject, " that ever I took to defend my self with Arms; " I never took up Arms against the People, but " for the Laws.

President. " The Command of the Court " must be obey'd; no Answer will be given to " the Charge.

King. " Well, Sir.

Then the Officers guarded the King back again to Sir Robert Cotton's House.

As he went out of the Court down the Stairs, he said, He was not so much troubled for any of the Blood that had been shed, as for the Blood of one innocent Man, the Earl of Strafford. Indeed his Majesty had not so great Concern upon him on that score as he gave out, especially if what we are told is true, that having receiv'd a List of the Slain at Edgehill Fight, some Days after at Oxford he call'd for a Comedy of Ben. Johnson's.

Westminster-Hall was very much crowded every Day of the King's Trial, and some who sate on the Scaffolds did not forbear to exclaim aloud at the Proceedings of the Court, and the irreverent Usage of the King by his Subjects, insomuch that the Court was interrupted, and the Officers and Soldiers had much to do to quiet the Ladies and others. It was indeed a preposterous Business, which could not be seen without Indignation, Bradshaw perpetually commands the King to answer, the King perpetually refuses it. Bradshaw knew his Majesty would not and could not own the Authority of an unlawful Court, and the King knew it would signify nothing as to his Safety if he had own'd it. A. D. 164⅞.

The next Day, January 23. the High Court of Justice sate again, and Mr. Cook the Solicitor mov'd, " That whereas the Prisoner, instead of " giving Answer to the Charge against him, did " still dispute the Authority of the Court; That " according to Law, if a Prisoner shall stand as " contumacious in Contempt, and shall not give " an issuable Plea, Guilty or Not Guilty, where- " by he may come to a fair Trial, that as by " an implicit Confession it may be taken pro " Confesso, as it hath been done to those who " deserved more Favour than the Prisoner, and " that therefore speedy Judgment be pronounced " against him.

" President. " Sir, you have heard what is mo- " ved by the Council in Behalf of the Kingdom " against you. Sir, you may well remember; " and if you do not, the Court cannot forget, " what dilatory Dealing the Court hath found at " your Hands. You were to propound some " Questions; you had our Resolution upon " them. You were told over and over again, " that the Court did affirm their own Jurisdi- " ction; that it was not fit for you, nor for " any other Man, to dispute the Jurisdiction of " the supreme and highest Authority of Eng- " land, from which there is no Appeal, and " touching which there must be no Dispute; " yet you did persist in such Carriage as you gave " no manner of Obedience, nor did you acknow- " ledge any Authority in them, nor the high " Court that constituted this Court of Justice. " Sir, I must let you know from the Court, that " they are very sensible of these Delays of yours, " and that they ought not, being thus authoriz'd " by the supreme Court of England, to be thus " trifled withal; and that they might in Justice, " if they pleas'd, and according to the Rules of " Justice, take Advantage of these Delays, and " proceed to pronounce Judgment against you. " Yet nevertheless they are pleas'd to give Di- " rections, and on their Behalf I do require you, " that you make a positive Answer to this Charge " that is against you. Sir, in plain Terms, (for " Justice knows no Respect of Persons) you are " to give your positive and final Answer in plain " English, whether you are guilty or not " guilty of these Treasons laid to your " Charge.

" King. (After a little Pause) " When I was " here Yesterday, I desir'd to speak for the Li- " berties of the People of England; I was in- " terrupted: I desire to know yet whether I " may speak freely or not?

" President. " You have had the Resolution of " the Court upon the like Question the last Day, " and you were told, that having such a Charge " of so high a Nature against you, your Work " was, that you ought to acknowledge the Juris- " diction of the Court, and to answer your " Charge. Sir, if you answer to your Charge, " which the Court gives you leave now to do, " tho' they might have taken Advantage of your " Contempt, yet if you be able to answer your " Charge, when you have once answer'd, you " shall be heard at large, make the best Defence " you can. But, Sir, I must let you know from " the Court as their Command, that you are not " to be permitted to issue out into any other Dis- " courses till such Time as you have given a po- " sitive Answer concerning the Matter that is " charg'd upon you.

A. D. 1643.

King. " For the Charge, I value it not a " Ruſh: It is the Liberty of the People of Eng- " land that I ſtand for; for me to acknowledge " new Laws that I never heard of before. I that " am your King, that ſhould be an Example to " all the People of England, to uphold Juſtice, " to maintain the old Laws: Indeed I do not " know how to do it. You ſpoke very well the " firſt Day I came here on Saturday, of the Ob- " ligations that I had laid upon me by God to " the Maintenance of the Liberties of my Peo- " ple; the ſame Obligation you ſpoke of, I do " acknowledge to God that I owe to him and to " my People, to defend, as much as in me lies, " the ancient Laws. Therefore until that I may " know that this is not againſt the fundamental " Laws of the Kingdom, by your Favour, I can " put in no particular Anſwer. If you will give " me Time, I will ſhew you my Reaſons why I " cannot do it, and thus ———

Here being interrupted, he ſaid,

" By your Favour, you ought not to interrupt " me. How I came here I know not, there's no " Law for it, to make your King your Priſoner. " I was in a Treaty upon the publick Faith of " the Kingdom, that was the known ——— " Two Houſes of Parliament, that was the Re- " preſentative of the Kingdom; and when that " I had almoſt made an End of the Treaty, " then I was hurried away, and brought hither, " and therefore ———

Here the Preſident ſaid,

" Sir, you muſt know the Pleaſure of the " Court.

King. " By your Favour, Sir ———

Preſident. " Nay, Sir, by your Favour, you " muſt not be permitted to fall into theſe Diſ- " courſes, you appear as a Delinquent, you have " not acknowledg'd the Authority of the Court, " the Court craves it not of you; but once more " they command you to give your poſitive An- " ſwer. Clerk, do your Duty.

King. " Duty, Sir! ——

Then the Clerk read a Paper, requiring the King to give a poſitive and final Anſwer, by Way of Confeſſion or Denial of the Charge.

King. " Sir, I ſay again to you, ſo that I " might give Satisfaction to the People of Eng- " land of the Clearneſs of my Proceedings, not " by Way of Anſwer, nor in this Way, but to ſa- " tisfy them that I have done nothing againſt " that Truſt that hath been committed to me, I " would do it; but to acknowledge a new " Court againſt their Privileges, to alter the " fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, Sir, you " muſt excuſe me.

Preſident. " This is the third Time that you " have publickly diſavow'd this Court, and put " an Affront upon it; but how far you have " preſerv'd the Liberties of the People, your " Actions have ſpoke it: But truly, Sir, Mens " Intentions ought to be known by their Acti- " ons, you have written your Meaning in bloody " Characters throughout the Kingdom. But, " Sir, you underſtand the Pleaſure of the Court. " Clerk, record the Default. And, Gentlemen, " you that took the Charge of the Priſoner, take " him back again.

King. " I will ſay this one Word more to you: " If it were my own Particular, I would not ſay " any more to interrupt you.

Preſident. " Sir, you have heard the Pleaſure " of the Court, and you are (notwithſtanding " you will not underſtand it) to find that you " are before a Court of Juſtice.

Then the King went forth with his Guards, the People crying Juſtice, Juſtice, to Sir Robert Cotton's Houſe, where he lay, and the Commiſſioners adjourn'd to the Painted Chamber, which was their uſual Place of Meeting.

A. D. 1643.

On the 24th of January the High Court of Juſtice meeting again in the Painted Chamber, ſent an Uſher to Weſtminſter-Hall to tell the People there aſſembled, that the Court was buſied in examining Witneſſes relating to the Charge againſt the King, and ſhould not ſit in Weſtminſter-Hall that Day, but that all Perſons appointed to be there were to appear on further Summons. Echard very merrily deſcribes the Witneſſes, Wretched impertinent Fellows, of mean Condition and profligate Lives, ſcarce one of them a Gentleman. As for Inſtance, after his own Liſt:

William Cuthbert of Potrington in Holderneſs, Gent. William Brayne of Wixall in the County of Salop, Gent. Gyles Joyce of Wellington in the County of Salop, Gent. John Uniſon of Damorham in the County of Wilts, Gent. John Moore of Cork in Ireland, Gent. Thomas Rawlins of Hanſlope in the County of Bucks, Gent. Samuel Burden of Lineham in the County of Wilts, Gent. Henry Gooche of Gray's-Inn, Gent. &c.

But as the Facts to be prov'd were the King's being in Arms, does that wiſe Hiſtorian think the High Court of Juſtice could want Witneſſes of all Qualities to prove them, after ſo many Battles and Sieges, wherein above 200000 Men were at ſeveral Times engag'd with him. No doubt they took the firſt that offer'd, and it was not a Work that Men of the moſt Honour would be forward in.

On the 25th of January the Court met again in the Painted Chamber, and examin'd Witneſſes to prove the Setting up of the Standard by the King at Nottingham. The Witneſſes were Robert Lacy Painter, Samuel Lawſon Malſter, Thomas Whittington Cordwainer, all of the Town of Nottingham; and ſeveral others ſwore, They ſaw the King in ſeveral Fights with his Sword drawn. What Echard tells us of the Conſultation about the Manner of the King's Death, is both falſe and incredible: Some were for hanging, drawing, and quartering; ſome for hanging him in his Crown and Robes. I can't imagine where he pick'd up ſuch pitiful Materials for his Hiſtoriography. His Invention is too poor to furniſh it, as wretched as it is, and there is not a Word of it in all the Writers I have met with.

On the 26th of January the Council publiſh'd the Heads of the Charge againſt the King, to prepare People to receive the Sentence they had reſolv'd to pronounce the next Day. 'Twas expreſs'd thus:

" That Charles Stuart being admitted King " of England, and therein intruſted with a li- " mited Power to govern by and according to " the Laws of the Land, and not otherwiſe; " and by his Truſt being obliged, as alſo by his " Oath and Office, to uſe the Power committed " to him for the Good and Benefit of the Peo- " ple, and for the Preſervation of their Rights " and Privileges;

" Yet nevertheleſs, out of a wicked Deſign to " erect and uphold himſelf in an unlimited ty- " rannical Power to rule according to his Will, " and to overthrow the Rights and Liberties " of the People, yea, to take away and make " void the Foundations thereof, and of all Re- " dreſs and Remedy of Miſgovernment, which

" by the fundamental Conſtitution of this King" dom, were reſerved on the People's Behalf,
" in the Right and Powers of frequent and ſuc-
" ceſſive Parliaments as national Meetings in " Council.

" He the ſaid Charles Stuart, for Accompliſh-
" ment of his Deſigns, and for the protecting
" of himſelf and his Adherents in his and their
" wicked Practices, to the ſame Ends hath trai-
" terouſly and maliciouſly levy'd War againſt the " preſent Parliament, and the People therein
" repreſented; then they nam'd Nottingham,
" Beverley, and other Places where Fights were.

And then go on,

" That he hath cauſed and procured many " Thouſands of the free People of the Nation to " be ſlain, and by Diviſions, Parties and Inſur-
" rections within this Land, and by Invaſions
" from foreign Parts endeavour'd and procur'd
" by him, and by many other evil Ways and " Means. His giving Commiſſions to his Son
" the Prince, and other REBELS and Re-
" volters both Engliſh and Foreigners, and to " the Earl of Ormond, and to the Iriſh RE-
" BELS and Revolters aſſociated with him,
" from whence further Invaſions upon this Land
" are threaten'd, upon the Procurement, and on " the Behalf of the ſaid Charles Stuart.

" All which wicked Deſigns, and evil Practi" ces of him the ſaid Charles Stuart, have been,
" and are carry'd on for the advancing and up-
" holding of the perſonal Intereſt of his Will and " Power, and pretended Prerogative to himſelf
" and Family, againſt the publick Intereſt,
" common Right, Liberty, Juſtice and Peace,
" of the People of this Nation, by and for whom
" he was entruſted as aforeſaid; by all which it
" appeareth, that he the ſaid Charles Stuart
" hath been, and is the Occaſioner, Author and
" Contriver of the ſaid unnatural, cruel and " bloody Wars, and therein guilty of all the " Treaſons, Murders, Rapines, Burnings, Spoils,
" Deſolations, Damages and Miſchief to this " Nation, acted or committed in the ſaid Wars,
" or occaſioned thereby.

Upon this Charge, and the King's Default of Plea being recorded, Solicitor Cook demanded of the Court, that they would proceed to Judgment, accordingly the Matter came into Debate in the Painted Chamber, and after ſome Arguments pro and con, it was reſolved there, That the King as a Tyrant, Traytor, Murderer, and a publick Enemy, ſhould be condemned to Death, by ſevering his Head from his Body; and this Sentence was order'd to be engroſs'd, that it might be read the next and laſt Day of the Trial.

King condemn'd.

On the 27th of January the High Court of Juſtice ſat in Weſtminſter Hall; the Preſident, for the greater State of the Buſineſs array'd in Scarlet. Echard, and the common Writers take the Robe to be put on as a Symbol of the bloody Sentence, as if Bradſhaw had been honeſt enough to have thought there was more Blood in it than in other Sentences of Death; the Commiſſioners were for the moſt part in their beſt Array, and after they were call'd over, about 68 then preſent, the King came in with his former Attendance, and in his wonted Poſture, with his Hat on. As he paſt by into the Hall a Cry was made, Juſtice, Juſtice, Execution, Execution, by ſome Soldiers and others of the Rabble. His Majeſty deſir'd to be heard. The Preſident anſwer'd, that he muſt hear the Court, and then declar'd their Intentions to proceed againſt the Priſoner, but offer'd that he might ſpeak ſo it were not Matter of Debate. The King ſaid, A haſty Judgment was not ſoon recall'd. The Preſident enumerated the Priſoner's ſeveral Contempts and Defaults. Yet notwithſtanding they did allow he ſhould be heard what he had to ſay in defence of himſelf, as to the Charge againſt him; his Majeſty reply'd, " If he had any Reſpect to his Life
" more than to the Peace of the Kingdom, and
" the Liberty of the Subject, he certainly
" ſhould have made a particular Defence, for by
" that at leaſt he might have delay'd an ugly Sen-
" tence which he believ'd would paſs upon him.
" But now having ſomething to ſay that concerns
" both, he deſir'd before Sentence to be heard
" in the Painted Chamber before the Lords and " Commons: He inſiſted that this Delay could " not be prejudicial to them. And if they re-
" fus'd this he proteſted, that thoſe fair Shews
" of Liberty and Peace were pure Shews, and " that they would not hear their King. Bradſhaw
" told him, That this was declining the Juriſdicti-
" on of the Court which was ſupreme, and tend" ed to ſet up another, or a co-ordinate Juriſdi-
" ction, in Derogation of the Power whereby
" the Court ſat, and to the manifeſt Delay
" of their Juſtice." The King anſwer'd, That " if he did not ſay any Thing before the Houſes,
" but what was for the Peace of the Kingdom,
" and Liberty of the Subject, then the Shame
" ſhould be his." The King's vehement urging of this Point, which Ludlow intimates, was with Deſign to reſign his Kingdom to his Son, had ſuch effect upon the Court, particularly Colonel Downs, Col. Harvey, Col. Walton, and Mr. Cawley, that they prevail'd with them to adjourn to the Court of Wards, and conſider his Majeſty's Propoſal. Col. Downs there objected againſt the Validity of the Witneſſes, according to Echard's moſt authentick Memoirs, as if Witneſſes could poſſibly be wanting for Facts done in the Face of 20 or 30000 Men, but Cromwel brow-beats him, and threaten'd him with favouring his old Maſter. Several of the Commiſſioners preſs'd to ſatisfy the King's Deſire, and give him a Hearing in the Painted Chamber, but it was carry'd in the Negative by the major Vote; upon which Col. Harvey, Lord Mounſon, and others before-mentioned, went away in diſcontent, and never ſat with them afterwards. When the Commiſſioners return'd to the Court in Weſtminſter Hall, the King was told, that they could not agree to his Demand.
" That they were met there as a Court of Juſtice
" commiſſionated by the Parliament, of whoſe
" Authority they were fully ſatisfy'd, that by " their Commiſſion they were not authoriſed to " receive any Propoſals from him, but to proceed
" to the Trial of him. That in order thereto
" his Charge had been read to him, to which if " he had pleaded, the Council for the Common" wealth were ready to prove it againſt him.
" That he had thrice demurr'd to the Juriſdi-
" ction of the Court, which Demurrer the Court
" had over-rul'd and regiſter'd, in order to pro" ceed againſt him as if he had confeſs'd the " Charge, and that if he had any Propoſitions
" to make, it was proper for him to addreſs to
" the Parliament, and not to them." His Majeſty inſiſted on his former Deſire. " He con-
" feſs'd it was a Delay, but a Delay of very " great Importance for the Peace of the King" dom, which he look'd upon as much as his " own Perſon, therefore he requir'd them, as " they would anſwer it at the dreadful Day of " Judgment, that they would conſider it once
" again." Bradſhaw reply'd, " They had con-
" ſider'd it fully already, and were ready to pro" ceed to Sentence if he had nothing more to
" ſay."

A. D. 1643. " ſay." The King anſwer'd, That he had nothing more to ſay, and deſir'd what he ſaid might be enter'd. I have by me the Argument which Cook the Solicitor had prepar'd in caſe the King had pleaded; and though I know little of Law Matters, yet I can ſee plain enough there is as much Law Learning in it as the Subject would bear, and as much forcible Eloquence as in any of the Speeches in the Hiſtory of the Grand Rebellion, which was made by the Hiſtorian, who ſpeaks very contemptibly of Cook not only as he was the Parliament's Lawyer, but as he was a Lawyer. The Subject is indeed ſhocking and terrifying to the laſt Degree, but it will ſerve to ſhew how wicked Men may become, even in Judgment as well as Intereſt and Paſſion.

It begins thus,

Coke's Anſwer to the King's Plea.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip,

MY Lord Preſident, and this High Court, erected for the moſt comprehenſive, impartial, and glorious Piece of Juſtice, that ever was acted and executed on the Theatre of England, for the Trying and Judging of Charles Stuart, whom God in his Wrath gave to be a King to this Nation, and will, I truſt, in great Love, for his notorious Prevarications and Blood-guiltineſs, take him away from us.

The horrid Impiety of it makes one tremble, and there is nothing can reconcile one to the hearing of it, but the reflecting that in a few Pages more we ſhall find the Man who ſpeaks it brought to Account himſelf for this Wickedneſs, and receiving his Reward.

As this muſt be far from a delightful Subject to moderate Perſons, ſo I ſhall inſert but little of it. He proceeds,

Before I ſpeak of the War it will be neceſſary for the Satisfaction of rational Men, to open and prove the King's wicked Deſign, wherewith he ſtands charged. Now that he had from the Beginning of his Reign ſuch a Deſign and Endeavour ſo to tear up the Foundations of Government, that Law ſhould be no Protection to any Man's Perſon or Eſtate will clearly appear by what follows.

By his not taking the Oath ſo fully as his Predeceſſors did, that ſo when the Parliament ſhould tender good Laws to him for the Royal Aſſent, he might readily anſwer, that he was not oblig'd by Oath to confirm, or corroborate the ſame.

By his diſhonourable and perfidious Dealing with his People at his Coronation, when he ſet forth a Proclamation, that in Regard of the Infection then ſpread through the Kingdom, he promis'd to diſpenſe with thoſe Knights that by an old Statute were to attend at the Coronation, who were thereby requir'd not to attend, but did notwithſtanding in a few Months after take the Advantage of their Abſence, and rais'd a vaſt Sum of Money out of their Eſtates at the Council Table, where they pleading the ſaid Proclamations for their Juſtification, they were anſwer'd, that the Law of the Land was above any Proclamation, like that Tyrant, who when he could not by Law execute a Virgin, commanded her to be deflower'd and then put to Death.

By his altering the Commiſſions and Patents to the Judges, who having heretofore had their Places granted to them ſo long as they ſhould well behave themſelves therein; he made them but during Pleaſure, that ſo if the Judges ſhould not declare the Law to be as he would have it, he might remove them, and put in ſuch as ſhould not only ſay but ſwear, if need were, that the Law was as the King would have it. A. D. 1643.

At the Cloſe he ſays,

Upon all which Premiſes, May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I do humbly demand and pray the Juſtice of the High Court; and yet not I, but the innocent Blood that hath been ſhed in the three Kingdoms demands Juſtice againſt him. The Blood is vocal, and cries aloud, &c.

For my ſelf, I bleſs God, I have not ſo much Fear as comes to the thouſandth Part of a Grain. It is for a Cain to be afraid, that every Man that meets him will ſlay him. I am not much ſolicitous whether I die of a Conſumption or by the Hand of Ravilliac's, I leave that to my heavenly Father; If it be his Will that I ſhall fall by the Hands of Violence, it is the Lord, let him do what he pleaſeth. If my Indentures be given in before the Time of my Apprenticeſhip be expir'd, and I be at my Father's Houſe before it be Night, I am ſure there is no Hurt in all this. If I have but ſo much Time left, I ſhall pray my Father to forgive the Murderer; the Blood of Chriſt can waſh away Sins of the deepeſt Stain: But know this, ye that have contriv'd any deſperate Intentions againſt thoſe honourable Juſtices, who have made you Free-men, unleſs you will return to Egypt; if God in Wrath to you and Love to any of his People ſhould ſuffer you to imbrue your Hands in any of their innocent Blood, either you will repent or not; if you repent, it will coſt you ten Times more Anguiſh and Grief of Heart than the Pleaſure of the Sin can cauſe Delight; if you repent not, it had been better for you, you had never been born, &c.

The Preſident as uſual made a Speech before paſſing Sentence, which Echard, ſo good a Judge of ſuch Things, ſays, was long and inſolent, that he miſapply'd Law and Hiſtory, taking up and wreſting whatever he thought fit for his Purpoſe. I do verily believe he has ſo done, but I do ſay the Archdeacon knows too little of Hiſtory or Law to be a proper Judge of it. Ludlow, who heard the Speech, writes thus of it.

Preſident Bradſhaw's Speech when he pronounc'd Sentence againſt the King.

" Then the Preſident enlarg'd upon the horrid
" Nature of thoſe Crimes of which he had been
" accus'd, and was now convicted, declaring
" that the only juſt Power of Kings was deriv'd
" from the Conſent of the People, that whereas
" the People had invited him to ſee their Laws
" put in Execution, he had endeavour'd through" out the whole Courſe of his Reign, to ſubvert
" thoſe good Laws, and to introduce an arbitra-
" ry, tyrannical Government in the Room of " them; That to cut off all Hopes of Redreſs,
" he had attempted from the Beginning of his " Reign, either wholly to deſtroy Parliaments,
" or to render them only ſubſervient to his own
" corrupt Deſigns; that though he had conſent-
" ed, the publick Neceſſities ſo requiring, that
" this Parliament ſhould not be diſſolv'd, but by " an Act of themſelves, he had levied War againſt
" them, that he might not only diſſolve them,
" but by the Terror of his Power for ever diſ-
" courage ſuch Aſſemblies from doing their Du" ty. That in this War many Thouſands of the " good People of England had loſt their Lives;
" that in Obedience to what God commanded,
" and the Nation expected, the Parliament had " appointed this Court to make Inquiſition for " this Blood, and to try him for the ſame: That

" this

A. D. 1647.

" his Charge had been read to him, and he re-
" quir'd to give an Anſwer to it, which he ha" ving thrice refus'd to do, he acquainted him
" that the Court would proceed to Sentence."
The Preſident ſaid further in his Speech, "That
" by Law Kings were accountable to their " People, and to the Law, which was their Su" perior; and he inſtanc'd in ſeveral Kings who " had been depos'd and impriſon'd by their " Subjects, eſpecially in the King's native
" Country, where, of 109 Kings, moſt were de-
" pos'd, impriſon'd or proceeded againſt for
" Miſ-government; and his own Grandmother
" remov'd, and his Father, an Infant, Crown'd.
" He exhorted him to think ſeriouſly of the " Crimes of which he had been guilty, and to
" purge himſelf of them by Repentance."
At the End of his Speech he commanded the Clerk, Mr. Phelps, to read the Sentence, which recited the Charge; for all which Treaſons and Crimes, the Court does adjudge that he the ſaid Charles Steuart, as a Tyrant, Traytor, Murderer, and publick Enemy, ſhall be put to Death by ſevering of his Head from his Body. Echard ſays, While the Preſident was pronouncing this, which by the way he did not pronounce, the King was obſerv'd, with a ſort of Smile, to lift up his Eyes to Heaven, as appealing to the Divine Majeſty. He deſir'd to be heard, but it would not be permitted, being after Sentence; and as he return'd through the Hall, there was another Cry, Juſtice and Execution. 'Tis very probable the Soldiers were ſet on by Lieutenant Colonel Axtell, and other fierce Officers to make this Clamour, and that a Rabble was plac'd there on purpoſe; for 'tis moſt certain that the Nation in general abhorr'd this Action and the Actors; and I cannot write of it without Tremour; but it always naturally leads me to the melancholy Reflection on thoſe proud avaritious Counſellors, who kept the King ſo many Days in conteſting the Point of Biſhops and Biſhopricks at the Iſle of Wight, as gave the Army Time to draw to a Rendezvous, and break off a Treaty, which if it had not been for that Conteſt, might have ended happily, long enough before Cromwel was at Leiſure to interpoſe in it, and King and Parliament having come to an Agreement, and the Army it ſelf being divided, the Soldiery muſt have comply'd with it. I deteſt this Injuſtice and Cruelty ſo much, that I can almoſt fall in with the Ribaldry and Rage of Echard, Manly, Sanderſon, and other ſuch Writers; and tho' they talk with equal Nonſenſe and Fury I can bear it at this Time, and throw aſide Milton againſt Saumaiſe, as hating to hear even a Pretence to Senſe and Reaſon upon a Subject which I think is not capable of it, a Way of judging which I will not obſerve in any other Caſe, and cannot indeed be allowable in any other. This is moſt true, that the moſt publick, earneſt and unfeign'd Endeavours were us'd by the Presbyterians, and eſpecially by their Miniſters, to prevent the King's Trial and Death; and as Echard had the following Hiſtory before him, in Dr. Calamy's Abridgment of Baxter's Life, he ſhew'd his very great Candor and Sincerity in ſinking of it, and is there in all Pagan Hiſtory a Parellel for the Baſeneſs, Ignorance and Ingratitude of thoſe of his Brethren, who on the Anniverſary for the King's Death, in Cathedrals and other Churches, charge the whole Body of the Presbyterians with the Guilt of it? Mr. Calamy and other Miniſters waited on the Lord Fairfax, and earneſtly ſollicited him to declare himſelf, and reſcue the King; but his Trouble had ſo diſcompos'd him that he could not be argu'd with; and the Army carrying every Thing before them; the Miniſters publiſh'd a Declaration, wherein they ſet forth,

The Presbyterians earneſtly endeavour to ſave the King.

Of theſe all that are in Italick were turn'd out of their Livings as ſoon as this King's Son, Charles II. was reſtor'd, only for being Presbyterians, and moſt of the others were dead before it, or they had alſo met with the ſame Gratitude and Juſtice. One of them, Mr. Chriſtopher Love, ſuffer'd Death for endeavouring that King's

And let us make our ſolemn Appeal to Poſterity, what Sort of Mortals theſe muſt be, as to Senſe, Charity and Humanity; for as to Religion, they can apparently be of none, that have paſt Sentence of Damnation in their Sermons, on all theſe Miniſters and their Brethren, for killing this very King, whom with ſo much Boldneſs and Truth they labour'd to ſave: Here they publickly proteſted againſt the King's Trial, againſt the Agreement of the People, in Defiance of that victorious Army, who were Authors of both; and how they are thank'd for it we may hear every Thirtieth of January, not from Vicars and Curates only, in obſcure Villages, but from Doctors and Dignitaries, in Cities and Univerſities, whoſe Knowledge or whoſe Conſcience muſt be very extraordinary.

Whitlocke makes a judicious Reflection on the Behaviour of ſome Perſons towards the King after Sentence. "Here we may take Notice of the "abject Baſeneſs of ſome vulgar Spirits, who ſee-"ing their King in that Condition, endeavour'd in "their ſmall Capacity, further to promote his "Miſery, that they might a little curry Favour "with the preſent Powers:" Some of the very ſame Perſons were afterwards as clamorous for Juſtice againſt thoſe that were the King's Judges, as his Majeſty foretold they would be, when they cry'd Juſtice and Execution. Echard. The Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, to make theſe poor Wretches poorer than they were, upbraids them with their Obſcurity, and ſays the King knew but two of all his Judges before the Troubles, Sir John Danvers, and Sir Henry Mildmay. He cannot help it, though the Speaking Truth here could not much mend the Matter. The Lord Mounſon and Mr. Holland were his Domeſtick Servants before the Troubles: And Larry tells us, that Mounſon, the Lord Grey of Groby, and Danvers, did not ſit the laſt Day of the Trial.

A. D. 164⅛. I have often wonder'd why it was that his Majeſty made Choice of Dr. Juxon, Biſhop of London, to aſſiſt him in his Devotions, when he was preparing for Death, having ſuch able Men as Dr. Sanderſon and Dr. Hammond among his Chaplains. Whatever Diſcourſes I have met with of Dr. Juxon's, ſeem to me the moſt cold and lifeleſs; and in the laſt Hours there could not be too much Piety and Fervour. The Lord Clarendon and Mr. Echard do not over abound in ſuch Sort of Senſibility, and therefore they ſpeak as well of this Biſhop's Devotion as of Biſhop Uſher's, or Biſhop Hall's. But many Years after I had made this Obſervation; the Biſhop of Salisbury's Memoirs told us, Juxon did the Duty of his Function with a dry Coldneſs, which could not raiſe the King's Thoughts; and Ludlow relates it ſtill with more Contempt. Adjutant General Allen was ſent to acquaint Dr. Juxon with the King's Condition, and Deſires that he might attend him. The Doctor being altogether unprepar'd for ſuch a Work, broke out into theſe Expreſſions; God ſave us, What a Trick is this, that I ſhould have no more Warning, and I have nothing ready; but recollecting himſelf a little, he put on his Scarfe and his other Furniture, and went with him to the King, where having read the Common Prayer, and one of his old Sermons, he adminiſter'd the Sacrament to him, not forgetting to uſe the Words of the Confeſſion ſet down in the Liturgy, inviting all thoſe that truly repent to make their Confeſſions before the Congregation, tho' there was none preſent but the King and himſelf. If any Thing could give one Offence againſt the Uſe of that excellent Form, it would be this miſerable Inſtance; that a grave Doctor and Biſhop ſhould have Recourſe to the ordinary Form in the moſt extraordinary Caſe that ever happen'd in divine Worſhip, and when it was hardly poſſible for a thinking Man to conſider the Condition his Majeſty was in without pouring out his Soul to Almighty God in his Behalf. If General Ludlow tells us the Truth, this is the ſaddeſt Effect which the too common Uſe of a holy Thing ever produc'd.

Biſhop Juxon's Devotions with the King.

The High Court of Juſtice appointed a Committee, Commiſſary General Ireton, Sir Hardreſs Waller, Col. Harriſon, Col. Dean, and Col. Okey, to inſpect the Poſts about Whitehall, for a convenient Place for the Execution of the King, who having made their Report to them, it was agreed that a Scaffold ſhould be erected for that Purpoſe near the Banquetting-Houſe, and Orders given to cover it with Black. The ſame Day that Sentence paſt, Dr. Juxon preach'd the old Sermon Ludlow mentions, in the King's private Lodgings at Whitehall; and his Majeſty would not admit any one to his Preſence, except his Children, that he might not be diſturb'd in his Contemplations. His Electoral Highneſs, the Duke of Richmond, the Marquis of Hertford, the Earl of Lindſey, and Earl of Southampton, having got Leave, deſir'd to ſee him, and came to his Bed-chamber Door, but was told by Mr. Herbert, his Groom, that his Majeſty deſir'd them not to take it ill, but he could not then ſee them. Two or three Hiſtoriographers inform us, that theſe noble Lords offer'd to lay down their Lives to ſave the King's; and I do verily believe theſe Lords would chearfully have done it; though I cannot believe they ever offer'd it, as being too abſurd for ſuch Noblemen to offer what could not be accepted according to the Senſe of the Men in Power; for the Death of an innocent cannot ſatisfy for the Crimes of a guilty Perſon, as they impudently and injuriouſly ſtil'd his Majeſty.

A. D. 164$\frac{8}{9}$.

The Barbarity of the Treatment his Majesty met with is a Scandal to Christianity, and one would think 'twas impossible to make it worse than it was; yet the Writers on the same Side with Echard have so done, at the Expence of Truth and Credibility. For some Nights, says one of 'em, a Guard of Soldiers was kept within his Chamber, who with talking, clinking of Pots, opening and shutting of the Door, and taking Tobacco there, (a Thing very offensive to the King's Nature) should keep him watching, that so by distempering and amazing him with want of Sleep, they might the easier bring him to their Terms. From this worthy Author Echard borrows the pretended Proposal of the Grandees of the Army, who are feign'd to tender to the King a Paper Book on the 28th of January, with Promise of Life, and some Shadow of Regality, if he would subscribe it, and agree to Pass an Act of Parliament for keeping on foot this Army, with Power to recruit and increase it to 40000 Horse and Foot, &c. which being really never propos'd to him, there is no Need of repeating his Majesty's Answer. This faithful Historian says, The King lay at Whitehall the Day on which Sentence pass'd, and Sunday Night so near the Place appointed for the Separation of his Soul and Body, that he might hear every Stroke the Workmen gave on the Scaffold, where they wrought all Night. This was a new Device to mortify him; and this is the honest Way of Writing in the History of the Rebellion, Manley, &c. Whereas, in Truth, the King, as Echard tells us, was remov'd to St. James's two or three Hours after Sentence; and Ludlow assures us, that the Banquetting House was not appointed for the Place where the Scaffold should be erected till the next Day, Monday the 29th of January. These Historiographers matter not either Probability nor Credibility, and the Archdeacon is Master of their Manner. Himself owns that the King and the Bishop of London were left by themselves in Acts of Devotion; but the Historian he copies from tells us, The Parliament appointed John Goodwin of Coleman-street, the Balaam of the Army, that curseth and blesseth for Hire, to be Superintendent both over King and Bishop, so that they could hardly speak a Word together without being overheard by the long schismatical Ears of black-mouth'd John. Tho' every Word of this too is false, yet the Politeness and Eloquence carries it off, and there being such a History written by so exact, so fine, and so orthodox an Author, there was no need of the History of the Rebellion, and but little of the Archdeacon's, whose Story about Col. John Cromwel's bringing another Paper-Book to Lieutenant General Oliver Cromwel from the States of Holland, to write what he would in it, to be confirm'd by King and Prince, if he would save his Majesty's Life, having no better Authority than the other Paper Book to the King, and being not within the Bounds of the Probable and Credible, shall be left where it is. The King's refusing the Prayers of Mr. Calamy, Mr. Vines, Mr. Caryl, Mr. Dell, and Mr. Goodwin, all whom he dismiss'd according to Echard, is very grateful to him; and the laying the Burthen of his Conscience on Bishop Juxon only, is recommended as a Piece of Christian Heroism. However, those Ministers, and all the Presbyterian Ministers, did pray for him, as they were in Duty bound, and particularly one Mr. Cawton, a Presbyterian Minister, pray'd for him so heartily, that the Grandees threw him into Prison, and he has no Thanks for it from the Archdeacon.

The Interview between the King and his Children the Day before Execution is so moving, that there is not a tragick Scene in any Drama which can affect one like it. The Tenderness of it is exquisite, and much easier to be conceiv'd, or to be felt, than to be express'd. They were not long together, but long enough to be near Dissolution in Grief and Tears. His Majesty kiss'd the Princess Elizabeth, and bad her remember to tell her Brother James, whenever she saw him, 'twas his Father's last Command, That he should no more look upon Charles as his eldest Brother only, but be obedient to him as his Sovereign; That they should love one another, and forgive their Father's Enemies. The King added, Sweetheart, you'll forget this. She reply'd, No never while I live shall I forget it; and pouring forth a Deluge of Tears, promis'd to write down the Particulars. The King took the Duke of Glouceſter, then in the ninth Year of his Age, upon his Knee, saying, Sweetheart, now they will cut off thy Father's Head. Upon which Words the young Prince look'd very stedfastly on him: Mark, Child, what I say, they will cut off my Head, and perhaps make Thee King; but, mark what I say! you must not be a King so long as your Brothers Charles and James do live; for they will cut off your Brothers Heads when they can catch them, and cut off thy Head too at last; and therefore I charge you do not be made a King by them. The young Prince with a Sigh said, I will be torn to Pieces first. Which falling so unexpectedly from a Lad, made his Majesty rejoice exceedingly. The following Relation is what the Princess Elizabeth, then in the 14th Year of her Age, wrote down as she promis'd.

" What the King said to me the 29th of January, 1648. being the last Time I had the " Happiness to see him. He was glad I was " come, and altho' he had not Time to say much, " yet somewhat he had to say to me which he " had not to another, nor did he leave in Writing, because he fear'd their Cruelty was such, " as that they would not have permitted him to " write to me. He wish'd me not to grieve and " torment my self for him, for that would be a " glorious Death that he should die, it being " for the Laws and Liberties of this Land, and " for maintaining the true Protestant Religion. " He bid me read Bishop Andrews's Sermons, " Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity, Bishop Laud's " Book against Fisher, which would ground me " against Popery. He told me he had forgiven " all his Enemies, and hop'd God would for- " give them also, and commanded me and all " the rest of my Brothers and Sisters to forgive " them. He bid me tell my Mother that his " Thoughts had never stray'd from her, and that " his Love should be the same to the last. " Withal, he commanded me and my Brothers " to be obedient to her, and bid me send his " Blessing to the rest of my Brothers and Si- " sters, with Commendations to all his Friends. " So after he had given me his Blessing, I took " my Leave. Further, he commanded us all " to forgive those People, but never to trust " them, for they had been most false to him, " and to those that gave them Power, and fear'd " also to their own Souls, and desir'd me not to " grieve for him, for he should die a Martyr, " and that he doubted not but the Lord would " settle his Throne upon his Son, and that we " should be all happier than we could have ex- " pected to have been if he had liv'd; with " many other Things which at present I cannot " remember.

The Execution of the King.

On the Morning of the dreadful Day, January the 30th, the King roſe very early, and call'd up Mr. Herbert, who lay by his Bed-ſide on a Pallat. Biſhop Juxon came to him ſome Time after, and perform'd Divine Service, reading the 27th of St. Matthew, the Hiſtory of our Saviour's Paſſion. The King ſuppoſing it had been ſelected on Purpoſe, as his Majeſty might well think, and not that the Biſhop would take the Run of the Day on ſo extraordinary an Occaſion, thank'd the Biſhop for his ſeaſonable Choice, but that Prelate undeceiv'd him; It was the Leſſon appointed by the Calendar for the 30th of January. Having taken the bleſſed Sacrament, and had Notice by Col. Hacker, That it was Time to go to Whitehall, where his Majeſty might have ſome further Time to reſt, the King came out with the Biſhop and Mr. Herbert about Ten a Clock. He walk'd thro' the Gardens into the Park, guarded with a Regiment of Foot and Partizans to Whitehall, ſeveral Gentlemen walking bare before him; Dr. Juxon follow'd next to him, and Col. Thomlinſon had the Charge of him. They brought him to the Cabinet Chamber at Whitehall, where he remain'd ſome Time at his Devotion. There were two or three Diſhes of Meat provided, if he had thought fit to have din'd, but he refus'd, having communicated juſt before, and about Twelve a Clock eat half a Manchet and drank a Glaſs of Claret. From thence he went with Dr. Juxon, Col. Thomlinſon, Col. Hacker, and the Guards, through the Banqueting Houſe, adjoining to which the Scaffold was erected. It was hung round with Black, the Floor cover'd with Black, and the Ax and Block laid in the Middle of it. Several Troops of Horſe and Companies of Foot were poſted on each Side of the Scaffold, and great Multitudes of People came to be Spectators. His Majeſty look'd earneſtly on the Block, and ask'd, If there was no Place higher, and, directing his Speech to Col. Thomlinſon, and the Gentlemen on the Scaffold, ſpoke to this Effect: I ſhall be very little heard of any Body here, I ſhall therefore ſpeak a Word or two to you here. Indeed I could hold my Peace very well, if I did not think that holding my Peace would make ſome Men think that I did ſubmit to the Guilt as well as to the Puniſhment; but I think it is my Duty to God firſt, and to my Country, for to clear my ſelf, both as an honeſt Man, and a good King, and a good Chriſtian.

A. D. 164$\frac{8}{9}$.

I ſhall begin firſt with my Innocency: In Troth, I think it not very needful for me to inſiſt long upon this, for all the World knows that I never did begin a War with the Two Houſes of Parliament; and I call God to Witneſs, to whom I muſt ſhortly make an Account, that I did never intend for to incroach upon their Privileges.

They began upon me: It is the Militia they began upon. They confeſs'd that the Militia was mine, but they thought it fit to have it from me; and to be ſhort, if any Body will look to the Dates of Commiſſions, theirs and mine, and likewiſe to the Declarations, they will ſee clearly that they began theſe unhappy Troubles, not I.

So that as to the Guilt of theſe enormous Crimes that are laid againſt me, I hope in God that God will clear me of it; I will not, I am in Charity, God forbid that I ſhould lay it upon the Two Houſes of Parliament. There is no Neceſſity of either.

I hope they are free of this Guilt, for I do believe that ill Inſtruments between them and me have been the chief Cauſe of this Bloodſhed; ſo that by Way of Speaking, as I find my ſelf clear of this, I hope and pray God that they may too.

Yet for all this, God forbid that I ſhould be ſo ill a Chriſtian, as not to ſay that God's Judgments are juſt upon me. Many Times he does pay Juſtice by an unjuſt Sentence, that is ordinary. I only ſay this, that one unjuſt Sentence that I ſuffer'd for to take Effect, is now puniſhed by an unjuſt Sentence upon me; that is, ſo far I have ſaid to ſhew you that I am an innocent Man.

Now, for to ſhew you that I am a good Chriſtian, I hope there is a good Man [Pointing to Dr. Juxon] that will bear me Witneſs that I have forgiven all the World, and even thoſe too in particular that have been the chief Cauſers of my Death. Who they are, God knows, I do not deſire to know. I pray God forgive them.

But this is not all, my Charity muſt go farther; I wiſh that they may repent, for indeed they have committed a great Sin in that Particular. I pray God with St. Stephen, that this be not laid to their Charge; nay, not only ſo, but that they may take the right Way to the Peace of the Kingdom; for Charity commands me not only to forgive particular Men, but to endeavour to the laſt Gaſp the Peace of the Kingdom. So, Sirs, I do wiſh with all my Soul; and I do hope there is ſome here that will carry it further, that they may endeavour the Peace of the Kingdom.

Now, Sirs, I muſt ſhew you how you are out of the Way, and will put you in a Way. Firſt, you are out of the Way, for certainly all the Way you ever have had yet, as I could find by any thing, is in the Way of Conqueſt.

Certainly

A. D. 164⅝.

Certainly this is an ill Way, for Conqueſt, Sirs, in my Opinion, is ever juſt, either for Matter of Wrong, or juſt Title, and then if you go beyond it, the firſt Quarrel that you have to it, that makes it unjuſt at the End that was juſt at firſt.

But if it be only Matter of Conqueſt, then it is a great Robbery, as a Pirate ſaid to Alexander, That he was the great Robber, he was but a petty Robber; and ſo, Sirs, do, I think, the Way that you are in is much out of the Way.

Now, Sirs, to put you in the Way, believe it, you will never do right, nor God will never proſper you, until you give Him his Due, the King his Due (that is my Succeſſors) and the People their Due. I am as much for them as any of you can be. You muſt give God his Due, by regulating rightly his Church according to his Scripture, which is now out of Order. For to ſet you in a Way particularly now I cannot, but only this, a National Synod freely called, freely debating among themſelves, muſt ſettle this, when that every Opinion is freely and clearly heard.

For the King, indeed I will not.

Then turning to a Gentleman that touch'd the Ax, he ſaid, Hurt not the Ax that may hurt me.

For the King, the Laws of the Land will clearly inſtruct you, for that therefore becauſe it concerns my own particular I only give you a Touch of it.

For the People, and truly I deſire their Liberty and Freedom as much as any Body whomſoever, but I muſt tell you, that their Liberty and their Freedom conſiſts in having of Government, thoſe Laws by which their Life and their Goods may be moſt their own.

It is not for having Share in Government, Sirs, that is nothing pertaining to them, a Subject and a Sovereign are clean different Things, and therefore until they do that, I mean, that you do put the People in that Liberty, as I ſay, certainly they will never enjoy themſelves.

Sirs, It was for this that now I come here, if I would have given way to an arbitrary Way, for to have all Laws changed according to the Power of the Sword, I needed not to have come here, and therefore I tell you, and I pray God it be not laid to your Charge, that I am the Martyr of the People.

In truth, Sirs, I ſhall not hold you much longer, for I will only ſay this to you, that in troth I could have deſir'd ſome little longer Time, becauſe that I would have put this that I have ſaid in a little more Order, and a little better digeſted it than I have done, and therefore I hope you will excuſe me. I have delivered my Conſcience. I pray God that you do take thoſe Courſes that are beſt, for the good of the Kingdom and your own Salvation.

Then Dr. Juxon ſpoke, Though it be very well known what your Majeſty's Affections are to Religion, yet it may be expected that you ſhould ſay ſomewhat for the World's Satisfaction in that Particular.

King. I thank you very heartily, my Lord, for that I had almoſt forgotten it. In troth, Sirs, my Conſcience in Religion, I think, is very well known to the World, and therefore before you all I declare, That I die a Chriſtian according to the Profeſſion of the Church of England, as I found it left me by my Fathers, and this honeſt Man I think will witneſs it.

Then turning to the Officers he ſaid,

Sirs, excuſe me for this Time, I have a good Cauſe, and I have a gracious God. I will ſay no more.

A. D. 164⅝.

Then turning to Col. Hacker, he ſaid, Take Care that they do not put me to pain, and, Sir thus, and it pleaſe you.

Then a Gentleman coming near the Ax, the King ſaid, Take heed of the Ax. Pray take heed of the Ax.

He then ſaid to the Executioner. I ſhall ſay but very ſhort Prayers, and then thruſt out my Hand.

Two Men in Diſguiſes and Vizors ſtood upon the Scaffold for Executioners, then the King call'd to Dr. Juxon for his Night Cap, and having put it on he ſaid to the Executioner, Does my Hair trouble you? He deſir'd it might all be put under the Cap, which the King did accordingly, with the Help of the Executioner and the Biſhop.

Then the King turning to Dr. Juxon, ſaid, I have a good Cauſe and a gracious God on my Side.

Dr. Juxon. There is but one Stage more. This Stage is turbulent and troubleſome, it is a ſhort one, but you may conſider it will ſoon carry you a very great Way, from Earth to Heaven, and there you will find a deal of cordial Joy and Comfort.

Then the King took off his Cloak and his George, which he gave to Dr. Juxon, ſaying, Remember. Being undreſs'd to his ſky Colour Satten Waſte-Coat, he bad the Executioner faſten the Block, and after a few Words of Ejaculation he laid his Neck down upon it, bidding him ſtay for the Sign, which was the ſtretching out his Hand, and that being given, his Head was at one Blow ſever'd from his Body, the Executioner holding it up, the Soldiers and Rabble gave a great Shout, but all ſober People that ſaw it wept bitterly, and the Lamentation over the whole Kingdom was deep and univerſal, excepting the Actors in this Tragedy, and their Adherents. Some Remarks might be made on his Majeſty's inſiſting ſo much upon his dying a Martyr for the Laws, which no King of England had ever broken more than he had done; a Martyr for the People, who had labour'd under a heavier and longer Oppreſſion in the firſt fifteen Years of his Reign than they had ſuffer'd in 150 Years before. But I am too much mov'd with writing this tragical Scene to have any ſuch ungenerous Sentiments towards a ſuffering Prince, and ſhall leave the laſt Speech as it is left in Whitlocke to the Reader's own candid Reflections.

The Council of State after the King was beheaded, was willing to know the Meaning of his laſt Expreſſion, Remember, and call'd Dr. Juxon before them, to give an Account of it, who told them, That the King immediately before his coming out to the Place of Execution, had charg'd him to carry to the Prince his George, with theſe his two laſt Commands, That he ſhould forgive his Murtherers; and that if ever he came to the Crown he ſhould ſo govern his Subjects, as not to force them upon Extremities.

Echard always over does every Thing that he has a mind to praiſe or diſpraiſe; he has not Judgment to know and ſtop at a Medium. The King's Death ſtruck all reaſonable Minds with Horror. But that Women, and particularly a Dutch Commonwealth Woman ſhould miſcarry at the News only, is no more credible than what

I ſhall begin firſt with my Innocency: In Troth, I think it not very needful for me to inſiſt long upon this, for all the World knows that I never did begin a War with the Two Houſes of Parliament; and I call God to Witneſs, to whom I muſt ſhortly make an Account, that I did never intend for to incroach upon their Privileges.

They began upon me: It is the Militia they began upon. They confeſs'd that the Militia was mine, but they thought it fit to have it from me; and to be ſhort, if any Body will look to the Dates of Commiſſions, theirs and mine, and likewiſe to the Declarations, they will ſee clearly that they began theſe unhappy Troubles, not I.

So that as to the Guilt of theſe enormous Crimes that are laid againſt me, I hope in God that God will clear me of it; I will not, I am in Charity, God forbid that I ſhould lay it upon the Two Houſes of Parliament. There is no Neceſſity of either.

I hope they are free of this Guilt, for I do believe that ill Inſtruments between them and me have been the chief Cauſe of this Bloodſhed; ſo that by Way of Speaking, as I find my ſelf clear of this, I hope and pray God that they may too.

Yet for all this, God forbid that I ſhould be ſo ill a Chriſtian, as not to ſay that God's Judgments are juſt upon me. Many Times he does pay Juſtice by an unjuſt Sentence, that is ordinary. I only ſay this, that one unjuſt Sentence that I ſuffer'd for to take Effect, is now puniſhed by an unjuſt Sentence upon me; that is, ſo far I have ſaid to ſhew you that I am an innocent Man.

Now, for to ſhew you that I am a good Chriſtian, I hope there is a good Man [Pointing to Dr. Juxon] that will bear me Witneſs that I have forgiven all the World, and even thoſe too in particular that have been the chief Cauſers of my Death. Who they are, God knows, I do not deſire to know. I pray God forgive them.

But this is not all, my Charity muſt go farther; I wiſh that they may repent, for indeed they have committed a great Sin in that Particular. I pray God with St. Stephen, that this be not laid to their Charge; nay, not only ſo, but that they may take the right Way to the Peace of the Kingdom; for Charity commands me not only to forgive particular Men, but to endeavour to the laſt Gaſp the Peace of the Kingdom. So, Sirs, I do wiſh with all my Soul; and I do hope there is ſome here that will carry it further, that they may endeavour the Peace of the Kingdom.

Now, Sirs, I muſt ſhew you how you are out of the Way, and will put you in a Way. Firſt, you are out of the Way, for certainly all the Way you ever have had yet, as I could find by any thing, is in the Way of Conqueſt.

Certainly

A. D. 164⅛.

Certainly this is an ill Way, for Conqueſt, Sirs, in my Opinion, is ever juſt, either for Matter of Wrong, or juſt Title, and then if you go beyond it, the firſt Quarrel that you have to it, that makes it unjuſt at the End that was juſt at firſt.

But if it be only Matter of Conqueſt, then it is a great Robbery, as a Pirate ſaid to Alexander, That he was the great Robber, he was but a petty Robber; and ſo, Sirs, do, I think, the Way that you are in is much out of the Way.

Now, Sirs, to put you in the Way, believe it, you will never do right, nor God will never proſper you, until you give Him his Due, the King his Due (that is my Succeſſors) and the People their Due. I am as much for them as any of you can be. You muſt give God his Due, by regulating rightly his Church according to his Scripture, which is now out of Order. For to ſet you in a Way particularly now I cannot, but only this, a National Synod freely called, freely debating among themſelves, muſt ſettle this, when that every Opinion is freely and clearly heard.

For the King, indeed I will not.

Then turning to a Gentleman that touch'd the Ax, he ſaid, Hurt not the Ax that may hurt me.

For the King, the Laws of the Land will clearly inſtruct you, for that therefore becauſe it concerns my own particular I only give you a Touch of it.

For the People, and truly I deſire their Liberty and Freedom as much as any Body whomſoever, but I muſt tell you, that their Liberty and their Freedom conſiſts in having of Government, thoſe Laws by which their Life and their Goods may be moſt their own.

It is not for having Share in Government, Sirs, that is nothing pertaining to them, a Subject and a Sovereign are clean different Things, and therefore until they do that, I mean, that you do put the People in that Liberty, as I ſay, certainly they will never enjoy themſelves.

Sirs, It was for this that now I come here, if I would have given way to an arbitrary Way, for to have all Laws changed according to the Power of the Sword, I needed not to have come here, and therefore I tell you, and I pray God it be not laid to your Charge, that I am the Martyr of the People.

In truth, Sirs, I ſhall not hold you much longer, for I will only ſay this to you, that in troth I could have deſir'd ſome little longer Time, becauſe that I would have put this that I have ſaid in a little more Order, and a little better digeſted it than I have done, and therefore I hope you will excuſe me. I have delivered my Conſcience. I pray God that you do take thoſe Courſes that are beſt, for the good of the Kingdom and your own Salvation.

Then Dr. Juxon ſpoke, Though it be very well known what your Majeſty's Affections are to Religion, yet it may be expected that you ſhould ſay ſomewhat for the World's Satisfaction in that Particular.

King. I thank you very heartily, my Lord, for that I had almoſt forgotten it. In troth, Sirs, my Conſcience in Religion, I think, is very well known to the World, and therefore before you all I declare, That I die a Chriſtian according to the Profeſſion of the Church of England, as I found it left me by my Fathers, and this honeſt Man I think will witneſs it.

Then turning to the Officers he ſaid,

Sirs, excuſe me for this Time, I have a good Cauſe, and I have a gracious God. I will ſay no more. A. D. 164⅛.

Then turning to Col. Hacker, he ſaid, Take Care that they do not put me to pain, and, Sir thus, and it pleaſe you.

Then a Gentleman coming near the Ax, the King ſaid, Take heed of the Ax. Pray take heed of the Ax.

He then ſaid to the Executioner. I ſhall ſay but very ſhort Prayers, and then thruſt out my Hand.

Two Men in Diſguiſes and Vizors ſtood upon the Scaffold for Executioners, then the King call'd to Dr. Juxon for his Night Cap, and having put it on he ſaid to the Executioner, Does my Hair trouble you? He deſir'd it might all be put under the Cap, which the King did accordingly, with the Help of the Executioner and the Biſhop.

Then the King turning to Dr. Juxon, ſaid, I have a good Cauſe and a gracious God on my Side.

Dr. Juxon. There is but one Stage more. This Stage is turbulent and troubleſome, it is a ſhort one, but you may conſider it will ſoon carry you a very great Way, from Earth to Heaven, and there you will find a deal of cordial Joy and Comfort.

Then the King took off his Cloak and his George, which he gave to Dr. Juxon, ſaying, Remember. Being undreſs'd to his ſky Colour Satten Waſte-Coat, he bad the Executioner faſten the Block, and after a few Words of Ejaculation he laid his Neck down upon it, bidding him ſtay for the Sign, which was the ſtretching out his Hand, and that being given, his Head was at one Blow ſever'd from his Body, the Executioner holding it up, the Soldiers and Rabble gave a great Shout, but all ſober People that ſaw it wept bitterly, and the Lamentation over the whole Kingdom was deep and univerſal, excepting the Actors in this Tragedy, and their Adherents. Some Remarks might be made on his Majeſty's inſiſting ſo much upon his dying a Martyr for the Laws, which no King of England had ever broken more than he had done; a Martyr for the People, who had labour'd under a heavier and longer Oppreſſion in the firſt fifteen Years of his Reign than they had ſuffer'd in 150 Years before. But I am too much mov'd with writing this tragical Scene to have any ſuch ungenerous Sentiments towards a ſuffering Prince, and ſhall leave the laſt Speech as it is left in Whitlocke to the Reader's own candid Reflections.

The Council of State after the King was beheaded, was willing to know the Meaning of his laſt Expreſſion, Remember, and call'd Dr. Juxon before them, to give an Account of it, who told them, That the King immediately before his coming out to the Place of Execution, had charg'd him to carry to the Prince his George, with theſe his two laſt Commands, That he ſhould forgive his Murtherers; and that if ever he came to the Crown he ſhould ſo govern his Subjects, as not to force them upon Extremities.

Echard always over does every Thing that he has a mind to praiſe or diſpraiſe; he has not Judgment to know and ſtop at a Medium. The King's Death ſtruck all reaſonable Minds with Horror. But that Women, and particularly a Dutch Commonwealth Woman ſhould miſcarry at the News only, is no more credible than what

A. D. 164⅛. Sanderſon, another ſuch Hiſtorian ſays of it, that a Relique of the Block or Sand being apply'd to a blind Woman's Eyes at Deptford ſhe was immediately reſtor'd to ſight.

As to this King's Character, 'tis ſeen beſt in his Hiſtory; for what the Lord Clarendon and Echard after him, ſay of it, is no more his Picture than it is their own. If Biſhop Burnet has any Likeneſs, he died greater than he liv'd, and ſhew'd, that which has been ſaid of the whole Race of the Stuarts, that they bear Misfortune better than Proſperity. "His Reign, both in "Peace and War, was a continual Series of Er- "rors, ſo that it does not appear that he had a "true Judgment of Things: He was out of "meaſure ſet on following his Humour, but un- "reaſonably complying to thoſe whom he truſt- "ed, chiefly the Queen. He had too high a "Notion of the Regal Power, and thought that "every Oppoſition to it was Rebellion. He "minded little Things too much, and was "more concern'd in the Drawing of a Paper, "than in fighting of a Battle. He was too much "inclin'd to the middle Way between a Pro- "teſtant and Papiſt. He engag'd the Duke of "Rohan in the War of Rochelle, and then "forſook him. He was the Occaſion of the Loſs "of the Liberty of the Spaniſh Netherlands, "&c." For there is too much of it to be taken entire, and every Word diametrically oppoſite to the Earl of Clarendon and Archdeacon Echard's Harangues. I take no Notice of what the latter tells us, of the Papiſts being concern'd in the King's Death, though I read it in a more faithful Hiſtory, Calamy's Life of Baxter, for there is not the leaſt likelihood that the Romaniſts, who had been ſo highly favour'd, and had fought and ſuffer'd ſo much for him, ſhould be ſo ſolicitous to have his Head off, to make room for a Puritan Republick, who they might be ſure would not fail to ſuppreſs, if not to extirpate them. All his Authorities have no Weight in the Scale againſt this ſimple and plain Argument. The Archdeacon, that he might go beyond all Hiſtorians in the Perfection of this King's Character, aſſures us there was nothing wanting towards it, but that he ſhould have been more reſolute and more imperious. Two Qualities which all the World agree to be his chief Characteriſticks. I do not mention the pious Endeavours of the Queen, the Prince, and the States of Holland, to ſave the King's Life, they all having been unſucceſsful, as they had never any likelihood of Succeſs, for after the Parliament had paſs'd an Act for the Trial of the King, and he had been try'd and condemn'd, the Iſſue could not be other than it was with any manner of Safety to all that were concern'd in it. The Head and Trunk were put into a Coffin cover'd with black Velvet, and convey'd into the Lodgings at Whitehall, where the Body was embowell'd by the Army's Surgeon, and thence carry'd to St. James's, and put into a Lead Coffin, with this plain Epitaph, KING CHARLES, 1648. About a Fortnight after ſome of the King's Friends, the Duke of Lenox, the Marquis of Hertford, the Earl of Lindſey, the Earl of Southampton, and the Biſhop of London, obtain'd leave to bury it; accordingly they remov'd it to Windſor Chapel, and bury'd it in the Vault of King Henry VIII. without the Form in the Common Prayer Book, the Governor, Col. Whichcot, not permitting it, it being put down, and therefore ſhould not be us'd in that Garriſon where he commanded; for which the Colonel ſhew'd no better Judgment than the Archdeacon does in making ſo much ado about it.

Papiſts not concern'd in his Death.

He is buried.

The High Court of Juſtice having reported their Proceedings to the Parliament, the latter declar'd, That the Perſons employ'd in that important Service had diſcharg'd their Truſt with Courage and Fidelity. That the Parliament was well ſatisfy'd with the Account of their Proceedings, ordering it to be engroſs'd and recorded among the Parliament Rolls, in order to tranſmit the Memory thereof to Poſterity. And reſolv'd, That the Commiſſioners of the Great Seal ſhould iſſue a Certiorari to their Clerks, to record thoſe Proceedings in the Chancery, and that the ſame ſhould be ſent to the other Courts in Weſtminſter Hall, and to the Cuſtos Rotulorum in each County. So very deſirous were both the Parliament and the High Court of Juſtice to have this Matter remember'd, yet Echard thinks he has taken ſufficient Revenge of them, by printing their Names in his noble Hiſtory with his Mark of Infamy, though it is moſt certain, that thoſe Judges were ſo far from thinking their Judgment infamous, that they glory'd in it ever after. And one of them, Mr. Scot, deſir'd his Part in it might be inſcrib'd on his Tomb. Neither did the bloody Vengeance taken on them in the next Reign ever extort one Word of Remorſe or Repentance, but even theſe deluded Men pretended to Martyrdom for the Laws of the Land and the Liberties of the People, though by what Law, and what Logick they argu'd thus, I cannot imagine. For it is moſt certain, that all their Proceedings in the Trial and Death of the King were as unjuſt as they were cruel, and as illegal as they were ſanguinary.

High Court of Juſtice thank'd.

THE

THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND, DURING THE COMMONWEALTH.

A. D. 1649.

I AM ſenſible how difficult it is to write the Hiſtory of this Period with the leaſt Hope of Succeſs. The Friends of the late King and his Poſterity repreſent the Parliament, who had aſſum'd the Power, as ſo many Monſters and Devils: Their Friends ſpeak of them as of a Senate the neareſt to the Glory and Majeſty of the Roman, of any Aſſembly ſince the Triumvirates.

Is there no middle Way between theſe two Extreams? Or rather, may not we grant that they acquir'd their Power by Violence and Uſurpation, and yet endeavour to prove that they exercis'd it with Wiſdom and Honour?

I muſt lay by the Lord Clarendon and Echard's Hiſtories when I enter on the New Government, for there is not one Feature like the Original in the Picture the one has drawn of it, and the other has ſlaviſhly copy'd.

An Act againſt proclaiming the P. of Wales King.

The ſame Day on which King Charles the Firſt was beheaded the Parliament paſt an Act, Prohibiting any to proclaim the Prince of Wales, or any other, to be King or chief Magiſtrate of England, or Ireland, without Conſent of Parliament, on pain of High Treaſon; which Act was ſent to the Sheriffs of all the Counties of England to be proclaim'd there. The ſame Day Duke Hamilton and the Lord Loughborough eſcap'd out of Windſor Caſtle. Sir Lewis Dives got through a Neceſſary Houſe in Whitehall, ſtanding over the Thames, and on February the 1ſt, the Lord Capel, by a deſperate Attempt, made his Eſcape over the Tower Moat. The Duke was ſoon retaken by ſome Troopers in Southwark, who knew him diſguis'd as he was, and knocking at an Inn Door, and Lord Capel was diſcover'd by a Waterman as he croſs'd the Thames, and ſeiz'd in a Houſe at Lambeth. Col. Middleton, who was a Priſoner at Newcaſtle, ran away to Scotland, and being requir'd to return, anſwer'd Cavalierment, my Life is dearer to me than my Honour. Sir Marmaduke Langdale made alſo his Eſcape, for they could not ſtand the Terrors of the High Court of Juſtice, which humbled Judge Jenkins and Sir John Stawel, who, ſays Ludlow, had carry'd themſelves very inſolently, but now finding the Parliament to be in earneſt began to come to a better Temper. Mr. Holder, the Prince of Wales's Agent, a Priſoner in Whitehall, got out as Sir Lewis Dives had done, and it was the Eſcape of theſe Perſons that put the Houſe on a Debate to bring Duke Hamilton, the Earl of Holland, the Earl of Norwich, the Lord Capel, Langhorn, Poyer and Powell, to a ſpeedy Trial; in order to which they paſs'd an Act for Conſtituting a new Court of Juſtice, who choſe John Bradſhaw, Eſq; to be Preſident of it, and the Officers to be the ſame as in the firſt High Court.

Priſoners eſcape.

A. D. 1649.

On the 1ſt of Febuary the Parliament paſs'd an Act, That ſuch Members as had voted 5th of Dec. laſt, that the late King's Conceſſions to the Propoſitions were a ſufficient Ground for Settleing a Peace in this Nation, ſhould not be re-admitted to ſit as Members of this Parliament. And, That ſuch Members as were then in the Houſe, and gave their Votes in the Negative, ſhould enter their Diſſent to the ſaid Vote, and ſuch as were abſent ſhould declare their diſapproving thereof before they be admitted as Members. This Step was taken to embark all the Members on the ſame Bottom, and found their new State on Agreement and Union. Several Members obey'd this Order, and had Admittance, as John Lenthal, Eſq; the Speaker's Son, Sir John Trevor, Sir Henry Hayman, Philip Herbert, Eſq; William Herbert, Eſq; two Sons of the Earl of Pembroke; Henry Darley, Eſq; —— Andrews, Eſq; Mr. Francis Pierrepoint, Col. Ruſſel, Mr. Edwards, Mr. Fr. Gourdon, Mr. Hodges, Mr. Ellis.

late King, they were, now he was dead, willing enough to come in for a Share of the Government, and would have agreed to have made it Republican. On the 1st of February they ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons, That a Committee of 9 Lords and 18 Commoners might be named to conſider of a Way to ſettle the Nation. The Houſe adjourned the Conſideration of the Meſſage to the next Day, and it was then debated, Whether any Notice at all ſhould be taken of their Meſſage; Lieutenant General Cromwel was for the Affirmative, and it was even then ſuſpected that he appear'd for the Lords, in an Opinion that they were more Monarchical than the Commons, and would be more ready to join in with a ſingle Perſon, if an Attempt for ſuch a Government ſhould ever be made. The Lords adjourning themſelves after they had order'd this Meſſage, and not meeting again at the Time to which they had adjourn'd, much facilitated their Removal. On the 5th of February this Meſſage was warmly debated, and the Republicans carrying the Point, it was reſolv'd, That the Houſe of Peers in Parliament is uſeleſs and dangerous, and ought to be aboliſh'd, and an Act was order'd to be brought in by Mr. Whitlocke accordingly, which paſs'd without much Oppoſition. After this the Earl of Pembroke ſat in the Houſe of Commons, as Knight of the Shire for Berkſhire, that Privilege being allow'd the Peers if they were elected Knights, Citizens, or Burgeſſes. The Lord Howard of Eſcrick was choſen Citizen for Carliſle, and the Earl of Salisbury ſat alſo in the Houſe of Commons as Burgeſs for Lynne.

Houſe of Lords aboliſh'd and kingly Government.

The next Day the Debate concerning kingly Government ended in this Reſolution upon the Queſtion, That it hath been found by Experience, and this Houſe doth declare, That the Office of a King in this Nation, and to have the Power thereof in any ſingle Perſon is unneceſſary, burthenſome and dangerous to the Liberty, Safety, and publick Intereſt of the People of this Nation, and therefore ought to be aboliſh'd, and that an Act be brought in to that Purpoſe, which was not long paſſing.

On the 9th of February the Parliament paſs'd an Act, appointing Bulſtrode Whitlocke, Eſq; Richard Keeble, Eſq; and John Liſle, Eſq; Lords Commiſſioners of the Great Seal. The former Seal, and all other publick Seals which had the Image of King Charles on them, were order'd to be defac'd, and a new Great Seal to be made, with the Stamp of the Houſe of Commons on one Side, accompany'd with this Inſcription, the Great Seal of the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England; and on the other Side was engraven the Croſs and the Harp, being the Arms of England and Ireland, with this Inſcription, God with us. The Judges made ſome Difficulty of Acting on Account of the Alteration in their Oath, and the Teſt of the Writs, which were not to run in the King's Name, but in the Name of the Keepers of the Liberties of England. Bacon, Brown, Beding field, Trevor and Atkins, Judges, laid down their Commiſſions upon it. But the following ſix old, and ſix new, diſcharg'd that Duty. King's Bench, Lord Chief Juſtice, Rolls Jermin, Nicholas and Ask; Common Pleas, Lord Chief Juſtice, St. John Pheaſant, Puleſton and Warburton; Exchequer, Lord Chief Baron Wylde, Yates, Thorp, Rigby; and inſtead of the old Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, a new Engagement was appointed to be taken by all in Office or Benefice, to be true and faithful to the Government eſtabliſh'd without King or Houſe of Peers.

Judges.

The Engagement.

The new Republick had not this Eſtabliſhment without Oppoſition and great Murmurs; Sir Abraham Reynardſon, the Lord Mayor of London, and Major General Browne, one of the Sheriffs, kept up a Party againſt them in the City. The Lord Mayor refus'd to proclaim the Act for aboliſhing kingly Government, for which he was fin'd 2000 Pounds, and committed to the Tower for two Months; 500 Pounds of that 2000 Pounds was given to the Poor of the City, 500 Pounds to Weſtminſter, 500 Pounds to Southwark, and 500 Pounds to the Poor of the Tower Hamlets. Reynardſon pleaded Scruple of Conſcience at the Bar of the Houſe, by his Oath taken in the Exchequer, and that he conceiv'd it was the Sheriffs Buſineſs; and one Andrews, ſays Echard, was made Mayor, as it was his Turn to be, he having ſerv'd Sheriff but two Years after Reynardſon. The Lord Mayor, Andrews, aſſiſted by Alderman Pennington, Sir John Wollaſton, Alderman Atkins, Alderman Viner, Alderman Foulke, Alderman Edmonds, Alderman Pack, Alderman Byde, Alderman Avery, Alderman Wilſon, Alderman Dethick, Alderman Bateman, Alderman Foot, and other principal Citizens proclaim'd the Act in ſeveral Parts of the City. The Parliament order'd the late King's Effigies at the Royal Exchange to be remov'd, and this Inſcription put up in its Place.

A. D. 1649.

EXIT TYRANNUS REGUM ULTIMUS ANNO, LIBERTATIS ANGLIÆ RESTITUTÆ, PRIMO ANNO 1649. 30 JANUARII.

But this did not hinder ſeveral Perſons from proclaiming King Charles the Second in ſeveral Places, though it was generally done on a ſuddain, and in the dark. The Parliament took no Notice of theſe tumultuary Proclamations, and where they were affix'd to Poſts or Doors, the Magiſtrates order'd them to be taken down.

Four Days after the King's Death the new Commonwealth wrote Letters of Notification, that they had aſſum'd the Government to foreign Potentates and Powers, and order'd their Secretaries to notify to the foreign Miniſters in England, the Death of the King, and the Eſtabliſhment of the Republick, which thoſe Miniſters knew not how to take. They had been Witneſſes of King Charles's Death, and were ſenſible that there was no other Government but that of the Parliament; yet they were imbarras'd, whether to receive theſe Notifications in good or ill Part; if the latter, they might offend the Commonwealth, if the former, their Maſters; ſo they generally reply'd, They muſt wait for Orders.

For the executive Part of the Government, the Parliament appointed a Council of State, who were nominated by a Committee, Mr. Liſle, Mr. Holland, Mr. Ludlow, Mr. Robinſon, Mr. Scot, who named 35, and the Parliament added thoſe 5 and confirm'd the others.

They kept their Office at Whitehall, and thoſe Members who deſir'd it had Lodgings there. They were by their Commiſſion to diſpoſe of the Militia of England and Ireland, of the Fleet, Magazines, and Stores for one Year only. The Committee of Five, who nominated the Council of State, were impower'd alſo to ſee that all re-admitted Members comply'd with the Order about the Vote of the 5th of December.

Admiralty. As for the Navy they appointed Edward Popham, Eſq; Robert Blake, Eſq; and Richard Dean, Eſq; joint Admirals, and Sir Henry Vane, Treaſurer of the Navy; a Place of ſo very great Profit, that Sir Henry Vane thought it rather burdenſome than uſeful to the Commonwealth, and would accept only of 1000 Pounds per Annum, for his Clerks and the Expence of his Office. The Admirals had no more than three Pounds a Day.

The new High Court of Juſtice being eſtabliſh'd, their Seſſion was like that of the Firſt in Weſtminſter Hall, and the Priſoners were brought before them.

It is neceſſary here to remind the Reader, that the two Parties, King and Parliament had ſuſpended the regular Courſe of the Law, and made their Appeal to the Sword: That in this Appeal the Controverſy was decided on the Side of the Parliament, the Conſequence of which was, that they muſt either abandon at once all their Conqueſts, and throw themſelves on the Mercy of their moſt cruel and implacable Enemies, or ſupport themſelves by good Armies and good Laws, which go always with the Powers, for their Preſervation. That thoſe Laws were well known to thoſe who broke them, as alſo the Penalties of breaking them; and nothing could be more impertinent and ridiculous, than to talk of old Laws, old known Laws, in the Time of a Monarchy, which was firſt interrupted, and then diſſolv'd, to a State governing by Laws of their own making, and by a Power able to ſupport them. Yet thus it is throughout the Hiſtory of the Rebellion; I need not add Echard's Hiſtory, becauſe it is only a poor Copy of the other, which indeed has Poverty enough in it, when it is ſtripp'd of the Embroidery: I ſhall therefore lay them both aſide now I am come to this Court of Juſtice, they having left me no ſure footing, either in Fact or Character. I ſhall follow Whitlocke, and I am then ſafe, and ſo is the Reader.

High Court of Juſtice. On the 10th of February the High Court of Juſtice ſat in Weſtminſter Hall; about fifty of the Members, all new ones, Preſent. Duke Hamilton, as Earl of Cambridge, the Lord Goring, created Earl of Norwich four Years before the Lord Capel and Sir John Owen were brought before them, and Sergeant Bradſhaw, the Preſident, made a Speech to them of the Occaſion of their coming thither, to be try'd for High Treaſon and other Crimes, after which they were all commanded to withdraw, except the Earl of Cambridge.

Duke Hamilton or Earl of Cambridge his Trial. Then Mr. Steel, Attorney General for the Commonwealth, ſet forth the Notoriouſneſs of the Facts of the Priſoner at the Bar, by his invading the Kingdom, committing many Murders and Rapines, and all under Pretence of the Covenant. That as the War was call'd Hypocritarium Bellum, ſo he might be call'd Hypocritarium Princeps. He deſir'd the Charge might be read, and that the Earl might make Anſwer to it. After the Charge, the Earl of Cambridge pleaded, He was of another Nation, and what he did was as a Servant to that Kingdom, and not as a Contriver of it. Neither was he ever naturaliz'd Earl of Cambridge, that he knew of, That he was a Priſoner of War, and had Articles given him. A. D. 1649.

The Court order'd the Act to be read for Naturalization of his Father, and conſequently of him, being his Heir. He was then remanded to Priſon till the next Day, when being brought to the Bar, the Attorney General, Mr. Steel, mov'd that he might anſwer the Charge; which the Preſident requir'd him to do. The Earl deſir'd Time that he might put Things in Order, and ſend to Major General Lambert, by whom he had Articles given him. The Court gave him two Days to anſwer; and upon his Motion for Counſel, he had Liberty to name them, which he ſaid he could not do, not knowing any one Counſellor in England; though he had liv'd above twenty Years in the Kingdom. However, at the two Days End, when he was again brought to the Bar, he thank'd the Court for the Time they had given him; but he ſaid it was ſo ſhort that he could not be provided; and upon his Deſire, Mr. Chute, Mr. Hale, and Dr. Parſons, were aſſign'd him for Council. The Earl deſir'd Leave to ſend to Scotland; it was anſwer'd, That it was for Priſoners to prepare their Proofs againſt the Trial, he having been in Priſon ſo long. He reply'd, That during his ſix Months Impriſonment, he never ſent about any private Buſineſs, but only to get Monies to maintain him: He pray'd the Mercy of the Court, that if they would ſpare him he might be uſeful. The Court gave him two Days Time longer to prepare, and the Counſel refuſing to plead for him, others were aſſign'd. Two Days after, the 17th of February, he was again brought to the Bar, and urg'd that the laſt Counſel were not ready for want of Time, and held it not proper for them to plead in Matter of Law till the Fact was firſt prov'd.

The Court declar'd he had been often mov'd to make his Defence, and it was inſiſted upon, that he ſhould then do it: So he produc'd his Commiſſions from the Parliament of Scotland, to command all their Forces, and the Order of the Committee of Eſtates there for him to advance into England, as alſo the large Declaration from Scotland. He pleaded, That the Ends thereof were for his Majeſty's Honour, and the Settling of Religion and the Covenant. He then urg'd the Articles agreed unto by General Lambert, when he yielded himſelf Priſoner, by which he was aſſur'd of Quarter and Life, to prove it he produc'd the Lord Grey of Groby, Col. Lilburn, and Mr. Peters.

Concerning the Point of Naturalization: He pleaded, That his Father being naturaliz'd, could not make him a Subject of England, no more than the Son of an Engliſhman, born in any foreign Parts, was intitled thereby to any Inheritance here. That he had a Petition and Bill prepared for his Naturalization, but it paſſed not.

The Proof againſt this was, "That he was cal" led by the late King's Writ to ſit in Parliament
" in the Lords Houſe, by the Name of Earl of " Cambridge, and appear'd as Earl of Cambridge,
" and acted as a Peer of England ſitting in the " Lords Houſe, and in divers Committees. That " as a Peer of England he took the National Co" venant, and ſubſcribed to it Cambridge in the " Houſe of Peers, and took the Negative Oath be" fore the Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, as a
" Peer of England." As to his ſurrendring to Lambert upon Articles, it was prov'd, that he was a Priſoner to the Lord Grey of Groby before Major General Lambert could come up to conclude any Articles with him, which was prov'd by Col. Wayte; and a very furious Cavalier Writer owns this Plea was but a pretended one. Letters under his own Hand to Sir Marmaduke Langdale were produc'd, touching the carrying on of the Deſign in England, and Paſſages concerning his Friends in Colcheſter.

A. D. 1649.

H. J. p. 131.

Col. Whichcot Governor, and the Marſhal of Windſor Caſtle, prov'd the Earl's Eſcape, after he had paſs'd his Word to the Governor to be a true Priſoner. The Earl earneſtly deny'd this, and offer'd upon it a Challenge to the Governor, were he not in his preſent Capacity; but it was left to the Judgment of the Court.

The Witneſſes againſt the Earl having been heard, he produc'd the Witneſſes for him, ſome of whom were diſallow'd, being Officers under him, and ſo Participes Criminis. He pleaded, That he had not broken the Negative Oath, for he had not engag'd againſt the Parliament, but for the Ends in the Scots Declaration.

His Council mov'd, that they might, with the Council of the Commonwealth, ſtate the Caſe of the Earl; but this was deny'd, being a Caſe of High Treaſon, and the Earl's Council could only declare their Opinions in Point of Law.

The Trial had laſted on and off 16 Days, when the Earl of Cambridge's Council were heard by the Court, and pleaded, That the Earl was no free Denizon; and tho' his Father was naturaliz'd, and his Heirs, yet he not being born in the Kingdom, could receive no Benefit thereof: That if he had been a free Denizon, yet it was not prejudicial to him, becauſe he acted by Command and Authority of the Parliament of another Nation, (and not of himſelf) who was govern'd by another diſtinct Law.

The Earl pleaded again the Articles given him by Major General Lambert, who had Power to do it, and who ſecur'd him by a Party of his Forces; as alſo, that he was order'd to be baniſh'd by Parliament, paying One Hundred Thouſand Pounds.

He was not brought again before the Court till five Days after, March the 3d, when he made an additional Defence, not much varying from what he had ſaid before. He did the ſame when he was two Days after ask'd what he had further to ſay, upon which the Court proceeded to Conviction and Sentence. The Cavalier Author above cited affirms, that Hamilton not only offer'd the 100000 Pounds before mention'd, but to join with the Marquis of Argyle in Scotland to ſerve the Parliament's Friends there. Notwithſtanding this fair and reaſonable Trial, on a Suppoſition that the Powers in being can try Perſons for Treaſon againſt them, the Earl of Clarendon affirms as poſitively as a Man can affirm any thing, he was not liable to Trial, being a Priſoner of War; which is not only contrary to all Accounts of his ſurrendring himſelf, but to Col. Wayte's poſitive Affirmation before the Houſe of Commons, when he acquainted them with Hamilton's being taken, That he yielded at Diſcretion, and Lambert was not then near him, and to his Oath before the high Court of Juſtice.

He is convicted.

The Trials of the other Lords continu'd at the ſame Time, and we ſhall take them in the Order we find them in Whitlocke.

Goring Earl of Norwich his Trial.

The next who was brought to the Bar was the Lord Goring, Earl of Norwich, who pleaded Not guilty, and was diſmiſs'd for that Time, behaving himſelf with great Reſpect to the Court, in which he behav'd like a wiſe Man, who knew that Rudeneſs and Scorn are ſeldom ſucceſsful in Proſperity, and much more in ſuch Adverſity as his was, the Peril of his Life. The ſame Wiſdom would have produc'd the ſame Effects in Lord Capel.

A. D. 1649.

Six Days after, February the 16th, he was brought again to the Bar, and Mr. Cook, Solicitor General, ſet forth the Heinouſneſs of his Crimes at Colcheſter, in Kent, Eſſex, &c. He ſaid, He could not deny the Matter of Fact, but ſhould clear himſelf of ſome Particulars.

Several Witneſſes were produc'd vivâ voce, who prov'd the Death of divers of the Parliament Party. The ſhooting of poyſon'd Bullets boiled in Copperas from the Town, the cruel Uſage of the Priſoners in Colcheſter, the Lord Goring's reviling them, calling them Rebellious Rogues, the burning of 600 Houſes in that Town, and many other Particulars.

The Lord Goring, by Way of Defence, made a Narrative of his Proceedings ſince his laſt coming into England, acknowledg'd his receiving a Commiſſion from the Prince, and his giving Commiſſions to others: That what he did was out of a good Intention for Peace: That Treaſon not being in the Intention, he could not be guilty of it: That he intended not to raiſe Forces againſt the Parliament. He pleaded his Peerage, and the Articles of Colcheſter, by which Quarter was given him.

To this the Council for the Commonwealth reply'd, That a Man's Actions did beſt expound his Intentions: That the Lord Goring's Actions ſpake him guilty of Murder, Treaſon, &c. That as to his Peerage, the Power by which the Court ſate was an Anſwer; That for the Articles of Colcheſter, though he had at firſt wav'd them, yet he ſhould have as full a Benefit of them as the Lord Capel, who had largely pleaded for them.

The next that was brought to the Bar, and on the ſame Day with Hamilton and Goring, was the Lord Capel, who pleaded, He was a Priſoner to the Lord General, and had Conditions given him, and his Life promis'd him; and if all the Magiſtrates in Chriſtendom were combin'd together, they could not call him in Queſtion. Mr. Whitlocke tells us, He never minded nor look'd upon the Court, but upon the People on all Sides, and with an auſtere Countenance. This is the Majeſty that is boaſted of, and ſo much extoll'd, that one would take the Lord Capel rather to be a General at the Head of an Army than a Priſoner at the Bar. If Sullenneſs and Auſterity could have ſerv'd him or his Cauſe, there had been Heroiſm in it; but as it was of no other Uſe than to haſten the Execution of an ugly Sentence, which the Lord Goring by his wiſer Conduct eſcap'd, it will never meet with Applauſe in ſober Hiſtory.

The Lord Capel was required the next Day to plead in Chief. He again inſiſted on the Colcheſter Articles, ſaying, He had fair Quarter given him, and all the Gowns in the World had nothing to do with him. It is great Pity that Dr. Morley, who aſſiſted him in his Devotions, did not or could not bring his Mind into better Temper, even when Death ſtar'd him in the Face. Punctilio's of Honour are not at ſuch an Hour the Sentiments of Minds truly great, but Calmneſs, Serenity, and the ſweet Workings of Moderation and Charity.

He was the next Day again brought to the Bar, and the Attorney General mov'd, That the Priſoner might make good his Plea. Upon which the Preſident told him, That he had put in a Plea concerning Articles, for Proof whereof the Lord General was by Order of the Court there preſent; That he had Liberty to ask any thing of him: If not, then the Council of the Commonwealth

A. D. 1649. wealth were to offer what they could in Proof of it. So the Attorney General went on and produc'd the General's Letter to the Parliament, upon the Rendition of Colcheſter, and the Articles and the Explanation of them, whereby, and upon the Teſtimony of the Lord General and General Ireton, Col. Whaley and Col. Barkſtead, all preſent by Order of Court, it appear'd, ſays Whitlocke, That the Lord Capel was to have fair Quarter for his Life, which was explain'd to be, a Freedom from any Execution of the Sword, but not any Protection from the Judicial Proceedings of a Civil Court; and Mercy was explain'd to be only from the promiſcuous Execution of the Sword, but that he might be tried by a Council of War. " It was clearly " prov'd, adds Mr. Whitlocke, that the Arti- " cles were only to free him from the preſent " Power of the Sword to take away his Life; " and Col. Barkſtead ſwore, That he told him " the Day after the Articles, that he believ'd " the Parliament would proceed againſt them " that were taken at Colcheſter as Traytors.

As often as I have charg'd the Author or Authors of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion with Falſification and Miſrepreſentation, if my Patience would have held out, I could have done it twenty Times as often; and I beg the Reader to mind how it is inſinuated, that the Court order'd the General to be preſent againſt their Will, and out of meer Shame. They knew not how to deny it, as if they were afraid of his Evidence. But what follows is falſe to a Degree that admits of no Epithet; and the Author who was capable of ſuch a Falſity, is not to be nam'd by Perſons who make any Conſcience of Truth and Sincerity.

Hiſt. Reb. p. 267. Whether the Queſtion was well ſtated to Fairfax, or what was elſe ſaid to him to diſſwade him from owning his Declaration and Promiſe, he boggled ſo much in his Anſwer, that they would be of Opinion, that he had not made ſuch direct and poſitive Promiſe, and that the ſame was never tranſmitted to Parliament. Whereas he never did promiſe him his Life, otherwiſe than to exempt him from preſent military Execution, as we can prove from the Lord Fairfax's own Words. " After our Entrance into Colcheſter, a Short Memorial, p. 123. " Council of War was call'd, and thoſe before- " nam'd Perſons were ſentenc'd to die, the reſt to " be acquitted. This being ſo reſolv'd, I thought " fit notwithſtanding to tranſmit the Lord Ca- " pel, &c. over to the Parliament, being the Ci- " vil Judicature of the Kingdom, &c." What need was there of his boggling then? Which he did not do; he had before referr'd him to the Parliament to do Juſtice on him; and his huffing the Court in ſuch Circumſtances, made him indeed a fit Subject for the Earl of Clarendon's Eulogy, but will not heighten his Character with Men who think reaſonably.

The Council for the Commonwealth mov'd for Judgment againſt the Lord Capel, That he ſhould be hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd, at which he ſeem'd to ſtartle, and after a ſhort Speech to the Court, he concluded, That however he was dealt with here, he hop'd for a better Reſurrection hereafter.

The next Time he was brought before the Court, their Order was read to him, That they would hear what he had to ſay that Day, and then proceed to Judgment.

He ſaid, He was to be comprehended wholly in the Martial Law, and urged the Articles again, which excepted Trial after by Parliament; That divers who were in Colcheſter in his Condition had compounded; That breaking Priſon for Treaſon by Common Law was but Felony; and if he muſt be judg'd by the Common Law, he hop'd he might have the full Benefit of it. A. D. 1649. He urg'd for it the late Act, which ſays, Though King and Lords be laid aſide, yet the fundamental Laws ſhall be in Force. He recommended Magna Charta to the Court, and the Petition of Right, and preſs'd the Conſideration of the Act made in Favour of thoſe who aſſiſted King Henry VII. and the Exception in the Acts touching the Lord Strafford and Canterbury. He deſired to ſee his Jury, and that they might ſee him, and to be try'd by his Peers, ſaying, He believ'd a Precedent could not be given of a Subject try'd for Life, but either by Bill in Parliament, or by a Jury. This was a new Government, who were to make Precedents, and not to follow thoſe that were made, unleſs they were agreeable to the Conſtitution. All he ſaid about Peers and Jury could be of no Help to him, and Magna Charta was not to be pleaded againſt an Act of Parliament, which was the Authority this Court pretended to.

At the laſt Hearing, he briefly repeated what he had ſaid formerly, and further obſerv'd an Ordinance of Parliament, That Quarter for Life ſhould not be given to Iriſh REBELS; which imply'd, That Quarter for Life given to others ſhould be inviolable. But he had had no ſuch Quarter given him, otherwiſe than to exempt him from immediate military Execution.

Sir John Owen's Trial.

Sir John Owen was brought to the Bar at the ſame Time with the Lords Hamilton, Norwich, and Capel. He pleaded Not guilty. But the Witneſſes prov'd againſt him, that he had not only rais'd Forces againſt the Parliament, but had kill'd the High Sheriff of Carnarvonſhire. The Lord Clarendon aſſures us he ſaid, He had always been taught to obey the King. Whitlocke, that he alledg'd what he did was to free himſelf from Plunder. As to the killing the High Sheriff, the Lord Clarendon makes the Welch Knight ſo fooliſh as to ſay, If the Sheriff had not been there he had not been kill'd; but what he adds is ſtill more ridiculous, He concluded like a Man who did not much care what they reſolv'd concerning him, but would not let us know that this bold Briton, as loyal as he was, had taken the Covenant and Negative Oath, and was guilty of Perjury in the very Act for which his Lordſhip or the Doctors of Chriſt-Church give him ſuch extravagant Praiſe. Owen pleaded Quarter as well as the reſt, and with the ſame Reaſon and the ſame Succeſs. If the Soldiers had knock'd them on the Head when they took them, it had been no more than they deſerv'd with Reſpect to the Parliament, who having them in their Power, might proceed againſt them as they pleas'd, for they had not parted with their Power over them when they ſent their General to reduce them. General Ludlow obſerves very juſtly, " If there had been any Pro- " miſe made to any of them, either implicitly " or by Word of Mouth, it could only extend " to protect them from the Military, not the " Civil Sword.

Earl of Holland's Trial.

The Earl of Holland was ſick in Warwick Caſtle when the other Priſoners were firſt brought to the Bar, as he was himſelf 17 Days after, February the 27th, when the Charge of High Treaſon was read againſt him, and aggravated by the Solicitor General; That the Earl was an eminent Courtier, and probably did ill Offices, and perſwaded the King to go from the Parliament, and went afterwards himſelf to Oxford; That he return'd from thence, had his Sequeſtration taken off; That he publiſh'd a Declaration, promiſing, in the Word of a Gentleman and a Chriſtian, that he would ſtand by the Parliament;

That

A. D. 1649.

That he had taken the Negative Oath, and the Covenant; yet the laſt Year he engag'd in, and probably contriv'd the Inſurrection wherein the Duke of Bucks, and his Brother and others were drawn in, and he boaſted he ſhould ſhortly be 12000 ſtrong, and maſter the Parliament and reſtore the King.

The Earl pleaded, That his Fact was not Capital but Criminal: That he had Quarter given him when he was taken at St. Neots; and that both Houſes had paſt an Order ſince for his Baniſhment, which excus'd the Aggravations, eſpecially in his laſt Action. He deſir'd Council, but it was deny'd him.

On the 6th of March, Duke Hamilton, the Earl of Holland, the Earl of Norwich, the Lord Capel, and Sir John Owen, were brought to the Bar of the High Court of Juſtice, where Serjeant Bradſhaw, the Preſident, ſate in his Scarlet Robes; and having ask'd them what further they had to ſay, why Sentence ſhould not be pronounc'd againſt them? They all ſpoke to the ſame Effect as formerly; only the Earls of Holland and Norwich extenuated their Offences as well as they could, as being raſh, not much hurtful, &c. Then the Preſident made a Speech of ſome Hours in Length, in Anſwer to the ſeveral Pleas of the Priſoners, and at laſt Sentence was given againſt them all; That their Heads ſhould be ſever'd from their Bodies; yet with Relation to the Mercy of the Parliament.

The next Day the Earl of Warwick and the Counteſs of Holland preſented a Petition for the Life of the Earl of Holland: The Earl of Denbigh ſollicited for Duke Hamilton; and others for the Earl of Norwich and the Lord Capel. After ſome Hours Debate upon theſe Petitions, it was reſolv'd upon the Queſtion, not to proceed any further upon theſe Petitions; but to leave the Priſoners to the Juſtice of the Court that ſentenc'd them.

Several Ladies petition'd that Court for them, but only got the Execution to be put off two Days.

The condemn'd Lords petition'd the Houſe again; and the General wrote a Letter concerning the Articles, much to the ſame Purpoſe as he ſaid before; and after a long Debate, the Queſtion was put of them ſeverally, and voted,

That the Lord Capel ſhould not be repriev'd.

Which Vote paſt the more eaſily on Account of his indecent Behaviour before the Court.

The Earl of Norwich's Reprieve was carry'd by one Vote, which was the Speaker's, they being equally divided, 24 and 24 of each Part. The Speaker ſaid he did it becauſe he had formerly receiv'd ſome Civilities from the Lord Goring.

The Houſe was alſo divided upon the Queſtion, Whether the Earl of Holland ſhould be repriev'd or not; and the Speaker gave his Voice againſt him.

The Reſolution touching Duke Hamilton's Reprieve paſt in the Negative, and for Sir John Owen in the Affirmative, by Means of Commiſſary General Ireton, who obſerving there had been no Application made, nor a Word ſaid in Behalf of Owen, ſpoke for him thus, as the Lord Clarendon confeſſes, "There have been great "Endeavours and Sollicitations us'd to ſave all "thoſe Lords; but there's a Commoner, ano-"ther condemn'd Perſon, for whom no Man has "ſaid a Word, nor has he himſelf ſo much as Pe-"tition'd; therefore I deſire that Sir John Owen "may be preſerv'd by the meer Motive and "Goodneſs of the Houſe;" which was aſſented to. This very generous, human Act came from the ſame Man of whom Warwick, and after him as judicious an Hiſtorian, Echard, ſays that on his Death Bed, and even in the Agony, he cry'd out, Blood, Blood, Blood. A. D. 1649.

The Execution of the condemn'd Lords. Duke Hamilton.

On the 9th of March, Duke Hamilton was brought to the Scaffold, erected before Sir Robert Cotton's Houſe in Palace Yard, Weſtminſter; and after ſome Diſcourſe with Dr. Sibbalds, a Miniſter, who came with him, he turn'd to the People, and ſeeing them ſo great a Multitude, he ſaid, his Voice would not ſerve for them to hear him, and therefore he directed his Speech to thoſe upon the Scaffold.

He confeſs'd his Religion to be according to that of the Kirk of Scotland; and therefore the very impartial Clarendon ſays not one Word of it. That he had ever been loyal to the late King, and wiſh'd well to his Poſterity, and that none more deſir'd the Peace and Happineſs of this and the other Kingdoms than himſelf. That his coming into England with the late Army, was out of no treaſonable ill Intent, but for the Ends contain'd in the Scots Declaration, and what he did was as a Servant to that Parliament and Kingdom: That in that Imployment next to ſettling of Religion, the eſtabliſhing of the King was his greateſt Aim: And he wiſh'd his Blood, in Order to the Kingdom's Settlement, might be the laſt that ſhould be ſpilt.

Having ſaid this, he made a ſhort Prayer, Dr. Sibbalds kneeling with him, and being riſen, he caſt off his Cloak and Doublet, put on a little white Sattin Cap, forgave the Executioner, and gave him ten Pounds. A little after he ſpoke a while in private to his Servants, and again made a ſhort Prayer.

His Countenance was chearful, and all the Time of his being on the Scaffold, there appear'd in him no Fear, Diſorder, Change of Look, or Diſcompoſure. He took his Leave of Dr. Sibbalds, embracing him, and of his Servants, whom he commended, particularly Mr. Lewis his Secretary.

He laid down his Head upon the Block, and after a ſhort Prayer gave the Signal by ſtretching out his Hand; and the Executioner ſtruck off his Head at one Blow, which was wrapp'd in a red Sarcenet Scarfe, and with his Body put into a Coffin and carry'd away.

The Lord Clarendon's Characters have ſo ſurfeited me with every Thing of that Kind, that I ſhould never ſucceed in it if I attempted it; I ſhall therefore proceed in this tragical Part of my Hiſtory.

Earl of Holland.

The Earl of Holland came next upon the Scaffold, accompany'd by Mr. Hodges and Mr. Bolton, two Presbyterian Miniſters, fix of his Servants and other Gentlemen. What follows is Mr. Hodges's own Relation.

"Between the Time of his Sentence and Ex-"ecution, I only lay in the Earl's Bed-chamber "to diſcourſe with him, and to comfort him, "being admitted and deſir'd by him to that "Freedom, when he would not ſee his Lady "nor any of his Children, which, he ſaid, "would add too much to his Sorrow, and diſ-"compoſe his Thoughts, which were now to be "ſet only upon another World: For ſome Time "after his Sentence he was in great Perplexity "and Agonies, ſaying, He had no Aſſurance of "Pardon of his Sins, and of the Love of God to "him: That he was not prepar'd to die: That "Chriſt would be no Advantage to him. I en-"deavour'd to allay theſe Doubts, and to comfort "the Earl with declaring to him the Infiniteneſs of God's Mercies, and his Willingneſs to "pardon all poor Sinners that come to him "through Chriſt: That never any who ſought "the Love of God in Chriſt, with a true Faith in Chriſt, did ever fail to obtain the Aſſurance of it to his diſtreſſed Soul.

" The Earl deſir'd me to pray with him, to " ſeek God for his Mercy, which I did, and " upon this Subject, with as earneſt a ſeeking " the Lord for it, as I could expreſs; and the " Earl himſelf frequently pray'd to the ſame Ef- " fect, and with wonderful Fervency of Expreſ- " ſion; yet he ſtill continu'd in a deſponding " Condition till the Day before his ſuffering, " when immediately after Prayer, he ſaid to " me, rejoicing, God has heard our Prayers, " and his Spirit is come in to comfort me; I " have prevail'd thro' the Strength of Chriſt " over Satan and all my ſpiritual Enemies, and " all Temptations. The Lord has given into " me an Aſſurance of his Love in Chriſt, and I " am now both ready and willing to die.

" I was much joy'd at this, and we went to " Prayer together to bleſs God for this great " Mercy, and to beg the Continuance of this " Frame of Spirit to the laſt, and God heard us " in this alſo.

" The Earl, who had not ſlept ſeveral Nights " before, nor eat his Meat, now ſupp'd and " went to Bed with no more Diſturbance in his " Spirits than in his beſt Health, and ſlept ſo " ſound all Night, and the Morning when he " was to ſuffer, that we were much troubled to " awaken him.

" He went to the Scaffold without being any " whit daunted, and after ſome Diſcourſe to the " Gentlemen, he ſhew'd himſelf to the People, " who were generally mov'd with Sorrow for " the Suffering of ſo gallant a Perſon, whoſe " Mien and Comelineſs could not but excite " Compaſſion.

" He directed his Speech to the Multitude at " the Front of the Scaffold, towards Weſtminſter- " Hall, made a large Profeſſion of his Religion " as a Proteſtant, mention'd his Birth and E- " ducation, excuſed his going to the King from " the Parliament, and Return to the Parlia- " ment, and extenuated his late Inſurrection.

" After he had ended his Speech, he turned " to the other Side of the Scaffold, and kneel'd " down to his private Prayers, after which he " had Conference with Mr. Bolton and me.

" Then he pull'd off his Gown and Doublet, " having on him a white Sattin Waſtcoat, and " put on a white Sattin Cap, and prepar'd " himſelf for the Block, took his Leave and " embrac'd with much Affection Mr. Bolton and " me, his Servants and others, forgave the Ex- " ecutioner, and gave him ten Pounds.

" He then laid himſelf down on the Block, " pray'd a while, and gave the Sign by ſtretch- " ing forth his Arms; upon which the Execu- " tioner ſever'd his Head from his Shoulders at " one Blow, which with his Body was put into a " Coffin and carry'd away.

The Lord Capel.

We ſhall ſee the Difference between Mr. Hodges's holy Conferences with his devout Penitent, and Dr. Morley's with the Lord Capel. There is a Coldneſs in the latter which deadens even our Compaſſion for the Sufferer. The Converſation between them in the Tower, is, as Echard ſays, worthy Remembrance.

Lord Capel. I have choſen you to be my Confeſſor, I have ſtrictly recollected the whole Courſe of my Life, to the beſt of my Remembrance, and am reſolv'd to confeſs all the Miſdoings of it, in order to receive Abſolution, if you think me worthy of it; and then he made his Confeſſion.

Dr. Morley. " I cannot give you Abſolution, " becauſe you have omitted one Sin greater than " all you have confeſs'd.

Lord Capel. (Clapping his Hand on his Breaſt in a Surprize) What Sin is that?

A. D. 1649.

Dr. Morley. " The Blood of the Earl of " Strafford lies upon your Head, of which you " were highly guilty with his other Enemies.

Lord Capel. I beg God's and your Pardon for omitting this great Sin, for which I have often ask'd Forgiveneſs of God, as a Man guilty of innocent Blood; but my Mind was ſo intent upon my private Sins, that I forgot mentioning of this, and I will do any thing you will have me to receive Abſolution from it.

Good God! Are theſe the Sighings of a pious Soul! Theſe the Words of a dying Man to a Divine, who has nothing to ſay to him almoſt in the laſt Agony, but the Death of the Earl of Strafford. There is ſtill more of it.

Dr. Morley. " My Lord, Your private Con- " feſſion of this heinous Sin is not ſufficient for " Abſolution, nor ought I to give it you, unleſs " your Lordſhip will promiſe me to make your " Confeſſion as publick as your Crime.

Lord Capel. I will do it with all my Heart, if you will tell me how.

Dr. Morley. " There is but one Way, and " that is to confeſs it in your laſt Speech at the " Place of Execution; and then your Repentance " will be as publick as your Sin.

Lord Capel. (Embracing him after ſo much Edification) I heartily thank you, Doctor, and I do promiſe you I will do it; and I would not for all the World have dy'd without a publick Confeſſion of this Sin, and making the beſt Satisfaction I can to the Memory of my Lord Strafford, before God and Men, for having my Hands dip'd in his Blood.

Echard ſays, Dr. Morley gave the Lord Capel ſpecial Aſſiſtance in his laſt Extremity, and then he inſtances it in this divine Dialogue. I heartily thank him for giving me an Opportunity to preſerve it in my Hiſtory, that the Reader, by comparing Dr. Morley's Converſation with Mr. Hodges's, may form a juſt Idea of the Religion of the one and the other, and which of them it is that's moſt likely to make Martyrs. The Lord Capel being thus prepar'd for Death, was brought to the Scaffold, much after the manner of a ſtout Roman, according to Whitlocke. " He had no " Miniſter with him, nor ſhew'd any Senſe of " Death approaching, but carried himſelf all the " Time he was on the Scaffold with that Bold- " neſs and Reſolution, as was to be admired. " He wore a ſad-colour'd Suit, his Hat cock'd " up, and his Cloak under one Arm." Are theſe the Emblems of Chriſtian Humility and Charity! " He look'd towards the People at " his firſt coming up, and put off his Hat in " manner of a Salute. He had a little Diſcourſe " with ſome Gentlemen upon the Scaffold, but " had no Miniſter with him, and paſſed up and " down in a careleſs Poſture. He went to the " Front of the Scaffold, and leaning over, made " a Speech to the People, I die a Proteſtant according to the Religion profeſs'd in the 39 Articles, the beſt I know of. I was condemn'd for keeping the Fifth Commandment, written by God's own Finger, which commands to obey Magiſtrates, and I die for obeying my King, the moſt religious of all Princes, and his Son Prince Charles, who is King, and the reſt of the King's Children, Heirs to the Crown. He concluded with a Deſire to the People to pray for him. When he had done his Speech, he call'd the Executioner to him, gave him five Pounds, pray'd him not to ſtrip his Body, but to let his Servants have it, and his Cloaths, for which he order'd them to pay him. He then kneel'd down and made a ſhort Prayer, and his Servants throwing

A. D. 1649. themſelves at his Feet all in Tears, he without any Emotion ſaid, Riſe, you hinder the Executioner; to whom he turn'd and ſaid, Friend, when I ſtretch out my Right Hand, ſtrike immediately. He then put off his Cloak and Doublet with much Confidence, put on a white Cap, took Leave of the Gentlemen on the Scaffold, and prepar'd for the Block, where laying himſelf down with Hands and Eyes lifted up, he pray'd a while, then fitted his Head to it, and on the Signal given, the Executioner ſever'd his Head from his Body at one Blow, both which were coffin'd up, and carry'd away.

Col. Poyer ſhot.

Major General Langhorn, Col. Powell, and Col. Poyer, were order'd to be try'd by a Court Martial, by whom they were condemn'd to caſt Lots for their Lives, and he on whom the fatal Lot fell was to be ſhot to Death, as was Colonel Poyer in Covent-Garden, as alſo one Mr. Munday an Iriſh Rebel.

We have mention'd the Murder of Col. Rainſborough by certain Ruffians who were ſent by Morrice, Governor of Pomfret Caſtle, which he had ſurpriz'd by Treachery, to aſſaſſinate Rainſborough at Doncaſter. The Parliament order'd Lieutenant General Cromwel to inquire into that execrable Act, and give Directions to Major General Lambert, who beſieg'd Pomfret, to take Vengeance on thoſe Aſſaſſins, in whoſe Praiſe the Author of Hiſt. Reb. is laviſh of all the Powers of his Eloquence. Lambert block'd up Pomfret Caſtle ſo cloſe, that thoſe within it had no Hopes of Relief, and offer'd to ſurrender on honourable Terms; but Lambert would have Morrice and the Murderers of Rainsborough deliver'd up to him. Echard tells us a romantick Story of the Eſcape of Morrice and his Ruffians. Whitlocke ſays three only of them eſcap'd. Morrice was re-taken, and try'd by Judge Thorp and Judge Pulleſton at York Aſſizes, for Levying War againſt the Parliament. This Aſſaſſin had not ſo much as a Commiſſion from the King, but urg'd that he had one from the Prince of Wales. The Judges told him the Prince was a Subject as well as himſelf, and if he were preſent, muſt be try'd as he was. Morrice deſir'd his Trial might be by a Council of War, and Col. Bethel, after he was condemn'd, wrote to General Fairfax and his Council of War for a Reprieve; but as he had been guilty of ſo barbarous a Murder, as well as of levying War, 'twas not thought proper to ſpare ſo notorious a Criminal.

Mr. Cawton the Miniſter try'd.

Mr. Thomas Cawton, Miniſter of St. Bartholomew's behind the Royal Exchange, in his Prayer before the Lord Mayor, having pray'd for K. Charles II. as lawful King, the Attorney and Solicitor General, Mr. Steel and Mr. Cook, were order'd to proſecute him for High Treaſon. He was a Presbyterian, and how King Charles II. rewarded the Presbyterians for their Loyalty and Services, we ſhall ſee hereafter. This bold Offence, and many others of the like Nature, oblig'd the Commonwealth, for their own Security, to hearken to the Advice of Mynheer Paw, one of the Dutch Ambaſſadors, and make a Law as was in Holland, To forbid all Miniſters meddling with State-Affairs in the Pulpit. They order'd Mr. Whitlocke to draw up a Declaration to juſtify their Proceedings, and it was publiſh'd in Engliſh, Latin, French, and Dutch; and about the ſame Time, March the 20th, the Acts for aboliſhing Kingly Government and the Houſe of Peers paſs'd in Form.

The Counteſs of Carliſle, as famous for Intrigues of State as thoſe of Amour, having been in the Secret of the laſt Summer's Inſurrections, was examin'd by the Council of State ſeveral Times, and giving them but little Satisfaction, they committed her to the Tower, as they did alſo Lieut. Col. John Lilburn, who had too much encourag'd the Party of the Levellers, and been too buſy with his Tongue and his Pen. The Room he was confin'd in being over againſt that of the Counteſs's Confinement, Sir Henry Mildmay, who had obſerv'd it, made a Motion in the Houſe, that it was dangerous, and they might have unjuſtifiable Correſpondence by Signs, in which he was thought more cautious than wiſe, and the Houſe hearken'd to him accordingly. *A. England's New Chains, a Pamphlet.

A ſeditious Libel, entitul'd England's New Chains, made a great Noiſe at this Time. The Parliament voted, That it was falſe, ſcandalous, mutinous, tending to raiſe a new War; That the Authors and Publiſhers of it were guilty of High Treaſon, and referr'd it to the Council to find them out. This Book is mightily cry'd up by the Author of the Hiſtory of Independency, who has endeavour'd to abuſe Milton in the ſame Treatiſe, where he furniſhes the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Echard with much Matter to ſet off their Heroes. The Reader will not be diſpleas'd to ſee the Manner of Writing in Uſe among the Parliament's Enemies, which has ſince been improv'd by L'Eſtrange, Leſlie, Sacheverel, Swift, Trapp, Hickes, Hill, Oldſworth, &c. The Author is ſpeaking of an Independent Miniſter; He is Chaplain in Ordinary to the Devil and Oliver Cromwel; he keeps the Keys of our Hell and our Grandees Conſciences; he is Confeſſor to Tyburn, and hath a great Power over damn'd Spirits; ſo proſtituted a Villain, that he practiſes Impudence amongſt common Whores, and his Pulpit is more ſhameful than another Man's Pillory, &c. This Stile is happily imitated in the Oxford Addreſs, and other Pieces coin'd in the ſame Mint. P. 179.

The Parliament ſend Miniſters abroad.

The Commonwealth having ſettled their Government at home as well as the Circumſtances they were in would admit, ſent Miniſters abroad to take Care of their Affairs, and be their Agents, in ſeveral Parts of Europe, as Dr. Doriſlaus, a Civilian, Judge Advocate, and one of the Council to the Republick, was appointed their Reſident in Holland, Richard Bradſhaw, Eſq; their Agent at Hamburgh, Mr. Vane was diſpatch'd to Portugal, and Mr. Aſcham to Spain, with the Character of Envoys. The Letter they wrote the King of Portugal runs thus:

Their Letter to the King of Portugal.

Sereniſſimo Principi JOANNI Quarto Luſitaniæ Regi, Senatus Populuſq; Anglicanus Salutem: To the moſt ſerene JOHN the Fourth King of Portugal, the Senate and People of England ſend Greeting.

The Subject of it is to deſire the King of Portugal not to ſhelter the Fugitives, Pirates, and revolted Ships in his Ports and Dominions, nor receive any Ambaſſador from Charles Stuart, ſince the Parliament, in whoſe Hands is the whole Power of the State, has only Right to ſend Ambaſſadors.

To the Archduke Leopold.

They wrote to the Archduke, Governor of the Netherlands:

LEOPOLDO AUSTRIÆ Archduci Provinciarum in Belgio ſub Philippo Rege Præſidi Salutem, Parliamentum Reipub. Angliæ: To LEOPOLD Archduke of Auſtria, Governor of the Belgian Provinces under King Philip, the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England ſend Greeting.

This Letter was to demand the Delivery of one Walſh, who had run away with Mrs. Puckering, a young Lady of a great Fortune, and kept her by Force in Flanders.

A. D. 1649.

They addreſs'd their Letter to the City of Hamburgh thus:

To the City of Hamburgh.

AMPLISSIMO Civitatis Hamburgenſis Senatui, Senatus Populuſq; Anglicanus: To the MAGNIFICENT Senate of the City of Hamburgh, the Senate and People of England ſend Greeting.

They ſay among other Things: "They have "receiv'd Information, that ſince the Arrival of "one Cockran, Ambaſſador, as he gives out, "from Charles, Son of the late King of Eng- "land, the Engliſh Merchants in their City are "terribly diſquieted, their Lives are in Danger, "they are often expoſed to the Fury of Aſſaſſins, "and there's no Juſtice for them: They deſire "that the Faith of former Treaties may be pre- "ſerv'd; that, purſuant thereto, they will pro- "tect the Merchants of England, and ſee that "Juſtice be done them. They require that "Cockran be forbidden the City, and the Ter- "ritory of the Senate, and exhort them not to "prefer the Friendſhip of baniſh'd Tarquins to "that of the People of England.

They had good Reaſon to complain of Ruffians and Aſſaſſins. The ſcatter'd Remains of ſuch Armies as Goring's, Greenvile's, and Montroſe's, muſt fill Europe with them, and the firſt Exploit was the Murder of Dr. Doriſlaus at the Hague, where he arriv'd in good Equipage about the latter End of April, King Charles II. being there in his Exile; and he had not been there many Days before twelve of thoſe fugitive Ruffians came to his Lodgings diſguis'd, and finding him at Supper, ſtabb'd him in ſeveral Places, cut his Throat, and a Cavalier Colonel, one Walter Whitford, Son of a Scots Epiſcopal Clergyman, clove his Head aſunder with a Broad Sword, ſaying, Thus dies one of the King's Judges. The Lord Clarendon complements theſe Aſſaſſins with the Title of a dozen Gentlemen who boaſted of what they had done, and believ'd it an heroick Act: They put up their Swords, walk'd leiſurely away, and went quietly out of the Town, as if no Harm had been done. A. Wood calls it a generous Action, and ſuch are the Heroes of their Hiſtories. Some Falſities there muſt be in every Incident to make it all of a Piece. Inſtead of twelve Men, another Cavalier Writer affirms there were eighteen Scotſmen: Inſtead of being Friends to Montroſe, as Clarendon ſays, that other Hiſtorian aſſures us they were Friends to Hamilton; and inſtead of murdering Doriſlaus to revenge the King's Death, the latter Hiſtorian writes, They expoſtulated with the Doctor concerning the unjuſt Condemnation and Execution of the Duke. A. Wood the Oxonian, who has hardly one Page without a dozen Falſities, informs us, the Parliament, as ſoon as they heard of the Murder of Doriſlaus, reſolv'd to ſacrifice a certain Royaliſt, Sir Lewis Dives, then in their Cuſtody, had he not made a timely Eſcape two Months before thro' a Houſe of Office in Whitehall. The Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Echard would make us believe that the States of Holland and the Dutch were at no Pains to hinder the Ruffians walking off leiſurely, and running away quietly, as if they at the bottom approv'd of ſo generous an Act. The contrary is the Truth. The States were in a terrible Pannick, and immediately order'd Notice to be given King Charles, that his Abode in their Territories was not convenient for them, and that they deſir'd him to remove, and take his Followers with him. They made earneſt Inquiſition after the Murderers, promis'd a thouſand Guilders to him that brought any one of them, and made it Death by Proclamation to harbour them. The Author of Hiſt. Reb. to be as far from Truth as may be, ſays, Whitlocke's earneſt Inquiſition was a ſlow Inquiſition. One Col. Bard, a Baronet, was apprehended by Order of the States, and Montroſe himſelf and the Lord Hopton queſtion'd for the Murder of Doriſlaus. They preſently diſpatch'd Adrian Paw, who had been their Miniſter at the Treaty of Weſtphalia, to England, to ſatisfy the Parliament and Council of the State of their Proceedings upon it, and the former declar'd their Senſe of the Care of the States of Holland to find out the Authors of the horrid Murder of Dr. Doriſlaus, and hop'd the States would be careful of their Agent Mr. Strickland, now there. They further declar'd, That the Lives of thoſe Perſons of the King's Party who were excepted from Pardon, ſhould anſwer for the Life of Dr. Doriſlaus.

Dr. Doriſlaus murder'd.

Having mention'd the Treaty of Weſtphalia, it is fit to take Notice, that what neither King James nor King Charles could effect in behalf of the Queen of Bohemia and her Children, was by that Treaty effected in Part, and the Prince Elector reſtor'd to the Palatinate, but not to the Electorate, nor to thoſe Territories given the Elector of Bavaria, with the Electoral Dignity held by the Palatine of the Rhine, who was made an Elector, and the laſt in Place. On that Score, his Highneſs wrote a Letter to the Parliament, notifying his Return to his own Country, giving them humble Thanks for their Favour, and deſiring the Continuance of his Stipend and the Payment of his Arrears, which was order'd, as alſo a Paſs for himſelf and his Attendants 40 Horſe, but none other to go over with him.

Treaty of Weſtphalia.

Elector Palatine reſtor'd.

On the 23d of March, the Parliament reſolv'd on an Act for an Aſſeſſment of 90000 Pounds a Month to maintain the Army and Fleet. The Commiſſioners for this Act were the Juſtices of Peace in the ſeveral Counties, and the Lord Mayor Andrews, Alderman Wollaſton, Alderman Dethick, and Mr. Francis Allen, were appointed Treaſurers for this Aſſeſſment. The Houſe took into ſerious Conſideration the Relief of Ireland, which, after ſome Heſitation, Lieut. Gen. Cromwel undertook in Perſon, and eight Days after the Houſe voted, That they approve of Lieutenant General Cromwel to be Commander in Chief of all the Forces ſent into Ireland; and to take off any Reflection upon the General, or Diſlike by him, they alſo voted, That the Lord Fairfax be General of all the Forces in England and Ireland.

In the mean Time, a mutinous Spirit was working in the Army, and the Diſaffected, who expreſs'd their ill Humour in Libels, ſuch as Lilburn and Walwyn, Prince and Overton, were ſo ſtrongly abetted, that a Petition was preſented to the Parliament from divers Citizens of London and Weſtminſter, in behalf of thoſe Offenders, then in Priſon.

Libellers encouragʼd.

On the 12th, the Lord General Fairfax, Lieutenant General Cromwel, Bulſtrode Whitlocke, Eſq; John Liſle, Eſq; Sir Henry Vane, jun. Lord Chief Juſtice Rolls, Lord Chief Baron Wild, Alderman Wilſon, and many Members of Parliament, went to the Common Council of London to borrow 120000 Pounds for the Uſe of the Army intended for Ireland, and it was lent according to their Deſire.

The Houſe made an excellent Order, That the Commiſſioners of the Great Seal and the Judges, ſhall receive Complaints againſt any diſaffected Juſtices of the Peace, and upon Proof of the Charges againſt them, ſhall remove them, and put other well affected Perſons into Commiſſion. They alſo agreed on the Form of the new Coin to be thus: On the one Side to be Levellers. The Levellers were privately encourag'd by the Royaliſts, tho' their Principles, if they were real in their Profeſſions, were the very Antipodes of Tyranny and Superſtition. This Faction grew out of that of the Agitators, and were made uſe of by Cromwel to bring about the Death of the King, which he had no ſooner accompliſh'd than he would fain have rid himſelf of the Levellers. But the latter were aware of his Deſign, and being afraid of his Power, they flew out into Rebellion againſt him and his Maſters, provok'd to it eſpecially by the Death of one Lockyer a Trooper, who, with five more Mutineers, was ſentenc'd by the Council of War to be ſhot for Mutiny. The five found Mercy, but the Sentence was executed on Lockyer; and the Multitude, to ſhew that the Fire was not quench'd by it, attended him to his Grave with as much Pomp as a Multitude could think of. They were led by 100 Troopers, five and ſix in a File preceding the Corpſe, before which march'd ſix Trumpetters ſounding a Soldier's Knell; then came Lockyer the Trooper's Horſe cloath'd all over in Mourning, and led by a Footman. The Corpſe was adorn'd with Bundles of Roſemary, one half ſtain'd with Blood, and the Sword of the Deceas'd with them. After theſe march'd ſome Thouſands in Ranks and Files. All had Sea-green and Black Ribbons ty'd in their Hats, and to their Breaſts, and the Women brought up the Rear. At the new Church-yard in Weſtminſter ſome Thouſands more of the better Sort met them, but theſe thought not fit to go thorough with the Proceſſion, and march through the City.

Whitlocke obſerves that this was look'd upon as an Affront to the Parliament and Army, and it was owing chiefly to the Ferment which the Cavaliers, who could do nothing elſe, kept up with great Induſtry in the Minds of the Malecontents, who by their Leaders Lieut. Col. John Lilburn, Mr. William Walwyn, Mr. Thomas Prince, and Mr. Richard Overton, form'd a new Model of Government, and publiſh'd a Draught of it, conſiſting of Thirty Articles, for which, notwithſtanding various Petitions in their Favour, theſe Mutineers were order'd to be proſecuted capitally. The Royaliſts were extremely delighted with theſe Diſturbances, and one of their chief Hiſtorians terms this factious Crew the Honeſt Levellers; and Lilburn, whom Laud caus'd to be ſo bloodily dealt with during his Tyranny, the honeſt Lieutenant Colonel, ſo courteous are they now he is in Danger of being hang'd for them by his Frenzy or Folly. The Levellers about a Fortnight after Lockyer was ſhot broke out into open Rebellion under one William Thompſon, who having been condemn'd to be ſhot, was pardon'd, and now appointed a Rendezvous for all their Party near Banbury in Oxfordſhire, where he publiſh'd his Declaration, inviting People to join with him to eſtabliſh the above-mention'd Form of Government, and to demand Juſtice for the Death of Mr. Arnold, an Agitator formerly ſhot at Ware, and for the Blood of Mr. Robert Lockyer, murthered at London by Martial Law. Into this Party fell all Officers and Soldiers who thought themſelves diſoblig'd by the Parliament or Council of State. There had been ſeveral Regiments order'd for Ireland, and to prevent any Diſguſt, thoſe Regiments were drawn by Lots.

The Troopers of Col. Scrope's Regiment quarter'd in and about Salisbury, declar'd againſt this Service, and having corrupted ſome of Ireton's and other Soldiers, twelve Troops left their Officers, and endeavour'd to join the Mutineers under Thompſon, but were intercepted near Abingdon by the Generals Fairfax and Cromwel, to whom they ſubmitted, and the Generals detach'd Col. Reynolds to purſue Thompſon, who fled at his Approach into the Town of Banbury; but finding he could not defend it, he order'd a Party to make a Stand at a Lane's End while the reſt drew off towards Burford. Col. Reynolds met them at Newbridge, which he made good againſt them while the Generals advanc'd with a Body of the Army. The Mutineers forded the River and got into Burford. General Fairfax came up with them the 14th of May, about Twelve at Night, having ſent a Forlorn under Capt. Okey to aſſiſt Reynolds. Okey met Thompſon's Scouts, drove them into the Town, which the General's Regiment of Horſe and other Forces enter'd. The Mutineers made ſome Reſiſtance by firing out at the Windows; but the General, to prevent their Deſtruction, and Routed, that of the Town, offering them Quarter, they yielded. There were taken in the Place 900 Horſe and Arms, 400 Priſoners, and 12 Colours. The Priſoners were moſt of them Troopers, ſeduc'd into this Mutiny, many of the Multitude ran away at Banbury, and not above 40 that were in Burford eſcap'd, among them was Thompſon, who being join'd by other Deſperadoes, poſſeſs'd himſelf of Northampton, of the Ordnance, Ammunition, Proviſions and Money there. From thence he went to Wellingborough, and was purſu'd by Capt. Butler with a Party of Horſe, who fell into his Quarters, took moſt of his Men, and Thompſon made his Eſcape into a Wood, which Butler beſet, and found him there. He was well mounted, and tho' alone, rode deſperately up to Butler's Party, ſhot a Cornet, wounded another, and retreated to a Buſh, having himſelf receiv'd two Wounds. As Butler's Men approach'd near him, he charg'd again with his Piſtol, receiv'd another Shot, and retreated again. He came up a third Time, crying, I ſcorn to take Quarter, and then a Corporal with a Carabine loaden with ſeven Bullets ſhot him and kill'd. dead, and with him dy'd a wretched Cauſe, in which the Royaliſts had founded all their Hopes. His Brother, one Cornet Deane, and ſome other Ringleaders were try'd by a Council of War, condemn'd, and ſhot to Death.

in that Duty. This Act, and all Acts of the Commonwealth paſs'd in Parliament, were proclaim'd by the Sheriffs and Magiſtrates all over England.

The Generals Fairfax and Cromwel at Oxford.

After the General and Lieutenant General had ſuppreſs'd the Mutineers in Oxfordſhire, they both went to Oxford, attended with ſeveral Officers of the Army; the Univerſity having ſent a Deputation to invite them to that City, Colonel Zanchy being then one of the Proctors, as Fellow of All-Souls College. Having been nobly entertain'd, they were created Doctors of the Civil Law, and the following made Maſters of Art; Sir Hardreſs Waller, Major General Harriſon, Col. Richard Ingoldsby, Col. John Hewſon, Col. John Okey, Major Blackmore, John Ruſhworth, Eſq; Edmund Scrope, Eſq; George Sedaſcue, Eſq; Adjutant General, Col. Edward Groſvenour, Col. William Goffe, Col. Owen Roe, Francis Buller, Eſq; Major Browne, Col. Cobbet, &c.

Whitlocke, a much better Scholar than the Oxonians have to produce againſt him, informs us, divers learned and congratulatory Speeches were made to the Generals by the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Reynolds, afterwards Biſhop of Norwich, the Proctors, and other Heads and Officers of the Univerſity. From Oxford the Lord General went to the Iſle of Wight to view the Forts there, thence to Southampton, Portſmouth, and as he drew near London he had a Rendezvous of the Army. The next Day, May the 31ſt, he arriv'd at London, as did alſo Lieutenant General Cromwel, and both having made Report of their ſuppreſſing the Mutineers, and quieting the Army and Country, they had the ſolemn Thanks of the Houſe, and a Day of Thankſgiving being appointed for it, ſome of the Common-Council of London brought a Meſſage to the Parliament, to invite them to dine that Day with the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council, at Grocers Hall, and to deſire that they might have the Favour to ſolemnize that Day with the Houſe at what Church they pleas'd. The Houſe voted Chriſt-Church ſhould be the Place, and return'd the City their hearty Thanks for their Invitation, as did alſo the General and the Officers of the Army, who were alſo invited. The Council of State took the Ceremonial of this Feaſt into Conſideration, and having made their Report to the Parliament, it was order'd, That when the Speaker with the Houſe came into the City, the Lord-Mayor ſhould deliver up to him the Sword, as he us'd to do to the King, and that at the Feaſt the Speaker ſhould ſit above the Lord-Mayor. On the 7th of June the Speaker, with the Houſe of Commons, the Lord General, with the Officers of the Army, the Lord Preſident, with the Council of State, after having heard two Sermons preach'd by Mr. Goodwin and Dr. Owen, went to Grocers Hall to Dinner. The Speaker ſate firſt, next to him the Lord-Mayor, then the Lord General: Then the Earl of Pembroke call'd to the Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke to ſit down, as the eldeſt Commiſſioner of the Great Seal; Whitlocke excus'd it, deſiring the Earl to ſit down firſt; but he ſpoke aloud, What do you think I will ſit down before you? I have given Place heretofore to Biſhop Williams, to my Lord Coventry, and to my Lord Littleton, and you have the ſame Place they had, and as much Honour belongs to the Place under a Commonwealth as under a King, and you are a Gentleman as well born and bred as any of them. The Earl oblig'd Mr. Whitlocke to take Precedence of him, ſitting down himſelf next to him: Then the Lord Preſident of the Council, and the other Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, then the Earl of Salisbury and the Lord Howard, then Lieutenant General Cromwel, and other Members of Parliament, and of the Council of State. At two Tables on each Side of the Hall ſate other Members, and at a Table in the Middle of the Hall ſate Major General Lambert, and other Officers of the Army. The Judges ſate in a Room over the Parlour, which was very large; the Aldermen and ſome Common Council Men at another Table in the ſame Room. The Muſick was only Drums and Trumpets. The Feaſt was very ſumptuous. No Healths were drunk, nor any Incivility paſt. Beſides the Overplus of the Meats left at Dinner, 400 l. was given to the Poor of London.

Parliament and Generals feaſted by the City.

The next Day ſome Members of the Houſe and of the City were order'd to return the Parliament's hearty Thanks to the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Common Council, for their great Love and Civilities Yeſterday expreſs'd to the Parliament and Army; and a Committee having conſider'd what Mark of Honour and Favour ſhould be beſtow'd upon the City for their real Affection to the Commonwealth, 'twas reported and reſolv'd, That New Park near Richmond, and all the Deer in it, ſhould be given them; and the City preſented the Lord General with a large and weighty Baſon and Ewer of beaten Gold, and Lieutenant General Cromwel with 300 Pounds in Plate and 200 Pieces of Gold; but Echard, after ſuch another Hiſtory Writer, affirms, the City Cooks were forc'd to take an Oath that they would not poiſon the Lord Mayor's Gueſts. I wonder he left out what the ſame Hiſtorian ſaid after, The Saints were too full of the Creature, Anglice, drunk. I have ſometimes made uſe of this Author my ſelf, but it was not out of choice, or for his Excellence, but when I thought his Authority would be preferr'd to Whitlocke or Ruſhworth, as it is by all the Admirers of the Lord Clarendon, and Mr. Echard's Sincerity and Impartiality for this Hiſtorian does certainly as well deſerve to be admir'd as they do.

The Commonwealth being pretty well ſettled at home, they took into Conſideration the State of their Affairs abroad. Prince Rupert had got together almoſt twenty Sail of Ships, with which he made ſome Attempts againſt the Parliament's Friends on the Coaſt of Ireland. Admiral Blake and Admiral Dean, with a Squadron of Men of War, were order'd for that Coaſt to watch his Motions, and Admiral Popham to cruize off Portugal, and hinder his ſheltering in any of the Ports of that Kingdom. Blake and Dean having block'd up Prince Rupert in Kinſale, the latter was order'd to lie with his Squadron off Ireland, between that and England; and Admiral Popham, when he return'd from the Coaſt of Portugal, where he intercepted Part of the Brazil Fleet, which he ſent home to England, had Orders to guard the Coaſt between the Downs and Portſmouth, Sir George Ayſcue lay in Dublin Road. Thus was England ſecur'd againſt any Enemy from without, and had none to fear from within but a reſtleſs Party, who were inſtigating the Scots to raiſe new Troubles, tho' they had paid ſo dearly for the like Enterprizes the laſt Year, and are like to pay as dearly again the next.

Ireland.

The Affairs of Ireland were almoſt at the Extremity when the Parliament proceeded againſt the late King in the manner we have related. The Earl of Inchiquin, diſguſted at ſome Slights which he thought the Lord Liſle, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, had put upon him, and at the Parliament's taking no more Notice of him, which was occaſion'd in a great meaſure by their

A. D. 1649. Diviſions in England, reſolv'd to be reveng'd, and ſacrifice his Country and Religion to his Reſentment; and tho' Col. Temple had oblig'd him againſt his Will to fall upon the Iriſh, whom the Engliſh had taken at a Diſadvantage, and routed them, with the Slaughter of ſome Thouſands, yet he ſoon after declar'd againſt the Parliament, and join'd with the Iriſh Rebels, with whom Ormond, return'd to Ireland from France, join'd again; and they altogether would have utterly deſtroy'd the Engliſh Intereſt in that Kingdom, had not the Diſcontent of one of the moſt inveterate of thoſe Rebels, Owen Roe Oval, their General in Ulſter, hinder'd their accompliſhing their Deſign before the Army arriv'd from England, and put an End to them all by Conqueſt and Chaſtiſement. Not only the Earl of Inchiquin had deſerted the Parliament's Service, the Lord Broghill, who had ſerv'd them very faithfully and ſucceſsfully, had form'd the ſame Deſign; and having procur'd a Paſs, by Means of the Earl of Warwick, under Pretence of going to Aix la Chapelle to drink the Waters, he came privately to London, intending to wait upon the King in France. He was no ſooner arriv'd at London, but there came to him a Gentleman from Oliver, lately made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, to acquaint him that the Lord General Cromwel would pay him a Viſit if he knew when he would be at Leiſure to receive him, which very much ſurpriz'd Broghill, who had never had any Acquaintance with him; wherefore he told the Gentleman he ſuppos'd he was miſtaken in the Perſon to whom he was ſent; which the Meſſenger convincing him that he was not, the Lord Broghill own'd who he was, and ſaid he would not give his Excellency the Trouble, but would wait upon him. The Gentleman had not been long gone before Cromwel came himſelf, and after the firſt Salutations, deſir'd to ſpeak with his Lordſhip in private, when he told him he had a great Reſpect for him, and was therefore come to acquaint him with ſomething that very nearly concern'd him, and to give him Advice upon it. He then let him know that the Council of State had Information of his Deſign in croſſing the Water, which the Lord Broghill had communicated to two or three truſty Friends only, that inſtead of going to the Spaw he intended to go to the King, and take a Commiſſion from him to act againſt the Parliament in Ireland: That the Council had good Proof of what he ſaid, and could produce Copies of his Letters to that Purpoſe, upon which it was reſolv'd to ſend him Priſoner to the Tower, which had been done if himſelf had not prevented it, and obtain'd Time for him to confer with his Lordſhip, to ſee whether he might not be prevail'd with to alter his Purpoſe. The Lord Broghill, ſeeing it would ſignify nothing to evade the Matter, begg'd Cromwel's Pardon, thank'd him for his good Offices, and deſir'd him to adviſe him. Cromwel return'd his Compliment, and ſaid, the Council of State and he were no Strangers to his Actions in Ireland, and the ſubduing of the Rebels being committed to him, he was impower'd by the Council to offer him a General Command if he would ſerve in that War. This Offer was made ſo frankly, and the Neceſſity of that Service ſo well explain'd, that Broghill accepted it, and gave his Word and Honour that he would be faithful to the Parliament. Cromwel was very well pleas'd with having engag'd him in their Intereſt; and the Lord Broghill having receiv'd a Commiſſion to be Maſter of the Ordnance, and to command in Munſter, repair'd to Briſtol, where he embark'd for Ireland, and was no ſooner arriv'd in that Kingdom, than ſeveral Gentlemen who had ſerv'd under him in thoſe Wars, join'd him, with whom and their Followers he form'd a Troop of Horſe, and in a little Time rais'd a Regiment of 1500 Foot, which were in a Readineſs to join Cromwel at his Landing. Till then he was forc'd to ſtand on the Defenſive, and indeed he would not have been able to have made his Levies, if Ormond and Inchiquin, with their Iriſh Rebels, Papiſts and Cavaliers, had not been employ'd in the Siege of Dublin, which they had much ſtreighten'd. Col. Monk had deliver'd up Dundalk to Inchiquin, and Tredah was ſurrender'd to Ormond and the Iriſh Rebels. Monk pretended the Scots had deſerted him, and going over to England, he was queſtion'd for correſponding with O Neal. Ormond's Forces took Rathfarnam near Dublin, and 1500 of them were ſent to fortify Baggatrath. In order to hinder the Engliſh Army from landing at Ringsend, Baggatrath had a Rampart of Earth about it, and the Enemy had wrought upon it a whole Night to augment its Strength. The next Morning Col. Jones, Governor of Dublin, perceiving their Deſign, thought it abſolutely neceſſary to remove them from thence before their Work was finiſh'd. To that End he drew all his Forces, both Horſe and Foot, to the Works that fac'd the Enemy, and leaving a ſufficient Body of Men in the Town to defend it, he ſally'd out, Auguſt the 2d, with about 1200 Horſe and 4000 Foot, who ſoon enter'd the Enemy's new Works, and ſlew moſt of the 1500 Men who were employ'd in it, their Horſe deſerting them at the firſt Charge. Sir William Vaughan, who commanded them, was kill'd. Thoſe that eſcap'd fled to their Main Body, and brought News of their Defeat to Ormond, who was at Cards, and cry'd, I wiſh the Rebels would come, that we may have ſome Sport with them. But the Words were hardly out of his Mouth before the Engliſh were come indeed, and falling into his Camp, upon which he flung down his Cards and got two or three Regiments to engage, but they were ſoon routed, and himſelf, with the Remnants of his Royal Army, as 'twas call'd, fled in great Confuſion to Rathmims. Col. Jones follow'd him cloſely, finding little Oppoſition except from a Party of Inchiquin's Horſe that had formerly ſerv'd the Parliament, who defended a Paſs for ſome Time, and whom having defeated and diſpers'd, he march'd with all Diligence up to the Walls of Rathmims, which the Iriſh Rebels expected he would ſtorm, and threw down their Arms, Ormond not ſtaying there for his coming. The Popiſh and Cavalier Army were 19000, and Col. Jones's not much above 5000; yet they ſlew 4000, took almoſt 3000 Priſoners, beſides 2000 that ſurrender'd in a Body, voluntarily offering to ſerve the Parliament, of whoſe Forces not above twenty were miſſing, but many wounded. This glorious Action would ſcarce be credible, if it was not confirm'd even by the Report of the Royaliſts, and it is a particular Happineſs their Hiſtorians have to paſs off their Generals as Heroes even in the Midſt of the moſt ſhameful Rout and utter Ruin. Ormond's Brother was taken by Col. Reynolds, who threaten'd to piſtol him unleſs he ſhew'd which way his Brother fled. The Colonel purſu'd him, and came ſo near as to take one of his Company. But Ormond himſelf was too nimble for all Purſuit, tho' he hang'd a great Number for flying. The Plunder of the Field was very great, 4000 Pounds in Caſh was found in Rathfarnam. The Papiſts and Royaliſts abandon'd all their little Garriſons near Dublin, and a Week after they rais'd the Siege of Londonderry, which had been gallantly lantly defended by Sir Charles Coote. Thus were the Affairs of Ireland in a very promiſing Condition, when Lieutenant General Cromwel arriv'd there about the 20th of Auguſt, with an Army of 12000 Horſe and Foot, which with the Forces in and about Dublin made 16 or 17000 Men. As his Departure from London was with Princely Pomp, ſo was his Reception at Dublin, where he made a ſmooth Speech to the Officers, Civil and Military, and others who waited to receive him at his Landing. Ormond ſoon after ſent Trumpets to Col. Jones on ſeveral Errands, but Cromwel would give them no Hearing, ſaying, All Addreſſes muſt be made to himſelf, as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. He ſtaid not many Days at Dublin, but took the Field; and Ormond ſhutting up his Men in garriſon'd Towns, Cromwel beſieg'd Drogheda, where were between 3 and 4000 Men under Sir Arthur Aſton, the Popiſh Governor of Reading. The Engliſh, after they had batter'd the Town a while, enter'd at a Breach, and were forc'd out again, but at the ſecond Attack they drove the Papiſts and Cavaliers into the Upper Town, which they enter'd with them, and put all they met in Arms to the Sword. Sir Arthur Aſton the Governor, and ſome of the chief Officers, as Col. Walton a Papiſt, Col. Caſtles, and Col. Symonds, got into the Mill-mount, a ſtrong Fort in the Town, but Cromwel's Men ſtorm'd it, maſter'd it, and ſlew them all. 140 of theſe Deſperadoes got into a Tower, and being ſummon'd, would not yield, but kill'd and wounded ſome of the Proteſtant Soldiers, till ſeeing the Engliſh about to enter, they flung down their Arms. The Officers were knock'd on the Head, the Men decimated, and the reſt ſhip'd for Barbadoes. The Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion here is very merry: Sir Arthur Aſton made no doubt of defending the Place; the Marquis of Ormond made leſs doubt of relieving it; and then comes a Paſſage, the Mirth of which is taken off by the Falſity: He put every Man, Governor and Officers, to the Sword; he put all the Citizens who were Iriſh, Man, Woman and Child, to the Sword; which is ſo ſcandalouſly falſe, that I ought not to take any Notice of his Hiſtory, till ſome of his Adorers and Copiers have given the World Satisfaction in it. Ludlow aſſures us, Cromwel's Command about Quarter related to the Soldiers only, and Whitlocke, after Cromwel himſelf, that a Lieutenant of the Garriſon of Drogheda carry'd the News of its being taken to Ormond, which ſhews they were not all kill'd.

Cromwel in Ireland.

And Wexford.

After this Succeſs the Lord Lieutenant march'd to Wexford, from thence Commiſſioners came to treat; but no Ceſſation of Arms having been agreed upon, Cromwel's Men batter'd the Caſtle, made a Breach, enter'd it, and ſet up their Colours; at Sight of which the Enemy left their Station in all Parts, and the Town was taken without further Oppoſition. Here the Slaughter was not great, and many more of the Iriſh Rebels and Cavaliers periſh'd by crowding into and overſetting Boats in the Harbour than by the Sword. After theſe Succeſſes the Army grew ſickly, but the Parliament took care to ſend Recruits in time, which enabled the Lord Lieutenant to reduce Roſs and Goran, the latter ſurrendering at Diſcretion, and delivering up the Officers, Cromwel order'd them to be ſhot to Death. Kilkenny made ſome ſmall Reſiſtance, but yielded on what Terms the Lord Lieutenant thought fit to give them. Youghall, Cork and Kinſale were deliver'd to the Parliament's Forces by the Contrivance and Diligence of ſome Officers, and well affected Perſons in thoſe Places. The Lord Broghill came to the General at Wexford with 200 Horſe and about 2000 Foot, to which were join'd a Body of the Engliſh Army, and his Lordſhip was order'd to watch the Motions of Inchiquin, while the Lord Lieutenant laid Siege to Clonmel; in his March thither he was met by the Corporation of Feather with a Tender of their Submiſſion, which he accepted, left his ſick Men there, and then ſat down before Clonmel, the Garriſon of which Town, with their Governor Colonel Hugh O Neal, an Iriſh Maſſacrer at their Head, march'd out in the Night, after Commiſſioners, whom they had ſent to treat had ſign'd an Agreement to ſurrender the Town the next Day. Dungarvon and Carrick were next reduc'd, and then the Lord Lieutenant march'd to Waterford, having ſent Orders to the Forces about Dublin, which were in better Health to join his Army. The latter, 1500 Foot and 500 Horſe were attack'd by the Lord Inchiquin between Arclo and Wexford, who had ſome Advantage at the firſt Charge, but Cromwel's Men, though miſerably afflicted with the Flux, rally'd very reſolutely, attack'd and broke a Body of Inchiquin's Horſe, upon which the reſt drew off, and permitted Cromwel's Soldiers to continue their March. Inchiquin's Men had ſerv'd under him, when he was in the Parliament's Service, and General Ludlow reflects upon it thus, By which it eminently appear'd of what Importance it is towards Succeſs to fight in the Cauſe of our Country, for theſe very Men, as long as they were engag'd with us perform'd Wonders againſt the Rebels, and now being engag'd with them were almoſt as eaſily overcome, as they had beaten the Iriſh before. In Clarendon and Echard we are fed with Hopes and Expectations of Miracles to be done by Ormond and Inchiquin, whoſe Atchievements are not worth remembrance, ſince they leagu'd with the Iriſh Maſſacrers. The latter had a mean Opinion of them, and their Performances witneſs what one of their Leaders, the Lord of Glenmaleiro, ſaid at a Conſultation how to deſtroy the Engliſh Army; ſome adviſ'd to draw all their Forces together to give Battle, others to betake themſelves to the Woods and Bogs, and from thence break Cromwel's Forces by Parties, but that Lord aſſur'd them of a Way, which if taken would certainly effect it, and that is, ſaid he, Induce them to make Peace with us, for they are a ſucceſsful Army, and our Men are diſpirited, and not likely to get any Thing by fighting with them, and to weary them out by our Surpriſes and Depredations, is impoſſible, as long as the Way from England is open for their Supplies. But the other Way I propoſe will infallibly ruin them. For did not our Anceſtors by the ſame Means render the Conqueſts of Queen Elizabeth fruitleſs to the Engliſh, and have we not thereby ruined the Earl of Ormond and Inchiquin already, who having been always ſucceſsful when againſt us, have been famous for nothing ſince their Conjunction with us, but the Loſſes and Repulſes which they have ſuſtain'd. Yet the Earl of Clarendon leads this ſame Ormond through his Hiſtory, driving his Enemies every where before him, and makes his very Name to be as terrible to the Roundheads as Cromwel's was to the Iriſh Rebels, and their Confederates the Royaliſts.

The Iriſh have a mean Opinion of Ormond.

While Cromwel was preparing for the Siege of Waterford, he received a Letter from the Parliament of England, requiring his Attendance there, to concert with him the Management of their intended War with the Scots, who had invited King Charles the Second to take Poſſeſſion of that Kingdom, which was to help him to recover

England; and how they help'd him, and how they paid for it, will be ſeen in the following Pages. But we muſt firſt inquire into the Fortune of Prince Rupert, who was in Ireland with a Squadron of Ships to aſſiſt Ormond and the Iriſh Rebels as far as he himſelf had Aſſiſtance.

Prince Rupert.

The Winter approaching, General Blake was oblig'd to enter into Harbour, by which Means Prince Rupert with the Ships then in Iriſh Ports, had an Opportunity to eſcape and ſail to Lisbon, where they were relieved and protected. General Popham follow'd him, and was order'd to declare War with that King, if he did not forbid the Engliſh revolted Ships his Ports, which he refuſing to do, the Parliament order'd their Admirals to take all Portugal Ships that came in their Way. The Engliſh Admiral kept Prince Rupert in the River of Lisbon as long as his Proviſions laſted, but being obliged to remove for Supplies, the Prince made his Eſcape, and ſail'd to Malaga, but his Fleet were ſeparated in a Storm. The Parliament's Ships obſerv'd and purſu'd the Prince very narrowly. The latter loſt all his Ships but two, which his Purſuers looking upon as inconſiderable, and not worth their Time and Pains to hunt after them, return'd and left him Sea-Room to come with them into France.

King Charles II.

It is Time to take ſome Notice of the Proceedings of the young King Charles II. who was at the Hague when his Father was beheaded, and in a very poor Condition, inſomuch that his Credit would not paſs for 200 Pounds, as appears by the following Note of his Hand to Mr. L'Empereur, a Banker at the Hague, which I tranſcrib'd from the Original.

The Haye, 4th Dec. 1648.

Charles P.

REceived of Mr. Emperor for my Serviſe the Som of two hundred Poundes, which I oblige my ſelf to ſee repay'd within three Months after the Date hearof. And I aſſure you it is a Kindneſſe I am very ſenſible of, and in return of it I ſhall be ready to appear,

Your affectionate,

C. P.

Mr. L'Empereur refus'd to lend this Money, though the Duke of York did ſome Time after offer to be bound for it, as by this Letter. I give the original Spelling, to ſhew what Scribes their Royal Highneſſes, or their Secretaries were,

Mr. Emperore,

MY Brother hath deſired you to lend 200 Pounds, and it is my Deſire alſo that you would lend it him, which if you, or any of your Friends do I ſhall take it as a great Kindneſſe, and I promiſe to ſee it payed in 6 Monthes. I reſt,

Your Friend,

Yorke.

But leſt both theſe Letters and Securities ſhould not ſucceed, the Duke of York writes to Mr. ——— a Servant of his, to try what he could do on his own Credit.

IUſed all my Power to procure two Hundered Poundes, but I cannot yet compaſs it, elſs truly you ſhould have had it payed you. I have ſent a Blank with my Hand to it, pray trey if any Body will be ſo much my Friend as to lend it, and aſſure them, upon the Word of a Prince, I will moſt faithfully repay it. Methinkes you ſhould find ſome Body ſo kind to me as to truſt me for ſuch a Sum as two Hundered Pounds. I am ſure I have never broke my Word with any Body yet, nor never will, and whoever doth me this Kindneſſe I ſhall always remember as my Friend; and if ever it lieth in my Power he ſhall find how kindly I take it. I am always,

Your affectionate,

Yorke.

A. D. 1649.

Neither of theſe Letters had any Succeſs with L'Empereur, but the Gentleman to whom they were addreſs'd joining his own Security with theirs, in about 8 Month's Time got another Banker, one Boyet, to advance the Money. One may eaſily conceive to what Want and Miſery theſe two unhappy Princes were reduc'd, by the numerous Crowd of Fugitives who hung upon them for Bread, and the ſmall Supplies the ruin'd Cavaliers could furniſh them with. The Gentleman to whom theſe Letters were addreſs'd, was ſent to Venice to try what the Senate would do for the late King in his Life-time, but he had cold Entertainment there. The Lord Crofts and Sir John Denham had the Character of Ambaſſadors to the King of Poland, and they borrow'd of the Engliſh Merchants in his Dominions 10000 Pounds, which had but ſmall neat Produce after the Charge of the Embaſſy was deducted. The Czar of Muſcovy ſent no Money, but to oblige King Charles the Second he drove all the Engliſh Traders out of his Country. And though Whitlocke the Queen very much magnify'd the Aſſiſtance King Charles might expect from France, yet ſhe her ſelf found ſo little when ſhe retir'd thither for Subſiſtence, that ſhe was allow'd but 12000 Crowns a Year, and 6 Months after the King her Husband's Death that Penſion was reduc'd to 7000 Crowns a Year, and ſo far was ſhe from being in any Condition to ſupport her Sons, that ſhe could not maintain her ſelf and her Daughter the Princeſs Henrietta Maria in the Plight of a rich Citizen's Wife. Cardinal Retz ſpeaks of it thus in his Memoirs. " A few Days before the De Retz, " King left Paris I viſited the Queen of Eng- p. 142. " land, whom I found in the Apartment of her " Daughter, ſince Madam D'Orleans, You ſee " Sir, ſaid the Queen, I come to keep Henrietta " Company. The poor Child has lain in Bed " all Day for want of a Fire. The Truth is, " Cardinal Mazarine having ſtopp'd the Queen's " Penſion 6 Months, Tradeſmen were unwilling " to give her Credit, and there was not a Chip " of Wood in the Houſe. You may be ſure I " took Care that a Princeſs of Great Britain " ſhould not be confin'd to her Bed next Day " for want of a Faggot. And a few Days after " I exaggerated the Scandal of this Neglect, " and the Parliament ſent the Queen a Preſent " of 40000 Livres. Poſterity will hardly believe, that the Queen of England's Daughter, " and the Grand-daughter to Henry the Great, " wanted a Faggot to get out of Bed in the " Month of January in the Louvre, and at the " Court of France." De Retz adds, Her Condition made little Impreſſion on the Minds of the People at that Time. For though the Earl of Clarendon would fain have you believe that the King and his Followers were received by Foreigners as if they had not been Exiles, but were travelling for their Glory or Pleaſure, yet it is moſt certain, they were no where Welcome, and where-ever they were ſuffer'd 'twas out of Decency more than Choice, unleſs any foreign Power took Occaſion to quarrel with England, and then the Exiles were careſs'd, and flatter'd with golden Hopes, till a Peace was made again, which never fail'd to baniſh them out of the Territories they had ſhelter'd in.

The

A. D. 1649.

The Earl of Clarendon gives us a very ſplendid and wordy Account of his and the Lord Cottington's Embaſſy to the Court of Spain, from whence they brought not a Penny of Money for their Maſter, and where they often wanted a Penny for themſelves. When theſe Lords Ambaſſadors arriv'd in Spain, they inform'd the Catholick King and his Miniſters, That the Parliament of England had been in Arms againſt their Maſter's Father, had prevail'd againſt him, and caus'd him to be put to Death, which was ſtale News to them; their Miniſter in England, Don Cardenas, a Grandee of Spain, having been one of the firſt who congratulated the Commonwealth, who accepted not of his Compliment at firſt, on Account of ſome Failure in the Addreſs, which the Don ſoon mended, and the Earl of Clarendon knew this. He knew that the Spaniards courted the Friendſhip of the Parliament more than that of any Monarch, Prince or State in the World, yet his Brother Cottington and he were at the Pains to croſs the Country from Bruſſels to Madrid to tell the King of Spain, That their Maſter, Son and Heir to the late King, was kept out of his Kingdom by the aforeſaid Parliament, which indeed was very true, but ſo well known that it was hardly worth telling; and that he deſir'd the King of Spain's neighbourly Aſſiſtance to eſtabliſh him into his Rights and Dignities: A hopeful Errand theſe Lord Ambaſſadors, for ſo Sir Edward Hyde always calls himſelf and his Brother Cottington, went upon, and they had as hopeful an Anſwer. The King of Spain was ſorry for his Father's ill Succeſs, wiſhing he had been more Proſperous: That he condol'd with him for his Father's Death, and was much affected with Sorrow at the Manner of it: That concerning the Difference between him and the Parliament, and the Rights on the one or the other Side, they being Matters out of his Territories and Juriſdictions, he could not take Congnizance of them, nor ſhould he meddle therein: Such was the Succeſs of the Lord Ambaſſador Hyde's Magnificent Embaſſy, the Pomps and Vanities of which, whoever has a Mind to ſee, will find abundant Satisfaction in his Detail of the Embaſſy in near 100 Pages of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion; only Sir Edward Hyde had the Misfortune to drop his Brother Ambaſſador, who ſtaid behind him in Spain, and openly profeſs'd the Popiſh Religion, which his Places would not let him do in England.

The King's Ambaſſadors in Spain.

Whitlocke P. 414.

An Accident happen'd while theſe Ambaſſadors were in Spain, which might have prov'd fatal to them, had the Friendſhip between England and Spain been better fix'd, and that was the before mention'd Murder of Mr. Aſcham the Engliſh Miniſter at Madrid, who arriv'd there with Credentials from the Parliament, after which no Body could think the two other Ambaſſadors would have any Notice taken of them. One of the Aſſaſſins who murder'd the Envoy Mr. Aſcham and his Interpreter Ripa, a Spaniſh Prieſt, was Progers, a Servant of the Lord Ambaſſador Hyde's, whoſe Account of the Murder repreſents it as a gallant Action, which a little Diſcretion would have hinder'd, for it was neither diſcreet nor decent to talk libellouſly of an Aſſaſſination, which rid him of a Rival he was in no Capacity to cope with in Show, Expence or Intereſt. Twice does the well bred Hiſtorian call Mr. Aſcham, this Fellow, out of burning Envy, at the Magnificence of his Appearance, and the Largeneſs of his Appointments, a French Author ſays, On aſſignat a Aſcham deplus gages qu' aux autres afin qu' il put faire un depenſe qui repondit au faſte de la Cour d' Eſpagne, le Miniſtre fit a Madrid une des entres les plus ſuperbes qu' on eut jamais veu faire ades Ambaſſadeurs de tetes Couronnees. "He had a "greater Salary than ordinary, that his Ex- "pence might be anſwerable to the Splendor "of the Court of Spain. He made one of the "moſt pompous Entries into Madrid that Am- "baſſadors of crown'd Heads had ever been "ſeen to make." The King of Spain ſent an Agent expreſs to give an Account to the Parliament of England of the great Induſtry of his Miniſters to diſcover the Murderers, whom the Earl of Clarendon ſtiles the poor Gentlemen. The Council of State was for reſenting the Murder, as became the Dignity of ſo potent a Republick, and for making Repreſentations accordingly to the Parliament; but Oliver hinder'd it, ſaying, All in good Time; and the Commonwealth had not yet determin'd which Scale to put their Weight into, that of France or Spain: However he ſpoke to the Spaniſh Ambaſſador Cardenas, in a Tone that gave him Reaſon to fear the Conſequences, if Satisfaction was not given the Parliament, who wrote to the Catholick King; thus,

The Parliament of the Commonwealth of England to the moſt ſerene and moſt potent Prince, Philip IV. King of Spain.

"HAving to our great Grief, been inform'd "of the Murder of our Miniſter, Mr. "Aſcham, in your capital City, by an infa- "mous Parricide, we earneſtly entreat your "Majeſty to puniſh thoſe Aſſaſſins as they de- "ſerve, &c.

They all made their Eſcape but one, and he was hang'd, to the great Mortification of the Lord Ambaſſadors, Hyde and Cottington.

The King was at the Hague, when his Ambaſſadors ſet out for Spain; but the Aſſaſſination of Doriſlaus made that Place uneaſy to him; ſo he remov'd to Breda, leaving his Train to come after him; thence he went to Antwerp; thence to Bruſſels; and thence to St. Germains in France, where his Mother reſided, and where there was ſome Difference among his Followers, concerning Col. Windham, Governor of Bridgwater, when Fairfax took it, whom the King had a great Mind to make Secretary, for which, as little Buſineſs as there was for one, Sir Edward Hyde aſſures us he was not at all fit, and it is one of the trueſt Characters in the Hiſtory. From St. Germains, the King went to Jerſey, from whence he intended to go to Ireland, but was prevented by the Rapidity of Cromwel's Conqueſts there: To Jerſey came Commiſſioners from the Parliament of Scotland to invite him to that Kingdom, and how that Affair ſucceeded will be told in the next Year's Tranſactions: In the mean Time he was proclaim'd King in Jerſey, and about 300 Royaliſts came with, and repair'd to him there, but brought ſmall Effects with them; and one may ſee how unmercifully the baniſh'd Cavaliers plunder'd this unfortunate Prince; for Whitlocke informs us Mazarine ſent him 100000 Crowns, when he was going to Jerſey; and Echard ſays, he had but 300 Pounds when he landed on that Iſland.

The King.

I have before me a Letter written by the Duke of York, to the Envoy at Venice, who was alſo commiſſion'd to go to Savoy, and ſeveral Princes of Italy, but had no better Succeſs than what we read in it.

I Have receiv'd both your Letters, and am very glad you have done ſo well in

Yours, &c.

JAMES.

Prince Rupert had it ſeems got ſome more Ships, and being doubtful whether the Portugueſe would admit him into their Harbours, which the Spaniards had refus'd, the King was deſirous to ſecure a Retreat for them on the Coaſt of Italy.

Council of the Army. Beſides, the Council of State, whoſe Powers we have already mention'd, there was a Council of the Army, of whom we ſhall have too much Occaſion to ſpeak in the Sequel of this Hiſtory. They were now a little too aſſuming, but as yet they kept within Bounds; though they preſented a Petition to the Parliament, which was ſign'd by the Lord General Fairfax, and the Council of Officers, That all Laws which reſtrain'd Liberty of Conſcience ſhould be remov'd, eſpecially thoſe that enjoyn'd Popery, Prelacy, and the Common Prayer Book: They alſo deſir'd new Laws againſt Profaneneſs, Drunkenneſs, Swearing, Uncleanneſs; That the Courſe of the Law may be made more eaſy and leſs expenſive, &c. Col. Goffe, and Col. Pride, who preſented this Petition, were call'd into the Houſe, and had their Thanks for it. Cromwel alſo wrote to them for Liberty of Conſcience to all but Papiſts and Prelatiſts, which was intended in Favour of Independents and Baptiſts, who had the greateſt Intereſt in the Soldiery; but the Government, if the Army had not interpos'd, inclin'd rather to Presbyterian Diſcipline.

Sir Kenelm Digby. Sir Kenelm Digby, and Mr. Walter Montagu lurking about London, the Parliament order'd them to depart the Commonwealth within 20 Days upon Pain of Death and Confiſcation of their Eſtates; and if any one harbour'd either of them afterwards, his Eſtate was to be ſequeſtred. Sir John Winter, another buſy Papiſt, having ſtaid beyond the Time formerly granted him, the Council of State were directed to take Care for the apprehending of him; upon which he ſurrender'd himſelf, diſclaim'd the Pope, and all foreign Power, and put himſelf upon the Mercy of the Parliament.

Endeavours were us'd to bring over the reſtleſs Party of Levellers, who though humbled were not ſuppreſs'd; and to pleaſe them, Walwyn, Prince, and Overton, who had been cloſely confin'd, had the Liberty of the Tower given them. Some of the Grandees had alſo a Meeting with ſome of the principal Levellers, to confer about a good Underſtanding and Agreement between all Intereſts. For the Cavaliers continu'd their Intrigues to raiſe Diſturbances under the Name of that Party; intercepted Letters addreſs'd to the Lord Cottington, adviſ'd the King to comply with the Levellers; and that the beſt Service his Friends could do him, was to ſet them on againſt the Parliament; accordingly ſome Soldiers of that Faction ſeiz'd their Officers at Oxford, fortify'd New College, from whence thoſe Officers made their Eſcape to Col. Ingoldsby the Governor; who going out into the Town with a few Officers only, and commanding the mutinous Soldiers to march, paſs'd on to New College, the Gates of which were open'd to him, and the Chief of the Mutineers were apprehended; the Soldiers differing among themſelves, and as many being for yielding as for fighting: The Mutiny had no other ill Effects than the Death of one Centinel, ſhot by a Levelling Trooper, and the Puniſhment of the Mutineers, who had now declar'd openly that Prince Charles ſhould be brought in; and it is ſtrange what a Spirit there was in ſome Men who had been embark'd in that Cauſe: For Whitlocke tells, one Captain Reynolds, a Cavalier, being together with 17 more Robbers, Burglarers and Murderers hang'd at Tyburn, as he was going to be turn'd off the Ladder with the Rope about his Neck, cry'd out twice, God bleſs the King, & Vive le Roy. The Levellers were ſo numerous in the City, that Lieutenant Colonel Lilburne was choſen a Common Council Man, as was alſo Colonel Pride; but the Houſe vacated the Election of Lilburne, as againſt the diſabling Act, upon which Lilburne took the Engagement as that Act directed, but with a Declaration of his own Senſe upon it. Mr. Chetwyn, who procur'd his Election to be a Common Council-Man, was upon ſome Complaint made againſt him, impriſon'd, and afterwards by Order of Parliament committed to Warwick Caſtle, and diſcharg'd from being a Freeman of London, by a particular Act of Parliament. Some Votes paſs'd againſt other Citizens upon the ſame Buſineſs. It is no hard Matter to trace the Practices of the Diſaffected in our Times from the Example of the Royaliſts in the Time of the Republick. They both uſe the ſame Artifices to alienate the Peoples Minds from the Government; Complaints of Taxes, of Standing Forces, of Sectaries, of cruel Proſecutions, and Injuſtice to the right Heir, who has in Store for them the Bleſſings of the golden Age; but when the People after various Changes and Revolutions, made Experiment of that Age of Gold, it was juſt ſuch another Preſent as Jupiter ſent to Epimetheus by the Lady Pandora.

A. D. 1649.

A. D. 1650. We left the young King at Jerſey, flatter'd with Hopes of making his Way to England through Scotland, where the bigotted Kirkmen were ſo out of Humour with the new Commonwealth of England, for the Scorn they put upon their Covenant, that they then preferr'd Subjection to the Son of a King whom they had dethron'd, to the Friendſhip of a State who would not ſubject their Conſciences and Intereſts to the Biggotry and Enthuſiam of Scots Eccleſiaſticks. There were three Parties in that Kingdom, who all ſeem'd to he reconcil'd in the Eſtabliſhing King Charles the Second on the Throne of Scotland.

King.

Parties in Scotland.

One Party was that of Argyle, conſiſting of the moſt zealous of the Kirk Aſſembly who abhorr'd Popery, Prelacy, and Independency, and had no Objection to the Commonwealth of England; but as they were afraid of its Power and its Favour to the Independents.

The other Party was that of Hamilton, who hated Popery and Prelacy, but had rather be Prelatiſts than Independents, and as Presbyterians were fond of Monarchical Government.

The third Party was that of Montroſe, and conſiſted of the rank Papiſts and ridgid Epiſcopalians, who matter'd not how Abſolute and Arbitrary the King was over his Kingdom, if they might be Arbitrary and Abſolute under him, and who were eager to venture their deſperate Lives and little Fortunes in the King's Cauſe, only in hopes of being Maſters of the Lives and Fortunes of others.

It was plain Argyle and Montroſe's Parties could come no nearer one another than the two Poles; and that Hamilton's and Argyle's could only be reconcil'd while the Affair of the King's Eſtabliſhment was tranſacting in the Manner Argyle's Party would have it.

Hamilton's and Montroſe's Parties were not much nearer one another; for the Papiſts in

A. D. 1650.

Montroſe's Party could never come to a hearty Agreement with the Presbyterians in Hamilton's; and 'twas obvious they muſt fall to Pieces when they were at Leiſure to think of their ſeparate Intereſts, which were now precariouſly jumbled together; both of them in Appearance ſubmitting to Argyle's Party as having the Kirk on their Side, though they both heartily hated them.

After this fair, though general Repreſentation of the State of Scotland, how vain, how viſionary will all the Lord Clarendon's Refinements of the King's Council appear to be, when nothing can be plainer, than that he had no Place to go to with his Train but Scotland, and that he muſt go thither on what Terms the Scots of Argyle's Party pleaſe to ſend him, which no doubt will be drawn up with little Regard to his Majeſty or Honour. Thoſe of his Counſellors who advis'd him to adhere ſteadily to his Father's Maxims, could not tell him where to get Money for his and their Subſiſtance, but being Delinquents, and liable to publick Juſtice at home, they valu'd not what their Maſter ſuffer'd abroad, if their Perſons were by that Means kept any how out of Danger. The Scots having caus'd their King to be proclaim'd, they ſent Sir George Windram, Laird of Libberton, though not very fond of the Errand, to him in Jerſey with their Propoſitions, Scots Propoſitions.

1. To ſign and ratify the Covenant. 2. To paſs an Act diſclaiming Duke Hamilton's Enterprize in England. 3. To take away the King's negative Voice in Parliament. 4. To forbid Montroſe's levying any Forces. 5. To put away all Papiſts, and appoint Commiſſioners to treat with Commiſſioners from Scotland about a Settlement of that Kingdom. Which the King conſented to, and appointed the Hague for the Place of Treaty, in which 'tis ſuppos'd the Counſel he had from his Mother prevail'd more than that of his Counſellors. Windram return'd to Edinburgh with this Anſwer, and Sir William Fleming accompany'd him, to reſide there as the King's Agent, who was inſtructed to demand on his Maſter's Part, that all ſhould be exempted from the Benefit of their Agreement, as ſhould be found to have had a Hand in the Death of his Father, without mentioning whom, which rais'd a Jealouſy that it might reach to all who concerted to the giving up the King at Newcaſtle, and for that Reaſon it was not approv'd of. The King would have had the Marquis of Argyle to come and treat with him in Perſon, but the Kirk would not truſt that Lord in the Company that was about him. However, the Scots ſupply'd their King with Money to carry him from Jerſey to Holland, where ſoon after the Commiſſioners from Scotland arriv'd, all Friends to the Lord Argyle.

Their Commiſſioners to treat with the King.

For the States,

The Earl of Caſſels, the Earl of Lothian, the Lord Burley, Sir George Windram, Sir John Smith, Mr. Jefferies.

For the Kirk.

Mr. Broady, Mr. Leviſton, Mr. Wood.

The King goes to Scotland.

The Treaty, as Biſhop Burnet obſerves, was quickly concluded. The King was in no Condition to ſtruggle, but yielded to all their Demands, of taking the Covenant himſelf, and ſuffering others to take it. "All excommunicated Perſons were to be forbidden his Court; Presbytery, the Directory of Worſhip, and the Aſſembly's Confeſſion of Faith and Catechiſm, to be by Law eſtabliſh'd and us'd in his own Family, &c." Theſe Conditions being ſolemnly ſign'd, the King and his Train embark'd for Scotland on board ſome Ships furniſh'd him by the Prince of Orange, who not being in a Condition to do it, without at leaſt the Privity of the States, the latter were next Year brought to a Reckoning for it.

A. D. 1650.

In the mean Time the Marquis of Montroſe had pick'd up between 2 and 3000 Men in Denmark and Holſtein, with Intention to prepare the Way for the King's ſafe Reception in Scotland. Part of thoſe Troops landed firſt in Orkney, and the reſt at Cathneſs. With him came the Lord Frendrick, Sir John Hurrey, a Deſerter from the Parliament to the King, Col. Johnſon, Col. Gray, Sir Francis Hay, Col. James Hay, and Mr. Drummond. When all Montroſe's Forces were join'd they made a Body of 2 or 3000 Men, againſt whom the States order'd David Leſley to march, but before he could come up Lieutenant Col. Straughan fell upon Montroſe's Danes, Holſteiners, and Highlanders, and entirely defeated them, after a very warm Engagement ſlew 300 of them, and took 500 Priſoners; among whom were Hurrey, Frendrick, Napier, and other Perſons of Note. Montroſe threw himſelf upon the Lord Aſton, but he would not protect him; on the contrary, he ſent him under a ſtrong Guard to David Leſley, who ſent him to the Parliament at Edinburgh, where he was condemn'd to be hang'd on a Gibbet 30 Foot high, to be drawn and quarter'd, which Sentence was executed upon him the 21ſt of May; Sir John Hurrey, Col. Spotwood, Sir Francis Hay, and other of his Accomplices, were alſo hang'd, the Lord Frenderick ſtarv'd himſelf to Death, and the Earl of Kinnoul was ſtarv'd.

Montroſe's raſh Enterprize.

Montroſe hang'd.

On the 16th of June the King landed in Scotland, but ſo privately, that it was not known till the 24th. The Beginning of his Reign, if it may be call'd a Reign, was very promiſing, he not only took the Solemn League and Covenant three Times, but ſign'd this Declaration; He thank'd God for perſwading him of the Juſtice of the Covenant which he had taken and ſubſcrib'd, and reſolv'd to maintain. He deſir'd to be deeply humbled for his Father's bloody Actions and his Mother's Idolatry. He acknowledg'd all his own Sins, and the Sins of his Father's Houſe; and would look upon them as Enemies who oppos'd the Covenant, which he took without any ſiniſter End; and abhorr'd all Popery, Superſtition, Idolatry and Prelacy, declaring his Sorrow for his ſinfulneſs in making Peace with the Iriſh REBELS. This, and a great deal more did the King ſet his Hand to, and the Archdeacon repeats it gravely, as if there had been nothing at all in it, though he was ſolemnly ſworn to every Word of the Covenant, and not a Word of it was kept by him. Such plain Dealing and Sincerity cannot but recommend this Prince to two ſuch Hiſtorians as the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion and Echard. Argyle behav'd towards the King with great Reſpect, and ſo did all his Party in Appearance, but they govern'd all without his Participation. The Chief of them were, the Marquis of Argyle, the Earl of Caſſels, the Earl of Buccleugh, the Earl of Weymis, Sir Archibald Johnſton, and Sir John Cheeſley. Duke Hamilton, the Earl of Calendar, and the Earl of Lauderdale, were not ſuffer'd to come to Court, nor hardly any Engliſh Man who attended the King from Holland, except the Duke of Buckingham. An Army of 16000 Foot and 6000 Horſe was rais'd to invade England, where they flatter'd themſelves they ſhould find the whole Nation ready to receive their King and them with open Arms, and it was given out in Scotland, that Cromwel would deſtroy the Kingdom with Fire and Sword, to incenſe the Scots againſt

Falſe News was one of the main Supports of the Cavalier Cauſe when it was in conteſt, as falſe Hiſtory has been ſince the Diſpute was over. I have ſeen a Letter from the Duke of York to a Servant of his dated in Jerſey the $\frac{18}{28}$ of Auguſt, a Fortnight before the Scots were routed at Dunbar, wherein he ſays,

The King is in Scotland in a good Condition, theire being a great Army upon their Borders to meet with Cromwel, who is now very near them. We expect every Day to hear ſome good Newſe from thence, and theire is ſome good Newſe come hither by ſeveral Ways, that Cromwel hath received ſome conſiderable Loſs. To Morrow I go hence for Holland,

Your very affectionate Friend,

Whitlocke. As ſoon as the Parliament of England had received certain Intelligence of the Scots Agreement with the King, and of their raiſing Forces to augment their Army, and ſupport that Agreement, a Committee was appointed to confer with the Lord General Fairfax on that Matter, and repreſent to his Excellency how requiſite it would be to ſend an Army into Scotland to divert the War from England. But they found his Lordſhip averſe to it, influenced, as was ſuppos'd, by his Lady, a rigid Presbyterian, and more a Friend to the Scots than they wiſh'd, wherefore they thought this a fit Time to recal the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, which was done by a Letter from the Speaker in January.

On the 12th of February the Houſe nam'd theſe Perſons to be of the Council of State for the Year following, Council of State. Earl of Denbigh, Lord Chief Juſtice St. John, Preſident Bradſhaw, Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke, Lord Chief Juſtice Rolles, Lord Chief Baron Wylde, Lord General Fairfax, Lord Commiſſioner Liſle, Lieutenant General Cromwel, Major General Skippon, Lord Grey of Groby, Earl of Salisbury, Lieutenant General Ludlow, Henry Marten, Eſq; Col. Purefoy, Col. Hutchinſon, Sir William Maſham, Sir James Harrington, Sir Arthur Haſlerigge, Sir Gilbert Pickering, Sir Henry Vane, jun. Sir William Armyne, Sir Henry Mildmay, Sir William Conſtable, Alexander Popham, Eſq; Robert Wallop, Eſq; William Heveningham, Eſq; Alderman Pennington, Sheriff Wilſon, Cornelius Holland, Eſq; Thomas Scot, Eſq; Luke Robinſon, Eſq; John Jones, Eſq; Mr. Wanton.

Prince Rupert. We have mention'd Prince Rupert's having got a Squadron of Ships to Sea again, and we find him again at Lisbon in April, purſu'd thither by General Blake, who ſent to the King of Portugal for leave to fall upon him, and coming near with his Ships the Governor of the Caſtle General Blake. fir'd at him. Blake requir'd to know the Reaſon, and the Governor ſaid, He had no Order from the King to let him paſs. However, the King ſent one of the greateſt Lords of his Court to congratulate the Engliſh Admiral's Arrival on that Coaſt, and to deſire him not to come into the River unleſs the Weather prov'd bad, and he cou'd not ride where he was, his Portugueze Majeſty being afraid Prince Rupert and he might fight in his Harbour. The Weather beginning to grow foul Blake put into the Bay of Wiers, in the River of Lisbon, two Miles from Prince Rupert, whoſe Men came daily over to him, and the Swallow, one of his Ships, was running away, but the Boatſwain, who had plotted the bringing her off, was diſcover'd, and the Plot prevented. Blake took five of the Braſil Fleet, and ſent the King of Portugal Word, that if he did not command Prince Rupert from his River he would endeavour to ſeize all the reſt of that Fleet, he alſo deſir'd Juſtice for the Damages the Engliſh Merchants had ſuffer'd by the Prince's being ſhelter'd in his Harbour. The Parliament in their Letter to the King of Portugal deſires the King to arm againſt Rupert, by Sea and Land, to treat him and thoſe Wretches with him not as Enemies, but as Pyrates, not as Merchants, but as the Peſts of Commerce, and to puniſh them as Thieves and Rebels. This is the Fleet of which the Earl of Clarendon ſpeaks as the Terror of Spain.

A. D. 1650.

On the firſt of June, the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland having left his Son in Law, Commiſſary General Ireton, Lord Deputy in that Kingdom, arriv'd at London, attended from Hounſlow Heath to the City by many Members of Parliament and Officers of the Army, and receiv'd there with very great Ceremony and Appearance of Joy. Three Days after he took his Seat in Parliament, and had the hearty Thanks of the Houſe for his great and faithful Services in Ireland. Two or three Days after it was reſolv'd, That having a form'd Army well provided and experienc'd, they would march it forthwith into Scotland, to prevent the Scots marching into England, and the Miſeries accompanying their Forces to our Countrymen. General Fairfax approv'd of it at firſt, but afterwards fell off, as has been hinted by the Perſwaſion of his Wife, and declaring himſelf unſatisfy'd to invade Scotland; he declar'd alſo he would engage againſt the Scots, if they invaded England. Upon this the Council of State appointed Lieutenant General Cromwel, Major General Lambert, Major General Harriſon, Lord Chief Juſtice St. John, Lord Commiſſary Whitlocke, to confer with him; and the Conference which is at large in Whitlocke was very long. It is plain, that Oliver at that Time earneſtly entreated the Lord General to continue his Command, which if he had continu'd, all his ambitious Schemes had been fruſtrated; wherefore I ſee no Reaſon to think he then thought of ſetting up himſelf above the Parliament, though ſome half witted Politicians pretend he got Fairfax to be ſet aſide on purpoſe to make Room for himſelf.

Cromwel returning to England. P. 445.

The Lord Fairfax, ſays Ludlow, was unwilling to alter his Reſolution, in Conſideration of any Thing that had been ſaid: Upon this, Lieutenant General Cromwel preſs'd, that notwithſtanding this Unwillingneſs of his, he might be ſtill Generaliſſimo of the Army, profeſſing for himſelf he would rather chuſe to ſerve under him in his Poſt than to command the greateſt Army in Europe: But the Council of State not approving that Advice, reported the ill Succeſs of the Conference with the Lord General to the Parliament, who would doubtleſs have paſt a Vote for his delivering up his Commiſſion, to prevent which, the Lord General ſent his Secretary with it to them; and ſome of his Friends informing the Houſe that the Secretary was at the Door, he was call'd in, and he deliver'd the Commiſſion, which the Houſe receiv'd; and having voted him a Revenue of 5000 Pounds per Ann. they reſolv'd, That Oliver Cromwel, Eſq; ſhould be Captain General of all their Land Forces, and an Act paſt accordingly, about a Week after King Charles arriv'd in Scotland; a very ſure Preſage that his Stay there would not be be long. In the mean Time the Forces march'd Northwards, and when they rendezvous'd were 20000 Horſe and Foot, which threw the Scots Nation into a terrible Conſternation, though they had a gallant Army ready to oppoſe them, much ſuperior in Number to the Engliſh, who enter'd Scotland at the latter End of July. In this Army Monk had a Regiment made up of ſix Companies out of Sir Arthur Haſlerigg's, and ſix out of Col. Fenwick's. He had given himſelf intirely to Cromwel, whoſe Fortune he ſaw was the ſureſt Way to make his own; and Oliver finding him a Perſon that would make a fit Tool for him, one who would be reſolute in Action and docible in Council, from this Time admitted him into his Favour, which the other ſlaviſhly courted. The Scots fir'd their Beacons upon the Entrance of the Engliſh Army, which advanc'd without Oppoſition as far as in Sight of Edinburgh: The Country all along as they march'd was deſerted, and the People fled to the Capital, which Major General Lambert fac'd with 1500 Horſe. The Scots would not hazard all by a deciſive Battle, hoping to tire out Cromwel's Men with frequent Skirmiſhes, and harraſing them, and relying much on the Climates diſagreeing with Engliſh Conſtitutions, in which they were not miſtaken, as appear'd by the Sickneſs that carry'd off many of his Army, inſomuch that for want of Health and Proviſion, the Scots having intercepted all Supplies from England nearer than Dunbar, 20 Miles from Edinburg, he was forc'd to retreat thither. The Enemy follow'd them cloſe, attack'd the Engliſh Rear Guard of Horſe in the Night, and put them to ſome Diſorder. But Major General Lambert and Col. Whaley coming to their Relief, beat back the Scots to their Trenches, and by the Help of a Miſt the next Day, the Engliſh got ſafe to Dunbar, where they intended to ſhip their Sick and heavy Baggage, and return into England: But the Scots, on Confidence of Succeſs by the Advantage of their Numbers, near three to one of the Engliſh, advanc'd ſtill, and poſſeſs'd themſelves of all the Paſſes, leaving Cromwel's Men no Way to clear themſelves but by fighting on thoſe unequal Terms. In this Extremity a Council of War was call'd, and after ſome Diſpute, it was agreed to fall upon the Enemy next Morning, September the Third, about an Hour before Day; and accordingly the ſeveral Regiments were order'd to their reſpective Poſts: Upon the firſt Shock Cromwel's Forlorn of Horſe was ſomewhat diſorder'd by their Lanciers; but two of his Regiments of Foot that were in the Van, behav'd ſo well that they not only ſuſtain'd the Charge of the Scots Horſe, but beat them back upon their own Foot, and following them cloſe, forc'd both Horſe and Foot to retreat up the Hill, from whence they had deſcended to attack them. The Body of the Enemy's Army finding their Van Guard, which conſiſted chiefly of their choiceſt Men, thus driven back upon them, began to ſhift for themſelves, which they did with ſuch Precipitation and Diſorder, that few of them ventur'd to look behind them till they arriv'd at Edinburgh, taking no Care of their King, who, ſays Ludlow, made Uſe of the ſame Means to ſecure himſelf as his new Subjects had done. One Party of the Scots Horſe made a Stand till the Engliſh came up to them, and then ran away after the reſt of their Companions. The Engliſh had the Purſuit of them beyond Haddington; they kill'd 4000 and took 10000 Priſoners, which were half of their Army; among the latter were the Laird of Liberton, Lieutenant General, Sir John Lunſden, Col. Sir William Duglas, the Lord Grandiſon, Sir John Brown, Col. Gourdon, &c. Of the Parliament Army not above 40 private Men were kill'd, and only Major Rooksby mortally wounded. The General ſent 5000 of the Priſoners who were wounded home on their Paroles, and 5000 more to Berwick. Cromwel after this Victory march'd to Edinburgh; the Gates of the City were open'd, but the Caſtle ſtood out two or three Months.

A. D. 1650.

Great was the Joy in England on News of Oliver's Succeſs in Scotland, which was brought by Sir John Hipſley. The Parliament order'd the Scots Colours, taken in Lancaſhire and Dunbar, to be hung up in Weſtminſter-Hall, and that Medals of Gold and Silver ſhould be given to the Soldiery. I have ſeen the Print of a Medal of Oliver ſtruck on this Occaſion by ſome of his Flatterers. On one Side was the Impreſſion of his Buſte, with the Engliſh and Scots Armies at a Diſtance, and round it the Word at the Battle of Dunbar, the LORD OF HOSTS, September 3, 1650. On the Reverſe, a Repreſentation of the Parliament. It is ſaid, that when this Medal was preſented to Cromwel, he flung it away, ſaying, The Title of Lord of Hoſts belongs to God only.

The Remains of the Scots Army retreated with their King to Sterling. The Lord Clarendon tells us, the King got a great Advantage by being routed at Dunbar, and took Heart ſo much that he left his Court and Courtiers, and went to the Highlands, without communicating his Deſign to the Marquis of Argyle, nor even to the Duke of Buckingham, in hopes that the Highlanders joining with Hamilton's Party, would let him enjoy his Kingſhip a little more than Argyle did: And this he informs us was call'd the Start; for they have a Language peculiar to themſelves, and could do nothing without it; as for Inſtance, take away from them Rebels, Rebellion, Seditious, Sedition, Schiſm, Schiſmaticks, and their Oppoſites, you leave their Cauſe and their Hiſtory as naked as a Skeleton. The Difference here between his Hiſtory and Whitlocke's, is chiefly in the Lord Clarendon's averring the King did not let the Duke of Bucks know any Thing of that Start, and Whitlocke affirms he took the Duke of Bucks with him. He adds, He was ſoon brought back again, and the Scots to pleaſe him and his Followers, order'd Preparations to be made for crowning him at Scone, and another Army to be rais'd to come to the ſame End as thoſe at Preſton and Dunbar.

P. 455.

We cannot cloſe this Year without looking a little into the Affairs of Ireland, where we left the Lord Broghill, Commander of a ſeparate Body employ'd to watch Inchiquin; and he ſuppreſs'd an Inſurrection of the Iriſh, intended to cut off Proviſions from Cromwel's Army, then before Waterford, and the great Intereſt he had in Ireland, created a Jealouſy of him in Cromwel, that he might be an Obſtacle to him. His Friends perceiving it, perſwaded the Lord Broghill to keep at a Diſtance, and act always with a ſeparate Army; but the Service would not admit of it, and rather than obſtruct it he clos'd heartily with Cromwel, whom he join'd in his Camp, before Waterford; in which was a Garriſon of 4000 Foot and 1000 Horſe: But the Parliament being Maſters of the Sea, and their Ships having free Entrance into the Harbour, plentifully ſupply'd the Engliſh Army. The Place was not reduc'd when Cromwel return'd to England; and the Author of the Memoirs of the Lord Broghill relates the taking of it in a Manner different from all other Authors. There was in Water-ford taken.

A. D. 1650. that Lord's Regiment a Lieutenant nam'd Crocker, who with his Brother, Serjeant Crocker, and about 30 Musketeers, were order'd to fire the Suburbs, that the Beſiegers might be enabled the better to puſh on their Attacks. The two Crockers and their Party fir'd all the Houſes and Stacks of Corn near the City, the Smoke of which was by a Weſterly Wind ſpread all over it, to the great Terror of the Beſieg'd, who thought the Engliſh were enter'd, and had ſet Fire to the Town, and in this Fright they ran out at the Eaſtern Gate, and under Covert of the Smoke got out of the Beſiegers Reach, who little dreamt of what had happen'd. This ſhameful Flight was occaſion'd by a deſperate Attempt of the two Crockers and their Party; one of whom while the Suburbs were a Fire, ſpy'd two Ladders near the Town Wall, and Lieutenant Crocker being ſhewn the Ladders, ſaid, 'Twould be a brave Thing if they mounted the Walls and enter'd the Town, which they all agreed to, thinking they might do it unperceiv'd by Help of the Smoke. They got upon the Walls, ſlew the Centinel that was poſted there, and hearing a great Noiſe and Uproar in the Town, they reſolv'd to take Advantage of the Diſorder and Darkneſs, and march'd forward to the main Guard, killing all they met. The Iriſh could not ſee what their Number was, and concluding the Engliſh Army were enter'd, they immediately fled. So Lieutenant Crocker ſiezing their Guns at the Guard, and turning them againſt them, if they ſhould rally, march'd to the Weſt Gate, and open'd it, which a Centinel perceiving ran to the Lord Broghill, whoſe Regiment was poſted on that Side, and told him of it. His Lordſhip rode towards the Gate and ſaw Crocker coming out, brandiſhing his Sword, and crying, The Town is ours, The Town is ours, as it prov'd to be when the Engliſh enter'd and found no Enemy to oppoſe them. The Caſtle held out ſome Days, but yielded upon Articles.

Cromwel's Diſcourſe with Lord Broghill about the King's Death.

My Author informs us, that the Lord Broghill being about this Time in Diſcourſe with Cromwel and Ireton, fell upon the Subject of the King's Death. Oliver ſaid, If he had follow'd his own Mind, and had had truſty Servants about him, he had fool'd them all. He added, We had once an Inclination to have come to Terms with him, but ſomething that happen'd drew us off from it. The Lord Broghill finding they were both in a good Humour, ask'd them, Why, if they were inclin'd to cloſe with him, they had not done it? Cromwel reply'd frankly, The Reaſon of our Inclination to come to Terms with him was, We found the Scots and Presbyterians began to be more powerful than we, and were ſtrenuouſly endeavouring to ſtrike up an Agreement with the King, and leave us in the Lurch; wherefore we thought to prevent them by offering more reaſonable Conditions; but while we were buſy'd with theſe Thoughts, there came a Letter to us from one of our Spies, who was of the King's Bed-Chamber, acquainting us, that our final Doom was decreed that Day: What it was he could not tell, but a Letter was gone to the Queen with the Contents of it, which Letter was ſown up in the Skirt of a Saddle, and the Bearer of it would come with the Saddle upon his Head about Ten a Clock the following Night to the Blue Boar Inn in Holborn, where he was to take Horſe for Dover. The Meſſenger knew nothing of the Letter in the Saddle, but ſome one in Dover did. We were then at Windſor, and immediately upon Receipt of the Letter from our Spy, Ireton and I reſolv'd to take a truſty Fellow with us, and in Troopers Habits to go to the Inn, which accordingly we did, and ſet our Man at the Gate of the Inn to watch. The Gate was ſhut, but the Wicket open, and our Man ſtay'd to give us Notice when any one came with a Saddle upon his Head. Ireton and I ſate in a Box near the Wicket, and call'd for a Can of Beer, and then another, drinking in that Diſguiſe till Ten a Clock, when our Centinel gave us Notice that the Man with the Saddle was come, upon which we immediately roſe; and when the Man was leading out his Horſe ſaddled, we came up to him with our Swords drawn, and told him we were to ſearch all who went in and out there; but as he look'd like an honeſt Fellow, we would only ſearch his Saddle, which we did, and found the Letter we look'd for, and opening it, read the Contents, in which the King acquainted the Queen, " He was now " courted by both the Factions, the Scots Pres- " byterians and the Army; that which of them " bid faireſt for him ſhould have him; that he " thought he ſhould cloſe ſooner with the Scots " than the other: " Upon which we ſpeeded to Windſor, and finding we were not likely to have any tolerable Terms from the King, we immediately reſolv'd to ruin him.

A. D. 1650.

The brave Colonel Jones, who routed the Marquis of Ormond, and drove him from before Dublin, being diſguſted at ſome Proceedings of Cromwel's, or probably jealous of his Succeſſes, deſir'd the Lord Broghill to have a Conference with him as he lay at Dungarvon. Broghill, who knew of Jones's Diſguſt or Jealouſy, and that both of them were ſuſpected by Cromwel and Ireton, communicated to them that Col. Jones deſir'd to ſpeak with him, which he was not willing to do till he had conſulted them who were his General Officers. They both readily conſented to it, but would needs have that Lord to take a Captain with him to wait upon him, under Pretence of doing him Honour, but indeed to be a Spy upon him. When he came to Jones he found him very ill, and very much exaſperated againſt Cromwel and Ireton. He told the Captain he had ſomething to ſay to my Lord which related to himſelf, and deſir'd him to withdraw, which the Captain could not refuſe. He then fell into Invectives againſt the two Generals, and would have engag'd Broghill to join Forces with him, and they would drive them both out of Ireland, and take the Command of that Kingdom and Army on themſelves. This Scheme was the Effect of a ſick Frenzy, and the Lord Broghill look'd upon it as ſuch, repreſenting to him, that the dividing the Forces before the Iriſh Rebels were entirely ſubdu'd, would endanger the Ruin of all. As to himſelf, he thought his Illneſs to be too great to admit of any Perturbation of Mind, and deſiring him to repoſe himſelf, he took his Leave, being told by a Phyſician that Col. Jones could not live two Days, having all the Symptoms of the Plague, of which the next Day he dy'd. Cromwel having left Ireton to command in Ireland, the latter, aſſiſted by the Lord Broghill, beſieg'd and took the ſtrong City of Limerick, where he dy'd of the Plague. It has been mention'd that Monk had ſurrender'd Dundalk, and was gone for England. He pretended his Men would not ſtand by him, and they gave a good Reaſon why, for that he had confederated with Owen Roe O Neal, Head of the Iriſh REBELS, of which the Council of State having Notice, they diſapprov'd of it, and Monk was examin'd at the Bar of the Houſe, who receiv'd ſo little Satisfaction by his Examination, that they voted, To diſapprove of what Major General Monk had done, in concluding a Peace with the grand and bloody Iriſh

A. D. 1650. Iriſh Rebel Owen Roe O Neal, and that they did abhor to have any thing to do with him therein; which Vote was order'd to be printed. In the Debate of it, ſeveral Reflections paſs'd on his Honour and Fidelity; and Whitlocke obſerves, "It was the Opinion of divers, either not at all "to have queſtion'd this Buſineſs, or having "once queſtion'd it, not to have employ'd him "any more in their Service;" which was very good Reaſoning, and probably it was owing chiefly to Cromwel that he was afterwards truſted.

The Parliament paſs'd an Act for a new High Court of Juſtice for the Trial of Sir John Stawel, David Jenkins, Walter Slingesby, Browne Buſhel, William Davenant, C. Garrard, Euſeby Andrews, and others; the latter was a Lawyer, but had ſerv'd in the King's Army as a Lieutenant Colonel, and having offended againſt the Act which the Parliament had paſs'd, declaring Treaſons, he was found guilty, condemn'd to be beheaded, and executed on Tower-Hill, where he dy'd very reſolutely. This Court were impower'd to hear and determine of any Miſpriſion or Concealment of Treaſon. Capt. Aſhley was ſentenc'd to be beheaded, and one Benſon to be hang'd, for conſpiring againſt the Commonwealth in the treaſonable Engagement of Colonel Andrews. Benſon was executed at Tyburn, but Aſhley found Mercy from the Parliament.

Andrews the Lawyer executed.

About this Time dy'd the Princeſs Elizabeth in the Iſle of Wight. 'Tis ſuppos'd that ſhe took very much to Heart the Loſs of her Brother's Company, the Duke of Glouceſter, for whoſe Liberty the Emperor and the King of Denmark having earneſtly ſollicited the Parliament, they permitted his being convey'd to Holland, from whence he went to his Mother in France.

Admiral Blake and Prince Rupert.

In the mean Time, Admiral Blake and Admiral Popham watch'd Prince Rupert's Fleet in Lisbon River, and having intercepted the Portugal Fleet from Brazil, took eleven of them, with 8000 Hogſheads of Sugar, and other rich Goods; which ſo frighten'd the King of Portugal, that he came down in Perſon, and caus'd Prince Rupert and his Fleet, 18 in all, to leave the River, which he did; and the Parliament's Ships being in Purſuit of the ſcatter'd Fleet from Brazil, gave him an Opportunity to get out in September. After this the King of Portugal admitted him no more into his Harbours, but ſent an Ambaſſador to make his Peace with the Commonwealth of England, who about the latter End of October paſs'd an Act for turning the Law-Books and the Proceſs and Proceedings in the Courts of Juſtice into Engliſh; as alſo an Act for an Aſſeſſment of 120000 Pounds per Menſem for maintaining their Armies in England, Scotland, and Ireland, they having now above 60000 Soldiers in Pay, beſides Seamen.

A. D. 1651. We cannot open the following Year with a more remarkable Incident than that of the Coronation of King Charles II. at Scone in Scotland, which was perform'd with as much Ceremony and Splendor as the Times and Treaſure would permit, on the Firſt of January. The Coronation Sermon was preach'd by Mr. Robert Douglas, who, addreſſing himſelf to the King, ſaid, "The chief Cauſe of the Judgment upon his "Houſe, had been his Grandfather's Breach of "Covenant with God, and his Father's following "his Steps, in oppoſing the Work of God and "his Kirk, within theſe Kingdoms; he there-"fore admoniſh'd him to adhere to the Cove-"nant; and let him know, that he was oblig'd "not only to maintain Religion as it is eſta-"bliſh'd in Scotland, but, if it ſhould pleaſe "God to reſtore him, likewiſe to endeavour the "ſame Reformation in his other Kingdoms, and "not to tolerate any falſe Religion within "his Dominions." Sermon done, the National Covenant of Scotland, and the Solemn League and Covenant were diſtinctly read, and an Oath adminiſter'd to the King in theſe Words: I Charles King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, do aſſure and declare by my ſolemn Oath, in the Preſence of Almighty God, the Searcher of all Hearts, my Allowancee and Approbation of the National Covenant, and of the Solemn League and Covenant, and faithfully oblige my ſelf to proſecute the Ends thereof in my Station and Calling; and that I my ſelf, and Succeſſors, do and ſhall conſent and agree to all Acts of Parliament enjoining the National Covenant, and the Solemn League and Covenant, and fully eſtabliſh Presbyterian Government, the Directory of Worſhip, Confeſſion of Faith, and Catechiſms in the Kingdom of Scotland, as they are approv'd of by the General Aſſembly of this Kirk, and Parliament of this Kingdom; and that I will give my Royal Aſſent to Acts and Ordinances of this Parliament, paſs'd or to be paſs'd, enjoining the ſame in my other Dominions; and that I ſhall obſerve theſe in mine own Practice and Family, and ſhall never make Oppoſition to any any of theſe, or endeavour any Change thereof. This done, the National Covenant, the Solemn League and Covenant, and the King's Oath ſubjoin'd to both, being drawn up in a fair Parchment, the King, in the Preſence of all, ſubſcrib'd the ſame. Which is fit to be remember'd, when we find him ten Years hence abjuring theſe Covenants, and paſſing Acts to perſecute and ruin all thoſe that adher'd to them. If ſuch Practices are conſiſtent, I will not ſay with the Chriſtian Religion, but with the Principles of any Religion that ever was taught Mankind, I ſhall on the Proof of it readily ſubſcribe to all the Lord Clarendon's Panegyricks on this King of the Covenant. The Form of his taking the Coronation Oath was this, By the Eternal and Almighty God, who liveth and reigneth for ever, I ſhall obſerve and keep all that is contained in this Oath. When the Marquis of Argyle put the Crown, which was Silver double gilt, on his Head, the Miniſter pray'd, That the Lord would purge the Crown from the Sins of them that reign'd before him. After the King was crown'd the Hamiltonian Party got Ground daily, and making an odious Mixture with that of Montroſe and the Highland Papiſts, gave great Diſcontent to the Marquis of Argyle and his Friends, who grew ſoon weary of their preſent Work, but could not help the Scots Parliament voting Duke Hamilton to command the Army under the King, David Leſley to be Lieutenant General, Middleton to be Major General of the Horſe, and Maſſey General of the Engliſh. Cromwel march'd his Army towards Sterling, near which Place the King's Forces, almoſt double his Number, were encamp'd. He order'd Colonel Overton, with 1600 Foot and 300 Horſe, to paſs in flat-bottom'd Boats over to North Ferry in Fife, which was done in Spight of all Oppoſition, Cromwel keeping ſtill cloſe to the Scots Army to fall on their Rear in Caſe they mov'd to diſturb his Enterprize. However, Major General Holburn and Sir John Brown were diſpatch'd with 4000 Men to drive the Engliſh out of Fife, but before they could come up, Major General Lambert and Col. Okey got over the Forth and join'd Overton with 1500 Foot and 800 Horſe. The Engliſh fell upon Brown and

A. D. 1651. Holburn, entirely defeated them, kill'd 2000 on the Spot, and took 1200 Priſoners, among whom was Brown, who dy'd ſoon after. This Defeat was about the latter End of July, and it was follow'd by the Surrender of almoſt all the Garriſons on both Sides of the Forth. Brunt Iſland, and the Inneſgary Fort, were reduc'd by Lambert, and Cromwel took in St. Johnſton. On this ill Succeſs the King, for ſeveral political Reaſons, enlarg'd upon by the Earl of Clarendon, reſolv'd to enter England; but Biſhop Burnet gives one ſhort Reaſon for it much better than all of them, He took a deſperate Reſolution to march into England, there being nothing elſe to be done. Moſt of the Lord Clarendon's Reaſons are liable to the like Explanation. This had been long the Deſign of the Scots, encourag'd to it by fair but falſe Repreſentations from the Engliſh Presbyterians, who were now very buſy in Projects and Cabals for reſtoring that very Prince, who when he was reſtor'd, deliver'd them up, without Mercy, to a revengeful implacable Enemy.

The Parliament paſs'd an Act on the 11th of February, by Balloting, for the following Perſons to be the Council of State for the Year enſuing.

Council of State. Lord General Cromwel, Lord Preſident Bradſhaw, Lord Chief Juſtice Rolles, Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke, Lord Commiſſioner Liſle, Lord Chief Juſtice St. John, Major General Skippon, Sir Arthur Haſlerigge, Sir Gilbert Pickering, Sir Henry Vane, jun. Sir William Maſham, Sir William Armyne, Sir Henry Mildmay, Sir James Harrington, Lord Grey of Groby, Col. Purefoy, Thomas Scot, Eſq; James Challoner, Eſq; Valentine Walton, Eſq; Humphry Salway, Eſq;

New Members.

Sir Thomas Widdrington, Edmund Prideaux, Eſq; Major General Harriſon, Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Walter Strickland, Eſq; Sir John Trevor, Sir William Brereton, Sir John Bouchier, John Carew, Eſq; Nicholas Love, Eſq; Francis Allen, Eſq; —— Liſter, Eſq; —— Thomſon, Eſq; —— Fielder, Eſq; Henry Darley, Eſq; William Say, Eſq; William Cawley, Eſq; —— Goodwyn, Eſq; —— Lemman, Eſq; Dennis Bond, Eſq; John Gourdon, Eſq;

They order'd the King's Arms to be every where taken down, and the Arms of the Commonwealth ſet up in their Room. A Court of Juſtice was erected in Norfolk for trying ſome People that had appear'd there in Arms for the King: But Col. Rich's Regiment ſoon diſpers'd them, and the Priſoners taken by them were try'd by that Court, of which the Lord Commiſſioner Keeble, whom Coke calls an ignorant pettifogging Lawyer, was Preſident, and they condemn'd 24, of whom 20 were executed at Norwich and other Places. One of their Chiefs, Mr. Hobart, nearly related to Sir John Hobart, was pardon'd, and he afterwards marry'd Cromwel's Niece, Widow of Col. Hammond.

General Blake. General Blake continuing to obſerve the Motions of Prince Rupert's Fleet, purſu'd him to Malaga, where that Prince, with a true Cavalier Spirit, ſunk ſeveral Engliſh Merchant Ships, and demanded the Maſter of a Londoner, who had ſign'd the Petition againſt a Perſonal Treaty, ſaying he would boil him in Pitch; but the Governor refus'd to deliver him, and we ſhall ſoon ſee an End put to the Exploits of this Royal Rover; for a Day or two after General Blake came up with him, fell upon him in the Road of Malaga, ſunk three of his Ships, and drove all the reſt aſhoar except two, in one of which was Prince Maurice, who made Sail towards the Weſt Indies, but was never heard of more. Prince Rupert eſcap'd in the other. General Blake in his Paſſage to Malaga met with a French Man of War, and having commanded the Captain on board, ask'd him, If he was willing to deliver up his Sword? The Frenchman boldly ſaid, No. Then Blake bid him return to his Ship and fight it out as long as he was able, which he did, and after two Hours Fight, ſtruck and ſubmitted; and coming on board the General's Ship, kiſs'd his Sword and deliver'd it to Blake, who ſent him and his Ship, with 3 other French Prizes, to England, whether he ſoon after return'd himſelf, having clear'd the Mediterranean and Britiſh Seas of all Enemies to the Commonwealth, ſecur'd the Navigation, and vindicated the Honour of England beyond whatever was known of its naval Glory. The Parliament order'd him Thanks for his great and faithful Service, which was all this great Man deſir'd. He contended for nothing but the good of his Country: He trod all other Intereſts under Foot when that was in Queſtion. He deſpis'd the Dignities and Treaſures to which we have known the Commonwealth to be often ſacrific'd; and though he did more than all thoſe who have done moſt in our Times, he got not a tenth Part of what ſome Sea-Officers under a Flag, have heap'd up in a Summer's Cruize, not to go higher, and loſe our ſelves in a Compariſon which would be as glorious for Admiral Blake's Memory, as it would reflect on the Reputation of others. I write this very near the Houſe where that renown'd General was born, and the Reader will excuſe the Digreſſion. A. D. 1651. Whitlocke. Blake's publick Spirit.

The Presbyterians in England were in ſtrong Expectation of the King, and the Scots Army's entring England, and making Preparations to join them. The Cavaliers were a broken, ruin'd Party, ſo impotent and contemptible, that the Republick was in no more Concern about them, than to ſee that they paid their Compoſitions and Sequeſtrations; and though hardly one of them durſt lift up his Hand, and much leſs his Arm, againſt the Parliament, and the King had not a Hope but in the Presbyterians, yet after the Reſtoration the Royaliſts dinn'd his Ears eternally with their Services and Merits, and rav'd againſt, and preach'd againſt the Presbyterians, as King-Killers and Republicans. The King indeed did not always give Ear to the Pretenſions of the Cavaliers, who ſtarv'd as much after the Reſtoration as before it, excepting a few Inſtances, but he did what he could to pleaſe them in oppreſſing the Presbyterians, who are now running all Hazards to ſerve him. The Vigilance of the Government in the Time of the Republick was ſuch, that no Conſpiracy could eſcape it, and that now form'd in London by the Chief of the Presbytery for the King's Reſtoration was diſcover'd, perhaps while it was in Embrio only, though the Parliament ſuffer'd it to encreaſe almoſt to a Birth. Presbyterians for the King.

The following Miniſters were engag'd in this Conſpiracy.

Mr. Arthur Jackſon of St. Michaels, Woodſtreet. Dr. Roger Drake of St. Peter's, Cheap. Mr. Thomas Watſon of St. Stephens, Walbroke. Mr. Chriſtopher Love of St. Anns, Alderſgate. Mr. Ralph Robinſon of St. Mary Wolnoth. Mr. James Nalton of St. Leonards, Foſter-lane. Mr. Thomas Cawton of St. Bartholomew, Exchange. Mr. Thomas Caſe of St. Margaret's, Milk-ſtreet. Mr. William Jenkin of Chriſt-Church, and Lecturer of St. Anns, Black-fryers. ton, Col. Vaughan, Col. Barton, Major Huntington, Captain Maſſey, Major Adams, Captain Farr, Captain Potter, Mr. Gibbons, Mr. Sterkes, Mr. Jaquel, Lieutenant Colonel Jackſon, who were very zealous for carrying on the Cauſe, made Treaſon by an Act of this Parliament. Dr. Drake, Mr. Love, &c. were order'd to be proſecuted in the High Court of Juſtice. Mr. Nalton and Mr. Cawton fled to Holland, and were made Paſtors of the Engliſh Church at Rotterdam. I ſhould be more concern'd, while I am telling this Story, for the Sufferings of theſe Miniſters, and their Adherents, if their Folly had not been equal with their Zeal, to venture their Lives for a Party who never once ſhow'd they were ſenſible of any other Sentiments of Honour and Gratitude, than what bound them down to a ſlaviſh Subjection to the Power that favour'd or fed them.

The Earl of Clarendon ſpeaking of Mr. Love, calls him that Fellow, though he is about to loſe his Head for the ſame Cauſe which made a Lord of the Hiſtorian. The Decency and good Manners of that Expreſſion is indeed another Proof that it was inſerted at Chriſt Church. A Gentleman could hardly have thought of it when he was ſpeaking of a dying Miniſter. Echard mimicks thoſe Chriſt Church Men, or that Hiſtorian, and calls him the Incendiary, the poor Man, the Traytor, the Rebel, though the Rebellion and Treaſon for which he was about to ſuffer was againſt the Rebels and Traytors, as they term them, to reſtore the King. Mr. Love being brought before the High Court of Juſtice, Edmund Prideaux, Eſq; Solicitor for the Commonwealth, charg'd him with holding Correſpondence with the King and his Party, and ſupplying them with Arms and Money, contrary to the abovemention'd Act. Mr. Jackſon was tamper'd with to be Evidence againſt him, but he refus'd it, for which he was fin'd 500 Pounds, and committed to the Fleet, where he continu'd about 17 Weeks. Mr. Love diſputed the Authority of the Court, which none could think would be of any Service to him. The Trial began the 21ſt of June, and many Witneſſes were produced to prove the Charge againſt him. At the next Hearing, July the 2d, Mr. Matthew Hale was aſſign'd him for Counſel, but the Fact being prov'd, Counſel ſignify'd no more than his frivolous Pleas, That he did not do it himſelf. That he did not perſonally act, and the like. Two Days after he was ſentenc'd to be beheaded. On the 15th of July Mr. Love petition'd the Parliament, and ſeveral other Petitions were preſented on his Behalf for Pardon of his Life, but after much Debate upon the Queſtion it paſs'd in the Negative. On the Day appointed for his Execution divers Miniſters in and about London preſented a Petition to the Houſe, earneſtly, and in the Bowels of Jeſus Chriſt, who when we were Sinners died for us, if not totally to ſpare the Life of our dear Brother, that yet you would ſay of him, as Solomon of Abiather, At this Time he ſhall not be put to Death. Upon this Petition the Parliament reſpited the Execution a Month, and on the 22d of Auguſt he was beheaded on Tower Hill. He dy'd raving, ſays Echard, he has no Conſcience in his Expreſſion. He dy'd with a fearleſs Quietneſs, as if he had been going to Bed. It is not to be doubted, but the chief Reaſon for his falſifying the Fact to abuſe this Miniſter of the Goſpel in the laſt Moments of his Life, was for his then bearing Teſtimony againſt Epiſcopacy. But what Religion are theſe Men of, who, when natural Compaſſion melts the Mind towards a dying Chriſtian, are ſo far from pitying, that they inſult him. It is no Excuſe, that this Inſolence and Falſhood are copy'd after the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, for if he had not been enamour'd with thoſe Falſities in it, he would have been aſham'd of them, and have avoided them, as well as I have done. At the ſame Time, and for the ſame Crime, was executed Mr. Gibbons, who had been a Servant to Denzil Hollis, Eſq; He agreed with the Keeper for 200 l. to let him eſcape, of which 100 Pounds was paid, and a Bond given for the other 100 l. but that Wretch, and what better can be expected from ſuch infamous Wretches, betray'd this worthy Gentleman, took his Money, and diſcover'd the Bargain.

'Tis fit to ſay ſomething of Mr. William Jenkins, another Miniſter and Conſpirator, not only for what he ſuffer'd for the King, but for his Sufferings after the Reſtoration for his Religion, the latter being the only Reward he had for the former. He was impriſon'd for this Conſpiracy, and thought to be in as great Danger as Mr. Love, he having loſt his Benefices in the City for refuſing to obſerve the Parliament's Day of Thankſgiving. His Friends, Dr. Seaman, Dr. Arthur, and others, earneſtly perſwaded him to petition the Parliament, and Dr. Arthur drew up a Petition for him, wherein he acknowledg'd them under all their Titles. Mr. Jenkins, tho' his Life lay at ſtake, made great Difficulty of ſigning it, and indeed of accepting a Pardon, if Mr. Love was not alſo pardon'd, which being refus'd, he was at laſt prevail'd with to ſign the Petition, and the Parliament were ſo well ſatisfy'd with his Submiſſion to them, that they voted him a Pardon, and an immediate Diſcharge from Priſon and Sequeſtrations. After he had done and ſuffer'd all this, and contributed more than any one of the Laudean Clergy to the King's Reſtoration, he was one of the firſt Miniſters who was perſecuted for ſcruple of Conſcience, and at laſt thrown into Newgate for no other Crime than ſpending ſome Hours in Prayer with three other Miniſters, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Flavel, and Mr. Keeling, where he lay ſo long that he was kill'd with the noxious Air of the Goal, as appears by this Inſcription on his Monument.

IN DOM. GUIL. JENKIN. M.D.V. LOND. CUIUS GRAA INTER GRAVES Eccleſiæ Procellas Novo pylo i. e. Newgate, Incarceratus, Martyr obiit.

Dr. Roger Drake, another of theſe Conſpirators, was turn'd out of his Pariſh of St. Peter Cheap, as ſoon as the King's Crown was ſettled on his Head in England. Another of them, Mr. Thomas Watſon, had his Church of St. Stephen Walbroke taken from him, and himſelf was ſent to ſeek his Bread where he could get it. Mr. Arthur Jackſon was turn'd out of his Pariſh of St. Faiths. Mr. James Nalton, another of theſe Conſpirators, who had been an Exile in Holland for his Endeavours to ſerve the King, had his Benefice of St. Leonard's Foſter-lane taken from him as ſoon as the King had leiſure, from the Triumphs of his Reſtoration, to think of perſecuting his Reſtorers. Mr. Thomas Caſe, another Conſpirator, was driven out of his Pariſh of St. Giles's, which he held at the Reſtoration, to which he had very much contributed. So generous, and ſo grateful was this King to thoſe conſcientious Perſons, who had ventur'd their Lives and Fortunes to reſtore him to that Power which enabled him to ruin them, and their Religion, as far as Truth is to be ruin'd by Power.

The Diſcovery of this and other Plots was a great Diſheartning to the Scots, who expected great Matters from the Promiſes of their Friends in England, but Deſperation and Fear, as Oli- ver ſays, drove them out of their own Kingdom to try their Fortune in this. The Lord General Cromwel being taken ill in Scotland, the Parliament order'd Dr. Wright and Dr. Bates to go and attend him, they being his Phyſicians, and well eſteem'd by him, ſays Whitlocke. For which the latter, in his dull, dry Hiſtory, intituled Elenchus, &c. calls him Traytor, Tyrant, Fanatick, Hypocrite, and whatever coarſe Names he could think of, to pleaſe his Patron the Earl of Clarendon. The Scots Enterprize, at a Time when the Commonwealth was become terrible to all Nations that were not in Friendſhip with her, could not, according to the leaſt Degree of humane Reaſon, have any other End than it had, Diſgrace and Deſtruction. The Council of State had almoſt hourly Meſſengers going to, and returning from the ſeveral Bodies of Forces in England and Scotland, carrying Advice and Directions to them, and bringing Informations from them. No Affair of this Nature could be manag'd with more Diligence, Courage and Prudence, than this was, nor perhaps was there ever ſo great a Body of Men ſo well arm'd and provided got together in ſo ſhort a Time, as were now rais'd, and ſent away under Major General Harriſon, Col. Rich, and other gallant Officers, to join with the reſt of the Forces attending the King, who has Cromwel and Lambert behind him, Harriſon, Rich, and one may ſay, the Militia of England before him, yet the Lord Clarendon and the Archdeacon march along with his Army as if there had been a Chance for avoiding the Miſery they met with.

The Dutch offend the Engliſh.

The Commonwealth of England had for ſome Time, and with good Reaſon conceiv'd a Jealouſy of her Siſter the Republick of Holland, who 'twas evident had ſhelter'd the Princes of England, and conniv'd at the Aſſiſtance the Prince of Orange had given the King. The Death of Doriſlaus had not been ſufficiently inquir'd into, and now another Incident happens to give new Provocation. The Parliament had ſent the Lord Chief Juſtice St. John to the Hague, to join with the Miniſter Reſident, Mr. Strickland, in a Negotiation for a Coalition between the two Republicks, where he had not been arriv'd above a Fortnight before he was inſulted by Prince Edward, Brother to the Elector Palatine, Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice. Gregorio Leti miſtakes the Perſon, and tells us, it was the Duke of York who affronted the Lord Ambaſſador St. John, or rather Saint John who affronted the Duke of York; but tho' he miſtakes the Perſon, he is probably right in ſome Circumſtances of the Thing. " The Duke " of York being at the Vorhout taking the Air in " the Shade of a Summer's Evening, St. John " reſolv'd to do the like. The Walks there are " all rail'd in, with Turnpikes to admit the " Company at certain Places and keep out " Coaches and Horſes. The Ambaſſador ſo " contriv'd it, that as the Duke was about to " paſs one of thoſe Turnpikes he endeavour'd to " do the ſame, and the Paſſage being thus " ſtopp'd they look'd on each other very ſternly " a Moment or two, at laſt the Duke of York " loſing all Patience, thruſt the Turnpike " round, pull'd off St. John's Hat, flung it at " his Feet, and ſaid, Learn, Traytor, to re- " ſpect the Brother of the King, thy Lord. " St. John reply'd with an Air of Contempt and " Anger, I regard neither thee nor the Perſon " thou ſpeak'ſt of, but as a Race Fugitive and " Vagabond." Upon which the Duke put his Hand to his Sword and prepar'd to draw; the Ambaſſador was as ready as he, and they would have fought had not the Company hinder'd them.

Life of Cromwel, p. 247.

Duke of York and Lord Ambaſſador St. John quarrel.

As ſoon as the States heard of it, they ſent to the Duke, deſiring he would abſent himſelf and retire to Hounſterdyke, a Palace of the Prince of Orange's, and ſent Deputies to the Lord Ambaſſador to acquaint him with it; but the latter demanded, That they ſhould either cauſe the Duke to be ſeiz'd and impriſon'd, as one attainted and condemn'd to Death by the Republick of England, or that he ſhould be baniſh'd out of all the Territories within their Juriſdiction. Whitlocke, who aſſures us it was Prince Edward who affronted the Lord Ambaſſador, adds, he was ſummon'd to appear at the Hague, to anſwer his Miſdemeanor againſt the Lord St. John, and that the States ſent to the Princeſs of Orange, to the Duke of York, and to the Queen of Bohemia, to deſire that none of their Trains might be ſuffer'd to offer any Affront to the Engliſh Ambaſſadors or their Attendants, whom the States had taken into their Protection, and would not regard any great Perſon who ſhould affront them. They all promis'd to conform to the States Deſire, and the latter caus'd a Court of Guard to be built at the Door of the Ambaſſadors. It is not to be queſtion'd that the Hollanders would have given the Parliament whatever Satisfaction they requir'd, without any Regard to the Duke of York or his Family, if the latter would have admitted them to a Coalition on eaſier Terms, than a Diſunion from their other Allies for a Union with England, but thoſe of the Parliament who were for humbling the Dutch, and reſenting paſt Slights and Offences, of whom St. John himſelf was one, would hear of no other Agreement than what the Ambaſſador offer'd, and aggravating very much the Affront the Ambaſſador either gave or receiv'd, the Dutch found there would be no Accommodation without Submiſſion, and the Engliſh Ambaſſadors were recall'd, but follow'd immediately by Ambaſſadors from Holland to endeavour to prevent a Rupture, which they were more afraid of than they had been careful to prevent.

Ireland.

We have mention'd the Death of Lieutenant General Ireton of the Plague at Limerick, and ſhall take a curſory View of the Affairs of that Kingdom in this Year. Col. Ludlow was appointed to command there as General of the Horſe, and General Cromwel, Major General Ireton, not then dead, Lieutenant General Ludlow, Col. John Jones, and Miles Corbet, Eſq; were appointed Commiſſioners for the Civil Government, who appointed Commiſſioners under them for levying the extraordinary Taxes, Exciſe and Cuſtoms.

For Dublin, Col. Hewetſon, Governor. For Ulſter, Sir Charles Coote and Col. Venables. For Kilkenny, Col. Daniel Axtell. For Clonmel, Col. Zanchy. For Cork, Col. Phaier. For Waterford, Col. Laurence.

To whom were added other Commiſſioners in their ſeveral Precincts, and Col. Thomas Herbert, and Col. Markham, were made Inſpectors over the reſt. Other Commiſſioners were appointed for Diſtribution of Juſtice in theſe Precincts.

While the Army lay before Limerick, the Lord Broghill was order'd to prevent the Lord Muskerry's joining the Forces that were preparing to march to its Relief under the Pope's Nuncio, who had already got above 8000 Men together. The Lord Broghill had but 600 Foot and 400 Horſe, and Muskerry 1000 Horſe and Dragoons, and near 2000 Foot. The Charge was very deſperate on both Sides, the Lord Broghill had 120 Horſemen ſhot, and 30 kill'd, but notwithſtanding

A. D. 1651. ſtanding the Iriſh were three to one, the Engliſh routed them and ſlew 600. The Enemy had in this Engagement ſurrounded the Engliſh, and the Lord Broghill himſelf was in ſo great Danger that the Iriſh offer'd him Quarter, which he refuſing, they cry'd, Kill the Fellow in the Gold Lace Coat, which in all probability had been done, if a Reformado Lieutenant of his Troop had not come in to his Reſcue, whoſe Horſe was kill'd under him, and himſelf twice ſhot. The Manuſcript Memoirs of the Lord Broghill mentions an Archbiſhop who was taken in the Rout and hang'd, but I ſuppoſe he means the Biſhop of Roſſe, whom this Lord had taken in a former Engagement, and order'd him to be executed, or miſtakes this Arcbiſhop for that of Tuam, ſlain at Sligo. Another Prelate, Biſhop of Emmene was ſhot to Death after the taking of Limerick. Another, the Biſhop of Clogher, was, as has been hinted, ſo ſerv'd by Sir Charles Coote, who with Col. Venables, had reduc'd all Ulſter by the Time that Limerick was taken. The Iriſh Generals, Ormond, Inchiquin, Preſton, and others, had ſhipp'd themſelves for foreign Parts. Galloway, and a few petty Garriſons that held out, deſpair'd of Relief, and ſurrender'd one after another, as the Generals thought fit to attack them.

Great Army in Ireland. Lieutenant General Ludlow commanded the Army in chief, which conſiſted of between 7 and 8000 Horſe and Dragoons, and above 22000 Foot.

Cromwel by poſſeſſing himſelf of Fife in Scotland, and cutting off the Communication between the Royal Army, as it is call'd, and the Country beyond the Forth, had put a Force upon the King to break up his Camp, and begin a haſty March for England. The Lord Clarendon applauds this Step as the Effect of his Courage and admirable Conduct. The Northern Parts of England had given him Cauſe to believe they were well affected to his Service. His Army was numerous enough, and might thereby be encreas'd. Cromwel could not comprehend the Meaning of his Councils. It was no ſmall Surprize to him, and he knew not what to do, and ſo forth. All which is a Dream of the Hiſtorians, for Cromwel knew full well what he had to do, and ſo early as April, Whitlocke obſerves, King's March into England. that the Royal Army intended to give the Parliament's the Slip, and get into England. Warwick owns the King's March was upon Neceſſity not Choice, and Argyle was ſo aſham'd of the Madneſs of ſuch Counſels, that he left the Army, retir'd to his Houſe, and acted no more with ſuch raſh and inconſiderate Counſellors. Lord Clarendon, or the Oxford Doctors, oblige one to offend often againſt the Decorum of Hiſtory, by giving the Air of Wiſdom to Actions which are the pure Effect of Weakneſs or Deſpair. Among Duke Hamilton's Papers, after the Rout at Worceſter, was found the following Letter, which turns all the Reaſonings in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion into Ridicule. 'Twas addreſs'd to Mr. William Crofts a Retainer of the Courts.

Duke Hamilton's Letter about it.

WE are laughing at the Ridiculouſneſs of our Condition, who having quit Scotland, being ſcarce able to maintain it; yet we graſp at all, and nothing but all will ſatisfy us, or to loſe all. I confeſs I cannot tell, whether our Hopes or Fears are greateſt, but we have one ſtout Argument, and that is Deſpair, for we muſt now either ſhortly fight or die. All the Rogues have left us, I will not ſay whether for Fear or Diſloyalty, but all now with his Majeſty are ſuch as will not diſpute his Commands.

Brit. Triump. p. 119. This is the Story which the Lord Clarendon treats of as gravely, with as many ſage Remarks and political Reflections as if it had not been what the ſame Author from whom I took the Letter ſays; ſo that you ſee this Undertaking was not the Product of a mature and deliberate Counſel, but of Neceſſity and Deſperation. On the 6th of Auguſt the King paſs'd the Tweed, near Carliſle, with an Army of about 16000 Horſe and Foot; and Cromwel, who had caus'd Inſtructions to be ſent to Major General Lambert, to advance towards their Van, order'd Major General Harriſon, with 3000 Horſe and Dragoons to keep as cloſe to their Rear as he could conveniently; himſelf having left 7000 Horſe and Foot with Lieutenant General Monk, in Scotland, and given him Directions how to behave in his Abſence, follow'd the King with the reſt of the Engliſh Army.

Earl of Derby riſes for the King. The Earl of Derby had kept himſelf on the Defenſive in the Iſle of Man ever ſince the End of the former War, and purſuant to the Commands he receiv'd from the King, he now landed at Wyewater in Lancaſhire, with about 300 Gentlemen and others, with Intention to raiſe the Country, tho' he could not get above 1500 Horſe and Foot together. Major General Harriſon, with about 4000 Horſe and Foot, ſomewhat obſtructed the March of the Scots, tho' he was not conſiderable enough to fight them, and being join'd by Major General Lambert, they obſerv'd the Enemy ſo cloſely as to keep them from Excurſions, and prevent others from joining them. The Scots, who were in great Expectation of Aſſiſtance from Wales, and relied much upon Col. Maſſey's Intereſt in Glouceſterſhire, ad- Ludlow. vanc'd that Way. Few of the Country came in to them, but on the other Side, ſo affectionate were the People to the Commonwealth, that they brought in Horſe and Foot from all Parts to The Engaſſiſt the Parliament. The Regiments of Lon- liſh a- don, Surrey, Berkſhire, and Oxfordſhire Militia, gainſt the the Militia of Shropſhire and Cheſhire, march'd King. to the Rendezvous againſt the Scots Army; nay the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, and the Heads Whitl. of the Colleges rais'd 120 Horſe and a Regiment of Foot for the ſame Service. The Lord Fair- As is Oxfax, and ſome even of the excluded Members, ford Uni- appear'd in Arms on this Occaſion, for the Re- verſity. publick was now ſo potent and renown'd, that all Oppoſition to it was imputed to Frenzy or Deſperation; and till they were betray'd by their Servant Cromwel, and till his Son was betray'd by his Relations, the Fifth Monarchy was more likely to take Place than that of King Charles II. Col. Lilburn was left with 1000 Horſe in Lancaſhire to hinder the Earl of Derby's raiſing Forces there, or joining the King with what he had rais'd, and the Lord General kept always within two or three Days March of the King, who ſent to Sir Thomas Middleton, a Parliamentarian Colonel, to raiſe the Welchmen, and to Col. Mackworth to do the ſame for him in Shropſhire and Shrewsbury, but neither of them took any Notice of his Letters. He was proclaim'd King in all Places where he came, as Echard remembers with great Satisfaction, tho', as my Author ſays, It was a Blaſt of Honour which, like Jonah's Gourd, quickly vaniſh'd; for, alas, by this Project of the Scots they ran themſelves into inevitable Danger, as the Poet has it, being inviron'd on all Sides with the Militia Forces of the ſeveral Counties of the Nation; which which Ludlow tells us were thought ſufficient to have cut the King's Army to Pieces, without the Help of a Regiment of the Parliament's regular Troops. But Mr. Archdeacon aſſures us, that after Cromwel, Lambert, Harriſon, and 50000 of the Militia of England, were join'd, Oliver was ſo afraid of his Majeſty, that he deſir'd a Meeting with the Devil in a Wood near Worceſter, and ſold his Soul to him for the Bargain of beating the King, who had ſcarce one Man to his four, and whoſe Men were fatigu'd by a March of 22 Days from Sterling in Scotland to the City of Worceſter in England. Echard, after Warwick, blames the King for taking to that City: They would have had him to have taken London, where his Letter had been burnt by the common Hangman; for, according to Warwick, his Army could but have been knock'd on the Head there if the worſt happen'd, and if the beſt, then they had done the Buſineſs. But theſe excellent Politicians never obſerv'd that the King was driven to Worceſter as into a Net, and that the Parliament's Forces had not left him at Liberty to march where it pleas'd him. Before the Devil and Cromwel had the Conference, Mr. Echard has ſo finely deſcrib'd in the Wood near Worceſter, one of Oliver's Colonels had made the Bargain much the better for him by beating the Earl of Derby's Party at Wigan in Lancaſhire. The latter was ſuperior in Number to Col. Lilburn's, who however attack'd them with ſuch Vigour, that after a warm Diſpute of an Hour's Length, the Lord Derby's Men were totally routed. The Lord Widdrington, Sir Thomas Tildeſley, Col. Trollop, all three Papiſts, were ſlain. 'Tis the ſame Work ſtill, and the ſame Workmen. There were ſlain alſo Col. Boynton, Sir William Throgmorton, Sir Francis Gamul, many inferior Officers and Soldiers. Among the Priſoners, 500 in Number, were Sir Timothy Fetherſtonhaugh, Col. Legg, Col. Robinſon, Col. Bayns, Col. Gerard, Col. Ratcliff, all their Baggage, Sumpters, Arms and Ammunition, were taken, as were the Earl of Derby's George and Garter, himſelf much wounded, and about 30 more got to Worceſter, at the Sight of whom the Citizens heartily repented they had open'd their Gates to the King, who had promis'd them an Army under this defeated Lord. The King ſeeing his Hopes loſt in the Lord Derby's Defeat, would have march'd off with his Horſe, upon which his Foot were ready to mutiny, ſaying, We will both endure the ſame Fortune, and the King and his Officers had much ado by fair Words to appeaſe them, and ſatisfy them that they would not leave them.

Whitl. 482.

The Scots finding they were like to be ſhut up with their King and ſtarv'd in Worceſter, thought it their beſt Way to attempt to force a Paſſage before Cromwel's Forces were all come up, tho' he had more than enough to encompaſs the City. They were poſted on each Side of the Severne, ready to receive the Enemy, if in their deſperate Condition they ſhould attempt to eſcape by Sallies. Their firſt Attack was made upon Lieutenant General Fleetwood's Quarters at Upton, who, with ſome Forces of the Army and ſome Militia Regiments, made a vigorous Reſiſtance; but the Cavaliers preſſing theſe Troops very hard, the General diſpatch'd ſome Troops to his Aſſiſtance by a Bridge laid over the River, commanding Major General Lambert to ſend another Detachment to the ſame Purpoſe; but he deſir'd to be excus'd, alledging, that if the Enemy ſhould alter their Courſe, and fall upon thoſe on this Side the Severne, they might probably cut off all that remain'd; which was not unlikely, for ſoon after moſt of the Enemy's Strength fell upon that Part of the Army where the General and Major General Lambert were. The Battle was fought with various Succeſs on both Sides for a conſiderable Time, tho' ſtill hopeful on that of the Parliament; but at length the Scots Army was broken, and quitting their Ground, retreated in great Diſorder to the Town, where they endeavour'd to defend themſelves. But Major General Harriſon and Col. Croxton, with the Cheſhire Militia, enter'd it at their Heels. Leſley's Brigade was then in the City unbroken. The King, who had ſeen the Beginning of the Fight from the Top of the Cathedral Tower, and had afterwards charg'd the Parliamentarians in Perſon, earneſtly begg'd thoſe Scots and the flying Soldiers to make one Charge more, and rather kill him on the Place, than expoſe him to the Calamity and Miſery that muſt attend the Loſs of that Day. But nothing could bring them on again, and Leſley's Brigade running with the reſt, Cromwel's Men ſoon became Maſters of the City: Upon which there was a doleful Cry among the Citizens, O ſave the King, Save the King, who however had not much conſider'd their Safety, by impoſing himſelf upon them, and expoſing them to the Reſentment and Chaſtiſement of a victorious Republick. The King fled with the firſt, which the Earl of Clarendon expreſſes ſo much like a Cavalier, that one can hardly read it without a Horſe-laugh; His Majeſty was perſwaded to withdraw himſelf. A Writer of the ſame Kidney tells us frankly, The King ſeeing how the Caſe ſtood, preſently fled out of the Town; and Whitlocke, They rode away Poſt in great Confuſion, their King being the foremoſt; and ſure there needed not much Perſwaſion to run out of the Danger he was in, when Cromwel's Men had Poſſeſſion of Part of the City, and in a few Minutes muſt have the whole. There fled with him the Duke of Buckingham, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Earl of Cleveland, the Earl of Derby, the Earl of Lauderdale, the Lord Wilmot, the Lord Wentworth, and about eighty Gentlemen of Diſtinction, whom we muſt leave for a while ſhifting for themſelves as well as they could.

Battle of Worceſter.

Comm. War, p. 110.

Ib. 110.

The King's Army entirely defeated.

Of the King's Army near 4000 were kill'd, and near 10000 taken Priſoners. Among the Slain were General Forbes and Duke Hamilton, tho' he dy'd not till next Day, and the Lord General ſent his own Surgeons to ſee if his Wounds were curable, and to do their utmoſt for him; but all their Care and Skill were in vain. Among the Priſoners were, tho' not taken all at one Place or Time, the Earl of Derby, the Earl of Cleveland, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Earl of Carnwarth, the Earl of Lauderdale, the Earl of Kelly, the Earl of Rothes, the Lord Grandiſon, the Lord St. Claire, the Lord Spine, the Lord Kenmure, General David Leſley, Lieutenant General Middleton, Major General Piſcotty, Col. Graves, Sir John Packington, Sir Ralph Clare, Sir Charles Cunningham, Sir Richard Fanſhaw, Secretary, Col. Blague, and a great Number of Colonels, Lieutenants, Majors, and Subalterns, with Standards, Colours, Baggage, the Standard Royal, the King's Coach, his Coller of SS, Bag and Baggage, Arms, Ammunition, and all the Trophies of a moſt glorious Victory: And it is to be obſerv'd, that whatever Advantages the Parliament and their Friends got, it was always by Arms, and with Glory, agreeable to the Dignity of the Cauſe for which they fought, Religion and Liberty; and that whatever Advantages their beaten and baffled Enemies got afterwards, were owing to Perfidy and Perjury, and to a Baſeneſs which is ſcandalous Priſoners.

A. D. 1651. lous to human Nature. According to the Goodneſs of the Cauſe was the Succeſs, and the generous Uſe the Parliamentarians made of it; for even the Lord Clarendon is oblig'd to acknowledge that they treated their vanquiſh'd Enemies after this Victory with Humanity: There was not much Cruelty us'd to the Priſoners. Towards the King's Servants there was nothing of Severity, they were in a few Days all diſcharg'd. But after, by the Perjury and Perfidy of thoſe the Parliament employ'd, the Cavaliers, without ſtriking a Blow, nay, without creeping out of the Holes and Corners in which they had hid themſelves, had got the Parliament's Friends in their Power, what Havock was made of them by Executions and Perſecutions, will be ſeen when we come to that Period in which the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion was Prime Miniſter, and laid about him with the Civil Sword as much as he has done with his Pen, and it is an eternal Truth, that the Effects will always ſmell of the Cauſe.

On the Side of the Parliament 100 Soldiers were ſlain, 300 wounded. Quarter-Maſter General Moſeley and Capt. Jones were the only Officers of Note who were kill'd, and only Capt. Howard wounded.

Whitlocke takes Notice, that Sir Richard Onſlow, with the Surrey Regiment, march'd hard to come up to the Engagement, ſo did Capt. Walter St. John with the Surrey Troop. I mention the latter, to be Matter of Comfort to him whom I take to be his Grandſon, and whoſe Attainder for Treaſon was lately forgiven him, that he may with Pleaſure look back on the worthy Behaviour of his Anceſtor, in aſſerting the Liberty of his Country, whoſe Glory and Intereſt himſelf ſo baſely betray'd by his dark Cabals and ruinous Negotiations, when he thruſt himſelf into the Management at the latter End of Queen Anne's Reign, when he labour'd to break the grand Confederacy to reſtore France to the exorbitant Power the Confederates had raviſh'd from her, and the Enemies of England to a Capacity of giving her all the Trouble and Diſturbance ſhe has ſince met with. It muſt, one would think, be ſome Comfort to him, amidſt ſo much Guilt and Diſgrace, to read that the Cauſe of Liberty always found Aſſertors in his Family, till he endeavour'd to throw down all its Defences, and that their Merit will, with generous Minds, be ſome Atonement for his Offences, eſpecially if he offends no more, but behaves with the Duty and Gratitude which are due from one who owes his Life to the Clemency of his King and Country.

Sir Walter St. John's Grandſon's ill Practices.

I ſhould not have written this Hiſtory, had it not been to have made ſuch Reflections, when they were naturally produc'd by the Subject.

Whitl. p. 484. About 3000 of the King's Horſe got out of Worceſter, the greateſt Body was under David Leſley, whom Col. Lilburn intercepted, and took 1000 of them, with their General, paſſing thro' Sanebarch in Cheſhire on a Fair-Day. The Townſmen and Countrymen fell upon them with Clubs and Staves, and with the Poles of their Stalls as they paſs'd by knock'd them down, and took about 100 of them. Col. Barton's Regiment pick'd up the reſt. Maſſey had been wounded at the taking a Paſs near Upton before the Fight, and could get no farther than Leiceſterſhire, where he ſurrender'd himſelf to the Counteſs of Stamford, who caus'd his Wounds to be well look'd after, and gave the Parliament Notice of it. He was ſoon after ſent to the Tower, as were moſt of the Scots Priſoners of Quality. This famous Battle was fought on the 3d of September, juſt a Twelvemonth after that at Dunbar. Cromwel's Word was the ſame, The Lord of Hoſts; and in his Letter to the Parliament he ſtiles it a Crowning Mercy, not in the Conſtruction which weak Authors ridiculouſly put upon it, as if it ſhould intimate to the Parliament that it prepar'd the Way for his turning them off and taking the Crown, but in the common Senſe, that by ending their Wars it crown'd all their other Victories. A. D. 1651.

The Earl of Derby fell again into the Hands of Col. Lilburn; as did the Earl of Lauderdale, and the former had been ſo inveterate and dangerous an Enemy to the Commonwealth, that he could expect no Mercy; but though Cromwel wrote in his Letter to the Houſe, that ſome of the Priſoners would be fit Subjects of their Juſtice, I find few that ſuffer'd. The Parliament order'd the 3d of September to be kept yearly in all the three Kingdoms; and Cromwel returning to London was receiv'd with as much Magnificence and Ceremony as a General could expect, who in the Opinion of the People was the Deliverer of his Country; but it was obſerv'd that after this Action, ſo ſhining and ſo important, he took upon him a more ſtately Behaviour, and choſe new Friends. Neither muſt it be omitted, that inſtead of acknowledging the Services of thoſe who came from all Parts to aſſiſt him againſt the common Enemy, though he knew they had deſerv'd as much Honour as himſelf and the ſtanding Army, he frown'd upon them, and the very next Day after the Fight diſmiſs'd them and ſent them home, well knowing that a uſeful experienc'd Militia was more likely to obſtruct than to ſecond him in his ambitious Deſigns, which the Parliament did not ſeem to be at all apprehenſive of at that Time. They careſs'd him in an extraordinary Manner, and deputed the Lord Chief Juſtice Saint John, and three other of their Members to attend him on the Road from Worceſter; as did great Numbers, not only of Members but of Perſons of Quality and Citizens, ſome Miles before he arriv'd at London, which was nine Days after the Fight, and there he was ſpendidly treated by the City. Every Body paid their Court to him as the Head of the Commonwealth; and it is doubtleſs from this Time that he thought of making himſelf in Fact what he was now in Appearance. Ludlow. Comwel grows haughty.

This great News from Worceſter was accompany'd with very good from Scotland, where Lieutenant General Monk, about a Fortnight after Cromwel left him, took Sterling Caſtle, one of the ſtrongeſt in Scotland, of which King James boaſted that it had never been taken in the Reigns of 106 Kings, as by this Inſcription which Monk defac'd; Monk.

It was ſurrender'd upon Articles; and beſides 40 Pieces of Cannon, 5000 Arms, Ammunition, &c. there were found Money, Jewels, the Records of Scotland, the Chair and Cloth of State, the Royal Sword, the Earl of Mar's Coronet, Parliament Robes, and other rich Goods. Cromwel's Abſence ſo encourag'd the Scots, that the Earl of Leven and other Lords ſet about raiſing another Army in Perthſhire; for which Purpoſe they had a Meeting at Ellet, ſeven Miles from Dundee; and Monk hearing of it, ſent Col. Morgan and Col. Alured, to ſurprize them, which they effected, and ſeiz'd old General Leſly, Earl of Leven, the Earl Marſhal, the Earl of Crawford, the Lord Keith, the Lord Ogilvy, the Lord Burgenny, the Lord Huntley; Scotland.

the Lord Lea, with about 300 Knights, Gentlemen, and Miniſters. This Aſſembly met with Intention to levy what Forces they could, and attempt the Relief of Dundee, beſieg'd by Monk, who having ſummon'd the Cavaliers, they with their wonted Modeſty and Diſcretion ſent Anſwer; That whoever of the Parliament Army would lay down their Arms, and come in to them, ſhould have Mercy; but as ſtout as their Anſwer was, they ſtood not the Storm above a Quarter of an Hour: Monk's Soldiers enter'd the Place, and put all the King's Men to the Sword; nay, Ludlow aſſures us he commanded the Governor, Lieutenant General Lumſdain, with ſeveral others to be kill'd in cold Blood. This is the Man of whom the Earl of Clarendon ſays he pleas'd himſelf with an Opinion that he was not ſerving againſt the King, while he commanded for the Parliament, which is ſome of the beſt Reaſoning in his Characteriſticks. In Dundee were taken 50 Sail of Ships, and Plunder to an incredible Value, which ſo enrich'd the Parliament's Soldiers, that as Whitlocke writes, a Centinel could hardly be known from an Officer. Aberdeen ſent her Keys to Monk, Dunbarton, Dunotter Caſtles, and Abernethy ſurrender'd at Summons; thus in about a Month's Time after the King enter'd England, was all Scotland, except two or three Faſtneſſes in the Highlands, reduc'd with little or no Difficulty. Monk had a very eaſy Task to finiſh the Work, which Oliver found ſo difficult in the Beginning; and if the Task had not been ſo eaſy, it is very likely that Lambert, or ſome other General than Monk, would have been left in Scotland to go through with it.

The King's Flight.

We are now to wander with the King in his Flight after the Rout at Worceſter; but there's no need of circumſtantiating the Story as the Lord Clarendon and the Archdeacon do; for with them King Charles the Second in the Oak, near Boſcobel, makes as heroical a Figure as in any Part of his Reign, which I have no Mind to diſpute with them. We have obſerv'd that his Majeſty made very great Diſpatch in his Journies after Worceſter Fight; but neither Horſe or Men could keep travelling without Refreſhment and Reſt: Wherefore the King, by Advice of the Earl of Derby who had hid there after his Rout at Wiggan, made towards Boſcobel in Staffordſhire, belonging to one Pendrel a Papiſt, where he hop'd to hide till the Search for him was over. His Company had all left him but the Lord Wilmot, who kept near him, one Mr. Giffard a Papiſt and his Servant Francis Yates, another Papiſt, both whom had ſerv'd in Worceſter, under a Popiſh Colonel, one Careleſs, whom according to Lord Clarendon, they found on an Oak in a Wood, not far from Boſcobel; and the Colonel coming down, his Majeſty got up and hid in it as Careleſs had done. The King was conducted to White Ladies, in the Pariſh of Tong in Shropſhire, where one of the Pendrels dwelt, and there he ſtripp'd himſelf of his own Cloaths, put on the Garb of a Peaſant, and rounded his Hair Alamode de Roundhead. He lay in the Oak by Day, and in the Houſe by Night; from thence they went to Boſcobel, and thence to Mr. Whitegrove's of Moſely, where they found the Lord Wilmot, the King travelling like a Woodman with a Bill in his Hand. In theſe Travels he was much help'd by Huddleſtone a Benedictine Monk; and from his Departure from Worceſter to his coming to Mr. Lane's in Staffordſhire, he had truſted himſelf with none but Papiſts; tho' there is a very particular Account of his Majeſty's being made Welcome by every one of theſe Papiſts, and his Concealment of 5 or 6 Days in the Hollow of a Tree, the Hay-mow, the Barn, which takes up four or five Pages; yet the Lord Clarendon introduces it thus, It is great Pity that there was never a Journal made of that miraculous Concealment; in which there might be ſeen ſo many viſible Impreſſions of the immediate Hand of God. I cannot make Reflections on ſuch Paſſages without treading too cloſely on the Heels of Eſtabliſhments, into which ſome have endeavour'd to weave the Cauſe they engag'd in. From Mr. Lane's Houſe the King diſguis'd like a Servant rode before Mrs. Lane, his Daughter, to Leigh in Somerſetſhire, five Miles from Briſtol, which was then the Seat of Mr. Norton, who had marry'd her Siſter, and is now the Seat of Mrs. Trenchard, Widow to the famous Mr. Trenchard, better known by the feign'd Name of Cato, which he put to ſome of his Writings. Here he left Mrs. Lane, whoſe decent Behaviour is highly commended by the Earl of Clarendon; and from thence went to Col. Francis Windham's at Trent, not far from Shirburn, intending to take Shipping for France at Lyme; but being balk'd there, he rode before another young Gentlewoman from Trent to Salisbury Plain, where he was met by Dr. Henchman, afterwards Biſhop, and by him conducted to Heal, belonging to Serjeant Hyde, afterwards Lord Chief Juſtice, three Miles from Salisbury; and the Earl of Clarendon, who was of the ſame Family, does it Honour on this Occaſion, which to ſhew my Impartiality I ſhall not forget: This Seat, ſays he, always belong'd to Malignants. From Heal he was conducted by Mrs. Hyde to Stonehenge, where he met Dr. Henchman again, who the next Day deliver'd him to the Lord Wilmot, who conducted him to Suſſex, where Col. Gunter had provided a Veſſel at Brightholmſted, to tranſport him to Normandy, where he landed in November. The Court of France was not at all pleas'd with his coming into that Kingdom; from Normandy the King went to Paris, where the Marquis of Ormond came to him about Chriſtmas; and the Lord Clarendon informs us there was a Friendſhip between him and the Marquis, with which he concludes the Tranſactions of this Year, except the Quarrel amongſt the King's Miniſters about the Maſterſhip of the Wards in England, which would not be worth a Penny to either of them, fell out within this Year.

In the mean Time a Court Marſhal ſat at Earl of Derby. Cheſter, where were preſent Major General Mitton, Col. Mackworth, and 20 Officers, Colonels, Lieutenant Colonels and Captains, who choſe Col. Mackworth Preſident, and the Earl of Derby and Sir Timothy Featherſtonhaugh, were brought before them. The Earl being charg'd with conſpiring a general Riſing for the King in Lancaſhire, confeſs'd there was ſuch a Plot; but it was diſappointed by the apprehending of Mr. Birkenhead. That Major Aſhurſt and Major Gen. Maſſey were principal Actors in this Conſpiracy. He ſubmitted himſelf to the Mercy of the Parliament, but alledg'd he had Quarters given him, and therefore was not to be try'd by a Court Martial for Life. He pleaded Ignorance of the Acts of Treaſon ſet forth by the Parliament: But he was over-rul'd, and the Court ſentenc'd him to be beheaded for his Beheaded. Treaſons at Bolton, where Whitlocke tells us, he had kill'd a Man in cold Blood, and that he ſeem'd very deſirous of Life, of which there is not a Syllable in the Earl or Archdeacon's Hiſtory. Sir Timothy Featherſtonhaugh had the ſame Sentence paſt upon him, and Capt. Benbow was ſhot to Death, which was the greateſt Part of the

A. D. 1651. the Executions for this new War againſt the Commonwealth.

The Iſlands of Scilly, Guernſey, and Jerſey, held out for the King, after the Parliament had reduc'd all England and Wales, and all Scotland and Ireland, except a few Caſtles in the moſt remote Parts of it.

Sir John Greenville was Governor of Scilly Iſlands; and though the Men he had with him did little good to themſelves, yet acting like a Neſt of Pirates they did a great deal of Miſchief to others by their Piracies. The Navigation was interrupted, and many Merchant Ships made Prize by the Pirates of Scilly, and the other Iſlands. The Parliament order'd Sir George Ayſcue to reduce Scilly, who came on that Coaſt in April, and ſummon'd the Governor, who immediately deſir'd a Treaty; but it took no Effect, and General Blake order'd the Troops to land, and they ſoon drove all that oppos'd them into St. Mary's Caſtle, upon which the Men of War play'd their Cannon; and Sir John Greenville ſurrender'd it a Month after, on Condition that he and his Garriſon ſhould be Priſoners of War: Some of his Soldiers were ſhip'd for Ireland; and ſome ſent to Scotland. He had 800 Men, and St. Mary's was very ſtrong; but it is ſaid he wanted Water; though if he had as much Water as runs in the New River he muſt have done what he did. Sir George Ayſcue carry'd him and Part of his Garriſon Priſoners to Plymouth, and then proceeded to Barbadoes. The Parliament made Col. Hunkin Governor of Scilly Iſlands.

General Blake.

Scilly.

Jerſey. From Scilly, General Blake ſail'd to the Iſle of Jerſey, of which Sir George Carteret was Governor, and had with him 3 or 4000 Men. Blake took on Board Col. Haynes's Regiment, and two other Regiments of Foot, and 4 Troops of Horſe. He came to an Anchor under the Iſland about the latter End of October: The General landed his Men in Boats, and then ran the Boats a Ground, the Soldiers leaping into the Sea Neck high. They were at their Landing deſperately charg'd by a Body of Horſe for about half an Hour, and then the Enemy fled: The Parliament's Forces purſu'd them a Mile into the Iſland, and the next Morning march'd to ſeveral Forts, and found in them Guns and Colours, but no Men. The next Day Col. Haynes drew up his Men on a Hill in Sight of Elizabeth Caſtle. The Enemy had a Fort under the Hill, which they quitted, and another Fort nearer to Elizabeth Caſtle. Thus in three Days was all the Iſland reduc'd except Orgeuil and Elizabeth Caſtles: Of this ſays the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, Sir George Carteret having well defended Jerſey as long as he could, and being ſo overpower'd that he could no longer defend the Iſland, he retired into Elizabeth Caſtle, which he had fortify'd and provided with all Things neceſſary for a Siege, preſuming that by the Care and Diligence of the Lord Jermyn, who was Governor of the Caſtle, he ſhould receive Supplies of Men and Proviſion, as he might eaſily have done, in ſpight of any Power of the Parliament by Sea or Land; which is every Word falſe in Fact and Politicks. " But it had been the principal " Reaſon that Cromwel had hitherto kept the " better Quarter with the Cardinal, leſt the " Bait of theſe two Iſlands, which the King " could have put into his Hands when he would, " ſhould tempt him to give his Majeſty any " Aſſiſtance; but the King was ſo ſtrict and " punctual in his Care of the Intereſt of Eng- " land, when he ſeem'd to be abandon'd by it, " that he choſe rather to ſuffer thoſe Places of " great Importance to fall into Cromwel's Power, than to depoſit them upon any Conditions " into the French Hands. When the Caſtle had " been beſieg'd three Months, and the Enemy " could not approach nearer to plant their Ordnance than at leaſt half an Engliſh Mile, " the Sea encompaſſing it round more than ſo " far from any Land, and it not being poſſible " for any of their Ships to come within ſuch a " Diſtance; they brought notwithſtanding Mortar Pieces of ſuch incredible Greatneſs, and " ſuch as had never been before ſeen in this " Part of the World, that from the higheſt " Point of the Hill near St. Hilary, they ſhot " Granados of a vaſt Bigneſs into the Caſtle, " and beat down many Houſes, and at laſt " blow'd up a great Magazine, where moſt of " the Proviſions of Victuals lay, and kill'd ma- " ny Men. Upon which Sir George Carteret " ſent an Expreſs to give the King an Account " of the Condition he was in, who deſir'd a " Supply of Men and Proviſions, which it be- " ing impoſſible for his Majeſty to procure, he " ſent him Orders to make the beſt Conditions " he could." Such from one end to the other is that Hiſtory; if it is not worſe in many Places.

P. 465.

Whitlocke informs us that Col. Haynes loſt but four Men in taking this Iſland; and that as ſoon as Sir George Carteret was got into Elizabeth Caſtle, General Blake block'd it up on all Sides; yet the Lord Clarendon aſſerts it might have been reliev'd in ſpight of all the Power of the Parliament by Sea and Land. General Blake and Colonel Haynes laid Siege to it about the Beginning of November; and before the 15th the Governor deſir'd a Treaty, which did not then take Effect. Orgeuil Caſtle ſurrender'd in 10 or 12 Days, and in it were found 20 Braſs and Iron Guns, and 20 Barrels of Powder, 1000 Arms, and two Months Proviſions for 70 Men. As ſoon as Monk, who was in Scotland, heard of the taking of this Caſtle, he wrote a Congratulatory Letter to the Parliament, of ſuch Importance did he think it; and ſo much did he rejoice at any Loſſes and Diſgraces which befel the King and his Adherents. The Houſe order'd Thanks to General Blake and Colonel Haynes for their good Service in the Reduction of Jerſey. The third Shot at Elizabeth Caſtle fell upon the old Church, kill'd and wounded 30 Perſons, and indanger'd the Governor and his Lady, which ſo frighten'd the latter, that ſhe embark'd the next Night for France, with other Ladies, and ſome few Gentlemen. Upon this alſo ſeveral of the Garriſon made their Eſcape; and others who attempted, and were taken, were hang'd up immediately. Sir George Carteret made a gallant Defence till about the middle of December, when he ſurrender'd: So that the Siege held fifty Days, which the Earl of Clarendon calls three Months. In it were,

17 Pieces of Braſs Cannon, 36 Iron, 450 Muſkets, 64 Barrels of Powder, 5000 Pounds Weight of Match, 1000 great Shot, 100 Weight of Muſket Shot, 4 Ton of Lead, 2 Ton of Iron, 60 Hogſheads of Biskets, 48 Buſhels of Wheat, 32 Buſhels of Barley, 160 Buſhels of Malt, 36 Buſhels of Peaſe, 50 Sides of Pork, 60000 Weight of Poor John, 3 Hogſheads of French Brandy, 4 Pipes of Spaniſh Wine, 10 Hogſheads of French Wine, 16 Hogſheads of Beer, 60 Quarter of Salt, 6 Hogſheads of Beef; with great Store of other Proviſions for a Garriſon of 380 Men, to which Number they were reduc'd. And it appears by this Account in Whitlocke, that the Caſtle might have held out longer, if holding out at all had not been downright Madneſs; for what Relief could could be expected from a Prince, who when he landed in France had not Money enough to carry him to Paris, and as to Cromwel's keeping the better Quarter with Mazarine, left the Bait of Guernſey and Jerſey ſhould have tempted him to give Charles II. Aſſiſtance, 'tis like the reſt of the Chimera's in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, for beſides that the inteſtine Broils then in France, took Mazarine's Thoughts entirely off from foreign Affairs. The Cardinal was ſo afraid of Cromwel, that he would not have accepted of thoſe two Iſlands from King Charles, leſt he ſhould have drawn upon him the whole Power of the Commonwealth of England, which would ſoon have recover'd them. There is, I think, not many more Faults as to Fact in this Scrap of that Hiſtory, but it is one, where the Author ſays Cornet Caſtle in Guernſey was taken in the Beginning of September, whereas it was not ſurrender'd till a little before or a little after Elizabeth Caſtle. I ſhould not have made ſo petty a Remark as this, but that there are ſome ignorant People who take this moſt inaccurate and irregular Hiſtory to be the moſt exact and complete. Col. Philip Carteret, Governor of Mount Orgeuil, ſtipulated, when he ſurrender'd that Caſtle, that he and his Officers ſhould have an Act of Oblivion, and the Parliament paſs'd ſuch an Act in their Favour. Sir George Carteret and his Officers were tranſported to St. Maloes in France, where, according to Whitlocke, they had coarſe Entertainment, only himſelf and 9 more being ſuffer'd to come into the Town. During theſe Tranſactions Orders were ſent to Col. Duckenfield and Col. Bird, to reduce the Iſle of Man, which had been a Place of Refuge for thoſe of the King's Party, who ſupported themſelves by Piracy, and were very welcome to the Earl of Derby, the Lord of it; and his Counteſs, after the Earl left the Iſland, ſtood out with as good Reaſon, and as great Courage, as any of thoſe who held Places for the King, after he had himſelf no Place to go to which he could depend upon for his Abode there. Duckenfield took with him General Cromwel's Regiment, commanded by Lieutenant Col. Worſeley, Major General Dean's, commanded by Lieutenant Col. Mitchel, and his own Regiment, with two Troops of Horſe. He ſail'd from Cheſter the 18th of October, but was driven back to Beaumaris in Angleſey, and came not to Man till the 25th, when Capt. Young, Commander of the Preſident Frigot, was ſent with a Summons to the Counteſs of Derby, then in Ruſhen Caſtle, who return'd Anſwer, That ſhe was to keep it by her Lord's Command, and without his Order ſhe would not deliver it up. The next Day, October the 26th, a Deputy came from the Iſland to aſſure the Parliament's Officers, that they ſhould meet with no Oppoſition, and might ſafely come under Derby Fort, Douglas Fort, and any Fort in the Iſland, except Ruſhen and Peele Fort; but having nothing in Writing to vouch for him, Major Fox was ſent back with him to inquire into the Truth of his Report, which was confirm'd to him by the Iſlanders, and Commiſſioners came aboard the Fleet, to deſire that only one Regiment might land, and they would ſupply them, as alſo the Forces on board, with Proviſions at the Market Price, which Col. Duckenfield conſented to. The Iſlanders deliver'd up one Bartlet, a notorious Pirare, and did every Thing they promis'd. The Counteſs of Derby finding her ſelf deſerted by the Iſlanders, and the Parliament's Soldiers in Poſſeſſion of all the Forts, except Ruſhen and Peele Caſtles, ſhe ſurrender'd them, and the Parliament order'd the Council of State to conſider of preſerving that Iſland for the Benefit of the Commonwealth. The Hiſtories of thoſe Times ſpeak of theſe Iſlands as Neſts of Pirates, but the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Echard repreſent them as the Retreats of Heroes, who diſdain'd to ſubmit to that Power which made all Europe tremble. James Hind the Highwayman deſerves alſo a Place in the ſame Records, for being examin'd by the Council of State, Whitlocke tells us, he confeſs'd he had been employ'd by the King in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and when afterwards he was hang'd for his Robberies, the Cavaliers pretended he was as much murder'd as Mr. Love or Mr. Gibbons.

Iſle of Man.

The Iſland of Barbadoes, in America, was ſeiz'd by the Lord Willoughby of Parham in the Name of the King. Several Royaliſts had ſecur'd themſelves and their Effects there, particularly Col. Walrond and Col. Colliton, but not with any Deſign to throw off their Dependance upon England, or to involve themſelves in new Troubles and Dangers to ſhelter ſuch as had no where elſe to go to. But the Lord Willoughby having the King's Commiſſion they ſubmitted to it, and the other Iſlanders did not think fit or ſafe to make Oppoſition by Arms. Willoughby the Governor, Col. Walrond, Col. Codrington, and Col. Muddiford, had a Deſign to baniſh the Parliament's Friends out of the Iſland, but it being diſcover'd by Codrington when he was tipſy, Col. Drax and Col. Allen made ſuch a Party againſt it, that the Governor let it drop, and as ſoon as Sir George Ayſcue arriv'd with his Squadron of Men of War, and his Guns began to play upon the chief Fort at Bridge Town, the chief Iſlanders ſhew'd a good Diſpoſition to return to their Obedience to the Government of England. Sir George ſent a Summons to the Lord Willoughby, and a Declaration to the Inhabitants, inviting them to ſubmit to the Parliament. Willoughby, who was himſelf a Deſerter from the Parliament, anſwer'd, He would keep the Place for the King. Upon which Sir George form'd a Regiment of 600 Men out of the Ships Crews, to aſſiſt the Friends to the Commonwealth, and putting them aſhore under Captain Morrice, they where charg'd by 9 Companies of Foot and 3 Troops of Horſe, but it being in the Night, and the Iſlanders not knowing the Number of the Enemy, were diſcourag'd by the repeated Shouts of the Sailors, which made them ſeem to be more than they were, and they ran away in a Sort of Amazement, and quitted a Fort in which were 4 Guns. Lieutenant Col. Allen, a Planter of Barbadoes, who had got Aboard the Fleet, and ſeven Men were all the Loſs on the Parliament's Side. On Willoughby's, 100 Men were kill'd, and 80 taken. But as Whitlocke obſerves, this Succeſs was nothing towards the gaining of the whole Iſland, the Enemy having about 5000 Horſe and Foot in Arms. Sir George Ayſcue made particular Application to Col. Muddiford of Barbadoes, whom he underſtood to be a Man of the beſt Intereſt in the Iſland, and by offering him and his Friends honourable Conditions, he prevail'd with him to join him, which encreas'd his Forces to 2000 Foot and 100 Horſe. He alſo ſent the Lord Willoughby a Letter from his Lady, adviſing him to ſurrender, for that the King was utterly routed at Worceſter; the contrary of which he had reported to his Party in that Iſland, and hop'd, if not believ'd himſelf. This Lord hearing of Muddiford's Junction with Ayſcue, march'd up to them with all the Force he could make, but in the Night retreated 2 Miles. Sir George intended to attack him the next Day, and he had done it if extraordinary Rains had not fallen. Willoughby much diſturb'd

Barbadoes

A. D. 1651. ſturb'd by his Lady's Letter ſent to him for a Treaty, in regard his Strength was much the greater, and to prevent the Deſtruction of that goodly Iſland, which was already waſted. Sir George Ayſcue conſented to it, and appointed Commiſſioners to treat with ſuch as he ſhould appoint. For Ayſcue were, Col. Colliton and Col. Muddiford, Mr. Searl and Captain Pack. For the Lord Willoughby were Sir Richard Meriel, Mr. Charles Pym, Col. Ellis, and Major Byam. And they ſoon agreed upon Articles, for the Lord Willoughby knew his Men would not ſtand by him. His Lordſhip, Col. Walrond, and all thoſe Royaliſts who had Eſtates in England were to enjoy them. The Iſlanders were to have Protection for their Perſons, Houſes and Goods, and on theſe Terms were Barbadoes, and all the other Iſlands, deliver'd up to the Commonwealth.

Virginia ſurrender'd

After this Sir George ſail'd to Virginia, having on Board Col. Poyntz Governor of St. Chriſtophers, where the Inhabitants were ready to receive them, ſo far is it from being true, that the Virginians would have had the King come amongſt them, as the Lord Clarendon affirms, and that Sir William Berkley the Governor could defend it againſt any Attempt, which is no more true, than that they had once any Thoughts of reſiſting the Commonwealth when a Force came to ſupport them in their Submiſſion to it, for Mr. George Ludlow, a Relation of General Ludlow's, had a Party ready to declare for the Parliament, and join their Forces with thoſe that came to their Aſſiſtance againſt Berkley, who was in no Condition to oppoſe them. But the Earl of Clarendon can't help it. The Inhabitants of all the Plantations in America depended upon Trade, which is as inconſiſtent with arbitrary Power and Bigotry as Honeſty with Injuſtice. Poyntz was made Governor in the Room of Berkley, and the Name of Poyntz ſhows how groundleſs as well as vain is that Reproach of the Lord Clarendon's, that the Parliament made Tradeſmen Governors inſtead of Gentlemen.

Dutch.

The Commonwealth of England having now reduc'd the whole Britiſh Empire to her Obedience, except a few Banditti in Ireland, not of ſo much Conſequence as the Thieves that generally infeſt the Roads, caſt their Eyes abroad, and the firſt Object which requir'd their Conſideration, was the Republick of the United Provinces, whoſe Conduct, ſince the Eſtabliſhment of the Republick of England, had been very impolitick and unjuſtifiable. In Effect, the true Intereſts of the two States were inſeparable, as they were a Free and a Proteſtant People; and it was very unworthy the Character of the Dutch Nation, for Wiſdom and Warineſs, to give the Parliament ſo many juſt Occaſions of Offence: 'Twas no Excuſe, that the Princeſs of Orange, their Stadtholder's Conſort, was a Princeſs of England, and on her Account they were obliged to ſuffer the Reſidence of her Brothers, and their deſperate Attendants at the Hague, after the Miniſters of England had been murder'd and inſulted there. The States General had no Relation to her, and if Princes have no Concern for Kindred when Intereſt is in Queſtion, much leſs ſhould Republicks have. The Aſſiſtance they had given the King in many Caſes was well known to the Commonwealth of England, and Power crown'd with Victory is not wont to put up ſuch Affronts. Add to this, that the Encroachments of the Dutch in Commerce were not likely to be paſt over by a wiſe and potent Republick, great in Counſels and in Arms, tho' the Buſineſs of the two former Reigns ran ſo much in favour of Spiritual Courts, as would not admit of any Interruption by Trade, Intereſt, or Glory. A. D. 1651.

The Lord Ambaſſador St. John being recall'd, and return'd from Holland, got himſelf to be nam'd one of the four Commiſſioners who were appointed by Parliament to attend the Lord General in his Way from Worceſter to London, and it was obſerv'd that St. John had long and private Conferences with Cromwel on the Road, in which he probably confirm'd Oliver in his Reſolution to break with the Dutch. Cromwel's Quarrel was their Regard for the Houſe of Stuart, whom he mortally hated as Impediments to his own ambitious Views, and the Jealouſy the States General had conceiv'd of the Growth of the Maritime Power of England, made them too careleſs and dilatory in giving the Parliament the Satisfaction they demanded; and the Commonwealth of England taking into Conſideration the great Advantages the Hollanders made of their Navigation, by being the common Carriers, thought it convenient to take off the Engliſh Branch from them, by paſſing the famous Act of Navigation, which was not repeal'd after the Reſtoration, as it might have been, for the ſame Reaſon as Dunkirk was ſold, it paſſing in the Times of Uſurpation, the beſt Argument they had for any Thing of that Kind. By this Act, the moſt advantagious one to England that ever paſs'd in Parliament, No Commodity whatſoever, of the Growth or Manufacture of Aſia, Africa, or America, as well of the Engliſh Plantations as others, ſhall be imported into England, Ireland, or any the Territories thereof, in any Ships or Veſſels, but in ſuch as do truly belong to this Commonwealth, or the Plantations thereof, under Penalty of the Forfeiture of Goods and Veſſels. And of Europe the like, That no Commodities whatſoever of foreign Growth or Manufacture, which are to be brought into this Commonwealth in Ships belonging to the People thereof, ſhall be by them ſhipp'd from any Places, but only from thoſe of the ſaid Growth, Production or Manufacture, or from thoſe Parts where the ſaid Commodities can only be, or uſually have been ſhipp'd for Tranſportation. Inſtead of ſuch uſeful Laws as this, by which England has got, and ſav'd more Money than all the Charge of her Wars from 1640 to 1660 amounted to, we ſhall ſee what rare Acts paſs'd after the Reſtoration of the King and the Earl of Clarendon. The Act of Navigation being a terrible Blow to the Dutch Traffick, they were not ſo forward in concluding the Treaty they deſir'd, as they had been to deſire it, however, as it did but too plainly preſage an approaching Rupture, they diſpatch'd away three or four of the moſt Noble of their Deputies as Ambaſſadors to the Parliament, Mynheer Scappe, Mynheer Parre, Mynheer Catz, the latter a Poet, which is an extraordinary Thing in Holland, who arriv'd at Graveſend in December, and were brought to London by the Maſter of the Ceremonies, in the States Coaches, and three Days after had their Audience in Parliament, introduc'd by the Earl of Salisbury, Sir John Danvers, and Sir Henry Mildmay: The Audience paſt in the Ceremonials, and then the Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke, and other Members, were nominated to confer with their Excellencies on the Subject of their Embaſſy, which was to give Satisfaction to the Commonwealth of England, with reference to their Aſſiſting the King, the Right of fiſhing on the Britiſh Coaſt, and the Sovereignty of the Seas. The two laſt Heads were aſſerted and explain'd with great Strength of Reaſoning by Whitlocke, inſomuch that the Ambaſſadors were

Act of Navigation.

A. D. 1651. more irritated than convinc'd; but as the Succeſs of their Embaſſy was not determin'd in this Year, we ſhall refer it to the next. In the mean time, an Engliſh Man of War meeting with ſome Dutch Fiſhermen on the Britiſh Coaſt, demanded the tenth Herring as an Acknowledgment of the Sovereignty of the Seas, which the Parliament was reſolv'd to aſſert in another manner than had hitherto been done. The Dutch denying it, they fell from Words to Blows, and the Dutchman ſhooting firſt at the Engliſh, the Engliſh Man of War ſunk one of the Dutch Ships, which periſh'd with all her Crew. This was in December, and added to the Reckoning which the Hollanders were to make up.

Scotland. We left Major General Monk in Scotland, where he had little Work upon his Hands. The Parliament nam'd Commiſſioners for the Civil Government of that Kingdom; Lord Chief Juſtice St. John, Sir Henry Vane, jun. Col. Fenwick, —— Titchburn, Eſq; Humphrey Salway, Eſq; Major General Lambert, Major General Monk, Major General Dean; by whom the Affairs of that Nation were very well ſettled, and a Way prepared for uniting it with England.

Ireland. In Ireland the Earl of Clanrickard, who with the pompous Title of Lord Lieutenant govern'd thoſe Iriſh that had not laid down Arms, but kept them rather to rob than fight, apply'd to the Duke of Lorraine, who being driven out of his own Country, liv'd upon a little mercenary Army which he lent to the Spaniards in the Netherlands, and now pretended to aſſiſt the Iriſh with it. Another fine Scheme of the deſponding Cavaliers, to negotiate with a Prince for Aſſiſtance, who could or would not ſtir a Step without Money, and they had none to give him.

As to the Civil Government this Year, the Parliament had a Project to reduce the Receipts of the Publick Money into one Office, for the Cheapneſs of Collection. They alſo nam'd a Committee to conſider what Inconveniences there are in the Law, how the Miſchiefs which grow from Delays, the Chargeableneſs and Irregularities in the Proceedings of the Law may be prevented. This Committee were Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, Sir William Roberts, Matthew Hale, Eſq; Mr. Steel, Mr. Cook, Mr. Maneby, Mr. Sadler, Sir Henry Blunt, Mr. Berners, John Ruſhworth, Eſq; Dr. Turner, Major General Desborough, Col. Thomlinſon, Col. Blunt, Sergeant Fountain, Alderman Fowke, Mr. Moyer, Major Packer, Mr. Meltwolde, Mr. Manſell, Mr. Sparrow, Dr. Walker. This Committee met ſeveral Times, and deſir'd the Judges in the ſeveral Courts to return to them a Liſt of the Officers in their Courts, and what Fees they receive, and what Work they do for them. A Project of excellent Uſe, and fit for the Wiſdom of the Nation to bring to Perfection. The Parliament alſo put down the Marſhals Court, which has ever ſince it was reſtor'd been an intolerable Grievance to the People in and about London. And the State being now pretty well fix'd, it was thought proper to ſtrengthen its Foundation by a new Repreſentative of the People, which were to be ſtill the Commonwealth of England. A grand Committee ſate on this grand Affair in October, and ſo ſeveral Times after, to make Proviſion for a Succeſſion of Members of the ſame Principles, as well as human Prudence could provide for it. They paſs'd the Act for the Increaſe of Shipping, and Encouragement of Navigation, before-mention'd, and another appointing Dr. Clarke, Dr. Exton, and Dr. Stevens, to be Judges of the Admiralty; but the great Buſineſs was debated in a Cabal by Cromwel's Appointment, at which aſſiſted Oliver Cromwel, Eſq; Captain General, William Lenthal, Eſq; Speaker, Sir Thomas Widdrington, Lord Chief Juſtice St. John, Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke, Major General Harriſon, Col. Whaley, Colonel Desborough, Col. Fleetwood.

Committee of Law.

A. D. 1651. Cabal.

Oliver open'd the Conference with a Propoſal, That the old King being dead, and his Son defeated, he held it neceſſary to come to a Settlement of the Nation. Here he diſcover'd himſelf. The Nation was ſettled in a Commonwealth, if he alter'd the Government, it would doubtleſs be for Monarchy, and who then would be the Monarch was eaſy to be underſtood. The Speakers were in the following Order.

William Lenthal, Eſq; "My Lord, this Company are very ready to attend your Excellency, "and the Buſineſs you are pleas'd to propound "to us is very neceſſary to be conſider'd. God "hath given marvellous Succeſs to our Forces "under your Command, and if we do not improve theſe Mercies to ſome Settlement, ſuch "as may be to God's Honour, we ſhall be very "blame-worthy.

By Settlement Lenthal means his Excellency, and Cromwel is ſure of him when he thinks fit to make uſe of him.

M. G. Harriſon. "I think that which my "Lord General hath propounded, is to adviſe "to a Settlement both of our civil and ſpiritual "Liberties, and ſo that the Mercies which the "Lord hath given in to us may not be caſt away. "How this may be done is the great Queſtion.

Harriſon is not entirely at Cromwel's Devotion, and ſhew'd by his future Conduct that he was Republican, or rather Enthuſiaſtical.

Whitlocke. "It is a great Queſtion indeed, "and not ſuddenly to be reſolv'd, yet it were "Pity that a Meeting of ſo many able and worthy Perſons ſhould be fruitleſs. I ſhould "humbly offer, in the firſt Place, whether it be "not requiſite to be underſtood in what Way "this Settlement is deſired, whether of any abſolute Republick, or with any Mixture of Monarchy.

Whitlocke gives the firſt Hint of Cromwel's Protectorſhip, and Oliver takes hold of the Opportunity to introduce it.

Cromwel. "My Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke hath put us upon the right Point; and "indeed it is my Meaning we ſhould conſider "whether a Republick, or a mix'd monarchical "Government, will be beſt to be ſettled; and "if any thing monarchical, then in whom that "Power ſhall be plac'd.

There he comes to the Point indeed, and there can be no Anſwer to that Queſtion but himſelf.

Sir T. Widdrington. "I think a mix'd monarchical Government will be moſt ſuitable to "the Laws and People of this Nation; and if "any monarchical, I ſuppoſe we ſhall hold it "moſt juſt to place that Power in one of the "Sons of the late King.

Col. Fleetwood. "I think that the Queſtion, "Whether an abſolute Republick, or a mix'd "Monarchy, be beſt to be ſettled in this "Nation? will not be very eaſy to be determin'd.

Lord Chief Juſtice St. John. "It will be "found that the Government of this Nation, "without ſomething of monarchical Power, will "be very difficult to be ſo ſettled, as not to "ſhake the Foundation of the Laws, and the "Liberties of the People.

A. D. 1651. William Lenthal, Esq; " It will breed a " strange Confusion to settle a Government of " this Nation, without something of Monarchy.

Col. Desborough. " I beseech you, my Lord, " why may not this, as well as other Nations, be " govern'd by Way of a Republick.

Whitlocke. " The Laws of England are so in- " terwoven with the Power and Practice of Mo- " narchy, that to settle a Government without " something of Monarchy, would make so great " an Alteration in the Proceedings of our Law, " that you have scarce Time to rectify, nor can " we well foresee the Inconveniencies which will " arise thereby.

Col. Whaley. " I do not well understand Mat- " ters of Law, but it seems to me to be the " best Way not to have any thing of monarchical " Power in the Settlement of our Government; " and if we should resolve upon any, whom have " we to pitch upon? The King's eldest Son hath " been in Arms against us, and his second Son " is likewise our Enemy.

Sir Thomas Widdrington. " But the late King's " third Son, the Duke of Glouceſter, is still a- " mongst us, and too young to have been in " Arms against us, or infected with the Princi- " ples of our Enemies.

Whitlocke. " There may be a Day given for " the King's eldest Son, or for the Duke of York " his Brother, to come in to the Parliament, and " upon such Terms as shall be thought fit and " agreeable both to our civil and spiritual Li- " berties: A Settlement may be made with " them.

Cromwel. " That will be a Business of more " than ordinary Difficulty; but really I think, if " it may be done with Safety and Preservation " of our Rights, both as Englishmen and as " Christians, that a Settlement with somewhat " of monarchical Power in it would be very ef- " fectual.

The mentioning of any of the late King's Children is the Farce that's play'd here, for not one of the Cabal had any such Desire. The Lawyers St. John, Lenthal, Whitlocke, Widdrington, who were for monarchical Government, were all Creatures of Cromwel's, and meant the Power not the Person.

The Republick was now courted by all Nations. Besides Ambassadors from Spain and Portugal, there were others from Sweden, from Denmark, from the Hanse Towns, from Venice, from Florence, and other Princes and States. The Council of State sometimes wrote Letters in the Name of the Commonwealth, as this to the Doge of Venice, Serenissimo Principi Venetiarum Duci; Senatuique Celsissimo Consilium Status, Parliamenti Reipublicæ Angliæ, Authoritate constitutum. Salutem ex mandato Parliamenti. Serenissime Princeps, Celsissime Senatus Amici Charissimi. The Council of State, established by the Authority of the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England, to the most serene Prince the Doge and the most high Senate of Venice. By Command of the Parliament. Most serene Prince, most high Senate, our most dear Friends, &c. This Letter recommended to them James Dickons and Job Throgmorton, who had met with some Injustice in the Courts of that Republick. Leti informs us, that about the latter End of this Year the following Bishops had a private Meeting at London; Dr. William Pierce Bishop of Bath and Wells, Dr. Henry King Bishop of Chichester, Dr. Roger Maynwaring Bishop of St. David's, Dr. Matthew Wren Bishop of Ely, Dr. Ralph Brownrigg Bishop of Exeter, Dr. George Cook Bishop of Hereford, Dr. Morgan Owen Bishop of Landaff, Dr. Thomas Wyniffe Bishop of Lincoln, Dr. Joseph Hall Bishop of Norwich, Dr. Robert Skinner Bishop of Oxford, Dr. John Warner Bishop of Rochester, Dr. Brian Duppa Bishop of Salisbury, Dr. Walter Curl Bishop of Winchester, Dr. John Prideaux Bishop of Worcester, Dr. Barnaby Potter Bishop of Carliſle, Dr. Richard Parry Bishop of Man. Dr. William Juxon Bishop of London refus'd to be at their Meeting, either believing it would signify nothing, or fearing to give Offence to the then Government, as my Author says; and that the Prelates thought it too much to lose all at once, their Flocks, their Dignities, their Churches, their Revenues, which, continues he, tho' a Papist, netoient pas peutestre l'Article que leur tenoit le moins au cœur, were not perhaps the Article they had least at Heart. The Pretence for their assembling was to use all their Interest by their Friends in and out of Parliament, to get Part of their Lands reserv'd for their Subsistence as long as they liv'd. Harrison discover'd this Meeting, and inform'd Cromwel of it, and he the Council of State. One of the Members mov'd immediately, that they should be all seiz'd, imprison'd, and punish'd as Disturbers of the Publick Peace; but Cromwel, who wanted Tools among all Parties, and affected great Moderation to get in with the Royalists, was contented with breaking up the Assembly, and letting them know, That they must disperse at the Instant, and quit London in eight and forty Hours, and if ever they took upon them the Function of Bishops, the Title or Office, they should be proceeded against as Traytors; which was enough to send them down into the Country again faster than they came up. Such is the Story in Gregorio Leti, but what Foundation he had for it we know not, and do very much suspect his Authority.

P. 234. Meeting of Bishops.

A. D. 1651.

We left the King at Paris just arriv'd there after the Rout at Worcester, and in so miserable a Condition, that he had hardly Necessaries for his Subsistence as a Gentleman, much less a Prince. His Credit was so low, that the Earl of Clarendon owns he could not raise 20 Pistoles upon it. The Cardinal de Retz, in his Memoirs, makes it still worse. The Lord Taaf, Envoy from the Irish Rebels to the Duke of Lorraine, was his Great Chamberlain, Valet de Chambre, Clerk of the Kitchen, Cup-bearer and all, an Equipage answerable to his Court, for his Majesty had not chang'd his Shirt all the Way from England. Indeed upon his Arrival at Paris he had one lent him by the Lord Jermyn, but the Queen his Mother had not Money to buy him another for the next Day. The Duke of Orleans paid him a Complement upon his Arrival, but Monsr. de Retz tells us he could not prevail with the Duke to give his Nephew one Penny: A little, he said, would not be worth his Acceptance, and a great deal would engage him to do as much more. De Retz propos'd to his Royal Highness to lend the King of England 1000 Pistoles, and was asham'd that he could not perswade him to do it, so he himself borrow'd 1500 of Monsieur Morangis and carry'd them to the Lord Taaf. The Cardinal adds, " 'Tis re- " markable that the same Night, as I was going " home, I met one Tilney an Englishman, " whom I had formerly known at Rome, who " told me that Vere, a great Parliamentarian, " and a Favourite of Cromwel, was arriv'd at " Paris, and had Orders to see me. I was a " little perplex'd, however I thought it would " be improper to refuse him an Interview. He " gave me a Letter from Cromwel in the Na- " ture of Credentials, importing, That the Sen- " timents I had discover'd in the Defence of Pub-

" lick Liberty added to my Reputation, and had " induc'd him to enter into the ſtricteſt Friend- " ſhip with me. It was a moſt civil complai- " ſant Letter, and I anſwer'd it with a great " deal of Reſpect, but in ſuch a Manner as be- " came a true Catholick and an honeſt French " Man." Vere appear'd to be a Man of ſurpri- ſing Abilities; and the Truth is, neither Oliver nor the Commonwealth employ'd Fools, but Mazarine and the moſt able Politicians in France, had a very mean Opinion of the Counſellors whom King Charles had about him, notwithſtanding the Earl of Clarendon was chief of them. It is the Fate of this Prince, ſaid the Cardinal, that he neither knows how to chuſe for himſelf, nor has any one near him that is able to adviſe him. For by all this King's Father's Actions, and by all his own, one may ſee that ſuch Heads were never put upon the Shoulders of Men who were fit to make Miniſters and Counſellors. He never had the leaſt Proſpect of recovering his Dominions but by the Aſſiſtance of the Presbyterians. Thoſe who took Arms for him in Scotland, and who join'd his Scots Army in England, were Presbyterians. The Queen, his Mother, though a bigotted Papiſt, was ſo ſenſible of it, that ſhe would fain have had him to have gone to the Presbyterian Meeting at Charenton near Paris; and the Lord Clarendon makes it his Boaſt, that he was the Perſon who diſſwaded the King from going to the Proteſtant Church there, for which, and other the like Reaſons, Cardinal Mazarine might well paſs that homely Compliment on his Majeſty's Counſellors, who now alſo advis'd him to offer his Service to the Dutch, about to have War with England, and that he would go aboard their Fleet, to ſtir up the People to an Inſurrection againſt that Commonwealth; a Project that a leſs Degree of Genius than Machiavel's was, would never have mention'd to the States, whatever Subject it might have made for Diſcourſe in the King's Cabinet. Could any Thing be more obvious than that their entring into ſuch a League with him muſt neceſſarily engage them in his Quarrel, which they by no Means intended? His Condition could hardly be made worſe by any Change, and theirs might one Time or other be much mended by a Peace with England on reaſonable Terms, and they could expect none when they had taken him into their Protection. The Court of France was then at Variance with the Princes, and the Parliament of Paris, about the removing Mazarine from the prime or indeed the ſole Miniſtry. The Prince of Conde had ſent for the Spaniards and the Duke of Lorraine to aſſiſt the Princes, and there were two foreign Armies in the Neighbourhood of Paris, ready to join them. Upon which King Charles was prevail'd with to try what he could do with the Duke of Lorraine by Perſwaſion, and whether it was that the latter was doubtful of the Iſſue of a War with France, or had received ſome Promiſes from that Court by King Charles, which render'd his Retreat more advantagious than he cou'd expect his Stay would be, the Duke of Lorraine, after a Conference with the King of England, broke up, and left the Princes to end the Matter as well as they could. This Mediation is much talk'd of, but it had ſo ill an Effect on the Minds of the Citizens of Paris, who were in the Intereſts of the Princes, that the King, Queen-Mother of England, and Duke of York, were not ſafe in the Louvre. The Prince of Conde got them a Guard out of it to a certain Diſtance, where a Party of the King's Troops receiv'd them, and convey'd them to St. Germains. The King of England's Penſion from his Uncle Lewis the Thirteenth was about 6000 Pounds a Year, as we read in the Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory, and the Greedineſs of his Followers to divide that ſmall Pittance amongſt them, and their Quarrels about Honours and Places in England, being exactly the Bargain of the Bearskin, are other Proofs of the Truth of Cardinal Mazarine's Saying of them.

A. D. 1652.

We have hinted the Beginning of the Rupture between the two Republicks, England and the United Provinces. Warwick ſays it was the firſt War the Parliament made with their elder Brother Commonwealth, that of Holland, but that is not the worſt Example of his Skill in Elocution. A poorer Author ſtill than he knew better than that, they reſolv'd to quarrel with their Siſter Commonwealth. The Dutch ſtomaching the Navigation Act, which began to pinch them, and frighten'd at the Demand for Damages ſuffer'd by the Engliſh at Amboynes in the Eaſt Indies, for which neither King James nor King Charles I. could procure any Satisfaction, and for other Damages during their Reigns, and ſince that, ſaw a War would be inevitable unleſs they would comply with the Demand, and accordingly they prepar'd for it. The Right of the Flag was not diſputed, becauſe the Engliſh Ships were not the King's, as the Earl of Clarendon pretends; but becauſe there were other very important Articles to be ſettled for concluding a Peace, and they were not willing to allow that unleſs all the reſt were agreed upon, for ſtriking the Flag would not then have put off the Concluſion of that Treaty a Minute. The Parliament had Notice from Time to Time of great Preparations making in Holland towards equipping a Fleet, and in May their Admiral Van Tromp, with about 42 Sail of Men of War was diſcover'd on the Back of the Goodwin Sands by Major Bourne, who commanded a Squadron of 8 Engliſh Ships. The Dutch bore towards Dover Road, upon which the Greyhound Frigat was commanded to make Sail and ſpeak with them, which ſhe did, and then they ſtruck their Topſail. The Capt. of the Greyhound demanded to know, why they came in ſuch a Fleet on our Coaſts in Time of Treaty. Two or Three of the Dutch Commanders came aboard the Greyhound, and ſaid, they had a Meſſage from Admiral Tromp to the Commander in chief of the Engliſh Fleet. That the northerly Winds having blown hard ſeveral Days they were forc'd further Southward than they intended, and having rode for ſome Days off Dunkirk, they had loſt divers Cables and Anchors, profeſſing they meant no Injury to the Engliſh Nation. As yet there has been no other Act of Hoſtility than that of the Engliſh Men of War examining the Dutch about their Fiſhing on the Britiſh Coaſt, which Debate might have been ended by Treaty, and Ambaſſadors were come from the States General to the Parliament for that purpoſe, but before Matters were ſettled here is a great Fleet of Dutch Men of War almoſt at the Mouth of the River of Thames, defying the Maritime Power of England, and provoking the Engliſh to War. General Blake, with the reſt of the Fleet, was to the Weſtward when Major Bourne ſpy'd the Dutch on the Back of the Goodwin Sands; the latter immediately ſent him Advice of it, and Blake made what haſte he could to ply towards them.

Dutch War.

On the 19th of May in the Morning he ſaw them at Anchor about Dover Road, and being within 3 Leagues of them they weigh'd and ſtood to the Eaſtward, where an Advice Boat from Holland came up with them, and ſoon after Admiral Van Tromp made all the Sail he could could towards General Blake, and bore down directly upon our Fleet, Van Tromp being the Headmoſt. Upon which Blake ſhot a firſt, ſecond and third Gun at Tromp without a Ball, a Signal for him to ſtrike; to which the Dutch Admiral anſwer'd with a Gun from his Poop, and hung out a red Flag, the Signal for his whole Fleet: Blake took it right, and fingled out Tromp to treat with him about his refuſing the Point of Honour to the Engliſh, and prevent, if poſſible, the Effuſion of Blood: But when he drew near the Dutch Ships, they fir'd many hundred Shot at him, contrary, ſays Whitlocke, to the Law of Nations. Blake's Ship being the Headmoſt alſo of his Fleet, was by this Means for ſome Time engag'd ſingly with the Dutch, who had above two Ships to his one when they were all join'd: However the Engliſh maintain'd the Fight with the Dutch Fleet four Hours, till Nine at Night, when they were oblig'd by the Darkneſs to give over; and the Dutch made over to the French Coaſts. Blake's Ship receiv'd 1000 Shot in her Hull: All her Rigging was torn to pieces, and ſhe had ſeveral Shot alſo between Wind and Water. The Engliſh took one Dutch Man of War, and ſunk another. The Dutch Priſoners confeſs'd that Tromp's hanging out the red Flag was a Signal for them to fall upon the Engliſh. Upon News of this Engagement, the Parliament order'd a Guard to be ſet on the Dutch Ambaſſadors Houſe at Chelſey, to defend them from the Aſſaults of the enrag'd Multitude; and General Cromwel, and Mr. Dennis Bond went down to the Fleet to aſſure General Blake of all poſſible Aſſiſtance from the Republick; he wanted no Exhortation. His whole Soul was engag'd in the Cauſe of his Country; and as to his Courage and Conduct, they were never once objected againſt in the whole Courſe of his Service, which laſted ſixteen or ſeventeen Years. He had a Contempt for Riches, which was the more glorious; for that he acquir'd more Riches for the Commonwealth than all other Admirals whom I ever heard of; and as to Honour he had no Reliſh of any that center'd not in ſerving the Publick. Blake detach'd Capt. Peacock and Capt. Taylor to look out the Dutch Fleet, which had been refitted with great Diligence and Diſpatch, as was his own alſo. Theſe two Captains met with two Dutch Men of War on the Coaſts of Flanders, who again refuſing to ſtrike to them, another Engagement commenc'd and prov'd a very ſharp one. The Engliſh boarded one of the Dutch Men of War, and took all her Officers and Seamen, but the Ship was ſo ſhatter'd ſhe could not ſwim. The other Ship ran her ſelf upon the Sands to avoid being taken. The next Day, June the 13th, the Parliament receiv'd Letters from General Blake, that he having Intimation of a Fleet of Hollanders near the Downs, making towards the North, ſent out a Squadron to diſcover them, and they brought in 26 Sail of Merchant Ships laden, with three Men of War, their Convoy. The General, for ſo is Blake term'd in Hiſtory, and ſo were the other Admirals in the Time of the Republick, ſail'd to the Weſt; and having ſcower'd the Channel, came again to Dover Road, where he was join'd by Sir George Ayſcue. His Fleet now conſiſted of about 100 Men of War, and there were two Regiments put on Board them. The States General could not but expect the Effects of their intended Rupture after the Orders they had given their Admirals not to ſtrike; but the ill Succeſs of Van Tromp, when he had above 40 Men of War, and Blake no more than 21, terribly allarm'd them, and they immediately diſpatch'd the Lord Paw to join with their other Ambaſſadors in England, and procure a Continuation of the Treaty, and a Diſcharge of the Priſoners, pretending that the Quarrel was begun by General Blake, or that at leaſt what Tromp did, was not by their Orders. The Lord Paw was receiv'd with all uſual Demonſtrations of Honour; and being admitted to Audience, preſs'd for an Accommodation of all Differences, and a Ceſſation of all Acts of Hoſtility between the two Nations, aſſuring the Parliament, his Maſters had given Orders to their Ships to ſtrike to the Engliſh Flag in the ſame Manner as had been practis'd in former Times. But being demanded to ſhew his Powers, he produc'd only Letters of Credence and Paſſports, referring himſelf to the other Ambaſſadors in that Point, with whom he made ſome general Propoſitions to the Parliament, and deſir'd them to declare their Demands. The Houſe perceiving by theſe Proceedings of the Dutch, that the Differences were not likely to be accommodated by Treaty, contented themſelves with requiring Satisfaction for the Injuries receiv'd, and Aſſurance that nothing of that Nature ſhould be attempted for the future, which if the Ambaſſadors would conſent to, they declar'd themſelves ready to proceed in the Treaty, and grant a Ceſſation of Arms. But ſo little were the Dutch diſpos'd to give the Satisfaction demanded, that they made no farther Mention of the Ceſſation, which they had ſo earneſtly preſs'd; and having taken a haſty Audience of Leave, broke off the Treaty abruptly, and return'd home.

Dutch Ambaſſadors depart.

In the mean Time General Blake was very watchful in forwarding the Work he was employ'd about, and leaving Sir George Ayſcue with the Fleet on the Coaſt of England, himſelf with about 40 Men of War ſail'd Northward, as far as the Dutch Fiſhery, off the Coaſt of Scotland. There were about 600 Herring Buſſes under Convoy of 12 Men of War, which were attack'd by the Engliſh of Blake's Fleet, three of them ſunk and nine taken. Blake took all the Fiſh and let the Dutch carry off their Buſſes, which he had not Hands to Man himſelf; and though Ludlow thinks the Buſſes ſhould have been kept to have ſet up an Engliſh Fiſhery; yet the many Projects of that Kind ſince, which have all miſcarry'd, ſhew that no ſuch Uſe could have then been made of them, though probably more might have been done under this Government than thoſe that came after it. The Dutch thinking to make an Advantage of the Diviſion of the Engliſh Fleet, watch'd the Motions of Sir George Ayſcue, who having taken ten Flemiſh Ships, between Dover and Calais, and ran twenty a Shore, ſail'd Weſtward to ſeek out the Dutch Fleet, which he had no certain Intelligence of, or he would not have ſought them, they having ſixty Sail and he but thirty eight, with which he ſtood after them over to the Coaſt of France, where he met them on the 16th of Auguſt, under the Command of the renown'd De Ruyter. Sir George, notwithſtanding the Inequality of the Numbers, began the Fight about Four in the Afternoon, and his Ship with ſix other Men of War, charg'd through the whole Body of the Enemy's Fleet, receiving much Damage in their Hulls, Maſts, Sails, and Rigging; yet did they tack about, weather them, and charge them again, continuing thus engag'd in the Body of the Enemy's Fleet till it was dark Night; and had the reſt of the Engliſh Captains perform'd their Parts as well as Sir George Ayſcue, this great Duth Fleet had in all likelihood been totally routed. Ayſcue loſt but one Ship, a Fire-ſhip, which ſet her ſelf on Fire, being ready to ſink.

Blake takes 600 Sale of Herring Buſſes.

Sir George Ayſcue fights De Ruyter.

A. D. 1652.

ſink. De Ruyter loſt two Ships, the one ſunk and the other burnt: His whole Fleet was ſo damag'd that he thought not fit to engage again the next Day, but made home as faſt as he could. In this Engagement Capt. Pack's Leg was ſhot off, and he died ſoon after; Capt. Liſle and Capt Witheredge were wounded. Both Sides had many Men kill'd and wounded, and this Fight was the ſmarteſt that had been then known in our Seas. A few Days after Capt. Pen met with a Dutch Man of War, and ſix Merchant Men richly laden, who yielded without ſtriking a Stroke; whether it was that Van Tromp did not like this Beginning of the War, or that the States did not like him, as being a Creature of the late Prince of Orange, he deſir'd to lay down his Commiſſion, and an Enemy of the Houſe of Orange, De Wit, was put in his Place.

Blake takes a French Fleet.

In the Beginning of September, the Engliſh Fleet, under General Blake, riding in the Downs, the General receiv'd Intelligence of a French Fleet on the Coaſts of France; upon which he weigh'd Anchor and ſtood over: He ſpy'd them in Calais Road, and they ſpying him, weigh'd and ſail'd towards Dunkirk; Blake purſu'd them as far as he could for the Sands, and took moſt of them, among the reſt,

The Triton, 32 Guns, commanded by the Chevalier de Verdiel, in which was Monſieur Bimulet, Admiral of this Fleet.

The Shepherd, 30 Guns, commanded by the Chevalier Boiſmerant.

The Gift of God, 30 Guns, commanded by the Chevalier de la Charte.

The Dutcheſs, 32 Guns, commanded by Monſieur de la Roch.

The Creſcent, 26 Guns, commanded by Monſieur De la Vel Dean.

The Hunter, 22 Guns, commanded by Monſieur De la Gicleek.

The St. Lewis, 28 Guns, commanded by Monſieur De la Gory.

The ——— 8 Guns.

Six Fire Ships, and ſeveral Tranſports.

This Fleet was order'd to take in Warlike Stores and Proviſions at Calais, for the Relief of Dunkirk; but being thus intercepted by the Engliſh, the Dunkirkers deſpairing of being reliev'd, ſurrender'd the Town to the Spaniards, and the like did the Garriſon of Graveline. And now the French Court began to be truly ſenſible of their Weakneſs in harbouring the Princes of England, and their Retainers, which, and ſome Inſults at Sea had drawn upon them the Reſentments of the Parliament of England, who ſuffer'd no Power to protect their Enemies, without Chaſtiſement, and made thoſe that preſum'd to do it repent ſeverely of their Folly.

France out of Complacency to the Daughter of Henry IV. now Queen Mother of England, had avoided ſending an Ambaſſador to the Commonwealth, but preſently upon this Blow ſhe diſpatch'd one of her moſt able Miniſters to give Satisfaction, and to make her Peace with the Republick; after which we ſhall ſoon ſee that the Princes of England, the Lord High Chancellor of England, and Sir Edward Hyde, Chancellor of the Exchequer, &c. will be perſwaded to withdraw themſelves from that Court, though as yet there is no other prepar'd to receive them.

Engliſh Fugitives miſchievous abroad.

Before we proceed in this Story, let us reflect a little on the Miſchiefs the Princes of England and their fugitive Train have brought upon the Nations, whom they deluded with falſe Repreſentations of their Party and Intereſt in England, of which many Inſtances are to be given. Prince Rupert firſt impos'd himſelf on the Spaniards and then on the Pourtugueſe. How the latter paid for it, out of their Braſile Fleets, and how the former have and will pay for it, and for their entertaining thoſe Princes and their Followers, has been and will ſtill be ſeen in this Hiſtory. Theſe Nations were fed with Hopes that the baniſh'd Heroes who could not keep an Inch of Ground in Great Britain, with the Help of numerous Armies, who were all beaten and ſuppreſs'd, would conquer their Conquerors without Men, Arms, Ships, Money, or any Thing to help them. France has paid part of her Reckoning for ſheltering them; and Holland's being a longer Account will be longer a clearing. England was to riſe for them as ſoon as ever they could throw a Cable a-ſhore; and though the Nations had this fair Example to ſhun the like Deception hereafter; yet how have the falſe Reports of the Succeſſors of thoſe Fugitives, following the Fortunes of one of thoſe Princes, the abdicated King, impos'd on France, to the Expence of above 100 Millions Sterling, and on Spain to an Expence and Loſs which ſhe does not yet know the End of, and can hope for no End to it but by entirely renouncing all League with ſuch Vagabonds, and entring heartily into Friendſhip with England.

A. D. 1652.

The Behaviour of the Dutch.

The Dutch depended much on the Diſturbances and Perplexities the Royaliſts would raiſe in England. We have ſeen that they ſet out in this War with unexpected Gallantry, and before Van Tromp defy'd the Engliſh Admiral, they held their Heads very high in Holland. Soon after they publiſh'd their Declaration of War, a Medal was ſtruck; on one Side was repreſented a Female Warrior, by which was underſtood that Republick's having on her Spear the Cap, which is the Emblem of Liberty, ſurrounded with ſeven Eſcutcheons, with the Arms of the ſeven Provinces. On the Reverſe was a Rock in the Middle of the Sea beaten by the Waves, the Winds blowing a Tempeſt upon it from every Quarter, and round it this Latin Verſe,

Ut Rupes Immota, Mari ſtant fœdere Juncti:

United like a Rock amidſt the Sea
She ſtands, unmov'd by furious Waves and Winds.

The Dutch were extremely pleas'd with this Medal, but that Pleaſure laſted no longer than till the News arriv'd of their firſt Defeat.

General Blake defeats the Dutch Fleet.

On the 27th of September General Blake diſcover'd the Dutch Fleet again off the Goodwyn Sands. He was juſt return'd from the Weſt, where he had taken five Dutch Weſt India and ſix Straits Ships, valued at 200000 Pounds. He divided his Fleet into three Squadrons, one commanded by himſelf, another by Vice-Admiral Pen, and the third by Rear-Admiral Bourn. Next Day General Blake bore down upon them till he came within three Fathom Water on the Kentiſh Knock. The Sovereign, in which was the General, the Reſolution, and the St. Andrew, Firſt Rates, were aground on the Knock, but got off preſently without any Harm, and fell in among the Enemy, whom they fought with Advantage till Night parted them. The Dutch ſtaid to Leeward of the Engliſh, as if they intended another Engagement. Next Morning at Day-break they were ſeen about two Leagues to the North-Eaſt of the Engliſh, who, tho' the Wind was but little and ſhifting, bore after them all the Forenoon, till the Wind coming to North and by Weſt, hinder'd their getting up with the Enemy. Upon which the General order'd der'd his nimbleſt Frigates to keep as cloſe to them as poſſible, and ply them with their Guns as faſt as they could come up with them, to give Time for the reſt of the Fleet to advance. The Frigates got up with the Dutch Men of War, and the latter fearing the reſt of the Fleet would do the ſame, ſet up their Main Sails, and ran for it. Ten Frigates of General Blake's Fleet purſuing them, and a freſh Gale ſpringing up next Day, September the 30th, the whole Fleet purſu'd them in Sight of Weſt Gabel in Zealand, and ſaw them run into the Goree. The Engliſh Fleet could follow them no further for the Shallowes. The Number of Ships on each Side was about 60. Three of the Dutch were wholly diſabled at the firſt Brunt, and another, the Rear-Admiral, was taken by Capt. Mildmay in the Nonſuch as ſhe was towing off. She ſunk ſoon after, and the Officers and Sailors were put aboard Engliſh Ships. About 40 Engliſhmen were kill'd and as many wounded, which was the moſt of their Loſs.

Capt. Bodilo fights the Dutch in the Streights.

During theſe Tranſactions, the Squadron under Command of Capt. Bodilo in the Mediterranean, conſiſting of the Paragon, the Phœnix, the Conſtant Warwick, and the Elizabeth, having under Convoy three Engliſh Turkey Ships, met with eleven Sail of Dutch Men of War, near the Iſland of Corſica, under Admiral Van Galen, who preſently came up with the Engliſh, and began an Engagement, but Night coming on, parted them. Next Morning the Dutch renew'd the Fight, and were as warmly receiv'd as the Day before, and as can be imagin'd from ſo ſmall a Number. One of the Dutch Ships took Fire, the Main-top Maſts of two others were ſhot down. The Phœnix, of 44 Guns, was clap'd on board by a heavy Dutch Ship full of Men, who overpower'd the Engliſh and took her. This Prize was the Subject of much Boaſt in Holland, tho' there was no great Need of it. The Dutch paid for it dearly, their Admiral Van Galen being kill'd, and got it by their Numbers, the Engliſh not giving out ſo long as they had Men and Ammunition. The Paragon had 27 kill'd and 60 wounded, the Elizabeth had but two Barrels of Powder, the Conſtant Warwick was in no better Condition, yet they got ſafely with their Merchant Ships into Porto Longone. Nor did the Dutch keep their Prize long, for the Dutch Fleet putting afterwards into Leghorn, Captain Cox, who commanded an Engliſh Man of War, mann'd out two Boats of brave Britons, boarded the Phœnix, and brought her off. The Officers, among whom was young Van Tromp, afterwards ſo famous, making their Eſcapes out of the Cabbin Windows.

The Dane.

The Parliament ſent Capt. Ball, with a Squadron of Men of War, to Elſinore, to demand of the King of Denmark Reſtitution of ſeveral Engliſh Merchant-Ships detain'd in his Ports, which being loaden with Naval Stores, were very much wanted to carry on this Naval War; but the King of Denmark being then privately treating with the Dutch to join in a League againſt the Commonwealth, refus'd to reſtore them, and ſold the Ships Cargoes, tho' he had promis'd Capt. Ball to ſecure them for the Proprietors. The Engliſh in their Return home took a Dutch Man of War and 20 Buſſes. Denmark would not join with the Dutch, but on Condition Van Tromp was reſtor'd to the Command of their Fleet, which was done, and the Dane ſent 20 Men of War to the Aſſiſtance of the Hollanders, who were to pay him one Million of Guilders.

In November the Dutch Admiral Van Tromp, with 110 Men of War, beſides Fireſhips, being join'd by 17 Men of War from Zealand, ſail'd from the Goree, with Orders to convoy out of the Channel near 500 Merchant Ships, bound for France, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Barbary, and the Levant, and to take all Advantages he could of the Engliſh. Moſt of the Dutch Merchant Ships were by Streſs of Weather and contrary Winds driven back to their Harbours, but their Men of War kept out at Sea; and Van Tromp having receiv'd Advice that General Blake had ſent 20 of his Ships to convoy a Fleet of laden Colliers from Newcaſtle, 12 towards Plymouth, and 15 up the River to refit, came into the Downs with 80 Men of War, Blake having with him but 37: Notwithſtanding which Diſparity of Number, Blake, with the Approbation of a Council of War, reſolv'd to fight the Dutch Fleet. Accordingly he engag'd them about Noon, November the 29th, and the Fight continu'd till it was dark. In this Fight, half of the Engliſh Fleet, as ſmall as it was, came not up, pretending Want of Men, inſomuch that a few Ships bore the Brunt of the Battle with the whole Dutch Fleet. The Vanguard and the Victory engag'd 20 of them from the firſt of the Fight to the laſt, and yet got clear of them all. In the Evening the Garland, a 40 Gun Ship, was boarded by two Dutch Flags, and after ſhe had blown up her Decks, for want of Men, was taken. The Bonadventure, a Merchant Man, attempting to relieve the Garland, was boarded, yet clear'd her Decks ſeveral Times, but the Captain being kill'd, ſhe was alſo taken. General Blake going in the Triumph to relieve the Garland, had his Fore-top Maſt ſhot by the Board, was twice boarded, and yet got off, as did all the reſt except the Bonadventure and Garland. Two other Ships, both Merchant Men, fell into the Enemy's Hand. General Blake retreated to Lee Road to be recruited with Ships and Men. One of the Dutch Flags was blown up, and both Van Tromp and De Ruyter's Ships were very much damag'd. However, the former was ſo elated with this little Succeſs, owing entirely to the Superiority of Number, that he order'd a Broom to be fix'd to his Main-top, ſaying, He would ſweep the Britiſh Seas of all Engliſh Men of War; but he was himſelf ſwept out of the World in the next Battle, and full Vengeance taken for the ſmall Affront which General Blake receiv'd in this.

A. D. 1652.

Brit. Triumph.

The Parliament having receiv'd Information of the Misbehavionr of ſome Officers in the late Engagement, appointed a Committee, of which Sir Henry Vane, jun. John Carew, Eſq; and Major Salway, were the principal, to examine into their Conduct, impowering them to place and diſplace Officers, and regulate all Matters relating to the Marine. Theſe Commiſſioners us'd ſuch Care and Diligence in Diſcharge of their Truſt, that the Face of Affairs ſoon became much alter'd for the better, a conſiderable Fleet put to Sea well officer'd and well mann'd. The Magazines were plentifully provided, and thirty Ships put upon the Stocks; and, to ſtrengthen themſelves againſt the Dane, the Parliament ſent the Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke on an extraordinary Embaſſy to the Court of Sweden, where he was receiv'd with all the Honours due to his Character.

Scotland.

Monk was recall'd from Scotland about the latter End of the Year to aſſiſt General Blake aboard the Fleet, there being nothing of Conſequence left for him to do in that Kingdom, where the Commiſſioners had treated with the Marquis of Argyle and others, about a Union of the two Kingdoms, purſuant to an Act of Parliament for the Incorporation of England and Scotland into one Republick, and to confiſcate the Eſtates of all thoſe that had aſſiſted Duke Hamilton in 1648. or the King of the Scots, ſince they aboliſh'd by Proclamation all Manner of Authority deriv'd from any other Power but that of the Commonwealth of England. They ſummon'd the Counties, Cities and Burroughs, to agree to the Incorporation, of which 18 of 31 Counties, and 24 of 56 Cities and Burghs conſented to ſend their Deputies to the Parliament of England. Judges were ſent to Scotland for the Adminiſtration of Juſtice, which they perform'd to the great Satisfaction of the People. The Lord Argyle made many Difficulties of coming to a Concluſion with the Engliſh Commiſſioners; and at laſt, when he clos'd with them, his Son, the Lord Lorn, went off to the Earl of Glencairn; the Earl of Balcarras, and others who defended themſelves among the Faſtneſſes in the Highlands, from whence they durſt not make any Attempt on the Low Countries. Glencairn quarrelling with Lorn, the latter made his Eſcape or he had been clap'd up. Theſe Gentlemen had only the Honour to ſtarve there in the King's Name, from whom they expected more Aſſiſtance than he could expect from them: They ſent one Drummond to Paris at the Inſtance of Col. Middleton, ſo often mention'd, who was come to them from France, to invite the King to come amongſt them. Drummond was admitted to Audience by the little Council the King had about him; and when he had deliver'd his Meſſage Chancellor Hyde ask'd him, how the King would be accommodated if he came among them. Drummond reply'd, Not ſo well as was fitting, but they would take Care of him to furniſh him with every Thing that was neceſſary. Biſhop Burnet tells us, "Mr. Drummond wonder'd the King did not check Hyde in his Demand; For, ſaid he, it look'd ſtrange, that when they were hazarding their Lives to help him to a Crown, he ſhould be concern'd for Accommodation." But as I have obſerv'd again and again, this Preſident of his Majeſty's little Council was guilty of very ſtrange Things in his Miniſtry, as well as his Memoirs. The Marquis of Argyle having agreed to the Union, the Engliſh Commiſſioners almoſt perfected that Work: And in Auguſt, Whitlocke informs us, the Commiſſioners of the Shires choſe 21 Men, 14 to repreſent the Counties, and 7 the Boroughs; but that Model was alter'd afterwards by Cromwel.

Union.

The Scots in the Low Lands being entirely reduc'd, it was reſolv'd to erect 4 Forts to curb thoſe that might form Deſigns againſt the Engliſh, one at Inverneſs, another at Leith, a Third at Ayre, and a Fourth at St. Johnſtoun, and in Purſuit of thoſe in the Mountains to divide the Forces into three Parties: The firſt conſiſted of Col. Overton's Regiment of Foot, and a Regiment of Horſe, commanded by Major Blackmore; the ſecond of Col. Hacker's Regiment of Horſe, and one of Foot, commanded by Col. Lilburn; the third was compos'd of Major General Dean's Regiment of Horſe, and Monk's Regiment of Foot, each Party having ſome Troops of Dragoons to attend them; and theſe were not long driving the Highlanders out of their Faſtneſſes.

Ireland.

Cromwel's Plot for his own Grandeur now thicken'd a-pace; the Parliament voted Major General Lambert to be Deputy to the Lord General Cromwel, but he could not truſt him with ſo important a Command, and therefore got himſelf to be continu'd by a new Vote, Captain General of the Forces, rais'd and to be rais'd in Ireland, as well as England, and his Son-in-law Fleetwood, to be Commander in Chief there under him. Lambert would not go over unleſs he had the Character of Deputy, which the Parliament would not confer on him, reſolving that there ſhould be no more Lieutenants of Ireland, now Oliver's Commiſſion was expir'd, but to keep the Civil Government in their own Hands, to be executed by Commiſſioners. A. D. 1652.

Galway was for ſome Time block'd up by Sir Charles Coote, and the Iriſh Garriſon under the Marquis of Clanrickard was very deſirous to capitulate, before the Seaſon came for the Army to take the Field, and beſiege it in Form. Clanrickard ſent a Letter to General Ludlow, which for the Temper and Judgment of it deſerves to be remembred.

Sir,

"MANY of the Nobility, Clergy, and other "Perſons of Quality, Subjects of this "Kingdom, with the Corporation of Galway, "having conſider'd the preſent State of Affairs, "and the ruinous Effects which this long War "hath produc'd, have ſolicited me to deſire of "you a Conference for the Eſtabliſhment of the "Repoſe of this Nation, and to obtain a ſafe "Conduct for the Commiſſioners whom by their "Advice I ſhall judge capable to be ſent to you "for that End. It is this which hath oblig'd me to "ſend you an Expreſs, with this Proteſtation, that "I ſhall not abandon them till I ſee ſuch Conditions granted them as they may with Honour accept; for want of which, I am reſolv'd to continue the Authority and Protection of his Majeſty over them, even to Extremity, not doubting but by divine Aſſiſtance, "with the Forces we already have, and the "Succours which ſhall be ſent us by his Majeſty and Allies, we ſhall be found in a Condition to change the preſent State of Affairs, "or at leaſt to render your former Conqueſts of "little Advantage, and in the End to ſell our "Lives at a dear Rate, if we ſhall be forc'd "thereto, the which leaving to your Conſideration, and expecting your certain Anſwer and "Reſolution, I remain,

Mar. 24, 165$\frac{3}{4}$. Sir, Your Servant, CLANRICKARD.

General Ludlow anſwer'd him like a Man who laid no Weight on the Succours he expected from the King; and indeed that was one of the weakeſt Paſſages in his Letter.

My Lord,

"IN Anſwer to yours of the 24th of March, "by which you propoſe a Treaty for the "Settlement of this Country, and deſire a ſafe "Conduct for the Commiſſioners you ſhall think "fit to employ in the Management of that Affair; I think fit in purſuance of the Advice of "the Commiſſioners of the Parliament of England, and of many Officers of the Engliſh Army, to adverti ſe you, as hath been already anſwer'd to thoſe who have ſent Propoſitions of "the like Nature, that the Settlement of this "Nation doth of Right belong to the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England, to "whom we are oblig'd in Duty to leave it, being aſſur'd that they will not capitulate with "thoſe who ought to ſubmit to them, and yet "oppoſe themſelves to their Authority, and upon vain and frivolous Hopes have refus'd ſuch "Offers of Favour as they would gladly accept at preſent: So that I fear they will be "conſtrain'd to proceed againſt them with the "higheſt Severity; which that you may prevent "by your timely Submiſſion is the Deſire of,

My Lord,
Your humble Servant,
Edmund Ludlow.

A. D. 1652. The Marquis's Letter not ſucceeding with Ludlow, he apply'd to Sir Charles Coote, who concluded a Treaty with him on much eaſier Terms than the Parliament's Commiſſioners would have granted; but the latter did not think convenient to diſannul the Treaty entirely, and before their Alterations came to Coote, he had ſo fully agreed, that he could not or would not go back, only promis'd to endeavour to perſwade Clanrickard to accept of thoſe Alterations, which he took no Notice of, and as ſoon as he got out of Galway, join'd with Sir Phelin O Neale, chief of the Rebels in Connaught and Ulſter. They made together a Body of 15000 Men, with which they took Bally Shannon Fort: But Sir Charles Coote and Col. Venables, who commanded in thoſe Parts, came upon them ſo ſuddenly that for Safety they retreated to the Bogs, leaving a ſmall Garriſon in Bally Shannon. Being purſu'd by the Engliſh who kill'd and wounded 300 of them, and took from them 7000 Cows, upon whoſe Milk they chiefly ſubſiſted, 1200 of them came in and laid down their Arms; upon which their Garriſon in Bally Shannon ſurrender'd.

Before Fleetwood came over the greateſt Part of the Iriſh Army had laid down their Arms on Condition of being tranſported into foreign Service. However, ſmall Bodies of them continu'd to make Incurſions into the Engliſh Quarters; Sir Walter Dungan Commiſſary General of the Enemies Horſe, and Capt. Scurlock, a famous Tory, enter'd Wexford with 500 Foot and 250 Horſe, and were met by Lieutenant Colonel Throgmorton, with 400 Foot and 120 Horſe, who after ſome Diſpute routed Dungan and the Tory Scurlock, kill'd 200 of their Men, and took near 300 Priſoners. About this Time the Earl of Weſtmeath, who commanded the Iriſh in Leinſter, ſent to the Parliament's Commiſſioners to deſire a ſafe Conduct for Perſons to come and treat with ſuch as they ſhould appoint, which being granted there, met at Kilkenny.

For the Parliament, Commiſſioners.

Commiſſary General Reynolds, Col. Hewſon, Col. Laurence, Col. Axtell, Adjutant General Allen, Major Henry Owen, Mr. James Standiſh, Deputy Treaſurer.

For the Iriſh.

Sir Walter Dungan, Lewis Lord Viſcount Glanmaliere, Sir Robert Talbot, Sir Richard Barnwel, Col. Walter Bagnal, Col. Lewis Moor, Col. Thomas Tyrrel;

Who agreed on the ſame Conditions granted to Col. Odouyer, who was Commander in Chief of the Iriſh in the Counties of Waterford and Tipperary, which Conditions were concluded with him by Col. Zanchy, That all the Arms of the Iriſh be deliver'd up at a certain Price; he and his Party to enjoy their Perſonal Eſtates, and ſuch a Proportion of their Real, as others under their Qualification ſhall be permitted to do: Theſe Articles not to extend to ſuch as had murder'd the Engliſh, or to thoſe that were engag'd in the Rebellion during the firſt Year, or to Romiſh Prieſts, or to thoſe that had kill'd any Engliſh after Quarter, or to Deſerters; all others to have Liberty to live in Engliſh Quarters, or tranſport themſelves into the Service of any foreign State, in Friendſhip with the Commonwealth of England.

Col. Fitz-Patrick made his Submiſſion before Col. Odouyer, on Condition to be tranſported with his Regiment to Spain; for which the Popiſh Clergy excommunicated him. The Lord Muskerry, and Major General Taaf, with other Commanders of the Rebels in Munſter, Connaught and Ulſter, were left at Liberty to accept of the ſame Conditions within a limited Time. Moſt of the Iriſh that were not excepted for Murder, deliver'd up their Arms and Horſes to Commiſſioners appointed by Lieutenant General Ludlow to receive them. Above 3000 accepted of the Earl of Weſtmeath's Articles. The Lord Muskerry ſent Col. Poor to Kilkenny to acquaint the Lieutenant General that he deſign'd to accept them; but it was found by ſome intercepted Letters that his Deſign was to amuſe them: So Preparations were made to reduce him and his Party. General Ludlow, the Lord Broghill and Sir Hardreſs Waller march'd with 4000 Foot and 2000 Horſe, towards Roſs in Kerry, where the Lord Muskerry had his principal Rendezvous, and oblig'd him to ſubmit to the ſame Articles as were granted to the Earl of Weſtmeath, in Conſequence of which 5000 Horſe and Foot laid down their Arms and ſurrender'd their Horſes. Col. Grace ſtanding out ſtill, paſs'd the Shannon; and being join'd by the Iriſh of Connaught and Galway, made a Body of 3000 Men, who were attack'd and routed by Col. Ingoldsby, near Limerick. After which Defeat Grace ſubmitted, but had not ſo good Terms as the Articles of Kilkenny; for Ingoldsby caus'd a Captain, a Lieutenant, and other Officers to be ſhot according to the Liberty he reſerv'd in the Capitulation, they having revolted to the Enemy at Carrick, into which Iſle the Marquis of Clanrickard withdrew himſelf, with what Forces he had left. Col. Theophilus Jones, who commanded a Party in the North of Ireland, defeated 1600 Foot and 300 Horſe, the Remains of the Iriſh Army, and kill'd 300 of them. The Lord Clanrickard finding himſelf encompaſs'd on all Sides, made his Submiſſion, and obtain'd Liberty to tranſport himſelf with 3000 Men, to any foreign Country in Friendſhip with the Commonweath, within the Space of three Months. The Lord Clarendon tells us, "He ſent to "Ludlow for a Paſs to go to England, and ſurren- "der himſelf to the Parliament." "Thus, ſays "Ludlow, our military Service in Ireland, drew "to a Concluſion, moſt of the Iriſh Forces ha- "ving ſubmitted, and laid down their Arms. "No Garriſon of any Strength holding out againſt "us, and many Thouſands of the Enemy being "ſent into foreign Service," as 2000 of Col. Fitz-Patrick's Men, 1000 of Col. Odouyer's, and 4000 more were ready for Tranſportation as ſoon as Ships could be provided.

A. D. 1652.

The Military Affairs of the Commonwealth had every where Succeſs, and the Civil were manag'd with exemplary Policy and Prudence.

Committee of Law.

The Committee of Law preſented to the Parliament Draughts of Acts,

For taking away Fines upon Bills, Declarations and original Writs.

Againſt cuſtomary Oaths of Fealty and Homage to Lords of Manors.

For taking away common Recoveries, and the unneceſſary Charge of Fines, and to paſs and charge Lands intail'd as Lands in Fee Simple.

For aſcertaining arbitrary Fines upon Deſcent, and Alienation of Copy-holds of Inheritance.

For the more ſpeedy Recovery of Rents.

Touching Pleaders and their Fees.

For the more ſpeedy Regulating and eaſy Diſcovery of Debts and Damages not exceeding 40 l. and under.

The very Titles of theſe Acts ſhew how worthy they were of the Wiſdom of the Nation; and it is aſtoniſhing that the ſame Art which obſtructed the Reform of the Practice of the Law, almoſt fourſcore Years ago, ſhould have ſtill ſucceeded in the like Obſtruction from that Time to this. It does by no Means do Honour to the Profeſ-

A. D. 1652. sion, which is charg'd with it. " The Refor- " mation of the Law went on but ſlowly in Par- " liament, ſays Ludlow, it being the Intereſt " of Lawyers to preſerve the Lives, Liberties and " Eſtates of the whole Nation in their Hands: " So that upon the Debate of Regiſtring Deeds " in each County, for want of which within " a certain Time fix'd after the Sale ſuch " Sales ſhould be void; and being ſo regiſtred, " that Land ſhould not be ſubject to any In- " cumbrance: This Word Incumbrance was ſo " manag'd by the Lawyers that it took up three " Months Time before it could be aſcertain'd " by the Committee of Parliament:" Which ſhews how much a little paltry, private Intereſt prevails over that of the Publick, in Minds blinded by Avarice, and debas'd by Lucre.

But in the midſt of this Blaze of Glory and Happineſs, the Commonwealth ſaw a Cloud riſing, which though like a Speck at its firſt Appearance, ſoon ſpread a dreadful Darkneſs, and ended in a Tempeſt, in which it was overwhelm'd. Cromwel, who was all this while ſapping and mining its Foundation, began now to let ſome of his Work appear, and the Officers of the Army preſented a Petition to the Parliament in Auguſt, " about Miniſters, regulating the Law, Abuſes " in collecting Exciſe and other publick Monies, " ſtating the Soldiers Accounts, unneceſſary Of- " fices and Salaries, providing for the Poor, " Qualifications of ſuch as ſhall ſit in future " Parliaments:" Many were diſguſted at this Petition, as improper if not arrogant; for the Officers of the Army to dictate to their Maſters the Parliament. Cromwel was advis'd to ſtop this Way of Petitioning with Sword in Hand, leaſt in Time it might come home to himſelf. But he ſeem'd to ſlight it, or rather to have ſome Deſign, which the Officers were to prepare the Way for, by this Petition. The Houſe temporiz'd with them, and return'd them hearty Thanks for their great Care and Love to the Publick; but their delaying to take their Petition into particular Conſideration, gave them a Pretence to murmur. Oliver did not ſtick to open himſelf to ſome of his Friends, particularly the Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke, to whom, in a private Conference he propos'd his taking upon himſelf the Authority and Title of King. Cromwel began it with Profeſſion of his Confidence in Whitlocke, who endeavour'd to confirm him in his good Opinion of him. Then they both ſpoke of their Engagements in the Cauſe of the Commonwealth; and Oliver bemoan'd the Hazard they ran by private Janglings among themſelves after their Enemies were vanquiſh'd. Whitlocke artfully turn'd thoſe Janglings on the Army, the Emulation of Officers, and their thinking their Services never enough rewarded, taking no Notice of the Parliament. Cromwel ſaid he had us'd his utmoſt Endeavour to keep them in Obedience; upon which Whitlocke complimented him: But then Oliver offer'd Excuſes for them and their Diſſatisfaction with the Parliament, blaming the Pride of the latter; their Self-ſeeking, ingroſſing of Places, breaking into Parties and Factions, delaying Buſineſs, medling in private Matters, their Partiality, and the ſcandalous Lives of ſome of them, &c. at the End of which, he comes to the Point in Hand, and propoſes the ſetting up ſome Power ſo full and ſo high, as to reſtrain and keep Things in better Order. Whitlocke reply'd, " That his Excellency's " Power as General, could reſtrain the Soldiery; " for the Lord Commiſſioner would not drop " them, and as to the Parliament, there was " great Difficulty in reſtraining them, his own " Commiſſion being from them, who were " acknowledg'd the ſurpream Power of the Na- " tion, ſubject to no Controul." He urg'd the Honour and Wiſdom of the major Part of them, to extenuate the ill Conduct of a few. Oliver ſhortning the Debate, ſaid there is no Hopes of them, they will bring all Things to Confuſion if they are ſuffer'd to go on; and therefore ſome Courſe muſt be thought on to curb them. Whitlocke, " We our ſelves have acknow- " ledg'd them the ſupreme Power, and taken our " Commiſſion and Authority in the higheſt Con- " cernments from them, and how to reſtrain " them after this will be hard to find out a Way. Oliver cut him ſhort, What if a Man ſhould take upon him to be King! Whitlocke. I think that Remedy would be worſe than the Diſeaſe. Cromwel. Why do you think ſo? Whitlocke told him it would be no Advantage to him, becauſe he had the kingly Power concerning the Militia, as General; and as to nominating Officers and paſſing of Laws, what he diſlik'd would not eaſily paſs. He might now diſpoſe of the Taxes as he pleas'd; and as to Foreigners, if Application was made to the Parliament, foreign Miniſters knew nothing would come of it, without applying to him. Thus with leſs Danger he might do more Good than would be if he aſſum'd the Title of King. Cromwel objected, that the Lawyers alledg'd, all Acts under a King, tho' de Facto, were lawful, and would be ſafer. Whitlocke ſaid, he doubted whether the Act of Henry VII. to which his Excellency referr'd, would be regarded if their Enemies prevail'd. Cromwel demanded to know what Danger there was in it. Whitlocke reply'd, " The main Con- " troverſy betwixt us and our Adverſaries, is " whether the Government of this Nation ſhall " be in a King or a Commonwealth. Moſt of " our Friends engage with us for the latter. " Now if your Excellency take upon you the Ti- " tle of King, the Monarchy will be eſtabliſh'd " in your Perſon, and the Queſtion will be no " more whether a King or a Free State, but " whether Cromwel or Stuart ſhall be our King, " by which you will loſe all the Commonwealth " Party." Oliver confeſs'd it was Reaſon, and bad him propound ſome other Way, which after great Preparation for it Whitlocke did, and propos'd his making his own Terms with the King of the Scots, which he ſupported with very ſtrong Arguments; to which Cromwel anſwer'd, I think you have much Reaſon in what you propound; but it is a Matter of ſo high Importance and Difficulty that it deſerves more Time of Conſideration and Debate, than is at preſent allow'd us. So he broke off Diſcourſe, and ſeem'd by his Countenance and Carriage, to be diſpleas'd with what had been ſaid; yet he never objected it againſt Whitlocke, in any publick Meeting afterwards, though he advis'd with him no more ſo frequently and intimately, as he had been wont to do.

A. D. 1652.

The Parliament applying themſelves induſtriouſly to the Proſecution of the War with Holland, paſs'd ſeveral Votes for the Encouragement of Seamen. As, for every Prize taken 40 s. a Ton, and 6 l. for every Cannon, to be equally diſtributed among the Officers and Mariners, according to their Qualifications, 10 l. for every Cannon on board any Ship ſunk or burnt by them, a Month's Pay to all who enter'd themſelves aboard Men of War within 40 Days. They order'd Hoſpitals to be erected at Dover, Deal and Sandwich, for ſick and wounded Sailors; and though the Hollanders had declar'd all naval Stores to England to be Contraband Goods, yet the Council of State had provided a gallant Fleet with all Neceſ-

The Dutch Fleet, in Number about 80, with 150 Merchant Men from Bourdeaux, Nantz, and Roan, were diſcover'd between the Iſle of Wight and Portland, by the Headmoſt of the Engliſh Fleet, then commanded by General Blake, Dean, and Monk. About 8 a Clock the Triumph, in which were Blake and Dean, and 3 or 4 Ships more, began the Fight, the reſt being to the Leeward, by which means a very ſmall Part of the Engliſh Fleet were engag'd with the whole Dutch Navy for ſome Time, and when more Engliſh Ships came up they were not above half of the Fleet which fought the Enemy till Night parted them. The Triumph loſt 100 Men, received 700 Shot in her Hull, and in the Extremity of Diſtreſs was bravely relieved by Capt. Lawſon, Capt. of the Fairfax. The Sampſon, Capt. Button, a Dutch Prize, mann'd with Engliſh Seamen, fought a Man of War and ſunk her, but was ſo torn her ſelf that ſhe could not ſwim, and Capt. Button, his Officers and Seamen, were taken aboard other Ships. The next Day Blake purſu'd the Dutch, came up with, and engag'd them, and ſo the Day following. Admiral Tromp, who commanded the Hollanders, put his Merchant Men before him, and fought retreating towards the Coaſt of Bologne, but in his Way thither the Engliſh Frigats at large took many of his Merchant Men, and Lawſon boarded and took a Man of War. The Wind proving croſs the Dutch got to Calais Sands, and the Engliſh gave over the Purſuit. The Enemy loſt eleven Men of War, and 50 Merchant Ships; 1500 Dutch Priſoners were ſent to London. General Blake, and ſeveral other Officers, were wounded, but the Engliſh loſt one Ship only, the Sampſon before mention'd. This Victory was the more ſurpriſing to the Hollanders, for that they expected Tromp ſhould have block'd up the River of Thames, and have obliged the Engliſh to ſeek for a Peace. But the Succeſs proving to the contrary, the common People in the United Provinces were all in Mutiny, upon which the Province of Holland, without the Conſent of the other Provinces, did privately employ Col. Doleman and others, who gain'd Hugh Peters, to try the Inclinations of the Parliament, who would hearken to nothing before Holland made the firſt Overture in writing, upon which the States, by their Secretary Van Beaumont, wrote a canting, equivocal Letter to them, ſetting forth the Danger of the Proteſtant Religion by this Rupture, without offering any reaſonable Satisfaction to the Demands of the Commonwealth of England. The Parliament, however, return'd a very mild Anſwer, offering to treat when Preliminaries were agreed upon. Doleman and Peters in the Name of the Dutch apply'd very ſubmiſſively to the Council of State, confeſſing they were not able to conteſt with the Puiſſance of England. They offer'd to acknowledge the Sovereignty of the Seas, as the Parliament demanded, and to pay 300000 Pounds for Damages. But this Offer, and the Treaty which probably might have enſu'd, was interrupted by one of the moſt infamous Acts of Violence and Treaſon that ever Man was guilty of.

The Glory of the Commonwealth.

By what we have ſaid it is obvious to all Readers, that the Power of the Commonwealth of England, could have received no Diminution by the Oppoſition of any other Power, and ſhe muſt have encreas'd daily in Strength and Glory, that ſhe was ſo well eſtabliſh'd as to fear no Enemy, and to have what Choice ſhe pleas'd of Friends. That ſhe had rais'd the Reputation of England from the loweſt Depth of Diſgrace and Shame, to the higheſt Degree of Honour and Renown. That the Princes of England and their Followers were ſo far from having any Weight in the Balance of her Affairs, that they were look'd upon by her either as ſo many Non-Entities, or if as Beings to be ſuch as her Breath would blow off whenever ſhe thought convenient. But this dazling Brightneſs, ſo amiable to her Friends, ſo dreadful to her Enemies, was eclips'd at once by the intervening of a Comet, whoſe Blaze had all her Terrors without any of her Charms. When I ſay ſo much of this triumphant Republick, it is not but I am as ſenſible as any one of the Irregularity of her acquiring Dominion, that the Foundations of it were laid in the Blood of her Sovereign: That ſhe had no Right to it, but the worſt in the World, that of Conqueſt, which is the Right of a Robber. I ſay only what ſhe did when ſhe had acquir'd the Power, by which it appears that this Senate, the Majeſty of whoſe Preſence would have been Death to the Earl of Clarendon, who in his Hiſtory treats them as an abject, daſtardly Crew, has no Equal ſince that of Rome was made a Slave to Tyranny, and that all Attempts againſt her immortal Fame, in the Exerciſe of her ill gotten Power, are equally baſe and vain. If we ſhould run back to the Origine of the Power of all the moſt famous Republicks and Empires, ſhall we not find it as criminal as that of the Commonwealth of England. Rome, the Miſtreſs of the World, ow'd her very Being to Violence and Rapine; and when by her Arms ſhe had extended her Empire from the Orcades to India, what booted it to ſay, Her Founder was a Robber.

A. D. 1653.

Cromwel's Treaſon.

The Parliament ſaw what Cromwel was driving at, and endeavour'd to prevent his Uſurpation, which they had certainly ſucceeded in, if Oliver, who ſaw that alſo, had not precipitated the Execution of his ambitious Deſigns, and hurry'd that on by Violence which he was in Hopes to have accompliſh'd by Craft and Diſſimulation. The Parliament employ'd Monk Aboard the Fleet, purely to take off the Support he expected from the Army in Scotland; and to leſſen that in England, ſeveral Regiments were order'd for the Navy, which Oliver had nothing to do with. This alarm'd him ſo much, that he reſolv'd to execute his Purpoſe immediately.

The firſt Step he took towards his Uſurpation was to gain the Royaliſts, by preſſing on the Act of Oblivion, and enlarging the Bounds of it. Theſe he was ſure to engage againſt the Parliament. He careſs'd Major General Harriſon, Col. Rich, and thoſe Officers of the Army who gave into Enthuſiaſm, and were call'd Fifth Monarchiſts, from their ſetting up a ſpiritual Government, or a Sort of Theocracy, and having Chriſt for their King, and the Goſpel for their Law. He promis'd them Liberty of Conſcience at leaſt. He got over the Clergy and Lawyers by their Inclinations to kingly Government. The Independents were his own, the Presbyterians divided; and though he was himſelf the main Wheel that ſet all the others in Motion, yet he ſo manag'd Matters, that he himſelf ſeem'd to be mov'd by the Deſires and Endeavours of others. He complain'd to Quarter-Maſter-General Vernon, That he was puſh'd on by two Parties to do that, the Conſideration of the Iſſue whereof made his Hair to ſtand an end. One of them is headed by Major Gen. Lambert, who in Revenge of that Injury the Parliament did him, in not permitting him to go to Ireland with the Character of Deputy, will be contented with nothing leſs than the Diſſolution of the Parliament. Of the other, Major General Harriſon is chief, who is an honeſt Man, and aims at good Things, yet from the Impatience of his Spirit will not wait the the Lord's Leiſure, but puſhes me on to that which he and all honeſt Men will have cauſe to repent. To Col. Okey and other Officers who were diſguſted about the Delays their Petition met with in the Houſe, he rail'd againſt ſeveral Members of Parliament, affirming, that little good could be expected from that Body where ſuch Men had ſo great Influence. At the ſame Time he made the moſt ſolemn Profeſſions of Fidelity to the Parliament, aſſuring them, That if they would command the Army to break their Swords over their Heads, and to throw them into the Sea, he would undertake they ſhould do it. Nay, he went ſo far, as to ſend Col. Desborough to the Council of Officers, who were debating the Parliament's fixing on a Time to put a Period to their Seſſion, with Inſtructions to tell them, The Parliament were more ready to do any Good than they to deſire it; that they ought to rely on their Promiſe to diſſolve themſelves by the Time prefix'd, November, 1654. and to petition them to put that Vote into an Act, would manifeſt a Diffidence of them, and leſſen their Authority. Oliver came to the Council himſelf, while Desborough was thus ſpeaking, and ſeconded what he had ſaid, at which the Officers were perfectly ſtunn'd, the Act having been forwarded by Cromwel and Desborough more than any other Members of the Council. Oliver knew very well that the Commonwealth would daily acquire Strength, Intereſt and Reputation, at Home and Abroad. Ludlow tells us, He was ſenſible of their great Skill and Experience in the Management of publick Affairs, of the good Eſteem they were in amongſt the moſt diſcerning Part of the Nation, and therefore were very deſirous to lay them aſide with as little Noiſe as might be. If General Ludlow ſpeaks Truth, the Lord Clarendon does not, for he all along avers, that the Royaliſts were the more diſcerning Part of the Nation, and does not ſtick at intimating, that himſelf was of that Part the moſt diſcerning.

Oliver's Cunning.

Cromwel having put a Stop to the Parliament's paſſing their Diſſolving Vote into an Act, for that would have continu'd them ſo long ſtill as he might not then be able to hinder the Choice of ſuch a new Repreſentative as would be an eternal Bar to his Uſurpation, he therefore caball'd with ſeveral Members of Parliament to aſſume the ſupreme Authority themſelves, by putting a Period to the preſent Parliament; and if he could have made one part of the Houſe Tools to turn out the other, the Remainder would have been entirely at his beck, either be or not be according to his Pleaſure. Thus would he have aſſum'd the Sovereignty, as doing a good Office to the Publick, and others would have born the Blame of the Neceſſity to which the State was reduc'd to put the Government into his Hands. But this Project did not take, the Members of Parliament ſaw through his diſguis'd Deſign, and Major Sallaway at one of their Meetings, demanding, If the preſent Authority was taken away, what better would they put in its Room. One of Cromwel's Party cry'd, We muſt pull down this Government, and it will be Time enough then to conſider what ſhall be put in its Room.

The Parliament diſſolv'd.

The Parliament perceiving to what kind of Exceſſes the Madneſs of the Army was like to carry them, reſolv'd April the 20th, to paſs the Diſſolution Act, in which the Choice of a new Repreſentative was ſettled in ſuch a Manner as to preſerve the Commonwealth, the Council of State in the Intervals of Parliament being inveſted with the Supreme Authority by that Act, which continu'd the preſent Parliament a Year and half longer. To prevent this Law General Cromwel beckon'd to Major General Harriſon, who was on the other Side of the Houſe, to come to him, and ſaid, I judge the Parliament ripe for a Diſſolution, and this to be the Time for doing it. Harriſon reply'd, Sir, the Work is very great and dangerous, therefore I deſire you ſeriouſly to conſider of it. Oliver anſwer'd, You ſay well, and ſat ſtill a quarter of an Hour, and then the Queſtion for paſſing the Diſſolution Act being put, he ſaid to Harriſon, This is the Time, I muſt do it, and he was prepar'd for it, having plac'd a Party of Soldiers, to the Number of 300, in the Hall at the Door of the Houſe, and in the Lobby, ſo ſtarring up he call'd for a File of Musketeers, who enter'd the Houſe, he bad the Speaker come down out of the Chair; and told the Houſe, "They had ſat long enough unleſs they "had done more good; that ſome of them were "Whoremaſters, looking towards Henry Martin, and Sir Peter Wentworth; that others of "them were Drunkards, and ſome corrupt and "unjuſt Men, ſcandalous to the Profeſſion of the "Goſpel, and that it was not fit they ſhould ſit "any longer, therefore he deſir'd them to be "gone, the Lord having choſen other Inſtruments for the carrying on his Work who were "more worthy." He ſpoke with ſo much Paſſion and Diſcompoſure of Mind as if he had been out of his Wits. Sir Peter Wentworth ſtood up to anſwer him, and ſaid, This is the firſt Time I ever heard ſuch unbecoming Language given to the Parliament, and it is the more horrid in that it comes from your Servant, and your Servant whom you have ſo highly truſted and obliged. Cromwel ſtepp'd into the midſt of the Houſe as Sir Peter was ſpeaking, and continuing in his mad Fit, cry'd, I will put an end to your Prating. Then walking up and down he kick'd the Ground with his Feet, and ſaid, You are no Parliament; I ſay, you are no Parliament, I will put an end to your Sitting. Call them in, Call them in. Then the Sergeant attending the Houſe open'd the Doors, and Lieutenant Col. Worſeley led in ſome more Musketeers, which Sir Henry Vane obſerving, in his Place ſaid aloud, This is not honeſt; it is againſt Morality and common Honeſty. Upon which Oliver fell a railing at him, crying with a loud Voice, O Sir Henry Vane, Sir Henry Vane, the Lord deliver me from Sir Henry Vane! Take away that Bawble, ſpeaking to one of the Soldiers, who ſeiz'd the Mace; and Major General Harriſon went to the Speaker as he ſat in the Chair, and told him, That ſeeing Things were reduc'd to this paſs it would not be convenient for him to remain there. The Speaker anſwer'd, I will not come down unleſs I am forc'd to it. The Major General ſaid, I will lend you my Hand. And ſo putting his Hand within his the Speaker came down, upon which Cromwel apply'd himſelf to the Members of the Houſe, about 100 in Number, It is you have forced me to this, for I have ſought the Lord Night and Day, that he would rather ſlay me than put me upon the doing of this Work. Horrid Diſſimulation! Alderman Allen ſaid, It is not yet gone ſo far but all Things may be reſtor'd again. If the Soldiers were commanded out of the Houſe, and the Mace return'd, the publick Affairs might go on in their former Courſe. But Oliver rejecting his Advice, charg'd him with an Account of ſome hundred Thouſand Pounds, for which he threaten'd to queſtion him, he having been long Treaſurer to the Army. Alderman Allen ſaid, It is well known it has not been my fault that my Account was not made up long ſince, I have often tender'd it to the Houſe, and I ask no Favour from any Man

A. D. 1653. in that Matter. Cromwel having acted this treacherous and impious Part, order'd the Soldiers to ſee the Houſe clear'd of all Members, and then ſeized upon the Records that were there, and at Mr. Scobell the Clerk's Houſe, he ſnatch'd the Act of Diſſolution off the Table, put it under his Cloak, commanded the Doors to be lock'd up, and went his Way to Whitehall.

Thus ended the Commonwealth of England, after it had continu'd four Years, two Months, and twenty Days.

"Thus was this great Parliament, ſays Whitlocke, "which had done ſo great Things, wholly rout-"ed by thoſe they had ſet up, moſt ungratefully, "diſingenuouſly, raſhly, and imprudently, diſſol-"ved an Aſſembly, famous through all the World "for its Undertakings, Actings and Succeſſes.

Thus fell the victorious Parliament, ſays Coke, whoſe mighty Actions will ſcarcely find belief in future Generations; and to ſay the Truth, they were a Race of Men moſt indefatigable and induſtrious in Buſineſs, always ſeeking for Men fit for it, and never preferring any for Favour, or by Importunity. You hardly ever heard of any Revolt from them. No Murmur or Complaint of Seamen or Soldiers. No Soldiers or Seamen ever preſs'd. As they excell'd thus in Civil Affairs, ſo it muſt be own'd they exercis'd in Matters Eccleſiaſtick no ſuch Severities as others before them did, upon ſuch as diſſented from them.

A. D. 1653.

THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND, During the PROTECTORATE of OLIVER CROMWEL.

THE villainous Attempt of Cromwel, according to Ludlow, was much encourag'd by Nieuport, and the other Dutch Ambaſſadors, lately arriv'd from Holland to conclude a Peace, "Who find-"ing, continues my Author, "the Parliament ſupported by the Affections of "the People, Clarendon and Echard tell us "every where they were hated, becauſe acting "for their Intereſt, and therefore not to be for-"ced, much leſs cheated into an unjuſt and diſ-"advantagious Agreement, inſtigated Cromwel "to take the Power into his Hands, well under-"ſtanding that he would ſoon be neceſſitated to "make Peace with them upon what Terms "they ſhould think fit."

Oliver being return'd to Whitehall found the Council of Officers in Debate concerning this weighty Affair, and told them, He had done it, and they needed not trouble themſelves any further about it. Col. Okey, and ſome other Officers, who were not for puſhing Things ſo far, deſir'd to be ſatisfy'd in that Proceeding, which they conceiv'd tended to Ruin and Confuſion. Cromwel ſaid, I am reſolv'd to do much more Good, and with more Expedition than could be expected from the Parliament. Theſe being general Terms, Col. Okey apply'd to Desborough to know why Oliver had ſo highly commended the Parliament, when he endeavour'd to diſſwade the Officers from petitioning for a Diſſolution, and yet in ſo ſhort Time to reject them. Desborough reply'd, If ever he droll'd in his Life he droll'd then. In the Afternoon Cromwel went to the Council of State, accompany'd with Major General Lambert and Harriſon, and told them at his Entrance; Gentlemen, If you are met here as private Perſons you ſhall not be diſturb'd, but if as a Council of State, this is no Place for you; and ſince you can't but know what was done in the Houſe in the Morning, ſo take Notice, that the Parliament is diſſolv'd. To this Sergeant Bradſhaw reply'd, Sir, We have heard what you did at the Houſe in the Morning, and before many Hours all England will hear it. But, Sir, You are miſtaken to think that the Parliament is diſſolv'd, for no Power under Heaven can diſſolve them but themſelves; therefore take you Notice of that. Something more was ſaid to the ſame Purpoſe by Sir Arthur Haſlerigge, Mr. Love, and Mr. Scott. And then the Council of State perceiving themſelves to be under the ſame Violence, broke up. Oliver ſoon after ſent for Major Sallaway, and Mr. John Carew, to whom he complain'd "of "the great Weight of Affairs that by this Un-"dertaking was fallen upon him, affirming, "That the Thoughts of the Conſequences there-"of made him to tremble, and therefore deſir'd "them to free him from the Temptations that "might be laid before him, and to that End to "go immediately to the Chief Juſtice St. John, "Mr. Selden, and ſome others, and endeavour "to perſwade them to draw up ſome Inſtrument "of Government that might put the Power out "of his Hands." Major Sallaway made Anſwer, The Way, Sir, to free you from this Temptation, is for you not to look upon your ſelf to be under it, but to reſt perſwaded that the Power of the Nation is in the good People of England, as formerly it was. Cromwel perceiving by this Anſwer, that he was better underſtood than he could have wiſh'd, fell upon another Expedient before he would openly diſcover himſelf, appointing a Meeting of the chief Officers of the Army to be at Whitehall, in order to conſider what was fit to be done in this Exigency.

He and his Council ſet forth a Declaration of the Grounds and Reaſons for their Diſſolving the late Parliament, and that civil Officers do proceed as formerly in the Execution of their Office, and all Perſons to give Obedience to them. He wrote to the Admirals at Sea, and to the Commiſſioners and Commanders in chief in Scotland and Ireland, who all return'd Anſwers of Submiſſion to his Orders, and an Addreſs was ſent up from Durham to ſtand by Cromwel and his Council of Officers, which led the Way to Cart-loads of Addreſſes from all Parts to Oliver, his Son Richard, King Charles II. &c. The firſt Act of Civil Government which Cromwel and his Council exercis'd, was their examining the Grievances and Oppreſſions committed by Sir John Lenthall, in managing the Priſon of the Upper, or King's Bench, both as to Debtors and Creditors; there were then 399 Priſoners who ow'd above 900000 Pounds. And to give a little Form to this Embrio of Uſurpation, he appointed a new Council of State, himſelf the firſt of them.

Council of State. Oliver Cromwel, Eſq; Capt. General, Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Major General Lambert, Lord Commiſſioner Liſle, Major General Harriſon, Col. Desborough, Col. Hewſon, Col. Montague, Col. Tomlinſon, Col. Jones, Col. Sydenham, Col. Laurence, Anthony Stapley, Eſq; Alderman Tichburne, Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, Sir Gilbert Pickering, Charles Howard, Eſq; Sir Charles Wolſeley, John Carew, Eſq; Walter Strickland, Eſq; Mr. Hope, Mr. Norton, Mr. Benet, Mr. Broughton, Mr. Holliſter, Richard Mayor, Eſq; Mr. Courtney, Mr. St. Nicholas, Mr. Meyer, Mr. Williams.

All entirely devoted to him. The new Council ordered new Treaſurers for the Exciſe, and a Committee to conſider how all the Treaſuries of the Commonwealth may be beſt manag'd. He gave them Power to raiſe Money, and they levy'd the monthly Aſſeſſment with conſiderable Abatement, which made the Payment of it the more Popular.

The Cavaliers rejoic'd much at the Diſſolution of the Commonwealth Parliament, and made great Applications and Congratulations to Cromwel. Some Independent Clergy, Creatures of Oliver, cry'd it up in their Pulpits. The Officers of the Army and Soldiers were generally pleas'd with it. But the ſober and diſcerning Part of the People abhor'd the Change, and the Uſurper's Inſolence and Ingratitude, foreſeeing that it would make Way for further Invaſions of the Liberties of the People, and at laſt introduce the old Government, for which they had then an Abhorrence.

On the 27th of May, Cromwel and his Council of Officers, who aſſum'd the ſupreme Authority, reſolv'd to ſummon ſelect Perſons to be nominated by themſelves out of every County, who ſhould be as a Repreſentative of the whole Nation. Major General Lambert mov'd, that a few Perſons, not exceeding the Number of ten or twelve might be intruſted with the ſovereign Power: Major General Harriſon was for a greater Number, inclining moſt to that of 70, for no other Reaſon than that it was the Number of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim; but after ſome Debate it was agreed that a certain Number of Perſons as near as might be proportionable to their Payments toward the publick Charge, ſhould be nam'd by the Council to meet at Weſt-minſter on a certain Day, when all the Power of the Nation ſhould be deliver'd into their Hands by an Inſtrument, ſign'd and ſeal'd by the General and the Officers, obliging themſelves to yield Obedience to their Orders. The Proclamation for ſummoning them was dated the 8th of June, and ran in the Name of Oliver Cromwel, Captain General, &c. The Perſons ſummon'd were to meet at the Council Chamber at Whitehall, the 4th of July; and they met accordingly, about 120 in Number; and being ſet round the Table, Cromwel and the Officers of the Army ſtanding about the Middle, the former made a Speech to them, ſhewing the Cauſe of their Summons, and that they had a clear Call to take upon them the ſupreme Authority of the Commonwealth; and he urg'd ſeveral Texts of Scripture to admoniſh and encourage them to do their Duties. He then produc'd an Inſtrument in Writing, ſign'd and ſeal'd by himſelf, whereby he did, with the Advice of his Officers, devolve and intruſt the ſupreme Authority and Government of the Commonwealth into the Hands of the Perſons then met; and that they or any forty of them are to be held, and acknowledg'd the ſupreme Authority of the Nation, to which all Perſons within the ſame are to yield Obedience and Subjection. They were to ſit no longer than the third of November, 1654. and 3 Months before their Diſſolution to make Choice of other Perſons to ſucceed them, who were not to ſit longer than a Year; and it was left to them to take Care for a Succeſſion in Government. Then Cromwel and his Officers withdrew, and the Perſons there met adjourn'd themſelves to the next Day in the Parliament Houſe. Whitlocke ſays, many of them were Perſons of Fortune and Knowledge. Ludlow, The Aſſembly was compos'd of honeſt well meaning Perſons. Echard, with his uſual Modeſty, affirms they were illiterate, weak, obſcure Perſons. The compleat Hiſtorian, that they were a Pack of weak, ſenſeleſs, obſcure Fellows. The Lord Clarendon, Inferior Perſons of no Name or Quality. Warwick, A Houſe of Commons of Saints. And Bates, that they were Proletarios, Zelotas, Catabaptiſtas, Chriſtocraticos, Democraticos, Fanaticos, & ex omni Secta nequiſſimos. Such are the Hiſtory Writers who ſupport the pious Cauſe which produc'd ſo many Martyrs about the Middle of the laſt Century. Theſe are the courtly Perſons, the Quality, and their good Language and good Manners are the only Proofs of it. Praiſe-God Barebone, a Member of this Convention, gave his Name to it on Account of his frequent Speeching in it: He is rally'd by thoſe polite Authors for his Chriſtian Name, Praiſe-God, and for his Trade, being a Leatherſeller, as if it was not as creditable as Brewers, Scriveners, Grocers, and other bright Ornaments, of both Church and Parliament, in Sacheverel's Time. 'Tis remarkable that Praiſe-God Barebone brought a Bill into this Aſſembly, againſt Building, unleſs upon old Foundations, within 10 Miles of London, as if he foreſaw that his Son, the famous Builder, Dr. Barebone, would ruin himſelf and hundreds of Families by it. Being aſſembled the next Day in the Houſe of Commons, they choſe Francis Rous, Eſq; Provoſt of Eaton College their Speaker, and order'd Mr. Birckhead, the Sergeant at Arms to attend him with the Mace as uſual. They alſo voted that the Lord General Cromwel, Major

General

A. D. 1653. General Lambert, Major General Harriſon, Col. Desborough, and Col. Tomlinſon ſhould ſit in the Houſe as Members; they then made ſeveral Committees; 1. To conſider Matters touching the Law. 2. Touching Priſoners and Priſons. 3. For Inſpection into Treaſuries. 4. For Ireland. 5. For Scotland. 6. For the Army. 7. For Petitions. 8. To conſider what ſhall be offer'd about publick Debts, publick Fraud and Breaches of Truſt. 9. For regulating Commiſſions of the Peace, and for making Proviſions for the Poor. 10. For Advance of Trade. 11. For Advance of Learning. Does not this ſhew them to be very illiterate and weak? They paſs'd an Act concerning Marriages, which enjoyn'd all Marriages to be made before Juſtices of the Peace. This Act has occaſion'd a great deal of Mirth, and as much Wit as the Men were capable of, as if a legal Compact before a Magiſtrate would not be as valid, if ſo made by Law, as the Performances of a Curate. The Perſons to be marry'd were to come before ſome Juſtice of the Peace, the Man and Woman pronounc'd the Words before him, and the Juſtice pronounc'd them lawfully marry'd. The Learned and Reverend Mr. Tallents, who publiſh'd the excellent Chronological Tables, was marry'd after this Manner; the Juſtice ſaying no more than he declar'd the Marriage valid. Sometimes the Perſons to be married would bring a Miniſter with them before the Juſtice, as if his Preſence conſecrated the Ceremony; and we are told that Lady Mary Falconbridge's Miniſter was Dr. Hewet, afterwards excuted for a Plot.

The Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council of London preſented a Petition for a ſettled Maintenance for Miniſters; and that the Univerſities may be zealouſly countenanc'd and encourag'd: Yet if you will believe the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and its Copy, Archdeacon Echard's, theſe were the very Days of Cimmerian Darkneſs; when Learning was look'd on as an Abomination, and all Science reduc'd to that of ſeeking God, a Term which they uſe as ludicrouſly as if they knew not what it meant, which is very likely. This Aſſembly paſs'd a Vote for the Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke to go Ambaſſador to the Queen of Sweden, which was thought to be procur'd by Cromwel to ſend him out of the Way. They paſs'd an Act for ſettling the Truſts of Ideots and Lunaticks, and another for ſettling the Lands in Ireland upon the Adventurers. They iſſu'd forth Orders for regulating the Exciſe and Cuſtoms, and enlarg'd the Power of the Committee eſtabliſh'd for Trade: They made all neceſſary Preparations for carrying on the War by Sea, and declar'd General Robert Blake, General George Monk, Major General Desborough, and Vice Admiral Lawſon to be the four Generals of the Fleet of the Commonwealth, impowering them with ſome others to manage the Affairs of the Admiralty. They order'd an Act to be brought in to erect a High Court of Juſtice for proceeding againſt ſuch as ſhould ſurprize or betray any of the Forts, Magazines or Ships of the Commonwealth, and alſo againſt thoſe who ſhould, contrary to the Laws already made, proclaim any to be King of England or Ireland, by which 'tis manifeſt, they ſuſpected the Deſign on Foot to advance Cromwel to the ſupreme Power, and their Suſpicion haſten'd the Execution of it: The following Falſities are crowded into the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, concerning this Aſſembly; They were Artificers of the meaneſt Trades; they never enter'd into any grave Debate; they reſolv'd to deſtroy all Learning; they hated all who call'd themſelves Miniſters; they lock'd up on the paſtoral Function as Antichriſtian; they condemn'd Tythes as Judaiſm; they propos'd to ſell the Lands of the two Univerſities and all Colleges; they tir'd and perplex'd themſelves with Debates, and upon the firſt Motion that was made for them to deliver back their Power to Cromwel, they preſently conſented to it, and went to Whitehall, acknowledg'd their own Impotency, and beſought him to take Care of the Commonwealth; not one Syllable of which is true, at leaſt as the Author tells it. Ludlow relates it thus after thoſe who were preſent. "One "Difficulty yet remain'd to obſtruct Cromwel's "Deſign, and that was the Convention which "he had aſſembled and inveſted with Power, "as well as earneſtly ſollicited to reform the "Law, and reduce the Clergy to a more evan-"gelical Conſtitution; and having ſufficiently "allarm'd theſe Intereſts, and ſhewn them "their Danger from the Convention; he in-"forms them further, that they cannot be igno-"rant of the Confuſion that all Things are "brought into by the immoderate Zeal of thoſe "in Authority, and to what Extremities Mat-"ters might be reduc'd, if permitted to go on, "poſſibly he ſaid to the utter Extirpation of "Law and Goſpel from amongſt us, and there-"fore adviſ'd that they would join their Intereſts "to his, in order to prevent this Inundation. "His Propoſition was readily embrac'd by the "corrupt Part of the Lawyers and Clergy, and "ſo he became their Protector, and they the "humble Supporters of his Tyranny. But that "his Uſurpation might ſeem leſs horrid, he ſo "contriv'd it by his Inſtruments, that ſome of "that Convention ſhould declare their Diſap-"probation of their own Proceedings, and, un-"der divers ſpecious Pretences, put a Period "to their ſitting. To this End it was agreed by "Mr. Rous, Chairman to that Aſſembly, and "the reſt of Cromwel's Junto, to meet earlier "in the Houſe than was uſual, which was done "accordingly on the 12th of December, hoping "by Surprize to obtain a Vote for their Diſſolu-"tion." Thus we ſee again that this Convention were not Oliver's Tools, but zealous againſt his uſurping the Government. Being met, Col. Sydenham, Sir Charles Wolſeley, Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, Sir Gilbert Pickering, and others, ſome of the obſcure, weak, ſenſeleſs Fellows, who were of Oliver's Junto, according to their Inſtructions, bitterly inveigh'd againſt the Tranſactions of the Aſſembly, particularly the Pound-Tax for the Payment of the Army, which would be too long a coming in, ſome Articles relating to the Clergy and the Law, and their not relieving Sir John Stawell. Thus, ſays Ludlow, they cajol'd the Clergy, Lawyers, Cavaliers, and all Intereſts, except that which they ſhould have had moſt regard to. The Houſe had ſome Intimation of the Plot, and there were Members enough to anſwer all ſuch Objections with ſound Reaſon and a gallant Spirit; and the Debate laſting ſome Time, more Members came to fill up the Convention: Upon which Cromwel's Party, finding they could not carry their Point, ſaid, It is not a Time to debate, but to do ſomething that may prevent the Inconveniences that threaten us. Then Mr. Rous, who was in the Secret, left the Speaker's Chair, went out of the Houſe, and with the reſt of the Cabal repair'd to Whitehall, where they, by much the ſmaller Number of the Convention, ſign'd a Writing, importing a Confeſſion of their own Inability, and a Reſignation of their Power to Cromwel, from whom they receiv'd it. The other, and the major Part of the Aſſembly, kept their Places in the Houſe, and would not quit quit them, till they were remov'd by a Guard of Soldiers, ſent by Cromwel for that Purpoſe. The Lieutenant General obſerves, that tho' this Convention had not a clear Authority to convene, yet they behav'd ſo well, that many being convinc'd of the Rectitude of their Intentions, were brought over daily to approve their Actions.

Dutch War.

In the mean time the War continu'd with Holland, and the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty had a good Fleet ready to meet the Enemy by the latter End of May, commanded by Blake, Monk, and Dean. General Blake was to the Northward with a Squadron, when Van Tromp appear'd off the Coaſt of Flanders with the Dutch Navy, having to aſſiſt him Admiral Evertſen, de Wit, and de Ruyter. Vice-Admiral Lawſon, who commanded the Blue Squadron, charg'd thro' the Dutch Fleet with 40 Ships, which Storm falling principally on de Ruyter's Squadron, Van Tromp bore up to his Aſſiſtance, which when our Admirals Blake and Dean, who were both in the ſame Ship, perceiv'd, they engag'd Tromp with the Body of the Fleet, and the Fight continu'd till Three in the Afternoon, June the 2d, at which Time the Wind blowing freſh in the Teeth of the Engliſh, the Dutch fled, and were purſu'd by the lighteſt of the Engliſh Frigates. The next Morning the two Fleets found themſelves near one another, but for Wind could not come to an Engagement till about Noon, at which Time the Diſpute began, and continued very hot on both Sides till Ten at Night. The Engliſh Fleet charg'd the Dutch with ſo much Reſolution, and put them into ſo great Diſorder, that tho' their Admiral fir'd on them to rally them, yet he could not procure more than 20 Ships of his whole Fleet to ſtand by him, the reſt making all the Sail they could to the Eaſtward. But the Wind ſpringing up a brisk Gale from Weſt, the Engliſh purſu'd the Enemy ſo effectually, that they ſunk ſix of their beſt Ships, took eleven of their biggeſt, and two others, with 1300 Priſoners, among whom were Admiral Evertſen, and ſix of their chief Captains; and had not the reſt of their Fleet ſhelter'd themſelves between Dunkirk and Calais, where it was unſafe to expoſe great Ships, by Reaſon of the Sands, the Engliſh had probably taken or deſtroy'd moſt of them. The Hollanders were much ſuperior to them in Number of Ships; but, ſuch was the Courage and Conduct of the Parliament's Officers and Soldiers, that they loſt but one Ship in the Fight, had but one Captain kill'd, except General Dean, and about 160 private Men kill'd and wounded. Having put their Priſoners aſhore, and left ſome of their Ships to be refitted, they return'd to the Coaſt of Holland, where they took many Prizes. General Blake join'd the Fleet with 16 Sail of ſtout Men of War. The whole Fleet lay before the Texel, and ſo incommoded the Dutch Navigation, that the People of Holland forc'd the Magiſtrates, by their Clamours, to ſue for Peace. Accordingly they ſent Mynheers Beverning, Nieuport, Vanderpar, and Jonſtal, to Cromwel and his new Council of State, to pray that the Memory of paſt Actions may be obliterated, and a perfect Amity and more entire Correſpondence than ever eſtabliſh'd by an indiſſoluble Union. The Council return'd a peremptory Anſwer, That without Satisfaction for what had been acted againſt England, and ſufficient Security that no ſuch thing ſhould be attempted again, they could not proceed to any League or Alliance.

Dutch beaten.

In the mean while the Populace in Holland could not bear to ſee their Men of War in their Harbours, and the Engliſh on their Coaſts making Prize of their Trade, which is the Soul of that Nation; and the States were oblig'd to order Van Tromp out again, furniſhing him with a Fleet of 140 Sail. The Engliſh, who were commanded by Monk, Lawſon, and Pen, were but 90 Sail; however, they reſolv'd to engage the Enemy, and accordingly detaching their light Frigates, aſſiſted by ſome greater Ships, they fell in among them the 29th of July, and fought till they were ſeparated by the Night. The next Day little was done, and tho' many of the Engliſh Seamen were ſick of the Scurvy, and the Dutch had Fireſhips and the Engliſh none, the Wind alſo entirely favouring the Enemy, yet did the Battle continue in equal Ballance till Three in the Afternoon, about which Time their Admiral Van Tromp was kill'd with a Musket Ball, as he walk'd on the Deck with his Sword drawn. This ſo diſcourag'd the Dutch, that they fled in Confuſion, and being purſu'd by the Engliſh, their Admiral Evertſen's Ship was ſunk, and about 30 more were taken and ſunk, 8 of which were Flags. The Garland, mention'd to be taken by them laſt Year, was boarded and burnt by the Worceſter Frigate. 'Twas reported that the Dutch had 6000 kill'd and 1000 taken Priſoners. The Engliſh had one Ship only burnt, the Oak, none ſunk or taken, but 250 Men were kill'd, and 700 wounded. Several brave Officers fell, as Capt. Peacock, Capt. Taylor, Capt. Graves, Capt. Criſp, Capt. Newman, Capt. Cox, Capt. Owen, Capt. Chapman. Among the Wounded were Capt. Seaman, Capt. Stokes, Capt. Rous, Capt. Holland, Capt. Cubit. The Dutch got into the Texel, and the Engliſh could not follow them. Tromp's Flag was ſhot down in the Beginning of the Fight, and the Victory was ſo entire, that the Dutch were confounded, threw up the Conteſt, and made Peace on the Conqueror's Terms. The Convention then ſitting order'd Chains of Gold to be given to Blake, Monk, Pen, Lawſon, and Gratuities to all the Officers according to their Ranks. When Monk came to London, Oliver himſelf put the Chain about his Neck, to which hung a Medal repreſenting a Sea Fight, and having invited him to Dinner, made him wear the Medal and Chain all the while. The Engliſh in all this War had no other Diſgrace than when Blake fought 90 Dutch Men of War with 38 Engliſh, and Bodilo's two Miſcarriages in the Streights. The laſt was in the Beginning of this Year, when Capt. Appleton, with about 5 Men of War, was attack'd near Leghorn, and Bodilo, who had 8 or 9 Ships with him in thoſe Seas, would not or could not come to his Aſſiſtance. The Leopard, a Ship of 40 Guns, was taken; the Bonadventure was blown up, the Peregrine was taken, ſo was the Levant Merchant, and the Sampſon boarded by young Tromp on one Side, and by a Fireſhip on the other was blown up. Bodilo, ſays my Author, was branded with the infamous Terms of Cowardiſe, Bribery, and Treachery.

Beaten again, and Van Tromp kill'd.

Four Days after the Convention was broken up, an extraordinary Council of Officers was held, to whom Major General Lambert reported the ſeveral Steps and Degrees by which Things had been brought to the preſent State wherein they were, and preſs'd the Neceſſity incumbent upon the Army to provide ſomething in the Room of what was lately taken away; in order to which, he preſented them a Paper, entituled, An Inſtrument of Government, which he read in his Place. Some of the Officers being convinc'd that the Contents of this Inſtrument tended to the ſacrificing all their Labours to the Luſt and Ambition of a ſingle Perſon, began to declare their Unwillingneſs to concur in it; but they were Cromwel made Lord Protector.

A. D. 1653. were interrupted by the Major General, and inform'd it was not now to be disputed whether this should be the Form of Government or not, for that was already resolv'd, it having been under Consideration for two Months past; neither was it brought before them with any other Intention than to give them Permission to offer any Amendment they might think fit, with a Promise that it should be consider'd. The Council of Officers perceiving to what Terms they were restrain'd, propos'd that it might be declar'd in this Instrument, That the General of the Army should, after this first Time, be held uncapable of being Protector, for that was the Title given by this Instrument to the chief Magistrate, tho' some mov'd that it might be King; That none of the Relations of the last Protector should be chosen at the next succeeding Election; and, That a General Council of all the Commission Officers, who were about the Town, should be summon'd to consider of it. The first Article was put into the Instrument, the others neglected, and they were no more consulted about it, Lambert telling them at their next Meeting, The Lord General would take Care of managing the Civil Government, and so dismiss'd them.

The Heads of the Instrument were,

Instrument of Government.

I. A Parliament to be call'd every Three Years.

II. The First to assemble on the First of September, 1654.

III. No Parliament to be dissolv'd till it has sate Five Months.

IV. Such Bills as are offer'd to the Protector, if he assent not unto them in Twenty Days, to be Laws without him.

V. That his Council shall not exceed the Number of Twenty-one, nor be less than Thirteen.

VI. That immediately after the Death of the present and succeeding Protectors, the Council shall choose another before they rise.

VII. No Protector after the present shall be General of the Army.

VIII. The Protector shall have Power to make War and Peace.

IX. That in the Intervals of Parliament the Protector and the Council may make some Laws which shall be binding to the People.

Oliver made Protector.

By the 33d Article of the Instrument of Government, Oliver Cromwel, Captain General, &c. was declar'd Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Dominions thereunto belonging, for his Life.

By another Article, the Manner of electing Members of Parliament was alter'd, the small Burroughs left out, and the major Part was chosen for the County. Cornwall was to choose but 12, London and Middlesex 12; and among all the Sarcasms that those excellent Wits the Cavaliers have ridicul'd these Changes with, I have not met with one upon this but what has been more miserable than one would think Stupidity and Folly could make it. The whole Number was to be 400 for England and Wales, 30 for Scotland, 30 for Ireland. All who had advised or abetted the War against the Parliament, or the Rebellion in Ireland, were disqualify'd. No Man to vote for a Representative, unless he was worth 200 Pounds. By the 27th Article, Provision was made for maintaining 10000 Horse and Dragoons, and 20000 Foot. Also 200000 Pounds a Year was appropriated for the Protector's Civil List. The Chancellor, Keeper, or Commissioner of the Great Seal, the Treasurer, Admiral, chief Governor of Scotland and Ireland, to be chosen by the Approbation of Parliament. A. D. 1653.

The following Gentlemen were appointed to be his Council by the Instrument:

Philip Lord Viscount Lisle, Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper, Sir Gilbert Pickering, Sir Charles Wolseley, Walter Strickland, Esq; Major General Lambert, Major General Skippon, Colonel Desborough, Colonel Sydenham, Colonel Jones, Colonel Montagu, Henry Lawrence, Esq; Richard Mayor, Esq; Francis Rous, Esq; The Protector's Council.

His Commissioners of the Treasury were,

Col. Desborough, Col. Montagu, Col. Sydenham, William Masham, Esq;

All Things being prepar'd, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London were requir'd to attend at Whitehall, the 16th of December, in their Scarlet Gowns, whither when they came the Design was imparted to them, and they being under the Power of an Army, were forc'd to contribute to the Protector's Pageantry, by accompanying him to Westminster-Hall. The Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal and the Judges march'd first, then the Council of the Commonwealth, then the Lord Mayor of London, Sheriffs, and Aldermen, in their Robes. After them came the Lord General, with a great Number of the Officers of the Army, Major General Lambert carrying the Sword before him into the Court of Chancery, where, after the Lord General had heard the Instrument read, and taken the Oath to observe all the Articles, as directed in the Close of it, Major General Lambert kneeling, presented him with a Sword in the Scabbard, representing the Civil Sword; which Cromwel accepting, put off his own, intimating thereby, that he would no longer rule by the Military Sword. The Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal deliver'd it to him, and the Lord Mayor of London the City Sword. All which he restor'd again, with an Exhortation to use them well; and having assur'd them that he would not have undertaken the Charge, but to make use of it for the Good of the Publick, he return'd to Whitehall in the same Manner and Order as he came, and leaving his Lodgings at the Cockpit, took up the Royal Apartments at the Court. Ludlow tells us, His Wife seem'd at first unwilling to remove thither, tho' afterwards she became better satisfy'd with her Grandeur. His Council having taken their Places, issu'd out Orders to all Counties, Cities, and Boroughs, for proclaiming Oliver Cromwel Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and Care was taken to alter all Writs and Process, from the Title of the Keepers of the Liberties of England, to that of Protector. He is proclaim'd all over England.

Thus did this mighty Man, by an unnatural and monstrous Mixture of glorious and infamous Acts, by Victory and Treason, by Dissimulation and Power, by breaking of Parliaments, by making them and breaking them again, by subjecting all Opposition from without or within, from Enemies or Conscience, possess himself of a Dominion, above all other Dominions then in Europe; and in his future Government, he show'd that his Genius was equal to his Empire. The Figure he made in Europe was so shining, that the two Reigns before him, and the two Reigns after him, are so many Blots in the History of England, which his Protectorate would render His Greatness.

A. D. 1653. illuſtrious, had he acquir'd it as honourably as he maintain'd it.

I have not enter'd into Biography, nor trac'd him from his Origin, which the Cavaliers, with their wonted Ingenuity, have endeavour'd to debaſe, tho' it was as good as a Deſcent from the Siſter of Thomas Cromwel Earl of Eſſex, and the Family of Sir Richard Williams, one of the ancienteſt of the ancient Britons could make it. That Williams took the Name of Cromwel in Henry VIII's Reign, and Sir Oliver Cromwel, the Lord Protector's Father's elder Brother, is known to have had one of the beſt Gentleman's Eſtate in England. But had his Parentage been as baſe as Archbiſhop Laud's, if it had been honeſt, and he had advanc'd himſelf by Virtue as well as Valour, all theſe mean Reflections would have ſhewn the Authors of them to have learnt the Language and Manners of the Dregs of the People, if they did not themſelves come out of them.

Ireland. Ireland being entirely reduc'd, the High Court of Juſtice in that Kingdom proceeded againſt thoſe that had been involv'd in the Guilt of the Maſſacre, as, Maſſacrers The Lord Mayo, Col. Mackarty Reagh, the Lord Clanmaliere, the Lord Muskerry, Sir Phelin O Neale, Col. Lewis Moor, Col. Lewis Dempſy, Col. Lewis Took.

Mackarty Reagh, the Lord Clanmaliere, and the Lord Muskerry, were upon Trial acquitted. executed. Col. Moor and Col. Dempſy were hang'd, the Lord Mayo beheaded, Col. Took and Sir Phelin O Neale hang'd, Mrs. Fitzpatrick, Mother to Col. Fitzpatrick, was burnt, Col. Grace was pardon'd by Cromwel, and ſo was the Lord Fitzwilliams, who had been a Lieutenant General in the Iriſh Army. Many others of inferior Rank were executed, and their Eſtates were every where confiſcated.

There was a Council of War held, to conſider how the Lands of the Rebels ſhould be divided. A Survey of the whole Kingdom was order'd to be made by Mr. William Petty, who got moſt by it. The Number of Acres and Quality of Ground were to be mark'd in it. The Officers and Soldiers were to bring in their Demands of Arrears to be audited, and when their Account was adjuſted, they were to be ſatisfy'd out of theſe Lands after the Adventurers had Satisfaction. Every Man was to take by Lot as many Acres of Ground as anſwer'd in Value the Amount of his Arrears. The higheſt was rated at 4 d. a Year an Acre, and ſome at one Penny, and the Arrears of the Army were clear'd off by this Means. The Iriſh that had not been ſhip'd off were tranſplanted from the South to the North, and from the Eaſt to the Weſt, which ſo broke their Strength, that had they not been again encourag'd by King Charles and King James the Second, they would never again have been in a Capacity to have given the Engliſh and the Proteſtants any Diſturbance.

Five Thouſand Horſe and Foot were disbanded. Thoſe in Connaught had their Arrears in Lands about Sligo, thoſe in Munſter in the County of Corke; thoſe that had ſerv'd under the Lord Inchiquin, had their Arrears aſſign'd about Collen in Kilkenny. A. D. 1653.

Lieutenant General Ludlow refus'd to ſign the Order for proclaiming Cromwel, but Fleetwood got a Majority of Hands, and Ludlow not long after remov'd to England, as did Fleetwood, to make Room for Henry Cromwel, Eſq; whom his Father the Lord Protector made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and he gave general Content by his Humanity and Magnificence.

The Lord Glencairne held out ſtill in the Scotland. Highlands of Scotland, and Middleton had been tampering with the Dutch for Aſſiſtance; but the Heads of the Hollanders had a little too much Ballance in them to be turn'd with every wild Whim of the Royaliſts, whoſe Projects had not more Solidity than other Mens Dreams. The Earls of Athol and Seaforth very wiſely too left their Habitations to ſhare the Honour of the Earl of Glencairne's Highland Knight Errantry, of which the Earl of Clarendon and Echard ſpeak as gravely as if thoſe Knights had not been a Jeſt to every one out of the Mountains. The Reader will gueſs at the Intelligence of theſe Worthies by this Summons, which the Earl of Seaforth ſent to a Ship which lay at Anchor at Lewis Iſland.

BEing incited not only by Conſcience and Honour, to ſtand firm to the Principles of Loyalty, but alſo diſdaining even in rational Intereſt, to ſtoop to ſuch a wavering and ſervile Power as now ruleth, I have laid hold on 7 of your Men who came aſhore for Proviſions, as procuring the ſame. Wherefore I ſummon you to deliver your Veſſel for his Majeſty's Service, and being certainly perſwaded that all or moſt of you are with Grief of Heart imployed in ſuch Service, I do aſſure all that will voluntarily ſhun the unneceſſary Effuſion of Blood by that Surrender, ſhall have ſuch fair Quarter as is fitting for me to grant, and your ſeveral Conditions do require, and according to your Demeanors herein, you may expect to find me your Friend acordingly.

To the Captain, Soldiers, Maſters, and Mariners of the Fortune, Theſe.

The taking of theſe 7 Seamen, and the Writing of this Letter are two important Actions of thoſe Highland Heroes in War and Politicks. Whitlocke deſcribes them better than I can do. Some ragged Forces were rais'd in the Highlands, P. 542 the Lord Glencarne to be their General. Yet the Lord Clarendon and Mr. Archdeacon have great Hopes in theſe ragged Highlanders, and a Committee is appointed in France, conſiſting of that Lord, the Marquis of Ormond, and the Lord Newburgh, to conſult about the Affairs of the Highlands, and the Lord Chancellor Hyde was to make out all the Diſpatches purſuant to his Conferences with a Scots Vicar, who had given himſelf the Trouble to come from the Mountains to Paris, on an Errand of great Conſequence, concerning which he had long and frequent Conferences with the Chancellor, who however learn'd not the Truth of the Scots Affairs, for he tells us, Scotland lay under a heavy Yoke. The Yoke was very grievous to the whole Nation. If the King's Nature could have been delighted to behold the Oppreſſion the Scots endur'd, he might have had abundant Comfort. They were rul'd by a Rod of Iron, and all their Subjection ſupported at their own Charge. After ſo many Falſities which I have produc'd out of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, the Reader will expect all theſe Aſſertions to be as falſe as the reſt, but let him not take my Word, let him ſee what the Biſhop of Salisbury, a Scots Man, and living in thoſe Times, ſays, There was good Juſtice done, and Vice was ſuppreſs'd and puniſh'd, ſo that we always reckon thoſe eight Years of Uſurpation a Time of great Peace and Proſperity. Echard, who ſteals from, and mimicks the Lord Clarendon as much as his Genius would permit, affirms, The common Senſe of the Slavery in Scotland tempted the King to go amongſt them and head his Armies. He means the Gentry in the Mountains, where we muſt leave them in a Condition which would deſerve Compaſſion, if they had themſelves had any Pity for their Country.

Lilburne brought to his Trial.

In July this Year Lieutenant Col. John Lilburne, who had been baniſh'd by the Rump Parliament, return'd and threw himſelf upon Cromwel, who left him to the Law, upon which he was committed to Newgate, and try'd the next Seſſions at the Old Baily, where he refus'd to plead unleſs he had a Copy of his Indictment, which was at length granted, and then he put off his pleading by ſeveral Evaſions, till the next Seſſions, when his Trial came on, and he was acquitted by the Jury, having render'd himſelf very popular among the Malecontents of all Parties, by oppoſing all Governments that were in being in his Time. There is ſomething remarkable in this Man's Story, Oliver ſeem'd very much offended with him, and very deſirous that he might be puniſh'd, yet privately paid him a Penſion equivalent with a Lieutenant Colonel's Pay, and the Malecontents of all Parties opening themſelves freely to Lilburne, who was look'd upon as a Confeſſor for their Cauſe or Cauſes, Cromwel found his Account in keeping in with him, though to conceal the Matter the better Lilburne was content to lie ſome Time in the Tower.

Ponteleon de Sa's Quarrel.

In November this Year the Portugal Ambaſſador's Brother, Don Ponteleon Sa, Knight of Malta, and an Officer of ſpecial Note in the Portugueſe Army, having accompany'd the Ambaſſador into England, and walking in the New Exchange with ſome of his Company, Colonel Gerard, who heard them ſpeaking in French of the Affairs of England, told them in the ſame Language, They did not repreſent thoſe Paſſages right, upon which one of the Portugueſe gave him the Lie, and three of them fell upon Col. Gerard, ſtabbing him in the Shoulder, but one Mr. Anſtruther coming to his Aſſiſtance they withdrew, and in an Hour's Time return'd with 20 more arm'd with Breaſt-plates and Head-pieces. They took two or three Turns, and not finding Mr. Anſtruther went home. The next Day Don Ponteleon and his Company came again to the New Exchange, and meeting Col. Mayo, whom they ſuppos'd to be Mr. Anſtruther, fir'd a Piſtol as a Signal for more Portugueſes to enter, which they did, to the Number of 50, with drawn Swords, and leaving ſome to keep the Stairs, the reſt went up with the Ambaſſador's Brother and fell upon Col. Mayo, who defending himſelf gallantly, receiving ſeven dangerous Wounds but not mortal. Then they attack'd Mr. Greenway of Lincolns-Inn, who was walking with his Siſter in one Hand, and his Miſtreſs in the other, they ſhot him in the Head with a Piſtol Ball, and he dy'd on the Spot. They brought with them ſeveral Jars fill'd with Gunpowder and Matches ſtopp'd with Wax, intending, as it ſeem'd, ſome Miſchief to the Exchange, had they not been prevented. The Parliament's Horſe at the Mewſe, taking the Alarm, apprehended ſome of the Portugueſes, and the reſt of them ran to the Ambaſſador's Houſe, whether Col. Whaley purſu'd them, and beſet the Houſe with his Horſe, letting the Ambaſſador know, that his Followers had committed Murder, and he therefore demanded to have them deliver'd up to him. The Ambaſſador inſiſted on his Privilege, but Whaley giving him to underſtand he would take them by Force if they were not ſurrender'd, the Ambaſſador gave his Word of Honour that they ſhould be forthcoming, after he had made his Applications to the Lord General, who told him, the Buſineſs concern'd the Publick, and therefore his Excellency's Addreſs muſt be to the Parliament and the Council of State, then both in Being. The next Day Don Ponteleon and his Company were carry'd before the Lord Chief Juſtice Rolles, examin'd, and committed to Newgate, the Populace having ſurrounded the Ambaſſador's Houſe, and threaten'd to pull it down, unleſs he deliver'd them up. The Ambaſſador's Brother made his Eſcape out of Newgate, but was ſoon retaken. His Trial was put off ſome Time upon a Petition of the Portugal Merchants, as will be ſeen next Year.

A. D. 1653.

Prince Rupert, who had been adventuring for Prizes at Sea, ſometimes with more Ships, ſometimes with fewer, as he could get Money to keep them, was now forc'd to give over his Adventures, and go to the French Army at Beffort. The ſheltring of him and others of the King's Followers, continu'd the Difference between England and France: The latter found at laſt that ſhe was not ſafe while England was not in Friendſhip with her. Captain Hayton, with a ſmall Squadron of Engliſh Men of War, met eight French, which he defeated, took three of the largeſt, and many rich Prizes, with the Loſs but of four Men, which, with ſeveral other ſuch Loſſes, and the Talk of a Peace between England and Holland, determin'd the French Court to conclude a Treaty with the new Protector as ſoon as they could.

France courts the Protector.

A. D. 1654.

Oliver, now Lord Protector, aſſum'd all the State and Ceremony of a Sovereign, with the Title of Highneſs. He had his Houſhold Officers, his Guards, and a Court, with as much Splendor, and more Order, than had been known at Whitehall ſince Queen Elizabeth's Reign. Notice was given to the Dutch Plenipotentiaries by the Maſter of the Ceremonies, That he expected the ſame Honours to be paid him as had been paid to the Kings of England, and that they ſtile him his Highneſs in their Memorials and Diſcourſes, and not being in the Quality of Ambaſſadors, but Lords Deputies Plenipotentiaries, muſt be uncover'd in his Preſence. He took the Treaty of Peace out of the Hands of the Council of State, and by his Secretary Thurloe ſent the Dutch Miniſters a Writing, containing the Conditions to which they were to ſubmit for Peace. The Plenipotentiaries, who expected ſome Abatements of former Demands from Cromwel, and found that he had abated very little, inſtead of returning an Anſwer, demanded Paſſports to be gone, thinking to frighten Oliver with a Proſpect of War in the Beginning of his Protectorate. He ſent them Word, If they went without concluding and ſigning the Treaty as he had drawn it, he would not be oblig'd to it, or to any Part of it. Upon which the Plenipotentiaries ſtay'd, and Cromwel inſiſted on the Seclusion of the Prince of Orange from being Statholder and General, without which there was no Peace to be had. Theſe Miniſters having no Inſtructions about this Article, or rather having Inſtructions againſt

A. D. 1654. againſt it, renew'd their Demand for Paſſports, and Oliver let them go. The Protector was not to be dealt with after the Rate of their Dealing with the Court of England formerly. He had no Paſſion but that of Power, no Favourite but Glory, no Religion but Empire. He was not to be triſl'd with like James the Firſt in the Buſineſs of Amboyna, and all other Buſineſs. He told them what he expected, and what they muſt expect, if it was not comply'd with, ſo the States of all the Provinces agreed to haſten back their Ambaſſadors, and notwithſtanding Monſieur Chanut, the French Ambaſſador at the Hague, offer'd that his Maſter would bear half the Charge, if the States would continue the War, yet they were either ſo weary of it, or ſo afraid of Cromwel, that in about 6 Weeks Time the ſame Miniſters return'd with the Character of Ambaſſadors, and a very gallant Retinue, and on the 4th of March they had Audience of the Lord Protector in the Banquetting Houſe at Whitehall, which was richly hung, and a Chair of State plac'd for the Protector. The Ambaſſador acquainted his Highneſs, That all their Provinces had conſented to the Articles of Peace, and had impower'd them to ratify the Articles. In the mean Time they deſir'd a Ceſſation of Arms. The Lord Protector appointed ſix of his Council to confer with the Ambaſſadors, and ſign the Articles of Peace, after they had examin'd the Papers, and compar'd them with the original Draught, which took up ſome Weeks.

On the 5th of April they were ſign'd by the Commiſſioners and Ambaſſadors, the chief Articles were, "That the States General ſhould "not ſuffer any of the King's Party, or any "Enemy to the Commonwealth of England to "reſide within their Dominions. That they "ſhould deliver up the Iſland of Polerone in "the Eaſt Indies, which they had taken from the "Engliſh in the Reign of King James, into "the Hands of the Engliſh Eaſt India Compa-"ny, and pay 300000 Pounds for the Damages "the Engliſh ſuffer'd at Amboyna, for which, ſays Echard, the two laſt Kings could never obtain Satisfaction. "That they ſhould own the "Sovereignty of the Sea to be in the Common-"wealth of England, and no more diſpute the "Flag. That they ſhould pay 150000 Pounds "for the Engliſh Ships ſtopp'd by the King of "Denmark in the Sound. That they ſhould "comply with the Act of Navigation; and that "they ſhould ſeclude the Prince of Orange "from being Statholder and General." Thus was every Branch of the Houſe of Stuart involv'd in the King's Misfortunes, and it was Ruin to all Potentates and Powers to aid and aſſiſt them as long as there was Life in Cromwel. France ſent Monſieur Bourdeaux to compliment the Lord Protector on his Acceſſion to the Government before the Concluſion of this Treaty, and after that Step, the King of England and his Followers in that Kingdom had nothing to expect but Slights, if not Affronts. To prevent which, and being forbidden that Court, he retir'd firſt to the Spaw and then to Cologne, where he liv'd almoſt three Years at an Expence of about 7 or 8000 Pounds a Year. Echard aſſures us, He was the beſt Oeconomiſt that ever was. Theſe Hiſtorians affect to be as oppoſite to the Truth as can be. King Charles could ſpend no more than he had, when he had no Credit; but when he had it, after his Reſtoration, he was ſuch a Manager, that his Revenues and his Debts always increas'd together. And as to the Oeconomy abroad, a French Author tells us, He gave one Lady in France above 50000 Crowns Value in China Ware; and 'twas well known that the Dutcheſs de Chatillon, a Lady of Intrigue, had more Preſents from him than all his Followers. The Duke of Lorrain's Daughter was propos'd to him in Marriage, with a Portion of Four Millions of Livres, which would have done him more good than the other Part of the Propoſal, that Duke's Aſſiſtance againſt the Power and Treaſure of England, Scotland, and Ireland. We are told the Duke of York ſignaliz'd himſelf in the French Army under Turenne, who was enamour'd with that Prince for his heroick Qualities, which he brought not with him into England, at leaſt not in ſo great a Degree as the Lord Clarendon and Mr. Echard repreſent them to be, while he was abroad. The King left his younger Brother the Duke of Glouceſter behind him in France; but, as Echard informs us ſeriouſly enough, he ſent the brave Marquis of Ormond to get him out of his Mother's Hands, for fear he ſhould turn Papiſt, to which Religion his Majeſty had a mortal Averſion, and the Marquis did it with great Labour and Hazard, and no leſs Courage and Reſolution. The Truth is, Cromwel was beginning to hearken to the Courtſhip of France, and to incline to treat with her, the ſure Conſequence of which would have been, forbidding the Duke's Abode in that Kingdom, and it was much more decent to leave it without being forc'd to it. Theſe are obvious Truths, but what is ſtrange to Amazement is, that the Hiſtorians are giddy with Vanity, amidſt the moſt extreme Diſtreſs and Calamity.

A. D. 1654. Animales de la Cour.

The firſt foreign State that ſent to congratulate the Protector, except ſuch as had Miniſters here before, was that of Hamburgh, then came an Ambaſſador from Denmark, and then Monſieur de Bourdeaux from France, and he had his Audience in the Banquetting Houſe in Whitehall, with the ſame Pomp and Ceremony as the Dutch Ambaſſadors. He made a flattering Speech to his Highneſs, to this Effect:

The French Ambaſſador's Speech to Oliver.

YOUR moſt ſerene Highneſs has already received ſome principal Aſſurances of the King my Maſter, and of his Deſire to eſtabliſh a perfect Correſpondence between his Dominions and England. His Majeſty, this Day, gives to your Highneſs ſome publick Demonſtrations of the ſame, and his ſending his Ambaſſador to your Highneſs does plainly ſhew, That the Eſteem which his Majeſty makes of your Highneſs, and the Intereſt of his People, have more Power in his Counſels, than many Conſiderations that would be of great Concernment to a Prince leſs affected with the one and the other. This Proceeding, grounded upon ſuch ſound Principles, and ſo different from what is only guided by Ambition, renders the Amity of the King my Maſter, as conſiderable for its Firmneſs as its Utility, for which Reaſon it is ſo eminently eſteem'd and courted by all the greateſt Princes and Potentates of the Earth. But his Majeſty communicates none to any with ſo much Joy, as to thoſe whoſe virtuous Acts, and extraordinary Merits, render them more conſpicuouſly famous than the Largeneſs of their Dominions. His Majeſty is ſenſible that all theſe Advantages do wholly reſide in your Highneſs, and that the Divine Providence, after ſo many Calamities, could not deal more favourably with theſe three Nations, nor cauſe them to forget their paſt Miſeries with greater Satisfaction, than by ſubmitting them to ſuch a juſt Government. And ſince it is not ſufficient for the the compleating of their Happineſs to make them enjoy Peace at home, becauſe it depends no leſs in good Correſpondence with Nations abroad. The King my Maſter does not doubt but to find alſo the ſame Diſpoſition in your Highneſs which his Majeſty here expreſſes in his Letters. After ſo many Diſpoſitions expreſs'd by his Majeſty and your Highneſs towards the Accommodation of the two Nations, there is Reaſon to believe that their Wiſhes will ſoon be accompliſh'd. As for me, I have none greater than to be able to ſerve the King my Maſter, with the good Pleaſure and Satisfaction of your Highneſs, and that the Happineſs I have to tender to your Highneſs the firſt Aſſurances of his Majeſty's Eſteem, may give me Occaſion, by my Services, to merit the Honour of your gracious Affection.

Sweden.

Before the Concluſion of the Peace with Holland, Cromwel's firſt Parliament underſtanding there was a League negotiating between the Kings of Spain, Denmark, and the States of Holland, voted the Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke to be Ambaſſador for the Commonwealth of England at the Court of Chriſtina Queen of Sweden, who had ſhewn great Regard to the Commonwealth, and ſent one of the principal Lords of her Kingdom to congratulate them on their aſſuming the Government. Whitlocke's Inſtructions were to negotiate a League between England, France and Sweden, in Oppoſition to the other, but the Queen's abjuring her Religion, and abdicating her Kingdom for Popery, and a Penſion from the Pope, put a Stop to that League for a while, though Whitlocke, at length, concluded it, and Oliver wrote a Letter of Congratulation to the new King. Don Lewis de Haro, prime Miniſter of Spain, preſs'd his Maſter to ſend an extraordinary Ambaſſador to Oliver on his Acceſſion to the Government, and wrote to the Protector, who ſaid, He had receiv'd no Letter ſo obliging, and ſo polite, as Don Lewis's. He ſeem'd ſo taken with it, that the French Ambaſſador grew jealous, eſpecially when he underſtood that Cromwel had anſwer'd Don Lewis's Letter in Terms every whit as polite and obliging, yet had Cromwel reſolv'd then to break with Spain, and enter into an Alliance with France, a Step for which he has been very much blam'd by thoſe who knew nothing of the Balance of Power at that Juncture, when the Houſe of Auſtria was very powerful and united, and that of Bourbon divided, and in a Minority. The Judgment Coke and Echard make of it is, as the Turks judge, by Succeſs. It appear'd when King Charles the Second had ſold Dunkirk, which Oliver kept as a Security for England, and the French King, with the Connivance of the King of England, had ſurpriz'd many Cities and Provinces to a vaſt Extent of Empire; I ſay it then appear'd, that a Treaty with Spain was more eligible for the Preſervation of the Balance of Power. But was it poſſible for any ſuch Thing as the Sale of Dunkirk to enter into ſuch a Head as Cromwel's? He would as ſoon have ſold Portſmouth; and had Dunkirk always been kept in Engliſh Hands, Oliver's French Treaty would never have been complain'd of. Monſieur Wicquefort, who was himſelf a Miniſter of State, and being a Foreigner, had nothing to corrupt his Judgment in reflecting on the Affairs of England, ſpeaks thus of the Matter; "The Spaniſh Ambaſſador us'd his "utmoſt Endeavours with Cromwel to engage "him in the Intereſt of his Maſter, even to the "offering him an hundred Thouſand Crowns "a Month, two hundred Thouſand Crowns "by way of Advance, and twenty Thouſand "Men to aſſiſt the Engliſh to re-conquer Ca-"lais." Archdeacon Echard never heard of theſe Things before. "Oliver, continues "Wicquefort, rejected theſe Offers, and as "he fear'd more the Neighbourhood of France "than he hop'd from the remote Strength of "Spain, he fided with the firſt, whoſe "Friend he became, by that Means obliging "the other to be ſo to the King of Great "Britain."

A. D. 1654.

Cromwel's League with France examin'd.

There was no Power in Europe that was not barbarous, but what made their Court to the Lord Protector, the Pope only excepted; and if Leti was to be believ'd, if the old Pope Innocent X. held not Intelligence with him, Donna Olympia his Couſin, who govern'd all at Rome, ſent her Compliments to him by Sir Robert Tambol, probably Talbot, who is not to be found out by his Name, nor by his Office, that Author pretending he was Oliver's private Envoy at the Court of Rome.

The Envoy from the Arch-Duke Leopold, Governor of the Spaniſh Netherlands, had not been long in London before News came, that the Duke of Lorraine was ſeiz'd by the Arch-Duke's Order, and all hopes of Aſſiſtance from him were ſeen to be meer Dreams of ſick Minds.

We muſt now look a little into the Tranſactions at Home, as they relate to the Civil Government; and we may venture to give our Opinion, that Oliver, in almoſt all the Parts of his Power, uſes it as well as he acquir'd it ill.

He and his Council publiſh'd an Ordinance, declaring what Offences, and no other, ſhall be adjudg'd Treaſon. Another to repeal the Oath call'd the Engagement againſt a ſingle Perſon, and Houſe of Peers. Another for appointing Perſons to be Approvers of Miniſters, that ſuch as were not qualify'd for the Miniſtry by their Piety and Knowledge, or were diſqualify'd by Vice and Ignorance, might be kept out of the Pulpit. An Ordinance, which was enough not only to provoke the Raillery, but the Rage of all ſuch as think a Benefice is a ſufficient Call, and a Caſſock a Qualification. In April two extraordinary Acts were publiſh'd, one for the Union of England with Scotland, another againſt Planting of Tobacco in England, which is a Law at this Time.

On the 12th of May the Lord Protector iſſu'd a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, to try Don Ponteleon de Sa, the Portugal Ambaſſador's Brother, for the Murder of Mr. Greenway.

The Commiſſioners were,

Lord Chief Juſtice Rolles, Mr. Juſtice Atkins, Sir Henry Blunt, Alderman Tichburn, Mr. Lucy, Sergeant Steel, Dr. Zouch, Dr. Clarke, Dr. Turner.

A. D. 1654. The Jury impannel'd were half Engliſh and half Foreigners. The Portugal Ambaſſador labour'd hard to prevent his Brother's Trial, but the Protector having given him up to the Law, there was no avoiding it. Some Time before this he and his Council had been invited by the Lord Mayor to dine with him at Grocer's Hall, which he did, to ſhew how well he and the City agreed together. He came from Weſtminſter in a Chariot drawn by ſix Horſes in rich Equipage. Before him rode his Life Guard with 3 or 400 of his chief Officers and ſome of his Council; after them came two Pages bareheaded, bedeck'd with Lace and Embroidery; then came twelve Lackeys with Velvet Caps and grey Liveries, with ſilk and ſilver Fringe; then the Lord Protector, clad in a dark colour'd Suit and Cloak, attended by many of the Nobility in their Coaches and ſix Horſes: At Temple Bar his Highneſs was met by the Lord Mayor, Thomas Viner, Eſq; and the Aldermen, where the Recorder of London ſaluted him with a florid Speech: Here the Protector came out of his Chariot, put on a riding Coat embroider'd, and mounted on Horſeback, two or three of his Horſes of State being led by; then the Lord Mayor took the City Sword and carry'd it bareheaded before him from thence to Grocers Hall, changing the Order of the Proceſſion after they came into the City. The ſeveral Companies of London in their Liveries were plac'd according to their Superiority, in the Streets, from the lower End of Cheapſide to Temple-Bar, within Rails hung with blue Cloth, with the City Banners and Streamers belonging to their reſpective Companies ſet before them. The City Marſhal went firſt with ſome other Officers; then ſix Trumpets; then the Lord Protector's Life Guard richly cloth'd; after them eight Trumpets more, follow'd by the City Streamers, red and white; then the Aldermen, and after them the two Sheriffs, James Philipps and Walter Bigge, Eſqrs. next the Lord Protector's Heralds with rich Coats, adorn'd with the Arms of the Commonwealth; then the Aldermen in Scarlet Gowns with Gold Chains; then the Mace and Cap of Maintenance carry'd before the Lord Mayor, who carry'd the Sword bare-headed, with two Gentlemen Uſhers; then his Highneſs the Lord Protector, with his twelve Footmen in grey Liveries, as is ſaid before; after him rode Major General Skippon, the Protector's Council, and great Officers of the Army, the Lords, Gentlemen and others. At Grocers Hall the Recorder made another Speech, to let his Highneſs underſtand how happy the City accounted themſelves under his conſpicuous Government, and alſo in the Injoyment of his Preſence with them that Day. The Speech over, he Knighted the Lord Mayor, and din'd with as much or rather more Splendor and Magnificence than any Monarch of England had done before him. We are told, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen intended to wait, as was cuſtomary when a King din'd with them; but Oliver would not admit of it, proteſting he would not eat till they ſat down by him; and when it was propos'd to ſerve him on the Knee, he refus'd it with ſome Diſdain, ſaying, Such Ceremonies ſhould be only practis'd at Rome, where they are ſo greedy of Ceremonies, or in Kingdoms govern'd by Tyrants, but ſhould be baniſh'd out of a Chriſtian and Proteſtant Commonwealth, as was that of England. And not long after, he invited the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Sheriffs to dine with him at Whitehall; and it was obſerv'd, that in all his Ceremonials, all his Entertainments, Audiences, &c. he maintain'd the Port of a great Prince in every Part of his Appearance, as much as if he had been ſo born and ſo bred; that his Soul extended it ſelf always in Proportion to the Room that was given it; and in whatever Space he ſtood he always fill'd it. Is this Man, the greateſt in the World, a fit Subject for the lewd Invectives of inſolent Libellers and witleſs Declaimers? I ſpeak not of the Means he us'd in acquiring Dominion, but of the Manner of his uſing it. A. D. 1654.

Not long after his being declar'd Protector, his Mother dy'd: She had liv'd to a great Age, and very much miſtruſted the Iſſue of Affairs: She was ſo afraid of ſome Attempt againſt his Life, that when ſhe heard the Noiſe of a Musket, ſhe would ſtart, fearing he was ſhot, and was exceedingly diſſatisfy'd if ſhe did not ſee him once a Day at leaſt. Oliver was at a vaſt Expence upon her Funeral; and though ſhe was bury'd by Daylight, caus'd many hundred Flambeaus to be carry'd with the Hearſe.

His Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion appear'd on ſeveral Occaſions, and particularly in a Letter he wrote to the Prince of Tarente in France, which I incert at Length, his Latin Secretary being the immortal Milton; and if any of our Hiſtory Writers could have given us Examples of the like Scholarſhip among their Literati, they would have had more Reaſon to have boaſted of the Learning of their Party.

OLIVERIUS.

Oliver's Letter to the Prince of Tarente.

Cromwel in this Letter aſſures the Prince of Tarente, " That it was with extreme Plea- " ſure he learn'd by the Letter he had re- " ceiv'd from him his inviolable Zeal and " Attachment for the Reform'd Churches, " for which his Praiſe was the greater, inaſ- " much as he ſhew'd that Zeal at a Time, " and in a Place where ſuch flattering Hopes " were given to Perſons of his Rank, if they " would forſake the Orthodox Faith, and " where thoſe who continue ſtedfaſt are on " the contrary threaten'd with ſo many Trou- " bles. He rejoices that his own Conduct " with Reſpect to Religion, was pleaſing to " him; he calls God to witneſs he deſires " nothing ſo much as an Opportunity to an- " ſwer the favourable Opinion the Churches " have of his Zeal and his Piety, by endea- " vouring to propagate the true Faith, and " procure Reſt and Peace for the Church. " He exhorts the Prince to hold out firmly to " the End in the Orthodox Religion he re- " ceiv'd from his Fathers; and adds, that " nothing would bring him greater Glory " than to protect it as much as lay in his " Power.

Are there any ſuch Letters in the Hiſtory of the Houſe of Stuart for promoting the Proteſtant Religion, and the Orthodox Faith! But what is the Orthodox Faith in Compariſon with Powers, Dignities, Revenues, &c. And the Faith Cromwel recommends to the Protection of the Prince, was then diſturb'd in England by certain Prieſts and others, who were for reducing Religion to Enthuſiaſm, and Government to Anarchy. The Chief of theſe among the Laiety were Major General Harriſon, Mr. John Carew, Colonel Rich; among the Clergy, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Feak, Mr. Sympſon; who being Men of turbulent, reſtleſs Minds, impatient under all Power, which they had not the Management of, and refuſing to give Oliver any Security for their peaceable Behaviour, he thought fit to hinder their giving the Publick Diſturbance by confining their Perſons; Major General Harriſon was ſent to Carisbrook Caſtle, in the Iſle of Wight; Mr. Carew to Pendennis, in his own Country; Colonel Rich remain'd in Cuſtody of the Sergeant at Arms, and the three Miniſters were ſhut up in Windſor Caſtle, till they could bring their Minds into better Temper, and had learn'd that the Laws of God require their Obedience to the Laws of Man, eſpecially when their Conſciences are at Liberty, as they were under the Protector.

Enthuſiaſts.

A Plot.

The inveterate Enemies to that and all Liberty, the Royaliſts, carry'd their Reſentments farther; and as their Succeſſors, the Enemies to the Governments ſince the Revolution, deſpairing of doing any Thing by fair War, have always had Recourſe to Aſſaſſination Plots; ſo now the Cavaliers, who could neither ſubmit nor ſtarve, thought of getting out of their Miſery by murdering the Man whom they took to be the Cauſe of it. One cannot expect Men of Honour in ſo infamous a Plot as that of Murder: The chief Plotter in this againſt Oliver was one Vowell, a Pedagogue, who kept an obſcure School in a Country Village, and being a very buſy factious prating Fellow, was admitted into the Company of ſome of thoſe who were the moſt impatient for the King's Reſtoration, ſeveral of whom were Perſons of Quality; as the Earl of Oxford, who was firſt apprehended, Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Colonel Aſhburnham, Mr. Joſ. Aſhburnham, Colonel Gerrard, the ſame who was attack'd by Don Ponteleon de Sa, in the New Exchange, Mr. Somerſet Fox, and ſeveral others. The Plot was to aſſaſſinate the Lord Protector, to proclaim the King, and offer Pardon to all except three Perſons. On the Diſcovery of this Conſpiracy, the Guards were doubled at the Tower, and a Proclamation iſſued, requiring a Liſt to be brought to the Council of all Lodgers, and all Inhabitants and ſuſpected Perſons in London and Weſtminſter, and the Lines of Communication. A high Court of Juſtice, the Lord Commiſſioner Liſle Preſident, was erected for the Trial of the Plotters who were taken, the Attorney General Prideaux, the Solicitor General Ellis, and Serjeant Glyn; the Protector's Council charg'd the Priſoners with conſpiring to murder the Protector as he was going to Hampton-Court, to ſeize the Guards, to maſter the City, Tower and Magazines. Mr. Somerſet Fox confeſs'd the Charge, Col. Gerrard and Vowell deny'd it, and were try'd. The Proof againſt them was too plain to leave any Doubt of their Guilt. Several Witneſſes were heard, and the Jury bringing them in guilty, the Lord Chief Juſtice Rolles made a long Speech to Fox, Gerrard, and Vowell, to convince them of the Wickedneſs of their Deſign, of which the Conſpirators ſeem'd not to be ſenſible; and then he pronounc'd Sentence, That upon mature Conſideration of the Treaſons and Murders plotted and contriv'd by them againſt his Highneſs the Lord Protector and the Commonwealth, and raiſing a bloody War in the ſame, the Court did adjudge them to be hang'd. Gerrard mov'd that he might be beheaded, or ſhot to Death like a Soldier, for which Favour he petition'd the Protector, and obtain'd it. Vowell was hang'd at Charing-Croſs, but Mr. Fox was repriev'd and pardon'd.

And Don Ponteleon de Sa.

About the ſame Time, July the 5th, Don Ponteleon de Sa, and two other Portugueſe, were try'd before the above-mention'd Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer in the King's Bench. He pleaded, That he was not only the Ambaſſador's Brother, but had a Commiſſion to himſelf to be Ambaſſador, when his Brother ſhould be abſent, and that by the Law of Nations he was privileg'd from Trial. He demanded Council. The Point of Ambaſſadors Privileges by the Civil Law and the Law of Nations, was long debated by the Court, and by the Protector's Council; the Reſult of which was, That by all thoſe Laws the Proceedings in this Caſe were juſtify'd, and that no Council could be allow'd to the Ambaſſador's Brother in Matter of Fact; but if in the Proceedings of his Trial he ſhould deſire Council as to Matter of Law, it ſhould be allow'd him. After much Perſwaſion, he and the reſt pleaded Not guilty, and to be try'd by God and the Country. Don Ponteleon

A. D. 1654. at his Trial pleaded Ignorance of the Laws of England, and desir'd to have Council assign'd him; but the Court told him, They were of Council equal to him as to the Commonwealth; and upon hearing the Witnesses, the Jury found the Ambassador's Brother and 4 more guilty of Murder and Felony. The Lord Chief Justice Rolles gave Sentence against them to be hang'd. One of the condemn'd Criminals was an English Boy, who was in the Tumult and Murder with the Portuguese, who were all repriev'd but the Ambassador's Brother. On the 10th of July he was carry'd from Newgate to Tower-Hill in a Mourning Coach and Six Horses, attended by divers of his Brother's Retinue. He spoke something on the Scaffold to those who understood him in Excuse of his Crime, laying the Blame of the Quarrel and Murder upon the English. After a few private Words and Passages of Popish Devotion with his Confessor, he gave him his Beads and Crucifix, laid his Head on the Block, and it was chopt off at two Blows; The rest, says Whitlocke, condemn'd for the same Crime, were repriev'd. The Lord Clarendon, quite contrary to Whitlocke and the Fact, says, The rest were hang'd at Tyburn, to make Cromwel as bloody-minded as he could. It is said the Spanish Ambassador forwarded this Execution as much as lay in his Power, saying, Don John of Portugal is an Usurper, and no lawful King, and Don Ponteleon may be executed without violating the Rights and Privileges of Ambassadors. Be that as it will, we are assur'd that the Portugal Ambassador sign'd the Treaty with Cromwel upon the very Day his Brother was beheaded. The Emperor of Germany brought this Prosecution as a Precedent to justify his carrying off the Prince of Furstemberg, Plenipotentiary at the Treaty of Cologne, twenty Years after; and in the Manifesto his Imperial Majesty publish'd, this Piece of Cromwel's Justice, in executing the Portuguese Gentleman, is cited at large, tho' the whole Herd of Writers against him, talk of it as a Breach of the Law of Nations.

Second Parliament. According to the Instrument of Government, Oliver and his Council resolv'd to issue out Writs for the Election of Members of Parliament, with thirty from Scotland and thirty from Ireland, to meet at Westminster, the 3d of September, a favourite Day with Cromwel, on which, tho' a Sunday, they met and attended the Lord Protector in the Painted Chamber, where he made a Speech to them of the Cause of their Summons, and then going to the House, they adjourn'd to the next Day, September the 4th,

When the Lord Protector rode in State from Whitehall to Westminster, some Hundreds of Gentlemen and Officers went before bare with the Life Guard, and next before the Coach, his Pages and Lackeys richly cloath'd. On one Side of his Coach went Strickland, one of his Council, and Captain of his Guard, with the Master of the Ceremonies, both on Foot. On the other Side went Colonel Howard, afterwards Earl of Carlisle, Captain of the Life Guard. In the Coach with him were his Son Henry and Lambert, both bare. After him came Mr. Claypool, Master of the Horse, with a Led Horse in rich Trappings. Next the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal, the Lords of the Treasury, the Council in their Coaches, the Life Guards. When he alighted at the Door of Westminster Abbey, the Officers of the Army went first, then the Gentlemen, then four Maces, the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal, Mr. Whitlocke carrying the Purse, then Lieutenant General Lambert, carrying the Sword bare before his Highness, who seated himself over against the Pulpit, the Members of Parliament on both Sides. After a Sermon preach'd by Mr. Thomas Goodwin, the Lord Protector went in the same Equipage to the Painted Chamber, where he took his Seat in a Chair of State set upon Steps, and the Members upon Benches round about sate all bare. Then his Highness put off his Hat, and made a long and artful Speech to them; in which he told them of the Danger of Levelling Principles, and of the Fifth Monarchy Opinions, of the Form of Godliness, and the two abus'd Pretensions of Liberty of Subject, and Liberty of Conscience; two as glorious Things, and as much to be contended for, as any Gift God hath given us. He reminded them of the great Judgments which had fallen upon the Nation by the Civil Wars and the late Foreign Wars; and then he shew'd how a Remedy had been apply'd to those Evils, which he told them in so many Words was his Government. He instanc'd his reforming the Laws, putting good Men into Seats of Justice, regulating the Chancery, setting a Way for the Approbation of able Ministers: His making Peace with Holland, Denmark, Portugal, Sweden, and his being in a Treaty with France. He minded them of the Expence of the Fleet, and of the Abatement of Thirty Thousand Pounds of the three Months Assessment. He exhorted them to be zealous for the Protestant Interest abroad. He added, Though Peace is made, yet it is Interest that keeps Peace, and further than that, Peace is not to be trusted. He clos'd all thus: I shall conclude with my Perswasion to you, to have a sweet, gracious, and holy Understanding one of another, and put you in Mind of the Counsel you have heard this Day in order to it. And I desire you to believe that I speak not to you as one that would be a Lord over you, but as one that is resolv'd to be a Fellow-Servant with you to the Interest of this great Affair. There is more solid Sense, more Truth in this Speech, which is at large in Whitlocke, than in most of the Speeches from the Throne since Queen Elizabeth's Death. There is more true Eloquence in some Parts of it: In such a Heap of Confusion was this poor Nation; and that it might not sink into Ruin, a Remedy must be apply'd. A Remedy has been apply'd, This Government. Read the Earl of Clarendon's, and the Speech-making Speaker Turner's Speeches after the Restoration, and compare them with Cromwel's, notwithstanding it is incumber'd with certain seraphical Expressions, according to the Mode of the Times, and you'll soon distinguish the Truth and Eloquence of Cromwel's, from the Flattery, Affectation, from the Abundance of Words and Deficiency of Sense in those tedious Harangues. Oliver told the Assembly they should repair to their House, and exercise their Liberty in the Choice of a Speaker; which they did, and chose William Lenthal, Esq; who had been so long Speaker of the House

The next Day the Houſe call'd over their Members, and appointed their Committees. The Lord Broghill was one of the Members for Ireland, the Marquis of Argyle one of them for Scotland; and this Convention was for the moſt part compos'd of as good Gentlemen as were in England, tho' the Majority were Commonwealth's Men, who did by no Means approve of the Government in a ſingle Perſon, ſuch as Robert Wallop, Eſq; Lord Grey of Groby, Sir Arthur Haſlerigg, John Highlord, Eſq; John Bradſhaw, Eſq; Thomas Scot, Eſq; John Wildman, Eſq; Thomas Honeywood, Eſq; Henry Nevil, Eſq;. Ludlow is very well pleas'd with the Difficulty they made in recognizing the Protectorate, and highly extols their Courage in taking to Pieces the Inſtrument of Government, in which his Republican Principles prevail'd over his good Senſe, for without the Inſtrument of Government they were no Parliament; and Oliver ſhew'd his Reaſon as well as his Power was greater than all theirs, when he told them in another Speech a Week after, The ſame Government which made them a Parliament made him a Protector; and as they were entruſted with ſome Things, ſo was he with others. He then explain'd to them upon what Foundation they ſtood, and what Buſineſs they had to do; after which he appointed a Teſt of Recognition to be taken before they went any more into the Houſe, which was both juſt and reaſonable for him to do as he was Protector. Could any Man of common Senſe imagine the Protector ſent for them to diſpute the Authority by which they were to ſit, or ſuffer them to ſpend their Time in angry and inſolent Debates with Reſpect to the Government? The Recognition Teſt was ingroſs'd in Parchment, and three hundred Members ſubſcrib'd it. However they voted, That the Recognition did not comprehend, nor ſhould be conſtru'd to comprehend therein the whole Government, conſiſting of Forty-two Articles, but that it does only include what concerns the Government of the Commonwealth by a ſingle Perſon and ſucceſſive Parliaments. They reſolv'd, That all Perſons return'd, or who ſhould be return'd to ſerve in this preſent Parliament, ſhould, before they be admitted to ſit in this Houſe, ſubſcribe the Recognition; That thoſe Subſcriptions ſhould be taken in Preſence of any two Members, who have ſubſcrib'd it. They voted, That the ſupreme Legiſlative Authority ſhall reſide in the Lord Protector and the People aſſembled in Parliament, and that the preſent Lord Protector ſhall continue during Life. By this Vote Oliver's Authority was eſtabliſh'd, and all Attempts afterwards to encroach upon it were factious and illegal, according to that Conſtitution, which it became his conſummate Wiſdom to provide againſt and ſuppreſs. The Parliament enter'd into a Debate on the other Articles of the Inſtrument of Government, according to the Power they reſerv'd to themſelves by their Vote. They particularly debated whether the Protector ſhould be elective or hereditary, and it paſs'd for Election. They continu'd the ſtanding Army of Ten Thouſand Horſe and Twenty Thouſand Foot, and gave an Aſſeſſment of Sixty Thouſand Pounds a Month to maintain them. They voted a Triennial Parliament, the Protector to ſummon one oftner upon Occaſion, and the Commiſſioners of the Seal to iſſue Summons by a limitted Time, if he did not. They order'd a Bill againſt Drunkenneſs and Gaming, another againſt Hereſies, and reſolv'd, That the true Reform'd Proteſtant Chriſtian Religion ſhall be publickly profeſs'd and maintain'd, and that the Protector ſhould have no Negative to Bills for ſuppreſſing Hereſies. They voted Liberty to all ſcrupulous Conſciences that gave no Diſturbance to the Publick. They confirm'd the Two Hundred Thouſand Pounds a Year Civil Liſt to the Protector, and aſſign'd Whitehall, St. James's, the Mews, Somerſet Houſe, Greenwich, Hampton Court, and Windſor, for his Uſe. However, the Freedom they took in canvaſſing the Inſtrument of Government, which Oliver would have had thought as ſacred and inviolable as Magna Charta, and their dwelling ſo much and ſo long upon it, gave him ſo great Offence, that he loſt all Patience with them, and on the 22d of January diſſolv'd them, having firſt made a Sermon inſtead of a Speech full of Upbraidings and Reproaches. He could not but be very much provok'd by the Preſumption and Ingratitude of an Aſſembly, which was a Creature of his own creating, and ow'd to him its very Being. One of the Members, Col. Whetham, when it was mention'd to make him King, apply'd to him the Saying of the Prophet to Ahab, Haſt thou kill'd, and alſo taken Poſſeſſion? It is certain the diſguſted Members of this Parliament, the Republicans, in an unnatural Mixture with the Cavaliers, had produced a very powerful Party againſt Oliver, who knew well enough that they were not idle, and his Meſſengers ſurpriz'd Major Wildman at Exton, near Marlborough, in his Chamber, dictating to his Amanuenſis a Libel againſt the Protector, with this Title, The Declaration of the free and well-affected People of England, now in Arms againſt the Tyrant Oliver Cromwel, Eſq;. Whitlocke ſays, "Many who "read this Declaration knew there was too "much of Truth in it, and had not the De"ſign been nipt in the Bud, and timely "diſcover'd and prevented, it might have "caus'd ſome Diſturbance to the Protector, "and to the Peace of the new Government; "but by the Commitment of the chief Con"ſpirators, their Plot was cruſh'd, and the "Peace not interrupted. Divers wonder'd "moſt that Major Wildman, and others of "his Party who had ſerv'd the Parliament, "ſhould now join in this Deſign with "thoſe of the King's Party; but they al"ledg'd it was to ſtrengthen themſelves, "and they could eaſily ſuppreſs the Ca"valiers afterwards." This was the Opinion all along of thoſe firſt who oppos'd the Commonwealth, of thoſe afterwards who oppos'd the Protector; in a Word, of all thoſe who oppos'd any of the Governments from the Time of the King's Death to the Reſtoration. The Royaliſts were out of the Queſtion, an abandon'd ruin'd People, who were made Tools to every Faction that was ſet up, to be thrown by when their Point was carry'd. This Declaration was probably to be publiſh'd when the Inſurrection was made: Sir Thomas Harris was to riſe in Shropſhire, Sir Thomas Middleton in Wales, Sir Henry Slingsby, and Sir Richard Maleverer in Yorkſhire, Sir Henry Moore and Sir George Brown in other Places, Sir Joſeph Wagſtaff and Colonel Penruddock in Wiltſhire, Sir Hugh Pollard in Devonſhire, Mr. Arundel in Cornwall. London was full of Conſpirators, and the Conſpiracy was almoſt general; but ſuch was the Protector's good Intelligence, that he had timely Information of their general and ſeparate Deſigns, which he ſuffer'd them to carry on juſt as far and no farther than he thought fit. Wagſtaff fearing a Diſcovery, precipitated the Buſineſs, and with Penruddock, Mr. Grove, Mr. Mompeſſon, Mr. Jones, Capt. Wake, Mr. Maſon, Mr. Lucas of Hungerford, and others, took Arms. The Lord Wilmot was come over to England to command in Chief thoſe that were to riſe in the Northern Counties. The Lord Willoughby of Parham, the Lord Newport, and Col. Birch, were in the Plot; but Wagſtaff was the only Man who appear'd at the Head of a Body at Salisbury, and being Aſſize Time, they got together under Pretence of coming to the Aſſizes. He had with him Three or Four Hundred Horſe, ſuch as they were, and getting together in the Night, they ſeiz'd the Lord Chief Juſtice Rolles, Juſtice Nicholas, Mr. Dove the High Sheriff of the County, who refus'd to proclaim the King, and ſome Gentlemen whom they ſuſpected to be Enemies to their Deſign. They took away the Judge's Commiſſion, and ſome of their Leaders, with a true Cavalier Spirit, were for hanging up the Judges and Sheriff, who were very like to have the hanging of them in a few Days. The Earl of Clarendon blames them very much for not truſſing up the Judges and Sheriff: It would have been a ſeaſonable Act of Severity, ſays he, without conſidering that it would have provok'd Cromwel to have ſacrific'd a Hecatomb of them whom he had in his Power. Wagſtaff and Penruddock finding No-body come to them at Salisbury, remov'd to Dogtown, taking Mr. Dove along with them, but they extended their Mercy to the Judges and let them go. From thence they march'd to Blandford in Dorſetſhire; Moſt Men, ſays Ludlow, looking upon them rather as flying than marching; but the Lord Clarendon and Mr. Echard look'd upon them as ſo many Heroes, who with the Help of half a Dozen IF's, might have done a great deal more Miſchief than they did before they were hang'd. Some Troops of Horſe purſu'd them into Devonſhire, where Capt. Unton Crook, with two Troops only, fell upon them, routed them, took Colonel Penruddock, Mr. Jones, Capt. Grove, Capt. Wake, and ſome more of theſe notable Men, to uſe the Lord Clarendon's Phraſe, which, with the Senſe of it, is ſuper-excellent in what follows: The Succeſs and Triumph at Salisbury produc'd ſuch a Conſternation throughout the whole Kingdom, as would have endanger'd it, IF there had not happen'd ſome accidental Confuſion among the Undertakers. Monſtrum horrendum! A Parcel of Mob, Ludlow tells us they were not above Two Hundred beſides their Captains, to throw an Army of Thirty Thouſand Veterans, Horſe and Foot, under Captains who had ten Years been us'd to Conqueſt, into Conſternation; and as laughable as this is, 'tis one of the moſt ſerious Paſſages in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion; but this ridiculous Paſſage muſt be attended with ſome Falſities too, to make it of a Piece with the reſt.

The Hiſtory of the Rebellion is made up of the like Paragraphs, and if it was turn'd up and down, it would be as true as it is now. Some of the Priſoners were condemn'd at Salisbury, and ſome at Exeter, of which Number were Colonel Penruddock and Captain Grove; and in Aggravation of their Crimes, it was urg'd, that this was their ſecond Offence. They were both beheaded at Exeter. Mr. Jones of Newton Tony being ally'd to Oliver, was pardon'd. Captain Crook had Two Hundred Pounds a Year given him of the Eſtate of Mr. Mompeſſon, who with Sir Joſeph Wagſtaff, Mr. Maſon, and others, made their Eſcape.

Cromwel, who had lately highly careſs'd the Cavalier Party, was exaſperated againſt them by this Rebellion, and reſolv'd to ſhew them ſome ſeaſonable Severity. He commanded a tenth Part of their Eſtates to be levy'd, in order, ſays Ludlow, to maintain thoſe extraordinary Forces, which their turbulent and ſeditious Practices oblig'd him to keep up. To put this in Execution, he the next Year plac'd Major Generals over all the Counties in England, with much more Power than ever the Lord Lieutenants had; and to ingratiate himſelf with our two famous Univerſities, he ſettled One Hundred Pounds per Annum for a Divinity Reader at Oxford, and gave Money to both of them; which is a ſevere Rebuke on thoſe Hiſtory Writers who ſay he endeavour'd to ſuppreſs Learning, and deſtroy'd all the Publick Libraries he could come at; though the contrary is well known, that he encourag'd Learning, Learning, and patroniz'd Men of Letters; and it was about the End of this Year that Doctor Ralph Bathurſt, afterwards Head of Trinity College, Oxford, and Dean of Wells, Phyſician to the Navy, took his Doctor of Phyſick's Degree, and produc'd a Certificate from General Blake, and the other Generals at Sea, of his Behaviour to their full Satisfaction.

A. D. 1655. General Blake. General Blake had been ſent to the Streights with a ſtrong Squadron of Men of War, to demand Satisfaction of all Princes and Powers that had injur'd the Engliſh in the Time of War and Confuſion at home. The General receiv'd great Honours where-ever he came, and executed his Commiſſion much to the Advantage and Reputation of his Country.

Being in the Road before Cadiz, a Dutch Admiral then there would not wear his Flag while General Blake was in the Harbour. He enter'd the Streights with thirty Men of War. The Treaty between England and France not being quite concluded, Blake made for the Coaſt of Naples in Hope to meet with the Duke of Guiſe's Fleet, which had a Deſign upon that City, but Guiſe was gone before the General arriv'd there. From thence he ſail'd to Leghorn. The City of Rome and all the Pope's Territories were allarm'd at the Name and Approach of Blake. Several of the principal Citizens retir'd with their Effects to the Mountains, though Sir Richard Tambot, as Leti calls him, aſſur'd Cardinal Barberino that Cromwel had given no Orders to Blake to inſult the Patrimony of St. Peter. However, the Terror of the People was ſuch, that publick Proceſſions were made, and the Hoſt was expos'd forty Hours to avert the Wrath of Heaven, and prevent Blake's attacking the Dominions of the Church. New Works were rais'd all around our Lady of Loretto's Chapel to defend it from Pillage, and all thoſe Precautions taken which would have ſignify'd nothing if Cromwel had given Orders to Blake to fall upon the Pope's Towns and Countries, which he and his Seamen would very willingly have done had it conſiſted with Oliver's good Policy, to have drawn all the Powers of Popery upon him, by aſſaulting the Papacy. Upon his Arrival in Sight of Leghorn, he diſpatch'd his Secretary to demand of the Great Duke ſixty Thouſand Pounds for Damages ſuſtain'd by the Engliſh in his Dutchy, where Prince Rupert had taken ſo many Ships belonging to the Commonwealth of England, as amounted to that Value, and having ſold them to the Great Duke's Subjects, the Commonwealth requir'd Satisfaction, that Prince having no Right to ſell them. The great Duke of Tuſcany offer'd to pay Part of the Sum, and deſir'd Time to conſult the Pope about Payment of the reſt. Blake reply'd, That the Pope had nothing to do with it, and he expected the whole Sum, which was paid him, thirty five Thouſand Spaniſh, and twenty five Thouſand Italian Piſtoles. The Duke pretended, that ſome of the Ships had been ſold to Subjects of the Pope, and therefore the Court of Rome ought to pay Part of the Damage, which Alexander the Seventh, who ſucceeded Innocent the Tenth, did, and paid him twenty Thouſand Piſtoles.

From Leghorn General Blake ſail'd over to the Barbary Shore, and ſent an Officer to the King of Tunis, to demand the Delivery of Engliſh Slaves in that Kingdom. The King anſwer'd, he was very ready to deliver them, provided the Knights of Malta would do the ſame by the Tuniſeens, whom they held in Slavery. Blake reply'd, he ſhould not concern himſelf about the Knights of Malta, but if the Engliſh were not ſent him, he would take all the Ships of Tunis which he met. Accordingly he took a Fleet loaden with Proviſions for Candia, and having put his Ships in order, he thunder'd with his great Guns upon the Town, while he ſent out ſeveral long Boats mann'd with ſtout Mariners, who at the ſame Time enter'd into their Harbour with undaunted Courage, and ſet Fire to all the Ships there, being nine Men of War, which were burn'd to Aſhes, and this with the Loſs only of twenty five Engliſh Men. This was one of the moſt gallant Actions that was ever perform'd at Sea. The King of Tunis immediately ſent to the General to beg a Peace, and deliver'd all the Slaves he had belonging to England, about four Hundred in Number. Blake concluded an advantagious Treaty with the Tuniſeens, and plac'd there an Engliſh Conſul. A. D. 1655.

From Tunis he ſail'd to Algiers, where the Dey pay'd him all the Reſpects due to a General who commanded the Fleet of a Republick that was Miſtreſs of the Sea; he anchor'd in the Mole, and concluded a Treaty with the Dey on what Conditions he thought fit. The chief was, that Satisfaction ſhould be made for all Engliſh Ships taken, and all Engliſh Priſoners be releaſed. The Algerines were ſo proud of his Friendſhip, that whenever they met with any Sally Men of War that had Engliſh Men aboard, they took them out and ſent them to Blake, who oblig'd the Knights of Malta to make Satisfaction for Piracies committed by their Ships upon Engliſh Merchant Men. General Blake ſent home ſixteen Ships richly loaden with the Effects he had receiv'd for Satisfaction and Damages, and they were order'd to ſail up the River of Thames together, to make a grateful Spectacle to the People, who were told that ſuch Ships were coming, and with rich Freight.

One Mr. Gage, who had been a popiſh Prieſt, and Miſſionary in the Spaniſh Weſt Indies, being return'd home to England, with Intention to renounce the Errors of the Church of Rome, and embrace the Reform'd Religion, gave Cromwel Information of the great Riches in thoſe Parts of the World, and of the Means to come at them. Oliver's Treaty with France being pretty forward, and the Subſtance of it being for mutual Aſſiſtance between England and that Kingdom, 'twas impoſſible to prevent a Rupture with Spain, which the Protector reſolved to be provided for betimes; and as Gage had adviſ'd him, he fitted out a Fleet under the Command of Vice-Admiral Pen, and five or ſix Thouſand Land Forces under Colonel Venables, to attack Hiſpaniola. Oliver kept the Deſign very ſecret, and it was not known to what Part of the World the Fleet was bound, till ſome Time after it was ſail'd Pen and Venables.

A. D. 1655. fail'd. Spain would never admit of a Peace with England between the Tropicks, ſo he was in a State of War with them in thoſe Parts, ſays Biſhop Burnet, even before he declar'd War againſt the Spaniards in Europe. Colonel Stoupe the Swiſs, who had been a Miniſter at the Savoy, was very intimate with Oliver; he had ſent him to France, to feel the Pulſe of the Proteſtants, whether they were in any Diſpoſition to join with the Prince of Conde, if Cromwel enter'd into a League with that Prince, then at Bruſſels, and Spain, againſt France, which he inclin'd to do. But Stoupe found the Hugonots very much at Eaſe under Cardinal Mazarine's Adminiſtration, who obſerv'd their Edicts very juſtly; and that the Prince of Conde's Offers to turn Proteſtant, to land in Guienne, and to raiſe the Hugonots in South France, were vain and chimerical, which determin'd the Protector to enter into a Treaty with Mazarine, upon which this Fleet was equipp'd and ſent to America. Stoupe conjectur'd whither it was going, by Cromwel's being very curious in Surveying a Map of the Bay of Mexico, and meaſuring Diſtances, which he ſaw him very intent upon in his Cloſet. Stoupe happening to ſay as much in Company, Don Alonſo de Credenas, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, ſent for him very privately, and offer'd him ten Thouſand Pounds if he could make any Diſcovery. The Swiſs had a great Mind to take the Money, and thought it fair, ſince it was only his Conjecture, and nothing had been truſted with him, but he expected to make a Fortune by the Lord Protector's Favour, and ſaid only, that in a Diverſity of Conjectures, that ſeem'd to him more probable than any others. However, Stoupe wrote of it to one about the Prince of Conde, who at firſt hearing was perſwaded it muſt be ſo, and immediately acquainted Don John of Auſtria, Governor of the Netherlands; but he having no Notice of it from Cardenas, ſlighted the Information, till he had the like Conjecture from others, and then he ſent over the Marquis de Leyde, a Grandee of the firſt Rank, to know what Cauſe of Complaint the Protector had againſt the King his Maſter. Oliver reſolving to temporize no longer, declar'd, He expected Liberty to trade to the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies, and to have the Laws of the Inquiſition repeal'd. The Ambaſſador reply'd, His Maſter had but two Eyes, and he would have him to put them both out at once.

Lord Clarendon, who would make us believe that every Body thought of King Charles and his Affairs as much as he did, whoſe Subſiſtence depended entirely upon them, ſeem to have been in ſome Hopes that Pen and Venables would have run away with the Fleet and Army, and have ſet up the Royal Standard, which is ſaid without the leaſt Foundation in Reaſon or Fact, and might have been built upon as much from a Dream as from any Authority he had for it.

Pen and Venables ſail'd directly to Barbadoes, where they were to open their Commiſſion, and where they publiſh'd a Proclamation, that all Servants who would liſt under them, ſhould be made free by that Service. The ſame was made known in the other Iſlands, St. Chriſtopher's, Nevis, and above three Thouſand Men came in to them from all of them. Thus reinforc'd they ſail'd to Hiſpaniola with a Fleet and Army, thirty Men of War, and nine Thouſand Men at leaſt at their ſetting out from Barbadoes, ſufficient to have driven the Spaniards from one Sea to the other, had any other two Generals of the Parliament's Forces been appointed to command them. They came within View of Santo Domingo, the chief City and Port of the Iſland of Hiſpaniola, about the Middle of April. The firſt Step they took was an Omen of their ill Succeſs. They broke Cromwel's Orders as to the Landing Place: He had given them Inſtructions to enter the Port immediately, foreſeeing that the Spaniards in the firſt Surprize and Conſternation would expoſe themſelves to be an eaſy Conqueſt, if the Engliſh behav'd as they had been wont to do. It fell out ſo with reſpect to the Spaniards, they abandon'd the City and fled into the Woods. Venables with ſeven Thouſand Men landed about ten Leagues from the Town by miſtake. The other Part of the Army, under Colonel Butler, landed near the Town, and thoſe under Venables having a long March, through a deſart Country, open to the ſcorching Heat of the Sun, without Water or Refreſhment, were ſo waſted with Famine, Thirſt and Sweat, that they could hardly carry their Arms. In this Condition the Spaniards ſally'd upon them from the Woods, not above fifty or ſixty at a Time, harraſs'd them through their whole March, and kill'd no leſs than ſix Hundred of them. They hardly made any Reſiſtance, and were the more diſpirited, for that they expected Mountains of Gold and Silver, inſtead of which it was proclaim'd, that no Man ſhould plunder Gold, Silver, Jewels, or any other rich Moveables, or kill any Cattle, on Pain of Death. Add to this their great Want of Proviſions, ſo little Care had they taken to bring Stores with them, that in a few Days they were forc'd to feed upon their Horſes. Colonel Haynes making Head againſt the Spaniards was ſlain fighting reſolutely in the midſt of them, and after that the Engliſh thought of nothing but retreating to their Ships as faſt as they could. Venables and Butler being join'd at the Place appointed, they ſhipp'd their Men and ſet Sail for Jamaica the third of May, having been three Weeks in Hiſpaniola, and leaving that Place more ſhamefully than ever Place was left by Engliſh Men. The Iſlanders of Jamaica not having heard of the Diſgrace of theſe Invaders, left their Town and Plantations and retir'd to the Mountains, and upon Treaty were permitted to depart the Iſland, which was poſſeſs'd by the Engliſh in the Name of Oliver Cromwel, Lord Protector of the Commonwealth, and Colonel Forteſcue was left Governor there with three Thouſand Men, who were afterwards reinforc'd with one Thouſand Men under Major Sedgwick, and with a Regiment commanded by Colonel Humphreys. Fifteen Hundred Men were ſent from Ireland under Colonel Brayne, who with three Hundred Men was caſt away in the Voyage. He was follow'd by fifteen Hundred more under Colonel Moor, Captain

And whatever Loſs the Nation was at in the Expedition of Pen and Venables, it has ſince got more by this Acquiſition, than the Charge of all the Commonwealth's Wars amounts to, Jamaica being the moſt flouriſhing Colony in the New World, and the Inhabitants live with as much Splendor as the moſt ſplendid of any City in Europe.

Venables was diſabled by Sickneſs to perform the Functions of his Office, and was permitted by the Council of Officers to return into England. Pen ſuſpecting he would lay the whole Blame of that Affair on him, obtain'd the ſame Leave alſo, and being both arriv'd, they were heard at Whitehall one againſt the other, where the Accuſations of both ſeem'd to be of more Weight than the Deſerts of either of them; ſo Pen was committed to the Tower, and Venables confin'd to his Lodging, his Diſtemper excuſing him from a ſtricter Confinement.

The Protector was extreamly mortified at the Miſcarriage of this Expedition, which had not only alarm'd Spain, but France and Holland, both very well appriz'd of the great Acceſſion of Power which would have redounded to England by his making himſelf Maſter of the Riches of New Spain, and judging by his former Succeſſes, what had they not all to fear from ſuch a Fleet and Army? And what Puniſhment did not Venables and Pen deſerve, for bringing ſo much Shame and Loſs on a Government, till then always Triumphant, and a Stranger to Diſgraces?

Manning a Traytor to the King.

We have mention'd the Conſpiracy againſt the Protector in England, the full Diſcovery of which was owing to the Correſpondence which Thurloe, Oliver's Secretary, kept with Henry Manning, Son to Colonel Richard Manning, a Papiſt, kill'd in the late King's Service at the Battle of Alresford. Thurloe, by Cromwel's Order, furniſh'd this Mr. Manning with Money, and ſent him to the Place King Charles reſided at, to be his Spy. He there got into the Confidence of Sir Edward Hyde, Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, though he ſlurs over the Matter in that Hiſtory, and takes upon himſelf the Credit of diſcovering the Traytor, at the ſame Time that he excuſes the Treaſon, there being not a Syllable of Truth in it. He aſſures us, that Manning bubbled Thurloe, and ſent him Lies for Money; and again, not one of the King's Counſels was diſcover'd; all which is alike true. Manning was ſent over to Cologne by Thurloe, on Purpoſe to get Intelligence for him; when he came thither he told the Exiles, He was ſent thither from ſome Friends in England, who deſir'd to P. 608. have their Names conceal'd. Ludlow informs us, that the Cavaliers made him very welcome for the Sake of Thurloe's Money, of which the King himſelf had Part; and ſeveral leſſer Sums were diſtributed to his neceſſitous Followers; one of whom was Sir Edward Hyde, with whatever Airs he adorns his Hiſtory; and it will be prov'd that ſeveral of thoſe Followers were Oliver's Pentioners, as by a Liſt extant in the Hand Writing of Colonel Sydenham, one of the then Lords of the Treaſury. Thus continues General Ludlow, "Manning was eaſily admit- "ted amongſt them," very eaſily no doubt, when he had Money in his Pocket. Inſtead of Chancellor Hyde's finding out the Fraud, it was detected in this Manner, as in the Words of Ludlow, "It happen'd that a Gentleman, Leti ſays the Duke of Richmond, "who had "ſerv'd the late King, deſir'd Leave from Crom- "wel to travel, which he obtain'd on Conditi- "on he ſhould not ſee the King, which he "promis'd; accordingly when he arriv'd at "Cologn, he ſent a Meſſage to the King, "that he might be permitted to wait on "him at Night, which was granted, and "having diſcours'd fully concerning the Af- "fairs he came about, he took Leave and "receiv'd a Letter, which he ſew'd within "the Crown of his Hat. Upon his Return "to England, he came with Confidence to "Cromwel; and being demanded by him if "he had punctually perform'd his Promiſe? "He anſwer'd he had: But ſaid Oliver, Who "was it that put out the Candles when "you ſpoke to Charles Stuart. This unex- "pected Queſtion ſomewhat ſtartled him: "Cromwel proceeding, ask'd what he ſaid "to him? To which the Gentleman reply'd, "Nothing at all. Says Oliver, Did he "not ſend a Letter by you: The Gentle- "man denying that alſo, Cromwel took his "Hat, and having found the Letter, ſent him "immediately to the Tower: From thence "he took the firſt favourable Occaſion to "acquaint Charles Stuart with all that had "happen'd to him relating to this Affair, "aſſuring him that one of the three Perſons "who were in the Room with him at the "Time abovemention'd, muſt neceſſarily "have betray'd him. Upon this Informa- "tion, Manning's Study was ſearch'd, and "his Correſpondence being diſcover'd, Leave "was obtain'd from the Duke of Newburg, "to execute him at Duynwald, within his "Territories; and accordingly he was ſhot "to Death: But though Manning's Acti- "on was baſe and perfidious, continues "Ludlow, very juſtly, as proceeding from a "domeſtick Servant; yet by what Law he "was executed, I confeſs my ſelf utterly "ignorant." Echard, with his uſual Simplicity, tells us all Authors, except the Lord Clarendon himſelf, have been miſtaken in this; for the good Archdeacon knows no better than to believe that the Truth is in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion. What Advices Manning ſent were ſo far from being Lies, that the Conſpiracy was detected and diſappointed by means of them, and ſeveral of the Chiefs of all Parties ſeiz'd and impriſon'd, and caſhier'd:

For South-Wales, — Maj. Gen. Harriſon.

Theſe Major Generals were to have the Inſpection and Government of a Committee in every County, with Orders to ſeize the Perſons and diſtrain the Eſtates of ſuch as ſhould be refractory, and to put in Execution ſuch further Directions as they ſhould receive from the Protector: Thoſe of the ordinary Sort of People who were ſeditious and turbulent, were threaten'd with Tranſportation to Jamaica: This Scheme ſeem'd very extraordinary and extravagant, in a free Republick as this Government was pretended to be, under a Protector; and it is cry'd out againſt as Tyrannical, more by the Commonwealths Men than the Cavaliers; but neither the one nor the other were ſenſible of the Neceſſity of Machiavel's Rule, That all Governments muſt ſupport themſelves by the Principles on which they were founded. Oliver's Government had no Principle but that of Power; and having been ſo lately threaten'd with almoſt a general Inſurrection, he had no Way to ſecure himſelf but by Rigour, and keeping a ſtrict Hand over the Diſaffected.

Among theſe were ſeveral hearty Friends to the Commonwealth, particularly Mr. George Cony, a Merchant; Echard calls him a great Fanatick; for Railing is not inconſiſtent with Stupidity. Mr. Cony refuſing to pay certain Cuſtoms, the Collector took it from him by Violence; and the Merchant brought his Action againſt the Cuſtom-houſe Officer. This was a daring Violation of the Inſtrument of Government, and unhing'd it all at once. Oliver had not a Title to any Thing, but by that Inſtrument; and if he permitted it to be call'd in Queſtion in the Common Law Courts, there was an End of his Authority, which had no Law to maintain it but the Inſtrument, and that was of his own making. However, be it what it will, his Government had no other Pillar to ſupport it; and 'tis very ſtrange to hear People cry out againſt him for doing what there was a Neceſſity upon him to do by the grand Law of Self-Preſervation. Mr. Cony's Counſel were Sergeant Maynard, Sergeant Twiſden, and Mr. Wadham Windham, whom the Protector order'd to be ſent to the Tower for Preſumption, in offering themſelves to be Council in a Caſe that ſo nearly touch'd the Fundamentals of his Power. They had not been there above four Days before they acknowledg'd their Fault, and petition'd to be ſet at Liberty. Judge Rolles declar'd, Something muſt be allow'd to Caſes of Neceſſity; but however, he did not care to give Judgment in this Caſe, which he put off till the next Term; and before that came had his Quietus, which made Room for Sergeant Glynne to be Lord Chief Juſtice. Cony's Affair was afterwards accommodated, and Sir Peter Wentworth, who had boldly commenc'd ſuch another Action againſt a Collector, withdrew it after a little Expoſtulation by Cromwel.

About

A.D. 1655 Cromwel aſſiſts the Vandois.

About this Time Chriſtina, Dutcheſs Regent of Savoy, Siſter to King Charles the Firſt's Queen, rais'd a terrible Perſecution againſt the Proteſtants inhabiting the Valleys of Piedmont, where, Leti aſſures us, they have dwelt Time out of Mind. No new Sect, as the Lord Clarendon wou'd make us believe the Presbyterians are, but according to that Italian Papiſt, as old as their oldeſt Hiſtory. He adds, that this Aunt of King Charles II. commanded this bloody Maſſacre of the Vaudois, at the Inſtigation of the Prieſts, and her chief Miniſter the Marquis de Pianezza, who march'd into the Valleys in Perſon with 6000 Men, and cut the Throats of Men, Women and Children. Some of thoſe brave Proteſtants ſold their Lives dearly inſomuch that Pianezza loſt half of his Men. The reſt of the Vaudois fled to the Mountains, and thence ſent their Agents to all Proteſtant Princes and Powers to implore their Charity and Aſſiſtance. The Lord Protector immediately order'd a Day of Humiliation to pray for the Deliverance of thoſe Confeſſors, as alſo a Collection to be made all over England for their Relief; and it is ſaid the Contributions were larger than had ever been known before on any Occaſion whatſoever. Moſt of the Lord Protector's Council were of the Committee for the Buſineſs of Piedmont; and it is affirm'd that the Contributions

In England amounted to — —	50000	Pounds.
In France to — — —	50000	Pounds.
In Holland to — — —	25000	Pounds.
In Swiſſerland to — —	25000	Pounds.
In Germany to — — —	25000	Pounds.

Which, and much more from Places not nam'd, was as much as the Valleys were worth. 'Twas remitted to Mr. Stephen Turretin, Receiver for the Vaudois. The large Collections made for theſe Proteſtants are generally allow'd to be owing to the Lord Protector's powerful Inſtances with Foreign Princes and States; for beſides his Letters to the French King and Cardinal Mazarine in their Favour, he wrote to the Kings of Sweden and Denmark to mediate for them, and ſent Mr. Morland and Mr. Crown to Geneva, to ſee that the Moneys collected were fairly diſtributed, as intended, among the Proteſtants of the Valleys, and that the Treaty the Duke of Savoy ſhould grant them be fairly executed. He alſo gave Morland a Letter to the Duke of Savoy, then near or in his Majority, conceiv'd in Terms, which confirm'd a Report, that Cromwel ſhou'd have ſaid, My Ships in the Mediterranean ſhall viſit Civita Vecchia, and the Sound of my Cannon be heard in Rome; which ſufficiently terrified the Italian Princes. Oliver, in his Letter to Charles Emanuel II. Duke of Savoy, after having repreſented the Cruelty and Injuſtice of his Actings againſt the Proteſtants, adds, Cum autem non humanitatis modo, ſed ejuſdem Religionis communione adeoq; fraterna peritus neceſſitudine cum iis conjunctos nos eſſe fateamur, ſatis fieri a nobis neque noſtro erga Deum efficio, neque fraternæ Charitati neque Religionis ejuſdem profeſſioni poſſe exiſtimavimus, ſi in hac fratrum noſtrorum calamitate ac miſeria ſolo ſenſu doloris afficeremur, niſi etiam ad ſublevanda eorum tot mala inopinata quantum in nobis eſt ſitum, omnem operam noſtram conferemus. " He is pierced with Grief at " the News of the Sufferings of the Vaudois, be- " ing united to them, not only by the common " Ties of Humanity, but by the Profeſſion of the " ſame Faith, which obliges him to regard them " as his Brethren; and he ſhou'd think himſelf " wanting in his Duty to God, to Charity, and " to his Religion, if he ſhou'd be ſatisfied with " pitying them only, whoſe miſerable Condition " is enough to raiſe Pity in the moſt barbarous " Mind, if he did not exert himſelf to the ut- " moſt of his Power to deliver them out of it." A.D. 1655

Before this Letter arriv'd, the French King and the Cardinal had preſs'd the Court of Savoy to give Peace to their Proteſtant Subjects. To which King Charles the Second's Aunt return'd Anſwer in her Son's Name, That ſhe cou'd not enough admire to ſee France, and his Eminence in particular, ſo earneſt in behalf of Hereticks, and to endeavour to hinder the Chaſtiſement of the Duke her Son's rebellious Subjects, out of pure Complaiſance to Cromwel, while the Engliſh Catholicks are entirely abandon'd, and languiſh miſerably under the Yoke of that Tyrant. Cardinal Mazarine reply'd, We muſt leave to God the Care of defending the Cauſe of the Catholicks, it being moſt juſt, but that of the Hereticks needs for its Support the Clemency of Princes. The Title of Royal Highneſs being by Miſtake omitted in the Addreſs of Cromwel's Letter to the Duke of Savoy, the major part of the Council of Savoy was for ſending it back unopen'd. But the Marquis de Pianezza, who had more Experience than the reſt, repreſented to them, that Cromwel was as Haughty as he was Powerful, and wou'd not let ſuch an Affront go unpuniſh'd; that he wou'd certainly lay Villa Franca in Aſhes, and ſet the Swiſs Proteſtant Cantons upon Savoy; which, with his ſhewing that Royal Highneſs was in the Contents of the Letter, ſatisfied them all, and Peace was made with the Vaudois, who had all their antient Privileges confirm'd to them, and what had been taken from them reſtor'd.

All the Negotiations of the four Kings, whoſe Reigns are in this Hiſtory, amount not in Value and Reputation to this one of Cromwel's. He talk'd en maitre, and he prevail'd. But the Credit of England was before and after him in ſo low a State, that a Recommendation from thence was enough to ſpoil any Buſineſs it was intended to advance. An Italian Popiſh Author obſerves, that Oliver did this for the Proteſtants of Piedmont at the ſame time that he publiſh'd the moſt ſevere Edicts againſt the Papiſts in England, and not a Power in Europe durſt intercede for them.

Chancery. Cromwel and his Council having paſt an Ordinance for regulating the Court of Chancery, by which the Proceſſes there would be alter'd and expedited, Sir Thomas Widdrington, and Bulſtrode Whitlock, Eſq; Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, and William Lenthal, Eſq; Maſter of the Rolls, ſcrupled the obeying it, as being contrary to the Oath of Office which they had taken. The Lord Protector, who wou'd be obey'd in all things, demanded the Seal of Widdrington and Whitlock. Lenthal complied, and was continu'd Maſter of the Rolls, though he had ſaid, He would be hang'd at the Rolls-Gate before he would execute the Ordinance. Upon this Colonel Nathaniel Fiennes, and John Liſle, Eſq; were made Lords Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, —— Fell, Eſq; Chancellor of the Dutchy, William Lenthal, Eſq; Maſter of the Rolls, John Sadler, Eſq; Nathaniel Hobart, Eſq; Arthur Barnardiſton, Eſq; Thomas St. Nicholas, Eſq; Robert Aldworth, Eſq; Six Clerks in Chancery. But to ſhew Widdrington and Whitlock he was not angry with them, he made them both Commiſſioners of the Treaſury.

Cromwel will not ſee the Queen of Sweden.

We have ſpoken of Chriſtina Queen of Sweden's abdicating her Kingdom with an Intention to abdicate her Religion. To this Purpoſe ſhe reſolv'd to go to Rome, and to ſee as much as ſhe could in her way thither. As ſhe had a kind

A.D.1655 of Romantick Genius, the Renown of Cromwel made her very desirous to see a Hero, whose Wisdom and Valour were the Subject of the Discourse of the World. The Lord Clarendon and Mr. Echard think King Charles II. highly honour'd by a Visit from that Princess in his Exile in the Territory of Mentz: But it seems the Court of the Protector had other Sentiments of that Honour, and would by no means receive her Visit. The Protector was for something solid in every thing that had Shew, and all the Pains she took to see him were lost. It not being customary for Princes to make Visits before they know they shall be welcome, she sent her Secretary Maldeschi, an Italian, from Fountainbleau in France to London, to procure an Invitation from Cromwel, who receiv'd Maldeschi with particular Marks of Respect and Esteem, which flatter'd the Italian with Hopes that the Protector wou'd invite his Mistress to his Court. He often hinted, that her Majesty wou'd be extremely pleas'd with the Sight of so illustrious a Captain, and was almost always talking of his Highness's heroick Qualities. The Protector gave him the Hearing, but wou'd not understand his Meaning: He return'd Compliment for Compliment; and 'twas not long before Maldeschi perceiv'd his Errand wou'd not succeed. Oliver had three Reasons against inviting her: The Expence of her Stay here; His Resentment of her Apostacy, and the ill Example of her Life and Conversation, too gallant and intriguing for a Puritan Court, which was far from being an Objection to that of Charles II. And Christina had two Reasons for coming, the one to satisfy her Curiosity, which was insatiable, the other, at the Instance of Cardinal Mazarine, to propose a Marriage between one of Oliver's Family and his Niece, which at sight seems impracticable, and wou'd have been the most chymerical Proposition she cou'd have made to the Protector, Menasses the Jew and Cromwel.

Who much about the same time had People come out of the East to be Witnesses of his Glory. Menasses ben Israel was deputed, with other chief Men amongst the Jews, to negotiate a Treaty with Oliver for their living and trading in England. The Protector sent for several Ministers to consult with them about the Lawfulness of admitting them, wherein he seems to be over-scrupulous; for if Religion hinder'd us from trading with none but Christians, we must lose the best part of our Commerce. Echard assures us, they offer'd Cromwel 200,000 l. for St. Paul's Church, and that the Offer of so much Money for that Cathedral, and Liberty to trade, tempted him so strongly, that he look'd upon it as the Cause of God. If I, or any other Lay-Historian, had thus profan'd the awful Majesty of Heaven, it wou'd not have been excusable; but for an Archdeacon, who owes his very Subsistence to the Ministry, and is bound by it to teach others not to take the Lord's Name in vain, to be no more sensible of that Sin, is Matter of Astonishment and Lamentation. But it is so with too many Divines of a certain Denomination; they are us'd so much to Form, that they have little Feeling of the Power of Godliness. His Skill in Politicks and Commerce is equal to his other Knowledge. The Merchants foresaw the Jews would soon engross the Trade of the Nation. He makes their Foresight to be no better than his own. The Jews, who have liv'd and traded here above threescore Years, have not engross'd one Trade, instead of which the Nation have been Millions of Money Gainers by them. He then makes some foolish Jests about Oliver's Hopes of converting the Jews, and the People's Fears that the Jews would convert the Christians. But the most ridiculous part of his Story is, that Menasses went to Huntingdon, to enquire at the Brewhouse there, if none of Cromwel's Family came not from some Israelitish Tribe; which, if he had found, the Jews wou'd have acknowledg'd him to be the Messias. I was well pleas'd to find this Passage in the same History with the Account of Oliver's selling his Soul to the Devil, it confirming the Opinion I had conceiv'd of a Writer, whose Judgment and Capacity were capable of such Stuff for History. Oliver gave Menasses 200 Pounds, and permitted the Jews to trade and to reside in England, which they have done ever since, to the great Benefit of our Commerce. His Care of Commerce was exemplary to all future Governments, if they had known what Care was for any thing but their Pleasures and Passions, and those who flatter'd them in them. He and his Council appointed a Committee of Trade, to consider how to improve, order and regulate the Trade and Navigation of the Common-Wealth; upon which Letters were sent to several Persons in this Form, A.D.1655

Sir,

" His Highness, considering of how great Importance it is to this Nation, that the Trade " and Commerce thereof be, by all good Ways " and Means, advanc'd and duly regulated, hath, " by the Advice of his Council, thought fit to " appoint a certain Number of Persons (whose " Abilities and Experience have qualified them " to be serviceable to their Country herein) to be " a Committee for Trade; impowering them to " take into Consideration the Trade and Navi- " gation of this Common-wealth, and in what " Manner, and by what Ways and Means the " same may be encourag'd, improv'd, order'd " and regulated: And having named you to be " one of that Committee, have thought fit to " signify the same unto you, to the end you may " be present at their first Meeting, which is ap- " pointed to be on the 27th of this Instant No- " vember, in the Painted Chamber at Westminster, " not doubting of your Readiness to join with " the rest of the Committee, in contributing your " best Assistance to a Work so highly tending to " the publick Good.

Whitehall, 2 Nov, 1655.

Sign'd in the Name, and by Order of his Highness and the Council,

Henry Lawrence, President.

Whitlocke informs us, this was a Business of much Importance to the Common-wealth, and the Protector was earnestly set upon it. At the same Time, the Ratification of the Treaty concluded with France, was deliver'd to the Lord Protector by Monsieur de la Bastide, Envoy from the French King. In this Treaty he wou'd not allow the French King to call himself King of France, but of the French: Whereas he took to himself not only the Title of Protector of England, but also of France: And which is yet more surprising, in the Instrument of the Treaty, the Protector's Name was put before the French King's, Lewis the XIVth. By the Articles of this Treaty, Cromwel was to furnish 6000 Land Men, and 50 Men of War to take the Maritime Towns belonging to the King of Spain in Flanders; on Condition that Dunkirk and Mardyke shou'd, when taken, be put into Cromwel's Hands, That Charles Stuart (for they wou'd not allow him the Stile of King) his two Brothers, the Dukes of York and Glouceſter, and some say, the Queen, their

A.D.1655 their Mother, and their Siſter the Princeſs Henrietta Maria, ſhou'd not remain in France. Colonel William Lockhart, who had marry'd a Niece of Cromwel's, and was reckon'd one of the wiſeſt Miniſters of the Age, was ſent Ambaſſador to the French Court, and repreſented to Cardinal Mazarine, that there cou'd be no ſolid Peace between England and France, while any one of the Houſe of Stuart was ſuffer'd to reſide there. The King had withdrawn himſelf in Time; the Duke of York was in the French Army; Notice was however given him, that Reaſons of State required him to follow the King his Brother, and the Cardinal engag'd Abbot Montagu, the Queen Mother's Almoner, to let her know that Cromwel demanded ſhe ſhou'd be obliged to leave Paris, and the Court of France. He was order'd to offer her the City of Moulins, and all the Bourbonnois, for her and her Daughter's Reſidence and Maintenance; but the Queen would not accept of the Offer, tho' preſt to do it by the Preſident of the Parliament of Paris, to whom ſhe ſaid, What a Shame is it for the King, my Nephew, to endeavour to drive from his Court a poor afflicted Queen, only to pleaſe an Uſurper, and a Tyrant? This muſt needs be reckon'd a glorious Thing among the Catholicks for the Cardinal who adviſ'd it. The King and his two Brothers being ſent away, Cromwel did not think fit to inſiſt on the ſending away the Queen and her Daughter. The Duke of York ſerv'd in the Spaniſh Army againſt France; and the Duke of Glouceſter remain'd with his Brother at Cologne, from whence the two Princes, and their Siſter, the Princeſs of Orange, went to the Fair at Frankfort. 'Twas in this Progreſs that Queen Chriſtina of Sweden viſited them in the Caſtle of Coningſtein.

King Charles and his Brothers.

Monſieur, now Sir Peter Coyet, he being Knighted by Oliver, Ambaſſador of Sweden, at the Court of the Protector, having concluded a Treaty with his Commiſſioners, Colonel Fiennes, Bulſtrode Whitlock, Eſq; Walter Strickland, Eſq; and Mr. Thurloe, Secretary of State, gave a noble Entertainment to the Lords of the Court and others, As the Dutch Ambaſſador, the Portugal Ambaſſador, the Elector of Brandenburgh's Miniſter, the Earl of Bedford, the Earl of Devonſhire, the Lord Bruce, the Lord Oſſory, Son to the Duke of Ormond, the Lord St. John, the Lord Ogylvie, two or three other young Lords, the Lord George Fleetwood, Count Holac, a German, and a great Number of Perſons of Quality, which I mention to ſhew that the Engliſh Nation began to have a good Underſtanding with one another, and a mutual Acquieſcence in the preſent Government.

Ordinantes.

The Preſs, abus'd by all Factions, was reſtrain'd by an Order of Council, that no Perſon ſhou'd preſume to publiſh in print any Matter of publick News or Intelligence without Leave and Approbation of the Secretary of State. Another Order was publiſh'd againſt Printing unlicens'd and ſcandalous Books and Pamphlets, and for regulating the Preſs.

A Proclamation was iſſu'd requiring all who had been of the King's Party to depart out of the Lines of Communication. Indeed their frequent Conſpiracies, moſt of them Aſſaſſination Plots, oblig'd the Government not only to have a watchful Eye over them, but to raiſe an additional Force of Horſe in every County to obſerve their Motions, and the Motions of the Diſaffected of all Denominations, who had no other Occaſion of Diſguſt againſt the Management of Affair, than that they were not the Managers. This Charge was paid by the Tenth of the Royaliſts Lands. Their Writers call it Decimation, and it was a very tender one, conſidering the Miſchiefs they had been the Authors of ſince the End of the Civil War. The Protector's Reaſon for loading them with the Burthen is unanſwerable. The Charge ſhall be laid upon thoſe who have occaſion'd it, and not upon the honeſt Party, who have already been ſo much Sufferers. The Malecontents knew the Laws in Force, if they diſobey'd them, they knew the Penalty; if they put the Government to Charge, ſhou'd the Innocent defray it? And yet hear how they roar againſt this reaſonable Impoſition upon them! One wou'd think they were decimated indeed, as in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and Echard's Hiſtory, that in the Military Senſe of the Word, every tenth Man's Throat was cut. A.D.1655

This Year Cromwel receiv'd a Preſent of ſix fine Coach Horſes from the Count of Oldenburg, of the Houſe of Denmark; and being ſometimes troubled with the Stone, he wou'd drink great Quantities of Diuretick Liquors, as his Phyſician, Dr. Bates, tells us in his Elenchus. After he had drunk them, his Cuſtom was to uſe ſome violent Exerciſe to quicken their Paſſage. It was for this Purpoſe he got into his Coach-Box in Hyde-Park, leaving Thurlo in the Coach, and wou'd needs drive thoſe fiery Oldenburgh Horſes, which at the Snap of his Whip ran away, flung the Poſtilion, and Oliver himſelf from the Box upon the Pole, from whence falling to the Ground, his Coat was ſo intangled, that he cou'd not clear himſelf, but was dragg'd along till his Horſe-Guards diſengag'd him. A Piſtol he had in his Pocket went off, without doing him any hurt. The Author of the Compleat Hiſtory has a Libel in Rhyme on this Occaſion, which does not ſeem to be any Temptation to Wit and Mirth, if their merry Fellows and Wits could have ſaid any thing that was worth remembring. Oliver thrown from a Coach-box.

In Ireland and Scotland Things are all quiet, except ſome Hubbub in the Highlands of Scotland, among the Followers of Glencairne, Athol, Seaforth, Middleton, who made ſome Oppoſition, but were at laſt entirely ſuppreſt.

At the latter End of this Year, the Lord Protector ordered a Scheme to be drawn for erecting and endowing a College, in the City of Durham, for the Convenience of the Northern Students. The Reverend and Learned Mr. Richard Frankland, A. M. was Fellow of this College. Among the infinite Number of notorious and abſurd Falſities that the King's Party have ſaid and written of Cromwel, nothing is more falſe and impertinent than that he was an Enemy to Learning, which Biſhop Burnet aſſures us he lov'd and encourag'd. Durham College.

The Spaniards, upon News of the Loſs of Jamaica, ſeiz'd all the Engliſh Effects in Spain, which if conſiderable was the Fault of the Merchants; for they had Notice, and Time enough to remove them, and the Protector had ſent particular Orders to General Blake to ſecure their Trade, and give them all poſſible Aſſiſtance.

Having mention'd General Blake's Orders to cruiſe upon the Coaſts of Spain, and carry on a Maritime War there, we will remember an Action of his, which ſhew'd his Zeal both for the Religion and Honour of his Country, juſt before he receiv'd thoſe Orders, and while the Peace ſubſiſted yet between the two Nations of England and Spain. A.D 1656 General Blake.

General Blake being at Malaga, ſome of his Seamen going aſhoar, met the Hoſt carrying about, and not only paid no Reſpect to it, but laugh'd at thoſe who did. One of the Spaniſh Prieſts put the People on reſenting this Indignity, and they fell upon them, and beat them ſeverely. When they return'd to their Ships, they complain'd of this Uſage; upon which Blake ſent His Zeal for the Religion and Honour of his Country.

A.D.1656 ſent a Trumpet to the Viceroy to demand the Prieſt, who was the chief Inſtrument in that ill Uſage. The Viceroy anſwer'd, he had no Authority over the Prieſts, and ſo cou'd not diſpoſe of them. General Blake, upon that, ſent him Word, He wou'd not enquire who had the Pow'r to ſend the Prieſt to him; but if he were not ſent within three Hours, he wou'd burn their Town. The Spaniards hearing this, oblig'd the Viceroy to ſend the Prieſt to Blake, and he juſtified himſelf upon the petulant Behaviour of the Seamen. Blake anſwer'd, if he had ſent a Complaint to him of it, he wou'd have puniſh'd them ſeverely, ſince he wou'd not ſuffer his Men to affront the eſtabliſh'd Religion of any Place at which he touch'd, but he took it ill that he ſet on the Spaniards to do it. For he wou'd have all the World to know, That an Engliſh Man was only to be puniſh'd by an Engliſh Man; ſo he treated the Prieſt civilly, and ſent him back, being ſatisfied that he had him in his Power. Cromwel was much delighted with this, and read the Letters in Council with great Satisfaction; ſaying, he hop'd he ſhould make the Name of an Engliſh Man as great as ever that of a Roman had been. But alas! all thoſe Hopes vaniſh'd with him, and twenty Years after his Death, the Name of an Engliſh Man was as inglorious as it was twenty Years before his Protectorate; ſo much is this Nation indebted to the Governments that went before him, and came after him. Cromwel did not heartily affect Blake, who had no other Intereſt in view, but that of the Publick, and never affected his Government. It was for this Reaſon that Colonel Montague, afterwards Earl of Sandwich, was ſent to command under him in the Streights, to gain Experience in Sea Affairs, and get an Intereſt in the Seamen: Blake, after War was declar'd, block'd up the Port of Cadiz, whither the Spaniſh Plate Fleet us'd Yearly to come and unlade; hoping to intercept them at their Return. Blake lay before the Harbour almoſt all the Winter, but cou'd not provoke the Spaniards, who had then there a Squadron of Men of War ſecur'd by Forts and Caſtles in the Iſland. The Spaniards were in Hopes to tire out the Engliſh, and that want of Water and Proviſions wou'd oblige them to quit their Coaſts, but they were plentifully ſupply'd with both in Wyer's Bay in Portugal. The Admirals Blake and Montague were gone to this Bay, when Captain, afterwards Sir Richard Stayner, who was left with ſeven Ships at the Mouth of the Harbour, ſpied the Spaniſh Plate Fleet making directly for Cadiz. Stayner was ſomewhat to the Leeward, but he bore up in the Head of them, with all the Sail he cou'd make, and in a few Hours time, himſelf in the Speaker, the Bridgewater and Plymouth Frigates, got up with the Spaniards. With theſe three Ships, while the reſt were behind, Stayner bravely fought eight Spaniſh Men of War and Galleons, within four Leagues of Cadiz. The Admiral, Don Marco del Porto, with 600,000 Pieces of Eight aboard, ran his Ship on Shoar. The Vice-Admiral, in which were 1200,000 Pieces of Eight, and another Galleon were fir'd; one deſignedly by the Spaniards, and another by Accident. In the former the Marquis of Badajox, Viceroy of Mexico, with his Wife and eldeſt Daughter, who was to have been married to the Duke de Medina Celi, periſhed in the Flames. But his other Daughter, his two Sons, and near a Hundred more, were ſaved by the Engliſh. The Rear-Admiral, with 2,000,000 Pieces of Eight aboard, was taken and ſecured, as alſo another Ship richly laden with Hides and Cochineal. A Man of War and an Advice Boat got into Gibraltar, and the other two Ships ran aſhoar and bulg'd. Six of theſe Eight were deſtroy'd, or made Prize. Admiral Montague was order'd home with the Plate Ships, and coming to Portſmouth, the Silver was taken out and carry'd by Land in many Carts to London, and ſo through the City to the Tower, where it was coin'd. As there never had been any thing like a Prize brought to England in the two former Reigns, or any worth remembring, This Sight occaſion'd great Diſcourſe and Joy, and the Protector, whoſe Glory was ſo radiant before, receiv'd a new Encreaſe of it by this Atchievement. A.D.1656

Blake's Ships take the Spaniſh Galeons.

All Europe was ſo ſenſible of his Power, that the Diſtreſs'd in all Parts of it flew to him for Refuge, and found it even when their Caſe was moſt deſperate, as that of the Proteſtant Inhabitants of the City of Niſmes in France. There aroſe a Difference between the Burghers, who were moſtly Hugonots, the Magiſtrates, and the Biſhop, which growing tumultuary, the Intendant of the Province repair'd thither to prevent an Inſurrection. When he came there, the Inhabitants oppos'd him, and Preparations were made to reduce them by Force. The Proteſtants in France fearing to be involv'd in the Guilt of the Mutiny at Niſmes, and theſe Burghers expecting ſevere Chaſtiſement, applied to Cromwel to intercede for them. This was done very ſecretly, and the Protector, with equal Secrecy, aſſur'd them of his Protection, and immediately diſpatch'd a truſty Agent with this Letter to Cardinal Mazarine. Eminentiſſimo Cardinali Mazarino. Eminentiſſime Domine Cardinalis, cum nobilem hunc virum cum literis, quarum exemplar hic incluſum eſt, ad Regem mittere neceſſare ſtatuiſſem, tum ei ut Eminentiam veſtram meo nomine, ſalutaret, ſimul in mandatis dedi, certaſque res vobiſcum communicandas ejus fidei commiſi. Quibus in rebus eminentiſſimam rogo veſtram, uti ſummam ei fidem habere velit, utpote in quo ego ſummam fiduciam repoſuerim. Eminentiæ veſtræ ſtudioſiſſimus OLIVERIUS Protector Rep. Angliæ Alba Aula 26 Decemb. 1656. Oliver relieves the French Proteſtants.

To his Eminence the Lord Cardinal Mazarine.

" Having thought neceſſary to diſpatch this " Gentleman to the King, to deliver him the " incloſed Letter; I have alſo recommended to " him to Salute your Eminence on my Part, and " have charg'd him to communicate to you cer- " tain Affairs which I have entruſted him with. " I therefore pray your Highneſs to give Credit " to what he ſhall ſay, having an entire Con- " fidence in him. Your Eminence's moſt affectionate, Oliver, Protector of the Common-wealth of England, Whitehall, &c. To which he added a Poſtſcript in French of his own Handwriting; Je viens d'apprendre la revolte des habitants de Niſmes. Je recommande a votre Eminence les Interets de Reformez. " I have been " inform'd of the Tumult at Niſmes, I recom- " mend to your Eminence the Intereſts of the " Reformed." He alſo ſent his Inſtructions to Lockhart to ſecond the Sollicitations of the Agent, and if he prevail'd not, to come away immediately. Mazarine complain'd of this way of Proceeding as too imperious, but he fear'd Cromwel too much to quarrel with him; and the Cardinal ſent Orders to the Intendant to make up the Matter as well as he cou'd. Wellwood, tells us, Cardinal Mazarine wou'd change Countenance whenever he heard him nam'd, ſo that it paſt into a Proverb in France, The Cardinal is not ſo much afraid of the Devil as of Oliver Cromwel. His Ambaſſador at Paris, Mr. Lockhart, told Biſhop Burnet, that when he was afterwards ſent Ambaſſador by King Charles, he found he had nothing of that Regard that was paid him Mazarine afraid of him.

A.D.1656 in Cromwel's Time. At which I wonder not, nor at the mean, or rather contemptible Figure the Engliſh Ambaſſadors made in all the Courts of Europe, from the Year 1602 to the Year 1642, and from the Year 1660 to the Revolution. For all Europe ſaw, that Princes, whoſe Heads were turn'd with Pedantry, Bigottry, Luxury and Superſtition, wou'd never vindicate the Honour of the Nation, or regard the Intereſts of their Subjects: In ſhort, that they wou'd do Foreigners no Hurt, whatever Hurt they did the Engliſh. Boreel told King Charles II. as much, as will be ſeen when we come to that King's ſecond Dutch War.

The Lord Broghill was one of Cromwel's Cabinet Counſellors, and was ſent for from Ireland to go to Scotland, and be Preſident of the Council there, where he was ſoon weary of the Country and Company, or rather of ſo great Diſtance from Court, tho' he had a Salary of 2000 Pounds a Year. The Author of his Manuſcript Life pretends, that he abhorr'd Oliver's Practices, tho' he was a chief Agent under him. But that Author, who turn'd Churchman after the Bartholomew Act, prevaricates in it, or was impos'd upon by the Information his Patron gave him; for no Man had the Confidence of Cromwel more than this Lord Broghill, afterwards Earl of Orrery, till the Protector grew cold in his Behaviour towards him, upon his Uneaſineſs in the Scots Service; tho' they were both reconciled again,

M. S. and the Lord Broghill was the Perſon who adviſ'd him to take upon him the Stile and Dignity of King, expreſſing to him, that it was impoſſible to govern this Kingdom, that had been ſo long accuſtom'd to Monarchy, without Kingly Authority. Cromwel very well reliſh'd the Motion, tho' his Party, and ſome even of his Family, did not; and upon their leaving him in that Deſign, he gave into another, which is hinted at by Biſhop Burnet, who had it from the Earl of Orrery himſelf; and it is thus told by his Chaplain, who had it from him more at large. The Lord Broghill keeping Correſpondence with ſome about the King, put them upon ſounding his Majeſty's Inclinations, as to accommodating Matters with Cromwel, by marrying his youngeſt Daughter the Lady Frances, and receiving Advice that the King's Inclinations were very favourable, he procured Permiſſion to propoſe it to the Protector, which he did in this Manner, it being too delicate an Affair to be fallen upon directly. The Lord Broghill firſt acquainted Cromwel's Wife and Daughter with it, that a Rumour of it might be whiſper'd about, and he report it to Oliver as ſuch. So coming one Day out of the City to Court, he had Admittance into Cromwel's Cloſet, who ask'd him whence he came, and what News he had brought? The Lord Broghill ſaid, He came out of the City, and had heard ſtrange News. Cromwel was impatient to know what it was, and the more for that Broghill ſeem'd to heſitate, and to be loth to tell him, ſaying however with a Smile, 'tis ſtrange News. The Protector preſs'd him ſo earneſtly that there was no avoiding it, had it not been his Intention to tell him. Perhaps, ſays the Lord Broghill, you will be offended. I will not, reply'd Oliver haſtily, be it what it will. Then Broghill in a laughing way ſaid, All the News in the City is, that you are going to reſtore the King, and marry him to Lady Frances. Cromwel, with a pleaſant Countenance, cry'd, And what did the Fools think of it? The Lord Broghill anſwer'd, They all like it, and think it the wiſeſt thing you can do, if you can accompliſh it. Oliver ſaid, looking ſtedfaſtly upon him, Do you believe ſo too? Broghill finding the Propoſal was grateful to him, reply'd, I do really believe it is the beſt thing you can do to ſecure your ſelf.

Cromwel's Deſign to marry his Daughter to the King.

Upon which the Protector walk'd up and down the Room with his Hands behind him in a muſing Poſture, and turning about upon Lord Broghill, cry'd, Why do you believe it? His Lordſhip then repreſented to him, "That he cou'd "make little Dependance on his own Party, "who, upon every ſlight Occaſion, were apt to "murmur and grumble; and the very ſame "Perſons who were ſo eager to put him up, "were now the moſt likely to pull him down: "That the King was in ſuch great Exigencies, "he wou'd be ready enough to hearken unto "any Propoſitions, rather than live always in "Exile and Miſery: That he might make his "own Terms, and retain the ſame Power, by "being General of all the Forces, during his "Life: That all the Royaliſts would join with "him in it: That if his Daughter had Children "by the King, which was likely enough, he "wou'd thereby be endear'd to King and Coun-"try, and have ſuch Intereſt in the Crown, as "none wou'd ever attempt any thing againſt "him, having the King his Son in Law, and "the Heir apparent to the Crown his Grandſon, "with all the Power of the Kingdom in his "Hands, which wou'd eſtabliſh his Greatneſs in "his Family after him; whereas, if he neglected "the doing this, he cou'd not expect to tranſmit "it to his Poſterity, or indeed to preſerve it as "long as he liv'd. A.D.1656

Cromwel heard him with great Attention, and taking two or three Turns in the Room ſaid, The King will never forgive me the Death of his Father. Sir, ſays Broghill, you were one of many who were concern'd in it, but you will be alone in the Merit of reſtoring him; employ ſome body to ſound him upon it, and ſee how he will take it: I'll do it, if you think fit. The Protector told him No, adding, He will never forgive me his Father's Death; beſides, he is ſo damnably debauch'd (this is Biſhop Burnet's Account) he will undo us all. But as debauch'd as he was, I have heard him a hundred times call'd our moſt religious and gracious King in very ſacred and ſolemn Places. Here the Diſcourſe dropp'd. Broghill finding he did not fall in with it at once, durſt not tell him what Steps he had taken, for fear of giving him Offence. Before he left Whitehall, he ſaw Madam, the Protector's Conſort, and Lady Frances, who were both very earneſt for the Buſineſs, and as ſoon as he came to them, ask'd how he had ſucceeded. He told them what had paſt between him and Oliver, and that they muſt uſe their Intereſt to bring him to it, or 'twou'd come to nothing. Mrs. Cromwel try'd more than once to perſuade him, but his Anſwer was, The King is not ſuch a Fool as to forgive me the Death of his Father; and they cou'd get nothing elſe from him.

Monk, Cromwel's main Tool while he was in Scotland, before my Lord Broghill went thither, had ſhewn all Favour to the Remonſtrants (ſo the Independents in Scotland were call'd) and impriſon'd many of the Kirk Miniſters, who were generally well inclin'd to the King. Broghill eas'd them of the Difficulties they lay under when Monk was amongſt them; for which they deputed Mr. Douglas and Mr. David Dicks to return him Thanks; but Gileſpie, Head of the Remonſtrants, articled againſt him to Cromwel, who clear'd his Lordſhip at the firſt Hearing after his Return to London, when the Protector told him, There's a great Friend of yours in Town. Broghill ſaying Who? Oliver reply'd, The Lord Ormond: He came to Town ſuch a Day, and is at ſuch a Place, naming it. The Lord Broghill ſaid, I know nothing of it. Cromwel bad him ſend Ormond Notice that he knew where he was.

A.D.1656 ſent a Trumpet to the Viceroy to demand the Prieſt, who was the chief Inſtrument in that ill Uſage. The Viceroy anſwer'd, he had no Authority over the Prieſts, and ſo cou'd not diſpoſe of them. General Blake, upon that, ſent him Word, He wou'd not enquire who had the Power to ſend the Prieſt to him; but if he were not ſent within three Hours, he wou'd burn their Town. The Spaniards hearing this, oblig'd the Viceroy to ſend the Prieſt to Blake, and he juſtified himſelf upon the petulant Behaviour of the Seamen. Blake anſwer'd, if he had ſent a Complaint to him of it, he wou'd have puniſh'd them ſeverely, ſince he wou'd not ſuffer his Men to affront the eſtabliſh'd Religion of any Place at which he touch'd, but he took it ill that he ſet on the Spaniards to do it. For he wou'd have all the World to know, That an Engliſh Man was only to be puniſh'd by an Engliſh Man; ſo he treated the Prieſt civilly, and ſent him back, being ſatisfied that he had him in his Power. Cromwel was much delighted with this, and read the Letters in Council with great Satisfaction; ſaying, he hop'd he ſhould make the Name of an Engliſh Man as great as ever that of a Roman had been. But alas! all thoſe Hopes vaniſh'd with him, and twenty Years after his Death, the Name of an Engliſh Man was as inglorious as it was twenty Years before his Protectorate; ſo much is this Nation indebted to the Governments that went before him, and came after him. Cromwel did not heartily affect Blake, who had no other Intereſt in view, but that of the Publick, and never affected his Government. It was for this Reaſon that Colonel Montague, afterwards Earl of Sandwich, was ſent to command under him in the Streights, to gain Experience in Sea Affairs, and get an Intereſt in the Seamen: Blake, after War was declar'd, block'd up the Port of Cadiz, whither the Spaniſh Plate Fleet us'd Yearly to come and unlade; hoping to intercept them at their Return. Blake lay before the Harbour almoſt all the Winter, but cou'd not provoke the Spaniards, who had then there a Squadron of Men of War ſecur'd by Forts and Caſtles in the Iſland. The Spaniards were in Hopes to tire out the Engliſh, and that want of Water and Proviſions wou'd oblige them to quit their Coaſts, but they were plentifully ſupply'd with both in Wyer's Bay in Portugal. The Admirals Blake and Montague were gone to this Bay, when Captain, afterwards Sir Richard Stayner, who was left with ſeven Ships at the Mouth of the Harbour, ſpied the Spaniſh Plate Fleet making directly for Cadiz. Stayner was ſomewhat to the Leeward, but he bore up in the Head of them, with all the Sail he cou'd make, and in a few Hours time, himſelf in the Speaker, the Bridgewater and Plymouth Frigates, got up with the Spaniards. With theſe three Ships, while the reſt were behind, Stayner bravely fought eight Spaniſh Men of War and Galleons, within four Leagues of Cadiz. The Admiral, Don Marco del Porto, with 600,000 Pieces of Eight aboard, ran his Ship on Shoar. The Vice-Admiral, in which were 1200,000 Pieces of Eight, and another Galleon were fir'd; one deſignedly by the Spaniards, and another by Accident. In the former the Marquis of Badajox, Viceroy of Mexico, with his Wife and eldeſt Daughter, who was to have been married to the Duke de Medina Celi, periſhed in the Flames. But his other Daughter, his two Sons, and near a Hundred more, were ſaved by the Engliſh. The Rear-Admiral, with 2,000,000 Pieces of Eight aboard, was taken and ſecured, as alſo another Ship richly laden with Hides and Cochineal. A Man of War and an Advice Boat got into Gibraltar, and the other two Ships ran aſhoar and bulg'd. Six of theſe Eight were deſtroy'd, or made Prize. Admiral Montague was order'd home with the Plate Ships, and coming to Portſmouth, the Silver was taken out and carry'd by Land in many Carts to London, and ſo through the City to the Tower, where it was coin'd. As there never had been any thing like a Prize brought to England in the two former Reigns, or any worth remembring, This Sight occaſion'd great Diſcourſe and Joy, and the Protector, whoſe Glory was ſo radiant before, receiv'd a new Encreaſe of it by this Atchievement. Blake's Ships take the Spaniſh Galeons.

All Europe was ſo ſenſible of his Power, that the Diſtreſs'd in all Parts of it flew to him for Refuge, and found it even when their Caſe was moſt deſperate, as that of the Proteſtant Inhabitants of the City of Niſmes in France. There aroſe a Difference between the Burghers, who were moſtly Hugonots, the Magiſtrates, and the Biſhop, which growing tumultuary, the Intendant of the Province repair'd thither to prevent an Inſurrection. When he came there, the Inhabitants oppos'd him, and Preparations were made to reduce them by Force. The Proteſtants in France fearing to be involv'd in the Guilt of the Mutiny at Niſmes, and theſe Burghers expecting ſevere Chaſtiſement, applied to Cromwel to intercede for them. This was done very ſecretly, and the Protector, with equal Secrecy, aſſur'd them of his Protection, and immediately diſpatch'd a truſty Agent with this Letter to Cardinal Mazarine. Eminentiſſimo Cardinali Mazarino. Eminentiſſime Domine Cardinalis, cum nobilem hunc virum cum literis, quarum exemplar hic incluſum eſt, ad Regem mittere neceſſare ſtatuiſſem, tum ei ut Eminentiam veſtram meo nomine, ſalutaret, ſimul in mandatis dedi, certaſque res vobiſcum communicandas ejus fidei commiſſi. Quibus in rebus eminentiſſimam rogo veſtram, uti ſummam ei fidem habere velit, utpote in quo ego ſummam fiduciam repoſuerim. Eminentiæ veſtræ ſtudioſiſſimus OLIVERIUS Protector Rep. Angliæ Alba Aula 26 Decemb. 1656. Oliver relieves the French Proteſtants.

To his Eminence the Lord Cardinal Mazarine.

" Having thought neceſſary to diſpatch this " Gentleman to the King, to deliver him the " incloſed Letter; I have alſo recommended to " him to Salute your Eminence on my Part, and " have charg'd him to communicate to you cer- " tain Affairs which I have entruſted him with. " I therefore pray your Highneſs to give Credit " to what he ſhall ſay, having an entire Con- " fidence in him. Your Eminence's moſt affectionate, Oliver, Protector of the Common-wealth of England, Whitehall, &c. To which he added a Poſtſcript in French of his own Handwriting; Je viens d'apprendre la revolte des habitants de Niſmes. Je recommande a votre Eminence les Interets de Reformez. " I have been " inform'd of the Tumult at Niſmes, I recom- " mend to your Eminence the Intereſts of the " Reformed." He alſo ſent his Inſtructions to Lockhart to ſecond the Sollicitations of the Agent, and if he prevail'd not, to come away immediately. Mazarine complain'd of this way of Proceeding as too imperious, but he fear'd Cromwel too much to quarrel with him; and the Cardinal ſent Orders to the Intendant to make up the Matter as well as he cou'd. Wellwood, tells us, Cardinal Mazarine wou'd change Countenance whenever he heard him nam'd, ſo that it paſt into a Proverb in France, The Cardinal is not ſo much afraid of the Devil as of Oliver Cromwel. His Ambaſſador at Paris, Mr. Lockhart, told Biſhop Burnet, that when he was afterwards ſent Ambaſſador by King Charles, he found he had nothing of that Regard that was paid him Mazarine afraid of him.

A.D.1656 in Cromwel's Time. At which I wonder not, nor at the mean, or rather contemptible Figure the Engliſh Ambaſſadors made in all the Courts of Europe, from the Year 1602 to the Year 1642, and from the Year 1660 to the Revolution. For all Europe ſaw, that Princes, whoſe Heads were turn'd with Pedantry, Bigottry, Luxury and Superſtition, wou'd never vindicate the Honour of the Nation, or regard the Intereſts of their Subjects: In ſhort, that they wou'd do Foreigners no Hurt, whatever Hurt they did the Engliſh. Boreel told King Charles II. as much, as will be ſeen when we come to that King's ſecond Dutch War.

The Lord Broghill was one of Cromwel's Cabinet Counſellors, and was ſent for from Ireland to go to Scotland, and be Preſident of the Council there, where he was ſoon weary of the Country and Company, or rather of ſo great Diſtance from Court, tho' he had a Salary of 2000 Pounds a Year. The Author of his Manuſcript Life pretends, that he abhorr'd Oliver's Practices, tho' he was a chief Agent under him. But that Author, who turn'd Churchman after the Bartholomew Act, prevaricates in it, or was impos'd upon by the Information his Patron gave him; for no Man had the Confidence of Cromwel more than this Lord Broghill, afterwards Earl of Orrery, till the Protector grew cold in his Behaviour towards him, upon his Uneaſineſs in the Scots Service; tho' they were both reconciled again, and the Lord Broghill was the Perſon who adviſ'd him to take upon him the Stile and Dignity of King, expreſſing to him, that it was impoſſible to govern this Kingdom, that had been ſo long accuſtom'd to Monarchy, without Kingly Authority. Cromwel very well reliſh'd the Motion, tho' his Party, and ſome even of his Family, did not; and upon their leaving him in that Deſign, he gave into another, which is hinted at by Biſhop Burnet, who had it from the Earl of Orrery himſelf; and it is thus told by his Chaplain, who had it from him more at large. The Lord Broghill keeping Correſpondence with ſome about the King, put them upon ſounding his Majeſty's Inclinations, as to accommodating Matters with Cromwel, by marrying his youngeſt Daughter the Lady Frances, and receiving Advice that the King's Inclinations were very favourable, he procured Permiſſion to propoſe it to the Protector, which he did in this Manner, it being too delicate an Affair to be fallen upon directly. The Lord Broghill firſt acquainted Cromwel's Wife and Daughter with it, that a Rumour of it might be whiſper'd about, and he report it to Oliver as ſuch. So coming one Day out of the City to Court, he had Admittance into Cromwel's Cloſet, who ask'd him whence he came, and what News he had brought? The Lord Broghill ſaid, He came out of the City, and had heard ſtrange News. Cromwel was impatient to know what it was, and the more for that Broghill ſeem'd to heſitate, and to be loth to tell him, ſaying however with a Smile, 'tis ſtrange News. The Protector preſs'd him ſo earneſtly that there was no avoiding it, had it not been his Intention to tell him. Perhaps, ſays the Lord Broghill, you will be offended. I will not, reply'd Oliver haſtily, be it what it will. Then Broghill in a laughing way ſaid, All the News in the City is, that you are going to reſtore the King, and marry him to Lady Frances. Cromwel, with a pleaſant Countenance, cry'd, And what did the Fools think of it? The Lord Broghill anſwer'd, They all like it, and think it the wiſeſt thing you can do, if you can accompliſh it. Oliver ſaid, looking ſtedfaſtly upon him, Do you believe ſo too? Broghill finding the Propoſal was grateful to him, reply'd, I do really believe it is the beſt thing you can do to ſecure your ſelf.

M. S.

Cromwel's Deſign to marry his Daughter to the King.

Upon which the Protector walk'd up and down the Room with his Hands behind him in a muſing Poſture, and turning about upon Lord Broghill, cry'd, Why do you believe it? His Lordſhip then repreſented to him, "That he cou'd "make little Dependance on his own Party, "who, upon every ſlight Occaſion, were apt to "murmur and grumble; and the very ſame "Perſons who were ſo eager to put him up, "were now the moſt likely to pull him down: "That the King was in ſuch great Exigencies, "he wou'd be ready enough to hearken unto "any Propoſitions, rather than live always in "Exile and Miſery: That he might make his "own Terms, and retain the ſame Power, by "being General of all the Forces, during his "Life: That all the Royaliſts would join with "him in it: That if his Daughter had Children "by the King, which was likely enough, he "wou'd thereby be endear'd to King and Coun-"try, and have ſuch Intereſt in the Crown, as "none wou'd ever attempt any thing againſt "him, having the King his Son in Law, and "the Heir apparent to the Crown his Grandſon, "with all the Power of the Kingdom in his "Hands, which wou'd eſtabliſh his Greatneſs in "his Family after him; whereas, if he neglected "the doing this, he cou'd not expect to tranſmit "it to his Poſterity, or indeed to preſerve it as "long as he liv'd. A.D.1656

Cromwel heard him with great Attention, and taking two or three Turns in the Room ſaid, The King will never forgive me the Death of his Father. Sir, ſays Broghill, you were one of many who were concern'd in it, but you will be alone in the Merit of reſtoring him; employ ſome body to ſound him upon it, and ſee how he will take it: I'll do it, if you think fit. The Protector told him No, adding, He will never forgive me his Father's Death; beſides, he is ſo damnably debauch'd (this is Biſhop Burnet's Account) he will undo us all. But as debauch'd as he was, I have heard him a hundred times call'd our moſt religious and gracious King in very ſacred and ſolemn Places. Here the Diſcourſe dropp'd. Broghill finding he did not fall in with it at once, durſt not tell him what Steps he had taken, for fear of giving him Offence. Before he left Whitehall, he ſaw Madam, the Protector's Conſort, and Lady Frances, who were both very earneſt for the Buſineſs, and as ſoon as he came to them, ask'd how he had ſucceeded. He told them what had paſt between him and Oliver, and that they muſt uſe their Intereſt to bring him to it, or 'twou'd come to nothing. Mrs. Cromwel try'd more than once to perſuade him, but his Anſwer was, The King is not ſuch a Fool as to forgive me the Death of his Father; and they cou'd get nothing elſe from him.

Monk, Cromwel's main Tool while he was in Scotland, before my Lord Broghill went thither, had ſhewn all Favour to the Remonſtrants (ſo the Independents in Scotland were call'd) and impriſon'd many of the Kirk Miniſters, who were generally well inclin'd to the King. Broghill eas'd them of the Difficulties they lay under when Monk was amongſt them; for which they deputed Mr. Douglas and Mr. David Dicks to return him Thanks; but Gileſpie, Head of the Remonſtrants, articled againſt him to Cromwel, who clear'd his Lordſhip at the firſt Hearing after his Return to London, when the Protector told him, There's a great Friend of yours in Town. Broghill ſaying Who? Oliver reply'd, The Lord Ormond: He came to Town ſuch a Day, and is at ſuch a Place, naming it. The Lord Broghill ſaid, I know nothing of it. Cromwel bad him ſend Ormond Notice that he knew where he was.

A.D. 1656 Broghill went to him himſelf, and acquainted him with what the Protector had told him; upon which the Marqueſs haſten'd away: But his Lady's Papers were ſeiz'd on, ſhe living then in London, and having no Friend to ſpeak for her, apply'd to Lord Broghill, who immediately went to the Protector to interceed for her. Oliver had by thoſe Papers diſcover'd that ſhe, as well as her Husband, held Intelligence with his Enemies; and aſſoon as he ſaw Broghill, he ſaid angrily, You have undertaken indeed for the Quietneſs of a fine Perſon! The Lady Ormond is conſpiring with her Husband againſt me, and by your Procurement I have allow'd her 2000 Pounds a Year of the Marqueſs's Eſtate, becauſe they are Sufferers in Ireland. She's a wicked Woman, and ſhall not have a Farthing of it. My Lord Broghill ſeeing him in a Paſſion, return'd a ſoft Anſwer, which ſeldom fail'd to mollifie him, I am ſorry my Lady Ormond has given Occaſion for ſuch Diſturbance, I cannot well tell what to think of it, and humbly deſire to know what Grounds you have for ſo ſevere a Cenſure? Grounds enough, reply'd Cromwel, There, giving him a Letter, read it, 'tis her own Hand. Lord Broghill looking upon it, ſaid, You are miſtaken, it is not Lady Ormond's Hand, but the Lady Iſabella Thynn's, between whom and Lord Ormond there has been an Intrigue. How will you prove that, cry'd Cromwel? Eaſily, reply'd Broghill, for I have ſome Letters of Lady Iſabella's; which he ſhew'd Oliver, who being ſatisfy'd of his Miſtake, the Storm againſt the Lady Ormond blew over.

Ld. Broghill's Conference with Cromwel.

The Protector's Intelligence.

We ſhall have Occaſion to ſpeak of the exact Intelligence which the Protector had of Affairs he concern'd himſelf in: An infallible Proof of the Juſtneſs of his Judgment, and the Depth of his Policy. Tho' it did not coſt him 200,000 Pounds a Year, as Echard aſſures us, it did coſt him more Money in one Year than probably the Royal Houſe of Stuart ſpent on that Article in their four Reigns; for having no Wars, nor no Intention of Wars, I don't ſee of what Uſe Intelligence cou'd be to them, or that it wou'd have been Policy in them to pay any thing for knowing what, when known, they intended not to trouble themſelves about.

The following Incident is touch'd upon by Biſhop Burnet. Lord Broghill once walking in a Chamber with the Protector, ſaw an ugly, ill-look'd Fellow peeping thro' the Arras Hangings; and ſpying him before Cromwel did, he immediately drew his Sword and ran at him, ſuppoſing him to be ſome Rogue come to do Miſchief. The Protector ſeeing him draw his Sword with ſuch a Fury, ask'd what he meant? His Lordſhip anſwer'd, I ſaw ſome body look through the Hangings like a Villain; and going towards the Place, Cromwel follow'd him, ſaw the Fellow over Lord Broghill's Shoulders, and cry'd, A Friend, my Lord, a Friend, deſiring him to walk back again, and he wou'd come to him preſently. Broghill left them talking together, and when Oliver return'd, he ſaid, I'll write a Line or two, and be with you immediately, which he did; and then my Lord ask'd him, Whether he might know who that Fellow was? The Protector reply'd, He is one to whom I have given 1000 Pounds for Intelligence: He has now brought me Word of a rich Dutch Ship on our Coaſts, which has Spaniſh Money aboard, and Meaſures are taken for intercepting it; which was accordingly effected by Captain, afterwards Sir Jeremy Smith, who came up with her as ſhe paſt by Dover. Smith demanded Leave to ſearch her: The Dutch Captain anſwer'd, None but his Maſters might ſearch his Ship. Smith ſent him Word he had ſet up his Glaſs, and if he did not ſubmit before it was run out, he wou'd board her. The Dutchman ſeeing 'twas in vain to reſiſt, ſuffer'd the Engliſh to ſearch her, and they found all the Spaniſh Money, which was a prodigious Treaſure. Biſhop Burnet tells us, Oliver knew every thing that paſt in the King's little Court, and yet not one of his Spies were diſcover'd but Manning above-mention'd. A.D. 1656

Lord Clarendon a Means of Oliver's Intelligence.

It will be Mirth to the Reader, after he has ſeen what Merit the Lord Clarendon takes to himſelf in detecting that Traitor's Correſpondence with Thurloe, and how ſharp the King's Counſellors were in detecting Spies, and keeping Counſels, to find that he himſelf was the very Perſon by whoſe Means Cromwel had moſt of his Intelligence from the King's Court. After this bold Charge, I muſt produce better Authority than my own, and it is in the Words of the Biſhop of Salisbury. Hiſt. p. 65.

" Oliver underſtood that one Sir Richard " Willis was Chancellor Hyde's chief Confident, " to whom he wrote often, and to whom all the " Party ſubmitted, looking on him as an able " and wiſe Man, in whom they confided abſo- " lutely. So he found a Way to talk with him; " he ſaid, He did not intend to hurt any of the " Party, his Deſign was rather to ſave them " from Ruin: They were apt, after their Cups " (you ſee what ſort of Men they were) to run " into fooliſh Plots, which ſignify'd nothing but " to ruin thoſe who were engag'd in them: He " knew they conſulted him in every thing. All " he deſir'd of him was to know thoſe Plots, that " he might ſo diſconcert them that none might " ſuffer for them. If he clapp'd any of them up in " Priſon, it ſhou'd be only for a little Time, and " they ſhou'd be interrogated only about ſome tri- " fling Diſcourſe, but never about the Buſineſs " they had engag'd in. He offer'd Willis what- " ever he wou'd accept of, and to give it when, or " as he pleas'd." They ſtruck up a Bargain, and none was truſted with this but his Secretary Thurloe, who was a very dextrous Man at getting Intelligence. Thus Cromwel had all the King's Party in a Net, and, by the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, one wou'd think they had all Cromwel's Party at Mercy, and whenever they had Courage enough to ſhew themſelves, the Cromwellians wou'd fly faſter from them than they us'd to run after them.

The Spaniſh War exhauſting the Treaſury, notwithſtanding the Numbers and Riches of the Prizes that were taken, the Protector thought it neceſſary to call a Parliament; for which Writs were iſſu'd, and a Day ſet for their Meeting, the 17th of September, when they met accordingly at Weſtminſter-Abbey, where they heard a Sermon preach'd by the learned and eminent Dr. Owen, Dean of Chriſt-church, and Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, who had in him more of the Gentleman and of the Divine, than any of the Doctors who dealt ſo inſolently with him after the Reſtoration. The Sermon over, the Lord Protector and the Members repair'd to the Painted-Chamber, where, ſays Echard, he made a dark Speech to them. Prodigious! that Darkneſs it ſelf ſhou'd diſcover Darkneſs! But it was not a Diſcovery of his; the Author of the Compleat Hiſtory led him into that Term, tho' theſe illumin'd are eternally groping in the Mazes of falſe Hiſtory; they inſult all other Hiſtorians, as ignorant and blind. He made a ſhort Speech, and directed them to make Choice of a Speaker. Ludlow, who is far from favouring thoſe Times, informs us, That unwarrantable Practices were made uſe of to get a Court Parliament; but it is very obvious, that the like Means were us'd to get in as many Members as poſſible who were Enemies to the preſent Government;

A.D.1656 Government; and unleſs the Protector had reſolv'd to be felo de ſe, and murder his own Authority, he muſt have been a Fool (which the wiſe Cavaliers have not often call'd him) to have ſuffer'd them to ſit, if he had not been ſure of them. Somebody put it into the Head of Monk to tell the Parliament, a Month or two before he brought in the King, No Parliament admits new Members to ſit, without a previous Engagement, which is what Oliver inſiſted upon, and for which his Opponents of all Denominations, ſay, he was a greater Tyrant than the Greek Agathocles, or the Roman Nero; but they do not ſeem to have a clear Notion of Tyranny, and till they do, it wou'd be Labour loſt to anſwer them.

As the Members went into the Houſe, they receiv'd Certificates in this Form.

Theſe are to certify, that Bulſtrode Whitlock, Eſq; of the County of Bucks, is return'd, by Indenture, to be one of the Knights in this preſent Parliament for the ſaid County, and approv'd by his Highneſs's Council.

A.D.1656

Sir Thomas Widdrington being choſen Speaker, the Houſe appointed their Grand Committees for Elections, Religion, Grievances, Courts of Juſtice and Trade. A Bill was read, For renouncing and diſannulling the pretended Title of Charles Stuart; which Act paſt in a few Days, and the Houſe

Reſolv'd,

That the War againſt the Spaniard was undertaken upon juſt and neceſſary Grounds, and for the Good of the People of this Common-wealth, and the Parliament doth approve thereof, and will, by God's Bleſſing, aſſiſt his Highneſs therein.

General Montague, afterwards Earl of Sandwich, coming into the Houſe, took his Seat, and had their Thanks for his great and good Services done at Sea.

On the 27th of October, the Lord Protector came to the Painted-Chamber, and ſent a Serjeant at Arms to give Notice to the Houſe, that he was come. The Speaker, and the whole Houſe went to the Painted-Chamber, where the Protector, in the Preſence of the Lord Preſident Lawrence, the Lords Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, Fiennes and Liſle, and the two Lord Chief Juſtices Glynne and St John, the Maſter of the Rolls, Lenthal, the Lords of the Treaſury, Montague Whitlock Sydenham, and the reſt of the Judges, gave his Conſent to the following Bills. An Act for renouncing and diſannulling the pretended Title of Charles Stuart. An Act for taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries. An Act for the Security of his Highneſs the Lord Protector's Perſon. An Act for Exportation of ſeveral Commodities of the Breed and Growth of this Common-wealth. When the Protector had given his Aſſent to theſe Bills, he ſaid, As it has been the Cuſtom of the chief Governor, to acknowledge the Care and Kindneſs of the Commons, upon ſuch Occaſions; ſo I do very heartily acknowledge your Kindneſs herein.

The Major Generals in the ſeveral Counties, having by themſelves, or their Deputies, given great Diſguſt to the People, were put down by this Parliament, John Claypole, Eſq; who had marry'd Oliver's beloved Daughter, Lady Elizabeth, being the firſt that mov'd for it; by which the Protector's Diſpoſition in that Buſineſs was conjectur'd.

The Account that Echard and others give of the Hereſies and Blaſpemies of James Naylor the Quaker, is deny'd by all that Fraternity, who repreſent him as a plain Man, of great Zeal, and no great Capacity. Mr. Pen, Mr. Arclidae, Mr. Ellwood, eminent Men among the Quakers, whom I knew intimately, have ſpoken of him thus to me. Echard and the Eccleſiaſticks take infinite Pleaſure in telling us he was condemn'd to be whipp'd by the Hang-man, to be pillory'd, to be ſtigmatiz'd with the Letter B, to have his Tongue bor'd thro', to be carry'd to Briſtol, and convey'd thro' the City on a Horſe bare back'd, his Face to the Tail, and his Body to be there whipp'd.

The

A.D. 1656 The Eccleſiaſticks, inſtead of melting with Compaſſion at this ſlaviſh and barbarous Sentence, ſay with Echard, 'twas with ſome Reproach to humane Nature, that his Followers admir'd him; as if all humane Nature was not liable to Frailty, and Fools were not apt to admire a Fool. If this Maxim had not been true, there are ſeveral Hiſtories which wou'd have been waſte Paper, almoſt as ſoon as printed. Mr. Whitlock, with the Sentiments of a Layman, a Lawyer, and an Engliſh Man, obſerves, It was thought by many, he was too fiercely proſecuted. A Word like this, is not in the Compleat Hiſtory, or in the Archdeacon's; which ſhews us what Spirit theſe Men are of. Had they order'd Shaving, Bleeding, Phyſick, Faſting, and ſome hard Labour, it wou'd have done every whit as well, and ſav'd the Scourging and Mangling, which is indeed a Reproach to humane Nature as it is, that there ſhou'd be thoſe, whoſe Calling is to teach Charity and Love, that are not ſenſible of it.

A.D. 1657 In the Beginning of the Year enſuing, a Plot was diſcover'd, which, like all the Cavalier Plots, was to terminate in Murder. For tho' they durſt no more think of fair Means, and of meeting the Protector in the Field, they had Rage enough to thirſt after his Blood, and more than once conſpir'd to aſſaſſinate him.

Syndercomb's Plot. Miles Syndercomb and one Cecil, tamper'd with Troop, a Soldier of Oliver's Life-Guard, to kill the Lord Protector, and burn Whitehall. Troop ſeem'd to joyn with them in the Plot, but diſcover'd it in the Beginning; ſo Cromwel had Notice of the Conſpirators Contrivances, till he thought it time to ſieze and puniſh them. The burning Whitehall was laid aſide, and 'twas reſolv'd to ſhoot him as he paſt to Hampton Court, near the very Place where the Succeſſors to thoſe Cavaliers conſpir'd to ſhoot King William; a narrow Paſs beyond Turnham-Green. The Conſpirators had provided a Blunderbuſs, loaden with twelve Bullets, which was to be fir'd out of an Arbor near the Road. Troop told all, Syndercomb was apprehended; the Parliament appointing a Day of Thankſgiving for the Diſcovery of the Plot, reſolv'd to wait on the Protector to congratulate the Mercy and Deliverance. On the 9th of February, the Aſſaſſin Syndercomb was try'd before the Lord Chief Juſtice Glynne, who declar'd, that by the Common Law, to compaſs or imagine the Death of the chief Magiſtrate, by what Name ſoever he was call'd, whether Lord Protector, or otherwiſe, is High Treaſon, and that the Stat. 25. Edward III. was only declaratory of the Common Law; which is ſaid to be a very unjuſt Interpretation of that Statute, tho' it is ſo agreeable to common Senſe, that the Intention of the Law was the Preſervation of the chief Magiſtrate, whatever Name he went by. The Reader is doubtleſs ſatisfy'd, that I cite nothing out of the Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory to prove it falſe only, for that wou'd be citing the whole Book, but to ſhew where it is improbable, incredible, and ſometimes impertinent, as in this Paſſage. Syndercomb being condemn'd to be hang'd, drawn and quarter'd, Oliver caus'd him to be poiſon'd, as not daring to bring him to Juſtice. It is below Reflection. The Aſſaſſin's Siſter was with him the Night before he was to be executed, and it is thought, brought him Poiſon, for he was found dead in his Bed the next Morning, drawn naked at a Horſe's Tail, to the Gallows where he ſhou'd have been hang'd, and his Body bury'd under it, with a Stake driven thro' it. Among other Characters in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, is this of Mr. Syndercomb. He was a very ſtout Man, his Behaviour was ſo reſolute at his Examination and Trial, as if he thought he ſhould ſtill be able to murder the Uſurper. His Carriage and Words were ſuch, as if he knew well how to avoid the Judgment. It is glorious for thoſe Heroes who have a Place in this Hiſtorian's Panegyricks that the Memory of Mr. Syndercomb has alſo a Share of that Glory.

The Speaker, Sir Thomas Widdrington, being indiſpos'd, Bulſtrode Whitlocke, Eſq; was appointed Speaker during his Indiſpoſition, and led to the Chair by Colonel Sydenham, and Major General Howard. About a Week after, Feb. 6, there was a great Meeting of learned Men at his Houſe at Chelſea, purſuant to this Order of Parliament.

Ordered, " That it be referr'd to a Committee " to ſend for and adviſe with Dr. Walton, Mr. " Hughes, Mr. Caſtle, Mr. Clerk, Mr. Poulk, Dr. " Cudworth, and ſuch others as they ſhall think " fit, and to conſider of the Tranſlations and Im- " preſſions of the Bible, and to offer their Opi- " nions therein." About a Week after, Dr. Walton publiſh'd the Polyglot Bible; which, with ſeveral other Encouragements given to Learning at this Time, proves the Falſhood and Ingratitude of thoſe who repreſent it as immers'd in Illiterature and Ignorance, tho', in Reality, the moſt Learned and Polite were Friends to the Common-wealth; as Selden, Wilkins, Milton, Bathurſt, Wallis, Clarkſon, Waller, Pool, and the Scholarſhip of their Adverſaries was as contemptible to Men of Genius and Taſte, as their Courage was to Men of true Gallantry, as is eaſy enough to be prov'd, were this a Place for Particulars.

Polyglot Bible.

On the 23d of February, the Parliament took into Conſideration the Settlement of the Nation, and in the Courſe of this Debate, Colonel Jephſon, one of the Members who ſerv'd for Ireland, mov'd that Cromwel might be made King, but Matters were not thoroughly concerted, and Cromwel having Notice of the Motion, as he had of every thing that paſt, reprov'd the Colonel gently at Table, ſaying, I wonder what you cou'd mean by ſuch a Propoſition! To which Jephſon reply'd, While I am permitted the Honour of ſitting in that Houſe, I muſt deſire the Liberty to diſcharge my Conſcience, tho' my Opinion ſhou'd happen to diſpleaſe. Oliver clapp'd him on the Shoulder and ſaid, Get thee gone for a mad Fellow, as thou art. A Farce on both Sides: For ſoon after, Cromwel gave his Son, then a Scholar at Oxford, a Company of Foot, himſelf a Troop of Horſe, and ſent him Agent to the Court of Sweden. In the Concluſion of the Debates about the Settlement of the Nation, the Houſe agreed upon a new Inſtrument, entitil'd, The humble Petition and Advice of the Parliament of England, Scotland and Ireland, to his Highneſs. The main Buſineſs of it was, for the Protector to have the Title of King. This Petition being preſented by the Parliament to the Lord Protector, he deſir'd a Committee might be appointed to confer with him about it, which was nam'd accordingly; and Whitlock was made Chairman. This Committee attending his Highneſs, Whitlock ſpoke to him upon the Point of the Title of King, giving Reaſons why he ſhou'd accept of it. The Protector urg'd his Reaſons againſt it, and Whitlock reply'd. Biſhop Burnet tells us, " All the Law- " yers, Glyn, Maynard, Fountain, St John, were " vehemently for it: They ſaid, no new Govern- " ment cou'd be ſettled legally, but by a King, " who ſhou'd paſs Bills for ſuch a Form as ſhou'd " be agreed on; till then, all they did was like " building upon Sand. Men were ſtill in Dan- " ger of a Revolution, and in that Caſe, all that " had been done would be void of it ſelf, as con- " trary to a Law yet in being, and not repeal'd, &c. " And in ſhort, this Point was made out beyond " the Cromwel to be King.

A.D.1657 " the Poſſibility of anſwering it, except upon En-
" thuſiaſtical Principles." The Reaſoning in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion on this Queſtion, is the moſt ſober and rational Part of the Book. " The " wiſeſt Perſon of the King's Party trembled at " this Overture, and believ'd it was the only " Way utterly to deſtroy the King, and to pull " up all future Hopes of the Royal Family by " the Roots. They ſaw all Men even already " tir'd in their Hopes, and that which was left " of Spirit in them, was from the Horror they " had of the Confuſions of the preſent Govern- " ment. A Spirit that comes from Horror, is " perfectly Cavalier, and none cou'd have thought " of ſuch an Expreſſion but the noble Author. " That very many who had ſuſtain'd the King's " Quarrel in the Beginning, were dead; that " the preſent King, by long Abſence out of the " Kingdom, was known to very few; ſo that " there was too much Reaſon to fear that much " of that Affection that appear'd. Very fine " Language! So that that much of that that went " under the Notion of Allegiance to the King, " was more directed to the Monarchy, than to " the Perſon, and that if Cromwel were once " made King, and let the Government run again " in the old Channel, tho' thoſe who were in " love with a Republick, wou'd poſſibly fall from " him, he wou'd receive abundant of Repara- " tion of Strength, by the Acceſs of thoſe who " preferr'd the Monarchy, &c." I wou'd repeat more of it, but nothing can be more fatiguing than the Wordineſs of every Paragraph of that Hiſtory. The Royaliſts did indeed fall in with the Republicans on this Occaſion with no other View than to diſtreſs Oliver: For tho' they pretended to publick Spirit, and to aſſert Liberty, they meant only to perplex and deſtory the Government. Minds capable of preferring the Principles of Slavery to thoſe of Freedom, are incapable of generous Sentiments, and whenever they profeſs them, 'tis with ſome wicked Deſign. Who have talk'd more of the Good of the Country, of Old England, of Liberty and Property, than the Diſaffected ſince the Revolution? whoſe Meaning have always been to create Difficulties and Perplexities, and by any Means and Pretences to overturn this free Government, and reſtore Tyranny. They learnt it of their Predeceſſors the Cavaliers, who, as Biſhop Burnet informs us, " were all zealous " Common-wealths Men, according to the Di- " rections ſent them from thoſe about the King. " Their Buſineſs was to oppoſe Cromwel on all " his Demands, and ſo to weaken him at home, " and expoſe him abroad. When ſome of the " other Party took notice of this great Change " from being the Abettors of Prerogative, to be- " come the Patrons of Liberty, they pretended " their Education in the Court, and their Obli- " gations to it, had engag'd them that way; but " now ſince that was out of Doors, they had the " common Principles of humane Nature, and the " Love of Liberty in them. By this Means, as the " old Republicans aſſiſted and protected them, ſo " at the ſame time they ſtrengthen'd the Faction " againſt Cromwel." What follows, is a Leſſon to all Engliſh Men, living at this Time, to be on their Guard againſt the falſe Profeſſions of thoſe who having been Inſtruments of all the deſtructive Changes that have happen'd in the Adminiſtration in the three laſt Reigns; do now awkardly affect a Loyalty to that Government which they heartily hate, and will betray and ſubvert whenever Occaſion offers, which God forbid. " Theſe " very Men, at the Reſtoration, ſhook off the Diſ- " guiſe, and reverted to their old Principles for " a high Prerogative, and abſolute Power. They " ſaid they were for a Liberty when it was a " Means to diſtreſs one who they thought had no " Right to govern: But when the Government " return'd to its old Channel, they were ſtill " as firm to all Prerogative Notions, and as great " Enemies to Liberty as ever." It is hop'd the Reader will ſeriouſly reflect on this, when he ſees any ſuch Perſons thruſting themſelves into Offices, and not be diſappointed if he is abus'd by them; but neither the Republicans nor Royaliſts, nor both in Conjunction wou'd have hinder'd the Lord Protector's accepting the Title of King, which the Parliament offer'd him, if the Officers of the Army, and particularly Lieut. General Fleetwood, his Son in Law, and Major General Desborough, his Brother in Law, had not declar'd warmly againſt it. The Officers preſented a Petition to the Parliament to that Purpoſe, which alarm'd him extremely; and Fleetwood and Desborough waiting his coming into St. James's Park, to his uſual Walk, the Day before he was to accept or refuſe the Kingſhip, gave him their Reaſons againſt it in a long Conference. Cromwel ſaid, It's a tempting of God to expoſe ſo many worthy Men to Death and Poverty, when there is a certain Way to ſecure them. The others inſiſted on the Oaths they had taken. Oliver reply'd, Theſe Oaths were againſt the Power and Tyranny of Kings. In Concluſion, they believing from his Diſcourſe, that he intended to accept of it, told him, " They ſaw great Confu- " ſions would follow on it, and as they cou'd not " ſerve him to ſet up the Idol they had pull'd " down, and had ſworn to keep down; ſo they " wou'd not engage in any thing againſt him, " but wou'd retire and look on." They then offer'd him their Commiſſions, ſince they were reſolv'd not to ſerve a King. Stay, ſays Cromwel, 'till you hear my Anſwer. It is believ'd this Reſolution of theirs, and the Diſpoſition of the Soldiery, determin'd him to refuſe the Crown. For moſt certainly he wanted not the Perſwaſions or Argument of Sir Richard Onſlow, Sir Charles Wolſely, the Lord Broghil, or Colonel Jones, mention'd by Echard to accept it, ſince he was fully convinc'd, that the Government of a ſingle Perſon cou'd not be firmly eſtabliſh'd without the Title of King, and his Judgment, as well as his Ambition, led him to take it; however, in Complacency to the Army and the Republicans, he put a Force on his Inclinations, and as ſolemnly refus'd the Title of King, as it had been ſolemnly offer'd him.

Oliver refuſes the Kingſhip.

But the new Inſtrument of Government, call'd, The Petition and Advice, which was brought into the Houſe by Sir Chriſtopher Pack, a very buſy Alderman of London, paſt, after much debating. It was forwarded by the Lord Broghill, Whitlock, Glyn, and others, and conſiſted of ſeveral Articles, to which was afterwards added other Articles, and the whole confirm'd, and ſwore to by his Highneſs, the Lord Protector, the 26th Day of June. That Dignity and Title was ſettled upon him, and his Succeſſor, to be nam'd by himſelf, with all the Powers and Prerogatives of a Sovereign, more extenſive than ever the Laws of England made them, and perhaps thoſe Powers and Prerogatives were neceſſary for the Eſtabliſhment of a Government ſo odious to both Friends and Enemies, as was that of the Protectorate. I mean not as to the Execution of it, but as to the Form of it.

Faction not to be truſted with Power.

By this Petition and Advice the Lord Protector was impower'd not only to call and diſſolve Parliaments, but alſo to iſſue out Writs to ſummon Perſons to ſit as Members of the other Houſe of Parliament. They were not to be ſtil'd the Houſe of Lords, tho' the Writs were the ſame with thoſe that were ſent to ſummon Peers. The

*A.D.*1657 Parliament order'd Sir Oliver Fleming, Maſter of the Ceremonies, to give Notice to all Foreign Ambaſſadors and Miniſters of the intended Inaugauration of his Highneſs the Lord Protector, Crom-wel's Inaugu-ration.

For which a Place was prepar'd at the upper End of Weſtminſter-Hall, in the midſt of which was a rich Cloth of State ſet up, and under it a Chair of State, upon an Aſſent of two Degrees, cover'd with Carpets. Before it a Table, and a Chair by it for the Speaker. On each Side of the Hall were Seats built one above another, and cover'd, for the Members of Parliament. Below them Seats on the one Side for the Judges, and on the other Side for the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of London. About two a Clock in the Afternoon the Protector met the Parliament, and gave his Conſent to a Bill for adjourning it from this 26th of June to the 20th of February next, and to ſome other Bills. Then the Speaker and Members went to their Places in Weſtminſter-Hall, and the Judges and Aldermen took their Places. A little Time after this his Highneſs came, attended with his own Gentlemen, and with the Heralds and Sergeants at Arms, the Officers, Lords Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, Lords of the Treaſury, Lords of the Council, the Earl of Warwick carrying the Sword before him, and the Lord-Mayor of London, Sir Robert Tichburne, carrying the City Sword.

His Highneſs ſtanding under the Cloth of State, the Speaker of the Parliament preſented to him a Robe of Purple Velvet, lin'd with Ermines, which the Speaker, aſſiſted by Bulſtrode Whitlock, Eſq; and others, put upon his Highneſs. Then he deliver'd to him the Bible, richly gilt and boſs'd. After that the Speaker girt the Sword about the Lord Protector, and deliver'd into his Hand the Sceptre of maſſy Gold. He then made a Speech to him upon thoſe ſeveral Things preſented to him, wiſhing him all Proſperity in his Government, and gave him the Oath. Dr. Manton, by Prayer, recommended his Highneſs, the Parliament, the Council, the Forces by Sea and Land, the whole Government and People of the three Nations, to the Bleſſing and Protection of God. After this the People gave ſeveral great Shouts, and the Trumpets ſounding, the Lord Protector ſat in the Chair of State, holding the Sceptre in his Hand. On the right ſide ſat Monſieur the firſt Preſident Bourdeaux, Ambaſſador of France; on his left, Mynheer Van Beuning, Ambaſſador of the United Provinces. Near to his Highneſs ſtood his Son, the Lord Richard Cromwel, the Lord Deputy Fleetwood, John Cleypole, Eſq; Maſter of the Horſe, the Lords of the Council, and the Officers of State. The Earl of Warwick held the Sword on the right Side of the Chair, the Lord-Mayor of London held the Sword on the left Side. Near the Earl of Warwick ſtood the Lord Viſcount Liſle, General Montagu, and Mr. Whitlock, each of them having a drawn Sword in his Hand. Then the Trumpets ſounded, and a Herald proclaim'd his Highneſs's Title. After which the Multitude with loud Acclamations cry'd, God ſave the Lord Protector. The Ceremonies ended, his Highneſs having his Train born by the Lord Sherrard, the Honourable Mr. Rich, Grandſon to the Earl of Warwick, and the Honourable Mr. Roberts, Son to the Lord Roberts, accompany'd by the Lords Ambaſſadors, and attended as before, went in State to Weſtminſter-Hall Gate, where he took his rich Coach.

In the upper End of it himſelf ſat in his Robes: In the other End ſat the Earl of Warwick. In one Boot ſat his Son the Lord Richard, and Mr. Whitlock with a drawn Sword in his Hand; and in the other Boot ſat the Lord Viſcount Liſle and General Montagu with Swords drawn in their Hands. Mr. Cleypole led the Horſe of State in rich Capariſons. The Life-Guard and other Guards attended the Coach. The Officers and the reſt follow'd in Coaches to Whitehall, where he heard a Sermon preach'd by Mr. Lockier. *A.D.*1657

There was a fine Medal ſtruck on this Occaſion, perform'd by that excellent Graver Simmonds, whoſe Dies for Coining are the beſt that ever were; and yet after the Reſtoration he was turn'd out of the Mint, becauſe he work'd for Cromwel, to make room for a Blunderer. This Medal had on one ſide the Buſt of Oliver excellently well done, and round it Oliver D.G.R.P. Ang. Sco. Hiberniæ Protector. Oliver, by the Grace of God, Protector of England, Scotland and Ireland. On the Reverſe was an Olive-Tree flouriſhing in a Field with this round it, Non deficient Oliva, Sept 3. 1658. The Olive-Trees ſhall not fail.

The Acts above-mention'd to be paſt by the Lord Protector, with that for adjourning the Parliament, were, An Act for preventing Multiplicity of Building in London, An Act for the quiet enjoying of ſequeſter'd Parſonages by the preſent Incumbents, An Act for diſcovering, convicting and repreſſing of Popiſh Recuſants, An Act appointing Surveyors of Forreſts.

As Cromwel is now in the Zenith of his Empire, ſo is King Charles II. in the Extremity of Diſtreſs. France having thrown him off, he apply'd to Spain; and Echard informs us, he enter'd into a Treaty with Don John of Auſtria, Governor of the Netherlands, by which he was to have 9000 Pounds a Year for his and the Duke of Glouceſter's Maintenance; in Conſideration of which he was to put all his Forces into the Spaniſh Service, being 4 Regiments of Iriſh Papiſts then in Flanders, who were not only to aſſiſt the Spaniards to drive the French out of the Netherlands, but alſo to be in a Readineſs, if any favourable Juncture ſhou'd invite them over to England. By Virtue of this important Treaty, the King was allow'd to live at Bruges, where he made Sir Edward Hyde Lord High Chancellor of England, which cou'd not be ſo beneficial as a Tipſtaff's Place after the Reſtoration. For the Poverty of this Court was ſuch, that when a Gentleman, who follow'd the King's Fortune, made his Addreſſes to a young Lady in Holland, who was worth about 100,000 Guilders, not only the King, but the Duke of York, the Princeſs Royal, the Lord Jermin, and Sir Edward Hyde, importun'd her by Letters to make him her Husband. The King ſays in his Letter, K. Ch. II.

I had Thoughts of inſerting more ſuch Paſſages out of the other Letters, the Originals of which I have by me; but they being all to the ſame Purpoſe, it is needleſs. The Gentleman obtain'd the Lady; and ſoon after he was married, the King got moſt of the Marriage Portion from him, which was never made good to him till after he return'd to England, unleſs it was by making him a Baronet, tho' the Gentleman never took the Advantage of the Patent.

Lambert's Commiſſion taken away. The Protector's reſerving to himſelf, by the humble Petition and Advice, to name a Succeſſor, diſguſted ſeveral of his moſt intimate Friends, eſpecially Major General Lambert, who refus'd to take the Oath, enjoyn'd by that Inſtrument, not to do any thing againſt the preſent Government. Cromwel ſending for him, ſaid, I am well aſſur'd your Refuſal proceeds not on account of this Authority, for you may remember you your ſelf did at firſt preſs me to accept the Title of King; and therefore, if you are now diſſatisfied with the preſent Poſture of Affairs, I deſire you to ſurrender your Commiſſion. To this the Major General reply'd, Having no Suſpicion that it wou'd be demanded of me, I have not brought it; but if you pleaſe to ſend for it, I will deliver it. Which was done two or three Days after; but he had a Penſion of 2000 Pounds a Year ſettled upon him to keep him quiet. Sir Henry Vane brought himſelf into Trouble by a Pamphlet call'd the Healing Queſtion, wherein he upbraided the Protector with acting contrary to their firſt Engagement. Vane truſted this Writing with Fleetwood, and he ſhew'd it Cromwel, which Sir Henry had not caution'd him againſt. The Protector was nettled at ſome Expreſſions in it concerning himſelf, and requir'd him, by a Day limited, to give Security not to act againſt him; which Time being expir'd, Vane appear'd again before the Council, and deliver'd into Oliver's own Hand another Paper, containing the Reaſons of his diſapproving the preſent Government; which provoking the Protector's Patience ſtill more, he was ſent Priſoner to Carisbrook-Caſtle in the Iſle of Wight. Cromwel commanded Preſident Bradſhaw to take out a new Patent for the Chief Juſticeſhip of Cheſter, which he refus'd, and yet went the Circuit, the Protector not thinking fit to ſtop the Courſe of Juſtice by poſtponing the Aſſizes.

The Names of three Quarters of this Aſſembly prove that they were of the beſt Birth and Rank in England, and thoſe who were Officers of the Army ought not to have been inſulted for their Meanneſs before they took to Arms, ſince they had by Victory acquir'd their Greatneſs. Wou'd it not be baſe to enquire of what Origin were Craven, Cranfield, Hicks, in the former Reigns, who had Coronets given them, and Seats in the Houſe of Peers, yet not one of them ever drew a Sword, or perhaps ever ſaw a Sword drawn in the publick Service, and were all of as Mechanick Deſcent as Barkſtead the Silverſmith, Berry the Woodmonger, Pack the Woollendraper, or Whalley the broken Clothier, mention'd with ſingular Modeſty by Mr. Archdeacon? Now it happens that Col. Whalley was of as good a Family as Col. Goring, being the Son of Richard Whalley, Eſq; of Kirton in Nottinghamſhire, by Mrs. Frances Cromwel, Niece to Sir Oliver Cromwel of Hintchinbroke in Huntingdonſhire; and one of the above Citizens is thought to have been rich enough to have bought the whole Court of Bruges, Sir Edward Hyde included, and the Princes, the Duke of Ormond and two or three Lords only excepted. Such Reflections as theſe are ſcandalouſly trivial; but you have them every where in the Archdeacon's Hiſtory, and very much in Sir Edward Hyde's, whoſe Example only has made them inexcuſable.

The Protector, at a Conference between his two Houſes, ſpeaking of the State of the publick Revenue and Expence, told them, The Charge of the Forces by Sea and Land amounted to 2,426,989 Pounds, that the whole Revenue of England, Scotland and Ireland was but 1,900,000 Pounds, that the Charge of the Government was 300,000 Pounds; ſo that the Deficiency of the Funds towards the Expence was 826,989 Pounds. The Army in England requir'd 1,100,000 Pounds for their Pay.

General Blake's Victory at Sancta Cruz. The Succeſs of the Engliſh Arms at Sea this Year was ſuch, that the Name of Blake, ſays Echard, cannot be forgotten. That General with his Fleet rode out all the Winter Storms before Cadiz, and on the Coaſt of Portugal, when he receiv'd

A.D.1657 receiv'd certain Information, that another Spaniſh Plate-Fleet, much richer than the laſt he had taken and deſtroy'd, was making homewards; but having Intelligence of the Engliſh Fleet, that wou'd probably ſtop at the Canaries, Blake immediately weigh'd Anchor with twenty five Men of War, and on the 20th of April ſtood with his Fleet off the Offing in the Bay of Sancta Cruz, in the Iſland of Teneriffe, where he found the Galeons already arriv'd, to the Number of 16 Men of War, protected, beſides their own Strength, by all the Methods of Art: For the Bay was ſecur'd by a ſtrong Caſtle well fortify'd with Canon, beſides ſeven Forts more in ſeveral Parts of it, mounted each with 4, 5 and 6 good Pieces of Ordnance, all united by a Line of Communication from Fort to Fort, mann'd with Musketeers. Don Diego Diagues, the Spaniſh Admiral, order'd all his ſmaller Ships to moar cloſe to the Shoar, cover'd by the Caſtles and Forts, and poſted the ſix large Galeons farther off at Anchor, with their formidable Broadſides to the Sea, ſending out Word by a Dutch Merchant there, Let Blake come if he dares. And come he did with a Vengeance; but finding it impracticable to carry off the Galeons, he reſolv'd to burn them in the midſt of all theſe Dangers: He commanded Capt. Stayner, in the Speaker Frigate, to ſtand into the very Bay with a Squadron, and by Eight the next Morning he fell couragiouſly on the Spaniards, who fought near half an Hour. General Blake ſeconded Stayner, and poſted ſome of the great Ships to batter the Forts and Caſtles, which, firing on them without ceaſing, drove the Enemy out of their Caſtles, Forts and Lines. Blake fought the Galeons four Hours, and the Spaniards made a Reſiſtance, which they had not been us'd to; but Blake ply'd them ſo faſt with his Broadſides, that they cou'd ſtand no longer. They abandon'd their Galeons, of which the leaſt was bigger than the biggeſt of General Blake's Ships. The Seamen quitted the ſmaller Ships that lay under the Forts, and Stayner burnt every one of them, while the General did the ſame with the larger Galeons. Thus was the whole Plate-Fleet deſtroy'd, which, with the Deſtruction of the Fleet a Year before by Blake, made the Loſs to the Spaniards amount to at leaſt 10 Millions Sterling. No ſooner was the Fight over, but the Wind, which before blew ſtrong into the Bay, ſuddenly veer'd about, and brought the Engliſh Fleet out to Sea without loſing a Ship. Of the Engliſh only 48 Men were kill'd, and 120 wounded.

The whole Action was unparallel'd and ſtupendous, as the Archdeacon phraſes it. All Sea-Fights, antient and modern, have nothing to compare to it for Danger and Succeſs, for Greatneſs and Glory. He fought at once with Ships and Caſtles; he dar'd the Fury of all Elements, and left an Example to Poſterity, which is too incredible to be imitated. The News of this Victory arriving in England before the Parliament was adjourn'd, the Houſe order'd him a Preſent of a Diamond Ring, to the Value of 500 Pounds. All ſuch Preſents, which were Demonſtrations of the publick Acceptance of his Services, were grateful to him: But he had no Conception of Rewards in Dignities and Penſions, and an extreme Contempt for all Honours that were not ſolid and the Effect of heroick Deeds, as uſeful to the State as glorious to the Man.

His Death and Character.

The General himſelf having been on Board three Years, contracted an ill Habit of Body by living in that Manner ſo long, and dy'd in his Return home on the 17th of Auguſt, as his Ship enter'd into Plymouth Sound, in the 59th Year of his Age. The next Day his Body was embalm'd and inclos'd in a Sheet of Lead, and the Bowels were interr'd in the great Church at Plymouth. A.D.1657

This famous General was the Son of Mr. Humphry Blake of Bridgwater, Merchant, of the antient Family of the Blakes of Plancheſield, in the County of Somerſet. In his younger Years he was a Student of Wadham College in the Univerſity of Oxford, where he took the Degree of Maſter of Arts, and ſtood for a Fellowſhip in Merton College with ſeveral eminent Scholars, as Edward Reynolds, John Earl, both afterwards Biſhops, and others. He loſt the Fellowſhip on account of his Stature, being not high enough. Sir Henry Saville, the Warden, meaſuring his Scholars, as the Officers do now their Soldiers, by Feet and Inches. When the War broke out, he liſted in that Cauſe which ſeem'd to be moſt for the Security of the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty. He was made Governor of Taunton by the Parliament; which Town, and afterwards Lyme, he defended with great Valour againſt ſeveral famous and forcible Sieges, of which mention has been made.

His Character in A Wood is thus:

" He was a fortunate Vindicator of his Country's Privileges from the Encroachments of inſulting Neighbours, a victorious Enemy of the Spaniards, highly valu'd of all, even of the Royaliſts. He devoted himſelf wholly to the publick Service, was reſolute in his Undertakings, and moſt faithful in the Performance of them. With him Valour ſeldom miſs'd it's Reward, nor Cowardice Puniſhment. When News was brought him of a Revolution in the State at home, he wou'd then encourage the Seamen to be moſt vigilant abroad, ſaying, It is not our Duty to mind Politicks, but to keep Foreigners from fooling us.

The Lord Clarendon, another Enemy to his Cauſe, writes of him thus: " He was the firſt Man who declin'd the old Track, and made it manifeſt, that the Science of Sea Service might be attain'd in leſs Time than was imagin'd, and deſpis'd thoſe Rules that had been long in Practice to keep his Ship and his Men out of Danger; which had been held in former Times a Point of great Ability and Circumſpection, as if the principal Art, requiſite in the Captain of a Ship, had been to be ſure to come home ſafe again. He was the firſt Man who brought the Ships to contemn Caſtles on Shore, which had been thought ever very formidable, and were diſcover'd by him to make a Noiſe only, and to fright thoſe who cou'd rarely be hurt by them. He was the firſt Man that infus'd that Proportion of Courage into the Seamen, by making them ſee by Experience what mighty Things they cou'd do if they were reſolv'd, and taught them to fight in Fire as well as upon Water.

Tho' no Funeral Pomp cou'd be in any manner equal to the Services and Merit of this illuſtrious Captain, yet the Government beſtow'd on his Corpſe thoſe Honours which were then paid to deceas'd Heroes. 'Twas brought by Sea from Plymouth to Greenwich, where it remain'd for ſome Time. From thence it was convey'd by Water on the 4th of September following, with all due Solemnity, in a Barge of State cover'd with Velvet, adorn'd with Eſcutcheons and Pencils, accompany'd with his Brother, Captain Humphry Blake, ſeveral of his Kindred and Servants in Mourning, together with the Lord Protector's Privy-Council, the Lords of the Admiralty, the Commiſſioners of the Navy, the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of London, the Field-Officers of the Army, and ſeveral other Perſons of Honour and Quality, in a great Number of Barges

A.D.1657 Barges and Boats cover'd all with Mourning and marſhall'd by the Heralds at Arms, who directed and attended the Proceſſion. In this Order they paſt to Weſtminſter-Bridge, and at their Landing proceeded in the ſame manner thro' a Guard of ſeveral Regiments of Foot-Soldiers to Weſtminſter-Abbey, where the Corpſe was interr'd in a Vault made on Purpoſe in Henry the Seventh's Chappel.

But after the Reſtoration, to the eternal Infamy of all that had a Hand in it, the ſacred Remains of this General, whoſe Memory and Fame will be immortal, were pull'd out of the Place where they were depoſited, and flung into a Pit. Judge of the Men and their Cauſe by this one Action, and reconcile it in any Degree to common Senſe, common Morals, and common Shame. Cannibals and Mamalucs wou'd have ador'd the Relicts of a General that had gain'd one Battle for them. Here is the Corpſe of a Captain, whoſe Life had been a Series of Victories in the publick Service, dragg'd from the Place of its Burial to be cover'd with the Dirt of a Ditch! Can any Paint or Daubing give a Colour to this hideous Image? And now let the Reader run over the Characters the Lord Clarendon gives of himſelf and thoſe unparallel'd Worthies, who thus barbarouſly inſulted the Remains of the ever renown'd General Blake, whoſe Family was not treated much better by them, himſelf being a Batchelor. His Brother Humphry above-mention'd, with whom I liv'd when I was a Boy, ſuffer'd ſo many Hardſhips for Nonconformity in the latter End of the Reign of King Charles II. that he was forc'd to ſell the little Eſtate left him by the General, ſcarce 200 Pounds a Year, and tranſport himſelf and his Children to Carolina, of which his great Grandſon, I ſuppoſe, is at this Time one of the Lords Proprietors.

Corpſe unbury'd by the Royaliſts.

When General Blake was unbury'd, and his Corpſe ſerv'd ſo ignominiouſly and inhumanely, the like was done by thoſe of Admiral Popham, Admiral Dean, Col. Humphry Mackworth, Col. Boſcawen, Sir William Conſtable, Sir John Meldrum, William Stroud, Eſq; Thomas May, Eſq; Mr. Marſhal, Mr. Strong, two Miniſters. And to compleat the Triumph, the dead Bodies of ſeveral Ladies were alſo taken up and thrown into the ſame Pit on the 12th of September, 1661. I think the Men need no other Character, and this Digreſſion cou'd no where elſe come in ſo properly as in this Place. It was propos'd after the Reſtoration, to take up all the dead Bodies of the Common-wealth's Men, &c. and fling them into Pits; and 'tis thought the Propoſal wou'd have been effected, had not the Duke of Ormond ſtrenuouſly oppos'd it, as a Scandal to Religion and Humanity.

A Wood, p. 206.

Morgan and Reynolds in Flanders.

In Purſuance of the Lord Protector's Treaty with France, he ſent 6000 choice Men to the Netherlands under the Command of Sir John Reynolds, Commiſſary General, and Major General Morgan. The French at firſt had no Inclination to attack Dunkirk with thoſe Forces, they being oblig'd to ſurrender it to the Engliſh, when taken; therefore they march'd into Artois, and laid Siege to St. Venant, which they carry'd with a Suddenneſs and Bravery beyond Expectation. But Cromwel's Ambaſſador, Sir William Lockhart, made ſuch Lively Inſtances with the Cardinal, and complain'd ſo much of Breach of Faith, adding Menaces, that his Maſter knew where to find a more punctual Friend, That as ſoon as they had taken Montmedy and St. Venant, the Army march'd into Flanders, and the Seaſon being too far ſpent to engage in the Siege of Dunkirk, they inveſted Mardyke, and carry'd on their Attack ſo vigorouſly, that October 13th it was deliver'd in about eight Days to Major General Morgan, with Conſent of the French King; and that General fortify'd it ſo well as to fear no Enemy. But before the Fortifications were finiſh'd, the Spaniards ſent a Body of Horſe and Foot to recover it; the Loſs of it very much facilitating that of Dunkirk. Of that Body 2000 were Engliſh and Iriſh. Here all Hiſtory is laviſh in the Praiſes of the Duke of York, who, ſays Echard, made two very deſperate Storms upon it, the laſt continuing ſix Hours, but was both Times repuls'd, and forc'd to retire with Loſs. The future Conduct of that Prince makes me believe there muſt be ſome Miſrepreſentation in this, as well as in the reſt of his Hiſtory; I'll therefore ſee what Ludlow ſays, Many of thoſe who were kill'd on the Enemies ſide were Engliſh under the Duke of York: And as it was conſeſs'd by all preſent, that the Engliſh, who took part with the French, behav'd themſelves with more Bravery than any; ſo it was obſerv'd, that thoſe of the Cavalier Party, who had join'd with the Spaniards, behav'd themſelves worſt. Brave Sir John Reynolds, who had fought his Way thro' ſo many Dangers in the War, being about to paſs over to England at the End of the Campaign with Col. White and others, the Pink they were in was caſt away upon the Goodwyn Sands, and all the Men were drown'd, the only melancholy Accident that happen'd to the Engliſh. The Army that took Mardyke was commanded by the Mareſchal Turenne, to whom Mazarine, preſs'd by the Lord Ambaſſador Lockhart's Inſtances, wrote thus before he beſieg'd it, Nothing can be of more fatal Conſequence to France than the Loſs of Cromwel's Friendſhip and the Breach of the Union with him, which certainly will be broken, if ſome ſtrong Town is not taken and put into his Hands. The Protector was wonderfully pleas'd to hear that Morgan was in Poſſeſſion of it, and he immediately ſent ten Men of War to guard the Port of Mardyke, and cruize on that Coaſt. A Foreigner and a Papiſt ſpeak thus of this Conqueſt, En effect rien ne flatta d'avantage l'Ambition de Cromwel, &c. "In Effect "nothing cou'd flatter the Ambition of Cromwel "more than this Acquiſition, knowing he had "thereby won immortal Glory: He had, with-"out the Loſs of a Man, accompliſh'd a De-"ſign, which the greateſt Kings of England had "often attempted in vain at the Expence of their "People's Blood and Treaſure: He had re-eſta-"bliſh'd the Engliſh on the Continent, and put "them in a Condition to make themſelves Ma-"ſters of both Sides of the Channel, which had "been deſpair'd of ſince the Loſs of Calais. He "ſucceeded, I ſay, in this vaſt Deſign, without "coſting him hardly any thing." Read over the Reigns of the Royal Houſe we are writing of again and again, and ſhew me ſuch a Paragraph. The Dutch were alarm'd as well as the Spaniards at Cromwel's having poſſeſs'd himſelf of Mardyke, almoſt on their Frontiers: And the Protector, whoſe Wiſdom foreſaw all Conſequences, diſpatch'd a Miniſter to Holland to aſſure the States General, "That Neighbourhood ſhou'd "ſerve only to make their mutual Friendſhip the "more firm. He deſir'd them to join with him "and France in a League againſt Spain, their "old Enemy, which ſhou'd be very much to "their Advantage by enlarging their Barrier." The States, jealous equally of the French and Spaniards, excus'd themſelves; upon which Oliver's Miniſter had Inſtructions to pray them at leaſt not to aſſiſt the Spaniards; for if they did, It wou'd oblige him to take other Meaſures, which might not turn very much to their Profit. Such was the Language of the Lord Protector of Mardyke taken.

Cromwel's Glory.

A.D.1657 the Common-wealth; and the Hollanders anſwer'd mildly, They had no Intention to do any thing to the Prejudice of England, their only Deſign being to preſerve Peace and Tranquillity in their Provinces.

We have no ſuch Height as this to ſtand on and take a View of the Government of England, ſince the Reign of Henry V. But the View is like the Viſion of the Night: The golden Rays vaniſh, and black and thick Darkneſs ſucceeds, till a new Morning dawns, and a Bright Day, as at the Revolution, bleſſes our Eyes and Hearts.

A.D.1658 The Parliament. The 20th of January, to which the Parliament was adjourn'd, approaching Writs, as has been hinted at, were iſſu'd to the Lords and Gentlemen, who were to form the other, or Upper Houſe. William Lenthal, Eſq; Maſter of the Rolls, was very much diſturb'd that he was not ſummon'd, ſaying, I, who have been for ſome Years the firſt Man of the Nation, am now deny'd to be a Member of either Houſe of Parliament; for I am uncapable of ſitting in the Houſe of Commons by my Place, which obliges me to ſit as Aſſiſtant in the other Houſe. Cromwel hearing of his Complaint, order'd a Writ of Summons to him, at which he was ſo elevated, that, riding in his Coach thro' the Strand, and ſeeing Mr. Osbaldeſton, Maſter of Weſtminſter Shool, whom he knew to be a great Lover of Sir Arthur Haſelrigge; he ask'd him what Sir Arthur intended to do in Anſwer to the Writ he had receiv'd, Mr. Osbaldeſton replying, I know not. Write to him, ſays Mr. Lenthal, and deſire him by no Means to omit taking his Place, and aſſure him from me, that all that do ſo ſhall themſelves and their Heirs be for ever Peers of England; as was reaſonable to think, if they had not quarrel'd among themſelves; for the Cavaliers were not likely to be ever in a Condition to quarrel with them.

The two Houſes met according to Adjournment and Summons, The other Houſe in the Houſe of Lords, whither came the Protector, and, by the Uſher of the Black Rod, ſent for the Houſe of Commons to whom he made a ſhort Speech, beginning, as is uſual, from the Throne, My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of the Houſe of Commons. He recommended Union and a good Underſtanding between them, thank'd them for their fair Correſpondence the laſt Seſſion, minded them of the Neceſſities of the State, deſir'd their Aſſiſtance, and then, as Monarchs have been us'd to do, referr'd them to the Lord Commiſſioner Fiennes, who made a very long Harangue on the Foundation of the Government, and the ſeveral Branches of it. 'Tis in that Stile which was then in Vogue, and being pretty much adorn'd with Texts of Scripture, is a very great Jeſt with the Archdeacon and the Author of the Compleat Hiſtory of England, whoſe Talents in Elocution qualify'd them wonderfully to judge of Language. I will venture one Paragraph of the Lord Commiſſioner's Speech, and that Paragraph ſhall be above half Scripture, againſt the beſt Piece of Oratory in their Hiſtories, or the Lord Clarendon's.

For thoſe of our Friends who content themſelves with their Privacy and Country Retirement in theſe great Difficulties of the Common-wealth, we may ſay, Why abideſt thou among the Sheepfolds to hear the Bleatings of the Flocks? Surely for the Diviſions of Reuben there are great Searchings of Heart! How ſhall we bind up the Wounds we receive in the Houſe of our Friend? What ſhall we do for our Siſter that hath no Breaſts? That will afford no Milk? If ſhe be a Wall, we will build a Palace of Silver upon her; and if ſhe be a Door, we will encloſe her with Boards of Cedar. If they will give us any Foundation to work upon, we will build upon it, we will improve it, we will multiply Obligations upon them, we will heap Coals of Fire on their Heads: If they will not let us follow them, let them follow us, we will either lead or follow in the Work of God. A.D.1658 Fiennes's Speech.

But a Spirit of Madneſs and Diviſion had poſſeſs'd them: Ambition and Avarice had blinded ſome, ſuch as Haſelrigge, Scot, Harrington, Lambert, Fleetwood. A Spirit of Enthuſiaſm had blinded others; as Harriſon, Overton, Rich. The former run mading after a Republick, the latter after the Fifth Monarchy. The Protector's Party were againſt both, and both againſt them, and the Royaliſts againſt them all; all which was like to make fine Work in the End; there needed but a ſmall Portion of plain Senſe to direct to that End, and unite the three firſt Parties againſt the laſt, their common Enemy. Sir Arthur Haſelrigge refus'd to ſit in the other Houſe, but took the Oath, and got into the Houſe of Commons. Mr. Scot, and many other ſecluded Members, got in alſo, who, with the diſcontented that remain'd, were ſoon found to be a Majority. The Houſe of Lords ſending a Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Juſtice Windham and Mr. Baron Hill, the latter took no Notice of it, but on the contrary debated what Appellation ſhou'd be given to the other Houſe, or indeed whether they ſhou'd have any Appellation at all, or be look'd upon as a Houſe, tho' conſtituted by their own Act the laſt Seſſion. Whitlock obſerves, That one of the chief Reaſons ſome Members had to ſpeak againſt it was, Becauſe they were not of it. The Protector looking upon himſelf as ſtruck at thro' their Sides, and being incens'd at the Diſcovery of a Fifth Monarchy Plot, carry'd on by Major General Harriſon and his Adherents, he reſolv'd to diſſolve the Parliament. Accordingly he came to the Houſe of Lords the 4th of February, and caus'd the Uſher of the Black Rod to go to the Houſe of Commons, and acquaint them that his Highneſs was in the Lords Houſe, and there expected them. Upon which the Speaker and the whole Houſe went to the Lords Houſe, where the Protector made a Speech to them, declaring, Several urgent and weighty Reaſons making it neceſſary for him, in order to the publick Peace and Safety, to proceed to an immediate Diſſolution of this Parliament, and accordingly he did there diſſolve them, having firſt rapp'd out a dreadful Oath, as we are told by Mr. Archdeacon.

Fifth Monarchy Plot. The Fifth Monarchiſts carry'd on Matters ſo ſecretly, that they had prepar'd themſelves for a general Rendezvous, when their Plot was diſcover'd the Night before it was to have been executed; at which Time he ſent a Guard of Soldiers, who ſeiz'd the Principal of them as they were conſulting about it. Their Declarations were alſo taken with them, and their Standard, which had in it a Lion couchant, with theſe Words, Who ſhall rouſe him? Theſe Men were for the moſt part Tradeſmen, as Venner, Jawler, &c. and were carry'd Priſoners to the Gatehouſe, where they lay long in a miſerable Condition, but were not proſecuted capitally, as they might have been.

Cavalier Plot. What made moſt Noiſe, ſays Mr. Archdeacon, with the Protector and the Nation, was a new and formidable Plot of the Cavaliers. For my part, if we know as much of them by Hiſtory, as we cou'd have known had we been then living, I don't ſee any thing formidable in them ſince King Charles I. was in Cornwall, and much leſs in theſe Conſpirators than in the others, as will appear by their Names, Dr. Hewett, Parſon of St. Gregory's, London, Mr. Stacy, Mr. Beſtly, Mr. Aſhton, Mr. Haley, Mr. Woodcock, Mr. Carent, Mr. Mallory, Mr. Rivers, Mr. Dyke, Mr. Staley. Plotters.

One

A.D. 1658 One can ſcarce read the Names of them without trembling, after what the Archdeacon has ſaid of their being formidable. I do not add Sir Henry Slingsby, becauſe he was a Priſoner in Yorkſhire, and therefore can't be in a Plot of his own. The Author of the Compleat Hiſtory, to juſtify what he affirms of Cromwel's Cruelty, affirms that he nominated the Members of the High Court of Juſtice, who try'd and condemn'd as many of theſe Priſoners as were convicted, which
Pag. 605. is not true; for as Ludlow aſſures us, this High Court of Juſtice was nominated by his laſt Parliament. Mr. Mordaunt, Brother to the Earl of Peterburgh, was alſo charg'd with Plotting againſt the Government. Dr Hewet diſpers'd Commiſſions from King Charles the Second. Sir Henry Slingsby had endeavour'd to debauch ſome of the Garriſon of Hull, where he was a Priſoner, and deliver'd a Commiſſion to them from the King. The other Conſpirators were charg'd with a Deſign to fire the City in ſeveral Places at the Time appointed for their Party to take Arms.

Dr. Hewet. The firſt Conſpirator brought before the Court, was Dr. Hewet, who mov'd for a Jury, and demurr'd to their Juriſdiction, but was over-rul'd; and at any time to plead againſt the Juriſdiction of a Court, who has the Authority and Power to back it, ſeems to me to be extremely abſurd and uſeleſs. He was told twice, that if he wou'd not plead, they wou'd proceed againſt him as if the Fact was confeſt. The Queſtion being put to him a third Time, he ſaid, he wou'd plead if the Judges declar'd it was according to Law. The Court told him, the Commiſſioners there preſent were his Judges, and if he wou'd not plead, they wou'd regiſter his Contempt the third Time, which upon his Refuſal a third Time was done.

The Hiſtorians, the Compleat One, and Mr. Archdeacon hold up their Hands at this extraordinary Way of Proceeding, and condemning a Criminal, becauſe he will not plead, as if there was any other Way of doing Juſtice; or that Juſtice cou'd ever be done, if Priſoners might plead or not plead at Pleaſure. Whitlock ſays, Hewet carry'd himſelf very impudently.

Sir Henry Slingsby. Sir Henry Slingsby's Plea was, that what he ſaid was in jeſt, that the Commiſſion he ſhew'd was an old one, which had lain long by him, and that the Perſons he wou'd have corrupted, trapann'd him, by promiſing to ſerve the King. 'Tis eaſy to ſee that this muſt end in Conviction and Condemnation.

Mr. Mordaunt refus'd to plead at firſt, but being threaten'd to be condemn'd as a Mute, he pleaded Not Guilty; and by ſpiriting away Mallory, one of the Witneſſes againſt him, the Court was ſo divided in Opinion, that he was acquitted by one Vote. The reſt of the Conſpirators were try'd and condemn'd; Woodcock excepted, who behav'd ſo handſomely at his Trial, that the Court diſcharged him. Juſt as Judgment was given, Sir Thomas Pride came into Court, whoſe Voice being for Conviction, as that of the Lord Preſident Liſle wou'd have been, he had been condemn'd if Pride had come ſooner. Tho' Echard affirms, that there is not the like Inſtance of acquitting a Priſoner by a High Court of Juſtice, as that of Mr. Mordaunt, what does he take the Earl of Norwich, and Sir John Owen to be? Aſhton was hang'd at Mark-lane End, Stacy in Cornhill, Beſtly in Cheapſide, and all the reſt were repriev'd. Great Endeavours were us'd to ſave Sir Henry Slingsby, tho' a Papiſt, by the Lord Falconbridge, his Nephew, who had lately marry'd Lady Mary Cromwel; and Lady Elizabeth Cleypole earneſtly ſollicited the Protector to pardon Dr. Hewet, but the Ingratitude of the Cavaliers, to whom he had of late been very gracious, had ſo exaſperated him, that he was reſolv'd to let Juſtice take its Courſe: So they were both beheaded on Tower-Hill. I am very far from thinking that Lady Cleypole's Death was haſten'd becauſe her Father wou'd not ſave Dr. Hewet, or that Cromwel broke his Heart, becauſe his Daughter broke hers. It is neither true in Fact nor in Reaſon. That Lady had been ill ſometime of a Diſtemper, as mortal as Heart-breaking, an Ulcer in her Womb, of which ſhe dy'd, the 7th of Auguſt, at Hampton-Court, a Month after the Execution of Slingsby and Hewet, to the great Affliction of the Protector, who lov'd her entirely, ſhe being a Lady of uncommon Merit; and this Affliction, with his own ill State of Health, which had hung upon him ſeveral Months, ſo broke him, that 'twas viſible his Life wou'd not be of long Duration. A.D. 1658

Sir Humphry Bennet, another of the Conſpirators in the late Conſpiracy, was to have been try'd as the reſt had been, and his Fate wou'd doubtleſs have been the ſame, but upon Application made by his Friends to the Commiſſioners of the High Court of Juſtice for Favour to him, his Life was ſav'd. Whitlock informs us, This Kindneſs of his Friends was not remember'd, which is not at all ſtrange, for Generoſity and Slavery never dwell in the ſame Breaſt, and to be grateful 'tis requiſite that a Man ſhou'd be generous, which an Enemy to Liberty cannot be. After theſe Trials were over, the High Court of Juſtice was diſſolv'd, and the Protector, by Advice of Mr. Whitlock, referr'd all future Trials of Conſpirators to the Upper Bench, after the Courſe of the Common Law; and having lately made Major General Howard, a Viſcount, he was afterwards Earl of Carliſle; he ſign'd a Patent to make Whitlock a Viſcount, and three other Patents to make the Attorney General Prideaux, and the Sollicitor General, Baronets, and John Maynard, Eſq; his Highneſs's Serjeant; which are plain Proofs that he reſolv'd to exerciſe all the Prerogatives of a Sovereign, and be a King in every thing but the Name, which probably he wou'd ſtill have taken upon him, had he liv'd a few Months longer. Sir Humphry Bennet.

He ſent for the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, inform'd them of the Plots carrying on againſt the Government, and deſir'd them to take Care of the Peace of the City, and they preſented an Addreſs to him, aſſuring him of their Faithfulneſs and Duty.

He receiv'd alſo an Addreſs from Monk's, and other Regiments in England and Scotland of the like Tenour, for which he thank'd them; and in his Anſwer to ſome of them, he imparted to them The preſent Deſigns of the Enemy, that Commiſſions were ſent over hither from the King of the Scots, and that he had 4000 Men in Flanders, ready to be imbark'd for England, to joyn with his Party here; and therefore it behov'd all honeſt Men, to provide for a Defence, and to joyn heartily together.

I have not taken any Notice of Echard's Story, concerning an execrable Plot form'd by Oliver Cromwel, Eſq; John Thurloe, Eſq; and Sir Richard Willis, to murder the King of the Scots, the Duke of York, and Duke of Glouceſter, becauſe there is not a Syllable in it that's credible. They were to be tempted by pretended Letters from Cavaliers, to come over to Suſſex in a ſingle Ship, where 500 Foot, and 2000 Horſe were to receive them, tho' the Deſign was, according to Mr. Archdeacon and his Manuſcript, to cut their Throats at their firſt Landing, and extirpate the Royal Family. Thurloe's under Secretary, Samuel Moreland, heard Oliver and Thurloe in Conference about it, pretending to be aſleep. Immediately he A Fiction concerning Morland and Willis.

A.D.1658 he runs away to Major Henſhaw, a Priſoner in the Tower for a Conſpiracy, tells him all, and deſires him to tell the King. Away runs Henſhaw out of the Tower, finds the King in Flanders, informs him of Oliver and Thurloe's Aſſaſſination Plot, and the King ſent a Letter of Excuſe, in Anſwer to the pretended Letter of the Cavaliers. Willis is ſuſpected to make a Diſcovery, and he ſuſpects Moreland. They two have an Interview in a dark deep Cellar, where, by profeſſing only that he was Innocent, and demanding of Willis a Reaſon of his Suſpicion; that Knight, who when he was Governor of Newarke for the King, is repreſented as one of the braveſt of his Majeſty's brave Officers, was damp'd by it, and Moreland eſcap'd that imminent Danger, tho' it ſeems not to be ſo imminent neither, for Willis had only a Bible by him, but Moreland had two good Piſtols in his Pocket. Echard brags that this Account never appear'd in Print before, and came from the Mouths of three Perſons, two of them Knights, and the third a Perſon of undoubted Worth and Honour, of which this Story is an incomparable Proof; and I doubt not, moſt of his Manuſcript Hiſtory and Informations came from Perſons of the like Honour and Worth. He Prints alſo a Letter of Moreland's, which denies that Moreland had given the King any Information relating to Willis; and the Lord Clarendon has no leſs than three or four Folio Pages of Informations given by Moreland againſt Willis. This Contradiction, no ſtrange Thing amongſt them, confeſs'd by the ingenious Mr. Echard himſelf, and the Narrative being the Child of Invention, cou'd not poſſibly have Agreement with any other Narrative that was not the Work of the ſame Brain. It is not pretended, that the King had any ſuch Cabinet Spies, or any Money to give them, as the Lord Clarendon obſerves, but Oliver had both, and thought no Expence or Hazard too great to procure them. An Inſtance of which, and of his Caution in the Uſe of them, " Thurloe was wont to tell that " he was once commanded by Cromwel to go at " a certain Hour to Gray's-Inn, and at ſuch a " Place deliver a Bill of 20,000 Pounds to a Man " he ſhou'd find walking in ſuch a Habit and " Poſture as he deſcrib'd him; " which accordingly Thurloe did, and never knew to the Day of his Death, either the Perſon or the Occaſion. At another Time the Protector coming late at Night into Thurloe's Office, which he kept in the laſt Stair-Caſe in Lincoln's-Inn, towards Holborn, that has a Way down into the Garden, made on Purpoſe for Cromwel's coming to him unobſerv'd, the Protector began to diſcourſe with his Secretary, about an Affair of the laſt Importance, but ſeeing Moreland, one of the Clerks, afterwards Sir Samuel Moreland, was in the Office, whom he had not ſeen before, and fearing he might have over-heard them, tho' he pretended to be aſleep upon his Desk, he drew out a Dagger which he always carried under his Coat, and was going to diſpatch Moreland on the Spot, if Thurloe had not with great Intreaties prevail'd with him to deſiſt, aſſuring him Moreland had ſate up two Nights together, and was certainly faſt aſleep. Probably this Incident gave Riſe to the Fictions of Moreland and Henſhaw, and Moreland and Willis, but no queſtion Moreland did betray his Maſter, when he found Things were like to take another Turn, and indeed I never heard much of his Integrity or Merit.

Cromwel and Thurloe.

The Siege of Dunkirk being reſolv'd on at the opening of the Campaign, chiefly at the Inſtigation of General Morgan, who inſiſted upon it in the Council of War, held in the Mareſchal Turenne's Camp, the Engliſh, to the Number of 6000, under Morgan, and Sir William Lockhart, who ſucceeded Reynolds in that Command, did Wonders, by Acknowledgment even of the French. The Cavaliers under the Duke of York, were ſtill part of the Spaniſh Army, which march'd to the Relief of the Place, almoſt as ſoon as Turenne had inveſted it, and poſſeſs'd themſelves of a Sand Hill, from whence they gall'd the Engliſh, who reſolv'd, if poſſible, to drive them from that Poſt. The Ground was ſo deep and looſe they cou'd not without extream Difficulty march up the Hill; yet at laſt they affected it, and having put the Spaniards to flight, purſu'd them to their main Body. But having engag'd themſelves too far, and being overpower'd by great Numbers of Horſe and Foot, the French leaving the whole Streſs of the Fight upon them they were in Danger of being entirely cut off; which being obſerv'd by Major General Drummond, a Scot's Officer, who ſerv'd with the Engliſh as a Voluntier, he rode up to the French Horſe, and by reproaching them with Treachery and Negligence, procur'd a Body of Cavalry to be ſent to their Succour. Upon the Arrival of this ſeaſonable Relief, the Engliſh took freſh Courage, renew'd their Attack, and defeated the Enemy, of whom they kill'd 1200, many of them Engliſh; ſo that when the French Army came up, they had little more to do than to take Priſoners. Here were taken moſt of the Engliſh Officers, of that which was term'd the King's own Regiment, commanded by Colonel Blague, Governor of Wallingford, in the Civil Wars. The greateſt Loſs the Protector's Forces had, was in the Death of Colonel Fenwick, and Captain Sherwyn, who were both kill'd. Soon after the Battle the Town was ſurrender'd to the French, and deliver'd to the Engliſh, tho' contrary to their firſt Intentions, as we are told by Wellwood.

A.D.1658

" There was an Article in the Treaty between " the Protector and France, That if Dunkirk " was taken, it ſhou'd be put into the Poſſeſſion " of the Engliſh, and his Ambaſſador, Lockhart, " had Orders to receive it from them, when the " French and Engliſh Armies were marching to " beſiege it. Cromwel one Morning ſent for Monſieur Bourdeaux, the French Ambaſſador, and " upbraided him publickly for his Maſter's deſign'd Breach of Promiſe, in giving ſecret Orders to the Mareſchal Turenne, not to deliver " the Town in caſe 'twas taken, contrary to the " Treaty between them. The Ambaſſador proteſted he knew nothing of the Matter, as indeed he did not, and beg'd Leave to aſſure " him there was no ſuch Thing thought of, " Upon which Cromwel, pulling a Paper out of his Pocket, Here, ſays he, is the Copy of the Cardinal's Order: And I deſire you to diſpatch immediately an Expreſs, to let him know that I am not to be impos'd on, and that if he deliver not up the Keys of the Town of Dunkirk, to Lockhart, within an Hour after it ſhall be taken, tell him I'll come in Perſon, and demand them at the Gates of Paris. Has this been the Language of the Kings of England, ſince the Death of Queen Elizabeth? There were but four Perſons ſaid to be privy to this Order, the Queen Mother, the Cardinal, the Mareſchal de Turenne, and a Secretary. The Cardinal for a long Time blam'd the Queen Mother, as if ſhe might poſſibly have blabb'd it out to ſome of her Women, as another Deſign upon Dunkirk 30 Years afterwards was ſo blabb'd; whereas a Correſpondence between Oliver, and the French Secretary, was diſcover'd upon the Death of the latter, and it was not doubted but he ſent him the Copy of the Order above-mention'd. The Meſſage had it's Effect, and Lockhart took Poſſeſſion of Dunkirk

Engliſh victorious at Dunkirk.

A.D.1658 kirk, in the Name of the Lord Protector of England; upon which Mardyke was reſtor'd to the French.

It was not to palliate this Matter, as Wellwood and Echard aſſures us, that the Duke de Crequi was ſent Ambaſſador Extraordinary to Oliver, but to return a Compliment, his Highneſs paid the French King on his Arrival at Calais, juſt before Dunkirk was ſurrender'd. Oliver diſpatch'd his Son in Law, the Lord Viſcount Falconbridge, with a numerous and ſplendid Retinue, of 150 Gentlemen and Servants, to congratulate the moſt Chriſtian King upon his coming into the Neighbourhood of England. The King and Cardinal arriv'd at Calais the 20th of May, and were receiv'd by the Engliſh Fleet on the Coaſt in a continual Fire of the Artillery, for four Hours together, which was anſwer'd by the Cannon at Calais. The French King preſented the Engliſh Admiral with his Picture, hanging in a Gold Chain, and Medals of Gold to the Captains; 20 Ton of the beſt Brandy, and 2000 Piſtoles were diſtributed among the Seamen, in all to the Value of above 20,000 Crowns. The like Preſents he made the Engliſh Officers and Soldiers in his Army, whom he reveiw'd with a great deal of Pleaſure. The Lord Falconbridge brought a Letter from the Protector to the King, written with his own Hand, and another to the Cardinal, preſſing the Reduction of Dunkirk, as it was a Neſt of Pyrates. More Honour cou'd not be paid to a ſovereign Prince, than was done to the Lord Falconbridge. All Rules in the Ceremonials were paſt over. The Cardinal receiv'd him as he alighted out of his Coach, and conducted him back to the very Gate. He gave him the right Hand in his Apartment, which was never done to the Emperor's Ambaſſador, or the Pope's Nuncio, and at which all the Miniſters of other Princes grumbled. The Lord Falconbridge ſtaid at the French Court five Days, and was royally treated all the while, both by the King and the Cardinal: When he had taken his Audience of Leave, the King preſented him with a Gold Box inlaid with Diamonds, the Arms of France on the Cover, and three large Jewels for the three Flower de Luces. Within it was the King's Picture ſet in Diamonds: The whole worth 5000 Crowns. Several Medals of Gold were given to the Gentlemen of his Retinue, and a 1000 Louis d'Ors among his Servants. The Cardinal preſented his Lordſhip with 12 Pieces of Genoua Velvet of incomparable Fineneſs and Beauty; and as the Lord Viſcount had preſented the King with two Sets of Engliſh Horſes, from the Lord Protector, eight in a Set, and the beſt that cou'd be got, as alſo a Set to the Cardinal, the King return'd a Preſent of a Sword, valu'd at 10,000 Crowns: And the Cardinal ſent Cromwel a Suit of Tapiſtry Hangings, wrought in the Gobelins at Paris, after the Perſian Manner.

Lord Falconbridge's magnificent Embaſſy to the French King.

The Duke deCrequi's Embaſſy to Cromwel.

The King on his Part diſpatch'd the Duke de Crequi, firſt Lord of his Bed-chamber, to England, to compliment Cromwel, which the King's of France never do, but to the greateſt Monarchs in Chriſtendom, as he thought the Lord Protector of the Common-wealth of England. When the ſame Duke was afterwards ſent Ambaſſador to Rome, he made nothing near the Figure as he did at London in the Court of Cromwel. He had 150 Gentlemen and Servants in his Train, as had the Lord Viſcount Falconbridge, and was accompany'd by 60 Gentlemen more, who were of Rank, and among whom was a Prince of the Blood, to do Honour to the Embaſſy. Lieutenant General Fleetwood receiv'd him at his Landing at Dover, accompany'd by ſeveral great Officers in twenty Coaches with ſix Horſes, one hundred Life-Guard, and two hundred Horſe, who all attended the Ambaſſador with Swords drawn in their Hands, beſides above one hundred and fifty Gentlemen who came with Fleetwood on Horſeback. The Protector met him at the third Stair, and had no more Regard to the Rules of the Ceremonial, than the Court of France ſhew'd with Reſpect to the Lord Falconbridge. The next Day he entertain'd him at Dinner, ſeating the Duke at his right Hand, and his Son, the Lord Richard, at his left. He ſtay'd ſix Days at London, and during that Time, was feaſted and treated with the utmoſt Magnificence. Some ſay he preſented the Protector with the Keys of Dunkirk, telling him, His Maſter took Pleaſure in parting with them to the greateſt Captain upon Earth. At his Departure, he was accompany'd to Dover, as he came from thence, Cromwel preſented him with a Sword, worth 3000 Crowns, with a ſtriking Watch ſet with Diamonds of the ſame Value, and above forty Pieces of fine Engliſh Broadcloth. He gave thirty fine Gold Watches to the Officers and Gentlemen of his Retinue, and 1000 Broad-pieces to be diſtributed among his Servants.

A.D.1658

The Cardinal, not content with this Compliment from the King, ſent his Nephew Mancini, with a moſt obliging Letter to the Protector, to aſſure his Highneſs, That being within View of the Engliſh Shore, nothing but the King's Indiſpoſition, who lay then ill of the Small Pox at Calais, cou'd have hinder'd him to come over to England, that he might enjoy the Honour of Waiting upon one of the greateſt Men that ever was, and whom next to his Maſter, his greateſt Ambition was to ſerve. But being depriv'd of ſo great a Happineſs, he had ſent the Perſon that was neareſt to him in Blood, to aſſure him of the profound Veneration he had for his Perſon, and how much he was reſolv'd, to the utmoſt of his Power, to cultivate a perpetual Amity and Friendſhip betwixt his Maſter and him.

Mazarine's Nephew brings him a Letter.

This was the mighty Man, whom the greateſt Politician in Europe terms, not only the greateſt Man that was then, but that ever was. Yet this too was he, of whom the Earl of Clarendon ſays, No Man with more Wickedneſs ever attempted any thing; no Man brought any thing to paſs more wickedly. He was guilty of many Crimes againſt which Damnation is denounc'd, and for which Hell Fire is prepar'd. If ſuch Preachment as this can come from any Head but the Head of a College, it muſt be void of that Humanity which is the Grace of good, as well as Chriſtian Minds.

Some time before Oliver was taken ill of his laſt Sickneſs, dy'd the Earl of Warwick, and his Grandſon, Mr. Rich, who had marry'd Lady Frances, the Protector's youngeſt Daughter, a young Lady of great Beauty and Virtue. The Death of the Protector's faſt Friend, the Earl of Warwick, touch'd him very ſenſibly, and the ill Humours in his Blood did not a little ſtir up thoſe in his Mind, which, afflicted and diſturb'd as it was, ceaſt not to form vaſt Deſigns even to the very laſt of Life. It is ſaid, he intended to tranſport 40000 Men to Flanders, and to have a Fleet of fifty Men of War, but upon what Scheme is not told us, whether to ſupport a Proteſtant League, or to take the Netherlands from the Spaniards.

Biſhop Burnet informs us, He deſign'd to ſet up a Council for the Reform'd Religion, in Oppoſition to the Congregation de propaganda fide at Rome: He intended it ſhou'd conſiſt of ſeven Counſellors, and four Secretaries for different Provinces. Theſe were; The firſt France, Switzerland, and the Vallies. The ſecond were the Palatinate, and the other Calviniſts. The third were Germany, the North, and Turkey. The fourth were the Eaſt and Weſt-Indies. The Secretaries were to have 500 Pounds a Year each, and to

*A.D.*1658 keep a Correſpondence every where, to know the State of Religion all over the World, that ſo all good Deſigns might by their Means be protected and aſſiſted. They were to have a Fund of 10,000 Pounds a Year, but to be further ſupply'd as Occaſions ſhou'd require. Chelſea College was to be fitted up for them. This was a noble Project, as the Biſhop obſerves, and muſt have extraordinary Effects under the Protection of a Power which was formidable and terrible to all Nations to whom it was known.

The Lord Protector was taken ill of a kind of Ague, on St. James's Day, which ſome ſuch Hiſtorians as the Archdeacon, have interpreted to be a Judgment on him, for being one of the Judges of King Charles, Son of King James, which being a Fortnight before the Death of Lady Cleypole, her Death cou'd not bring it on upon him. After this a malignant Humour broke out in his Foot, which hindring him from the Exerciſe of Walking or Riding abroad; he oblig'd his Phyſicians to endeavour to diſperſe it, which they endeavouring to do, drove it upwards to his Heart. By this Means he became deſperately ſick, and in the Beginning of September the Symptoms of Death appear'd upon him, and he asking one of his Phyſicians, What he thought of his Caſe? The Doctor reply'd, My Lord, there is no more Oil in that Lamp which has given ſo much Light to both Church and State. The dying Protector, reply'd with a Courage worthy of him, When do you think it will go out? The Phyſician reply'd, In two Days at fartheſt. It is Time then, ſaid Cromwel, to ſettle my Mind, and provide for the Safety of the State. Accordingly he ſent for his Council, and recommended to them the Choice of a Succeſſor, tho' by the humble Petition and Advice, he might nominate one himſelf, which it was expected he wou'd have done; but he had not ſo good an Opinion of the Genius of his eldeſt Son Richard, and he did not care to prefer any other Perſon of his Family to him. In this Uncertainty he departed this Life the 3d of September, about two o'Clock in the Afternoon, the ſame Day on which he was born, and on which he won the Victories at Marſton-moor, Dunbar, and Worceſter. Some affirm he did name his Son Richard to be his Succeſſor, and Warwick; that he was never enough in his Senſes, during his Sickneſs, to be able to do it; which is notoriouſly falſe, as I cou'd prove very eaſily. As falſe is what we are told in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, that Cromwel had but two Daughters, whereas he had four by his Conſort Elizabeth, Daughter of Sir James Bourchier. 1. Bridget, Wife of Lieutenant General Ireton. 2. Elizabeth, Wife of John Cleypole, Eſq; of Northamptonſhire. 3. Mary, Viſcounteſs Falconbridge. 4. Frances, the Wife of the Honourable Robert Rich, Eſq; He had four Siſters, 1. Marry'd to Major General Deſborough. 2. To Colonel Jones. 3. To Colonel Walton. 4. To Dr. Wilkins, Biſhop of Cheſter. She was Mother to Mrs. Tillotſon, Wife of Dr. Tillotſon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury. One of his Aunts marry'd Francis Barrington, Eſq; another marry'd John Hampden, Eſq; by which Match the famous Hampden was his Nephew, and Mr. Waller, the Goodwyns and Ingoldsbies of Bucks, his Relations: A third marry'd Richard Whalley, Eſq; of Nottinghamſhire, Father to Colonel Whalley; which ſhews that no Gentleman had a more powerful Family Intereſt. Cromwel is blam'd by judicious Writers, for not taking more Care of his Family, but leaving them expos'd to Want, conſidering their Rank, at the Pleaſure of their prevailing Enemies of all Parties; for beſides the Eſtate which his Son Richard had with his Wife, one of the Coheirs of Richard Mayor, Eſq; of Hurſely in Hampſhire, he left not enough for them to keep a Coach after the Charge of his Funeral was defray'd. However his Care of them while living, in matching them well, both Sons and Daughters, was very laudable, of which there's a pleaſant Inſtance. *A.D.*1658

One of his domeſtick Chaplains, Mr. Jeremy White, a ſprightly Man and a top Wit of his Court, was ſo ambitious as to make his Addreſſes to Lady Frances, the Protector's youngeſt Daughter. The young Lady did not diſencourage him; and this Piece of innocent Gallantry in ſo religious a Court, cou'd not be carry'd on without Spies. Oliver was told of it, and he was much concern'd at it, obliging the Perſon who told him to be on the Watch; and if he cou'd give him any ſubſtantial Proof, he ſhou'd be well rewarded, and White ſeverely puniſh'd. The Spy follow'd the Matter ſo cloſe, that he hunted Jerry White, as he was generally term'd, to the Lady's Chamber, and ran immediately to the Protector with this News. Oliver in a Rage haſten'd thither himſelf, and going in haſtily, found Jerry on his Knees kiſſing the Lady's Hand, or having juſt kiſs'd it. Cromwel in a Fury ask'd what was the Meaning of that Poſture before his Daughter Frank? White, with a great deal of Preſence of Mind, ſaid, May it pleaſe your Highneſs, I have a long Time courted that young Gentlewoman there, my Lady's Woman, and cannot prevail; I was therefore humbly praying her Ladyſhip to intercede for me. The Protector turning to the young Woman, cry'd, What's the meaning of this, Huſſey? Why do you refuſe the Honour Mr. White wou'd do you? He is my Friend, and I expect you ſhou'd treat him as ſuch. My Lady's Woman, who deſir'd nothing more, with a very low Courteſy reply'd, If Mr. White intends me that Honour, I ſhall not be againſt him. Sayſt thou ſo, my Laſs, cry'd Cromwel, Call Goodwyn, This Buſineſs ſhall be done preſently, before I go out of the Room. Mr. White was gone too far to go back. The Parſon came. Jerry and my Lady's Woman were marry'd in Preſence of the Protector, who gave her 500 Pounds for her Portion; and that, with the Money ſhe had ſav'd before, made Mr. White eaſy in his Circumſtances, except in one Thing, which was, that he never lov'd his Wife, nor ſhe him, tho' they liv'd together near fifty Years afterwards. I knew them both, and heard this Story told when Mrs. White was preſent, who did not contradict it, but own'd there was ſomething in it. This Lady Frances and her eldeſt Siſter, Lady Mary Falconbridge (indeed all Cromwel's Daughters) were belov'd, admir'd and eſteem'd for their Beauty, Virtue and good Senſe. Lady Mary eſpecially is ſaid, with all theſe fine Imbelliſhments, to have inherited a Portion of her Father's Spirit, and to have deſerv'd Empire better than either of her Brothers, of whom ſhe was wont to ſay, Thoſe who wear Breeches deſerve Petticoats better: If thoſe in Petticoats had been in Breeches, they wou'd have held faſter. This was the Lady whom a valiant Cavalier inſulted in the Park, after the Reſtoration, on her Father's being taken out of his Grave and hung up at Tyburn; to whom ſhe reply'd, Had he been living, he wou'd have made you all ſmell worſe. The Character of Cromwel has been ſo often drawn by Friends and Foes, that I ſhall not attempt to add to what has been already ſaid of him in this Hiſtory.

Mr. Baxter's Saying of his Religion is moſt certain, He kept as much Honeſty and Godlineſs as his Cauſe and Intereſt wou'd allow him. And a Foreigner has this Paradox on him, which the Reader will perceive, when it is duly explain'd, takes in his whole Character, Un Tyran ſans Vice, Un Prince ſans Virtue. A Tyrant without Vice, A Prince without Virtue.

THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND,

During the PROTECTORATE of

RICHARD CROMWEL.

A.D.1658 LUDLOW ſeems to doubt whether Oliver did really nominate his Son Richard to be his Succeſſor: But Whitlock, who was at that Time much more in the Secret of Affairs, ſpeaks of it thus: "Immediately upon the Protector's Death, "the Council aſſembled, and being ſatisfy'd that "his late Highneſs had in his Life-time, according to the Petition and Advice, declar'd "his Son Richard to be his Succeſſor, they "caus'd the ſame to be proclaim'd in a ſolemn "Manner in the Cities of London and Weſtminſter; and they went the ſame Day to Richard "to acquaint him with it, and ſent a Committee "of the Council into the City to inform the "Lord Mayor of it." Accordingly Richard was proclaim'd Lord Protector in the following Words,

Whereas it hath pleas'd the moſt wiſe God, in his Providence, to take out of this World the moſt Serene and Renown'd Oliver, late Lord Protector of this Common-wealth: And his Highneſs having in his Life-time, according to the humble Petition and Advice, declar'd and appointed the moſt Noble and Illuſtrious the Lord Richard, eldeſt Son of his ſaid late Highneſs, to ſucceed him in the Government of theſe Nations; we therefore of the Privy-Council, together with the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Citizens of London, the Officers of the Army, and Numbers of other principal Gentlemen, do now hereby, with one full Voice and Conſent of Tongue and Heart, publiſh and declare the ſaid Noble and Illuſtrious Lord Richard to be Rightfully Protector of this Common-wealth of England, Scotland and Ireland, and the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging: To whom we acknowledge all Fidelity and conſtant Obedience, according to Law, and the ſaid humble Petition and Advice, with all hearty and humble Affections, beſeeching the Lord, by whom Princes rule, to bleſs him with long Life, and theſe Nations with Peace and Happineſs under his Government. Sign'd by Richard Chiverton, Lord Mayor, Henry Lawrence, Eſq; Lord Preſident, Nathaniel Fiennes, Eſq; John Liſle, Eſq; Lords Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Philip Lord Viſcount Liſle, Major General Desborough, Col. Montagu, afterwards Earl of Sandwich, Sir Gilbert Pickering, Sir Charles Wolſeley, Major General Skippon, Col. William Sydenham, Walter Strickland, Eſq; Philip Jones, Eſq, John Thurloe, Eſq; Lord Viſcount Falconbridge, Commiſſary General Whaley, Col. William Goff, Col. Thomas Cooper, Col. Edward Salmon, Sir Oliver Fleming, Col. John Clerk, Sir Thomas Pride, Edmund Prideaux, Eſq; Col. Joſias Bridge, Col. John Biſcoe, Waldine Lagee, Eſq; John Mills, Eſq; Quarter-maſter General Groſvenor, &c. - - - - - - God ſave his Highneſs Richard, Lord Protector. A.D.1658

The Council then gave the new Protector the Oath, and with his Conſent publiſh'd another Proclamation, for all that were Officers in his Father's Time to continue in their Places.

On the 8th of September Sir Oliver Fleming, Maſter of the Ceremonies, acquainted all foreign Ambaſſadors with the Death of the late Protector, and the Succeſſion of his Son Richard, who was as ſolemnly proclaim'd all over England as ever any King had been; and more Addreſſes were ſent him from all Parts of the three Kingdoms, than had been ſent to all the Kings from the firſt Richard to this: All declaring their Satisfaction in his Succeſſion, and their Reſolution to ſtand by him with their Lives and Fortunes.

This

A.D. 1658 This Man's Acceſſion to the Sovereign Power without one of his Father's great Qualities, and hardly any Quality of a Gentleman but Indolence, very juſtly elevated the Hopes of the Royaliſts and Republicans; but the latter, by dividing their Intereſt from that of the Protectorate, and taking in the Royaliſts to encreaſe their Party, had indeed ſo weaken'd themſelves, that they cou'd never effectually recover the Government which they had ſo long labour'd for.

His Letters to foreign Princes. Two Days after the late Protector's Death, his Son Richard wrote a Letter to the French King, Au ſereniſſime & tres puiſſant Louis Roy de France. Sereniſſime & tres puiſſant Roy Ami & Allie, &c. wherein he ſays, I am now to deſire your Majeſty to look on me as one who is reſolv'd to maintain, with an entire and conſtant Fidelity, the Friendſhip that was between you and my Father of ever glorious Memory. Sign'd RICHARD, Lord Protector of the Common-wealth of England. He wrote at the ſame Time to Cardinal Mazarine; and ſoon after he wrote two Letters to Charles Guſtavus, King of Sweden; the firſt notifying his Father's Death; the other was a Credential Letter for Sir George Ayſcue, whom he ſent Ambaſſador to that Prince. In theſe Letters he ſays, Pray God grant your Majeſty Succeſs in all your Affairs, for his Glory and the Support of the Orthodox Church. In his Letter to the States General of the United Provinces, he recommends the Caſe of a Widow, Mrs. Mary Grinder, who having lent that Gentleman of King Charles the Second's Retinue, for whom he was ſollicitous to get a Wife, a good Sum of Money, he refus'd to pay it, pleading that he who had made himſelf a Subject of the States, was free from any Suit or Action for a Debt contracted in England. The Protector ſays, Je ne croi pas qu'il ſoit neceſſaire devous en dire d'avantage ſur ce ſujet, &c. I don't think it neceſſary to add any thing farther on this Subject, you know the Commandments of the Lord, and how much we are expreſly forbidden to oppreſs the Widow and the Fatherleſs. He wrote a ſecond Letter to the French King in Behalf of the Proteſtants of Provence, eſpecially in and about the City of Agde, where their Churches were ſhut up on Complaint of the Clergy of the Dioceſs aſſembled in Convocation. But alas! his Recommendations and Interpoſitions had not the Weight in them which his Father's had. All the Princes and Powers of Europe knew the Court and Army were divided and ſubdivided, and that this Government was upon a ſandy Foundation: However, all the Princes and Powers paid him the uſual Compliments on the Death of one Prince, and the Succeſſion of another to his Power; and if Lambert, Fleetwood, the Army, and his own Family had ſtood by him, all Oppoſition wou'd have ſerv'd only to have given a Pretence to take Vengeance on his Enemies. But inſtead of this Attachment they all fell off from him one after another, and left him a poor, deſtitute, forſaken Creature in an empty Court at Whitehall.

Forſaken by his Family.

Monk flatters Richard. A very loyal Addreſs was ſent by Monk from Scotland to Richard, and one from Buckinghamſhire, wherein moſt of the principal Gentlemen were engag'd, was preſented to him by Whitlocke, accompany'd with a great Number of them. Whitlocke made a ſhort Speech to the new Protector, who thank'd them for their Affections, and, as 'tis ſaid, in his Memorials return'd a very prudent Anſwer. We read a little after, "Richard "gave Audience to the French Ambaſſador, and "carry'd himſelf diſcreetly, and better than was "expected." For the vulgar Notion conceiv'd of Richard, from ſuch Hiſtories as Clarendon and Echard's, that he was a Fool, is idle and groundleſs:

Richard's Character.

He wanted not Underſtanding but Reſolution. He was capable of Buſineſs, but hated it, tho' 'tis likely that Hatred wou'd have worn off with Practice; and as he was well natur'd and virtuous, tho' no Zealot nor Sectary, had his Father's Friends been as willing that he ſhou'd have kept the Power, as he was to keep it, I do not ſee how Mr. Mordaunt, Major General Maſſey, the Lord Willoughby of Parham, the Shropſhire Gentry, Sir Thomas Middleton, Arundel and Pollard, to whom the Lord Clarendon is giving Arms as faſt as he can, cou'd have taken it from him. A.D. 1658

The Truth is, the Cavaliers were in the loweſt State of Dejection and Impotence, and might as well have expected the Reſurrection as a Reſtoration, had their Opponents been as true to the publick Intereſt as they were to their private, tho' they were miſtaken in the Purſuit of it.

Republicans and Cromwellians impolitick. The Party, who had a Common-wealth in their Heads, did not conſider that moſt of the Cromwelians had been Common-wealths Men; that half of their Strength was gone from them, and were ready to join with any ſingle Perſon, rather than ſubject themſelves to a Parliament, whom they had turn'd out of Doors.

Neither did the Cromwelians conſider, that by dividing from the Republicans, their old ſure Friends, they had made a Breach for the Cavaliers, their old ſure inveterate, revengeful and cruel Enemies, to enter in at.

The Fifth-Monarchy Party conſider'd nothing but the Milleniums, that they were all to be Favourites under a Theocracy, which being the Height of Madneſs, was incapable of any other Remedy than the Reſtoration: When the State Surgeon, fell into an infallible Way of Practice, and to cure an aking Head, cut it off. The Common-wealths Men, blinded with their Zeal for the long Parliament, and imagining a diſgrac'd forgotten Power, might, like an old Tree, get new Root, and ſprout and branch as in the Vigor of Youth, began their Machinations immediately on the Death of Oliver.

Sir Henry Vane, Lieutenant General Ludlow, Mr. Wallop, Mr. Weaver, Colonel Eyres, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Col. Kendrick, Mr. Scot, Colonel Dixwell, Major Salloway, Serjeant Bradſhaw, Colonel Sidney, Mr. Nevill, Colonel Morley, were the main Sticklers for the Common-wealth; and theſe had their Meetings at Sir Henry Vane's Houſe, near Chairing-Croſs, where they conſulted how they ſhou'd behave upon the Election of a Parliament, which was talk'd of, and Writs ſoon after iſſu'd for electing Members, and for the other Houſe to meet; but before the Writs were iſſu'd, 'twas debated in Council, whether the Elections ſhou'd be according to the Diſtribution practis'd by Cromwel, or the old Way, by Counties, Cities and Boroughs, and the latter was reſolv'd upon, not as being according to the ancient Law and Form, but becauſe it was well underſtood, that mean and decay'd Boroughs might be much more eaſily corrupted than the numerous Counties and conſiderable Cities. Yet, contrary to this Argument, to the Fact and Truth, the Earl of Clarendon aſſures us, Richard follow'd the Model that was left him. And Coke errs as much, His Parliament were of his Father's Compoſition, to conſiſt of 400 Engliſh, &c.

Parliament.

Notwithſtanding the Oppoſition made by the Court, ſeveral Leaders of the Republican Party got to be elected. Sir Henry Vane had the Majority of Voices at Hull and Briſtol. The Sheriffs of Briſtol, Mr. Francis Gleed, and Mr. Timothy Parker, refus'd to return Sir Henry, ſo did the Mayor of Hull; but by the Intereſt of Mr. Wallop, he was choſen at Whitchurch in Hampſhire, and return'd. Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Mr. Scot, Mr.

A.D.1658 Mr. Weaver, Colonel Kendrick, Colonel Ludlow, and ſeveral other Republicans got into the Houſe. Serjeant Bradſhaw was return'd for the County of Cheſter, by the Sheriff; but ſome of the County returning another Perſon, he was kept out of the Houſe.

Before the Parliament met, Richard, as the Lord Clarendon tells us, very truly, inherited all the Greatneſs, and all the Glory of his Father, as Protector. Foreign Princes addreſs'd their Condolences to him, and deſir'd to renew their Alliances, and nothing was heard in England but the Voice of Joy, and large Encomiums of their new Protector; ſo that the King's Condition never appear'd ſo hopeleſs and ſo deſperate, for a more favourable Conjuncture his Friends cou'd never expect than this, which now ſeem'd to blaſt all their Hopes, and confirm their utmoſt Deſpair.

If this was the ſad Situation of their Affairs, can we have a better Leſſon to teach us to avoid Diviſion as we wou'd Deſtruction? For nothing elſe cou'd have given the leaſt Glimmering of Hope amidſt that utmoſt Deſpair.

Richard's Council having reſolv'd to celebrate the Funeral of his Father in the moſt magnificent Manner, ſent for Mr. Kinnerſley, Maſter of the Wardrobe, and deſir'd him to find out ſome Precedent by which they might govern themſelves in this Affair. Kinnerſley recommended to them the Solemnities us'd on the like Occaſion, for Philip the ſecond King of Spain. That vile Inſult of Echard, on the Corpſe of the late Protector, They were oblig'd to bury it ſuddenly by Reaſon of the uncommon Stench, puts me in Mind of a Story, which I had forty Years ago, from a Gentlewoman who attended Cromwel in his laſt Sickneſs. She was a religious Woman, and her Authority is at leaſt as good as John Thorowgood, the Boy from whom, at the third and fourth Hand, Echard took the Fable of the Bargain between the Devil and Oliver. She told me, that the Day after Cromwel's Death, it was conſulted how to diſpoſe of his Corpſe. They cou'd not pretend to keep it for the Pomp of a publick Burial. Among other Propoſals this was one, that conſidering the Malice, Rage, and Cruelty of the Cavaliers it was moſt certain, they who never ſpar'd either Living or Dead, in the Luſt of their Revenge, wou'd inſult the Body of this their moſt dreadful Enemy, if ever it was in their Power; and to prevent its falling into ſuch barbarous Hands, it was reſolv'd to wrap it up in Lead, to put it aboard a Barge, and ſink it in the deepeſt Part of the Thames, which was done the Night following: Two of his near Relations, with ſome truſty Soldiers, undertaking to do it. There is as much Reaſon to believe this Story, as any thing told us from Hear-ſay, by either of the two Hiſtorians, whom we have ſo much Cauſe to object againſt.

Crom-wel's Funeral.

A Coffin without the Corpſe, which was certainly interr'd ſomewhere before the 26th of September, was on that Day carry'd in a mourning Hearſe, from Whitehall to Somerſet-Houſe, where in a ſhort time his Effigy was, with mighty State and Magnificence, expos'd to the View of infinite Multitudes, who daily throng'd to that Place. Four large Apartments were hung with Black, illuminated with Wax Tapers, and adorn'd with rich Eſcutcheons, &c. of which the fourth was compleatly cover'd with Velvet, where the lively Image lay under a noble Canopy, upon a Bed of State, apparelell'd in the Protectorial Robes, lac'd with Gold, and furr'd with Ermines, having in one Hand a Scepter, in the other a Globe, and a rich Cap on the Head, ſuitable to the Robes: Behind was plac'd a Chair and Cuſhion of Tiſſu'd Gold, in which lay an Imperial Crown beſet with Diamonds and precious Stones. The Bed of State was inclos'd with Rails and Balaſters, and beſides ſolemn Mourners, ſurrounded with Banners, Banner-rolls, and all Kinds of Trophies of Military Honours. The Effigy having for ſome Weeks been ſeen in this Poſture, was on the firſt of November remov'd to the great Hall, and expos'd ſtanding on a Bed of Crimſon Velvet, cover'd with a Gown of the like colour'd Velvet, a Scepter in his Hand, and a Crown on his Head. That Part of the Hall, wherein the Bed ſtood, was rail'd in, and the Rails and Ground within them, cover'd with Crimſon Velvet; four or five Hundred Candles ſet in flat ſhining Candleſticks were ſo plac'd round, near the Roof of the Hall, that the Light they gave ſeem'd like the Rays of the Sun. Having continu'd thus to the 23d of November, the Waxen Effigies, with the Crown on his Head, Globe and Scepter in his Hands, was plac'd in a ſtately open Chariot, cover'd with black Velvet, and drawn with ſix Horſes, cover'd in the like Manner, and adorn'd with Plumes and other Ornaments. The Streets from Somerſet-Houſe to Weſtminſter-Abbey, were guarded by Soldiers in new Mourning Habits, with their Enſigns wrap'd in Cypreſs, thro' which the Chariot was attended by all the Officers and Servants of the Houſhold, the chief Officers both of the Army and Navy, the Maſters in Chancery, the Counſellors and Judges, the Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, the Members of the Privy Council, the Members of the late Upper Houſe, and the Lord Mayor, John Ireton, Eſq; and Aldermen of London, beſides ſeveral Foreign Miniſters and Ambaſſadors, as thoſe of France, Portugal and Holland, all in deep Mourning. Theſe all mov'd in a ſolemn and pompous Proceſſion, each Diviſion or Company being diſtinguiſh'd by Drums, Trumpets, Banners, and led Horſes, particularly the Horſe of State cover'd with black Velvet; and laſtly, the Horſe of Honour, trapp'd with Embroidery upon crimſon Velvet, adorn'd with white, red and yellow Plumes, led by the Maſter of the Horſe, with other Ceremonies uſed at the Obſequies of the greateſt Monarchs of the World. At the Weſt End of the Abbey Church, the Effigies being taken out of the Chariot, was carry'd thro' the Church, under a Canopy of State, up to the Eaſt End, where it was plac'd on a ſumptuous Mauſoleum fram'd for that Purpoſe, with Pilaſters and other Decorations of Architecture, carv'd, painted and gilt, to remain for a certain Time exhibited to publick View. Innumerable were the Spectators who came from the fartheſt Part of Scotland, Cornwal and Wales, to behold this aſtoniſhing Spectacle; the like of which had not been ſeen in England, perhaps not in the World; and may not the ſame be ſaid of the Deceas'd, to whom theſe Funeral Honours were paid? The Expence amounted to 60,000 Pounds, and if it was not all defray'd by the Publick, the Publick who caus'd it ſhou'd bare the Blame. The inſolent Reflection at the End of Echard's Tale, that the Monumental Pile was broken down two Years after, and the Body carry'd to a Place more proper for his Interment (he means the Gallows) very well becomes his Perſon and his Party, who, as they were not capable of great and generous Sentiments, muſt take Pleaſure in every thing baſe and barbarous, to hang a Man after he was dead, whoſe Look or Name was Death to them while he was living, is equal to ſuch as made a Prey of the Minds and Bodies of their fellow Subjects.

A.D.1658

I abhor Cromwel's traiterous Deſigns as much as the moſt inveterate of them; but I abhor alſo Inſolence and Inhumanity, tho' I am very well ſatisfy'd they never had Oliver's Corpſe at their Mercy.

A.D.1658 The Author of the Compleat Hiſtory, and the Archdeacon, do take ſome Pains with the Eccleſiaſtical as well as Civil Hiſtory of the Times they write of, and I cou'd, with very little Pains, fix upon them Miſrepreſentation and Prevarication, if the Subject was within my Province.

Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. They have confounded all Church Hiſtory by a Parcel of Technical Terms or Cant, as Schiſm, Sect, Fanatick, Enthuſiaſt, Church, Orthodox, and the like on one Side and t'other; Names to which no Ideas are affix'd that have the leaſt Conformity to the one or the other. Can any Man in his Wits imagine, that by Schiſmatick or Sectary was meant a Chriſtian of the Reform'd Religion, worſhipping God in the Purity of Primitive Chriſtianity? or that by Orthodox, theſe Hiſtorians, or any one elſe, underſtood Lords and Lordſhips, Honours and Revenues, Prerogatives and Powers? yet ſo it is throughout all their Hiſtories.

In the Time of the Republick, the Presbyterians, Independants and Baptiſts, were alike tolerated, but not favour'd alike; the two latter being univerſally for a Common-wealth, as the former were for Monarchy. The Epiſcopalians were then conniv'd at. In Oliver's Time Presbyterians, Independants, Baptiſts and Epiſcopalians were alike tolerated by Turns, alike favour'd, except the Presbyterians, whom Cromwel had an Averſion to, for oppoſing the Death of the King. Dr. Gunning, afterwards the Rigid Biſhop of Ely, kept a Conventicle in London before the Reſtoration, in as open a Manner as Dr. Burgeſs did after it; ſo did ſeveral other Epiſcopal Divines without Diſturbance: Nay, ſome Papiſts were in Cromwel's good Graces, inſomuch that Father White wrote a Book in Vindication of his Government. Oliver never perſecuted the Churchmen for their Religion, tho' they were perpetually in Conſpiracies to deſtroy him. King Charles II. ſuffer'd the Presbyterians to be perſecuted without Mercy, tho' they were perpetually in Conſpiracies to reſtore him to his Kingdoms, and in the End accompliſh'd it. Such was the Generoſity of the one, and ſuch the Ingratitude of the other! But I have frequently obſerv'd, that Gratitude and Generoſity are not of the Growth of ſuch Minds as produce Slavery and Perſecution.

A.D.1659 Parliament. On the 27th of January the Parliament met, and Richard went to the other Houſe with as much Solemnity as ever King had done; and having ſent for the Houſe of Commons by the Uſher of the Black Rod, he made a Speech to them, in which he repreſented "The Happineſs of his Father's Government, and how he "had left theſe Nations in great Honour abroad, "and in full Peace at home, all England, Scotland and Ireland dwelling ſafely, every Man "under his Vine and under his Fig-tree: He "ſaid, he believ'd a Parliament was never ſummon'd upon ſo important Occaſion as this was, "and ſo recommended to them the Care of the "Fleets and Armies, the Proſecution of the War "with Spain, the Aſſiſtance of the King of "Sweden, the Reformation of Manners, the "Proteſtant Religion, &c." There was nothing more remarkable in the Speech made after the Protector had done, by the Lord Commiſſioner Fiennes, than the Beginning of it, What can a Man ſay after the King? The Parliament made Choice of Challoner Chute, Eſq; to be their Speaker. Whitlock informs us, He was an excellent Orator, a Man of great Parts and Generoſity.

Ludlow ſits in it. Lieutenant General Ludlow, who was choſen a Member of this Parliament, ſat in the Houſe without taking the Oath not to act or contrive any thing againſt the Protector. One Mr. Bodurda, a Corniſh Member, complain'd of it, and was ſeconded by Sir John Trevor, whoſe Name we ſhall meet with often after the Reſtoration; not he who was expell'd the Houſe of Commons when he was Speaker for Bribery, but he who was Secretary of State. Mr. Weaver and others oppos'd them, alledging, That for the moſt part Oaths prov'd only Snares to honeſt Men, it being generally obſerv'd, that thoſe who were leaſt conſcientious in keeping an Oath, were the moſt forward to take it. Col. Eyres alſo inform'd the Houſe, "That he had ſat in the "Long Parliament without taking the Oath "then preſcrib'd: That Lieutenant General "Ludlow mov'd the Houſe in his Behalf, and "was the Perſon nominated by them to bring "him into the Houſe without taking the Oath; which afterwards was not inſiſted upon. Sir Walter Saint John, Grandfather to the late Lord Bolingbroke, was one of the Perſons appointed to adminiſter the Oath; and whatever is inſinuated of the meaneſt of this Convention by our impartial Hiſtory Writers, it conſiſted of Gentlemen of as good Ranks and Fortunes, though they did not, and wou'd not have brought in the King, as the ſucceeding Convention, that did. A.D.1659

The firſt Things debated by this Aſſembly, were the Militia and the Negative Voice, to which the Protector pretended by his Father's Magna Charta, the Petition and Advice. But Mr. Thurloe, Secretary of State, preſented the Houſe with a Declaration ready drawn, wherein was contain'd an Acknowledgment of Richard Cromwel to be Protector, and that Petition and Advice to be the Rule of Government; which Declaration was receiv'd and debated; in which Debate it was urg'd, that inſtead of Recognizing, the Word Agnizing might be us'd, that ſo his Right might appear to be founded on the Conſent of the People. But the Court Party depending on the major Vote, carry'd every thing by the Queſtion; a very ſhort Way, and a great Saver of Time and Argument: However, by purging the Houſe of ſeveral Malignants, who had crept into it, and by convincing ſeveral young Gentlemen, that were Members, of the Sincerity of their Intentions, the Common-wealth Party grew upon that of the Court; to which a warm Speech of Sir Henry Vane's contributed not a little: It was to this Purpoſe;

Mr. Speaker,

Sir Henry Vane's Speech. "Among all the People of the Univerſe, I "know none who have ſhewn ſo much Zeal for "the Liberty of their Country, as the Engliſh "at this Time have done: They have, by the "Help of Divine Providence, overcome all Obſtacles, and have made themſelves Free. We "have driven away the Hereditary Tyranny of "the Houſe of Stuart, at the Expence of much "Blood and Treaſure, in Hopes of enjoying Hereditary Liberty, after having ſhaken off the "Yoke of King-ſhip; and there is not a Man "amongſt us, who cou'd have imagin'd that "any Perſon wou'd be ſo bold as to dare to attempt the raviſhing from us Freedom, which "coſts us ſo much Blood and ſo much Labour.

"But ſo it happens, I know not by what Miſfortune, we are fallen into the Error of thoſe "who poiſon'd the Emperor Titus to make "room for Domitian, who made away Auguſtus "that they might have Tiberius, and chang'd "Claudius for Nero. I am ſenſible theſe Examples are foreign from my Subject, ſince the Romans in thoſe Days were bury'd in Lewdneſs "and Luxury; whereas the People of England "are A.D.1659 " are now renown'd, all over the World, for their " great Virtue and Diſcipline; and yet ſuffer an " Idiot, without Courage, without Senſe, nay " without Ambition, to have Dominion in a Coun- " try of Liberty. One cou'd bear a little with " Oliver Cromwel, tho' contrary to his Oath of " Fidelity to the Parliament, contrary to his Duty " to the Publick, contrary to the Reſpect he " ow'd to that venerable Body from whom he " receiv'd his Authority, he uſurp'd the Govern- " ment. His Merit was ſo extraordinary, that " our Judgments, our Paſſions might be blinded " by it. He made his Way to Empire by the " moſt illuſtrious Actions; he had under his " Command an Army that had made him a " Conqueror, and a People that had made him " their General.

" But as for Richard Cromwel his Son, Who " is he? What are his Titles? We have ſeen " that he had a Sword by his Side, but did he " ever draw it? And what is of more Impor- " tance in this Caſe, Is he fit to get Obedience " from a mighty Nation, who cou'd never make " a Footman obey him? Yet we muſt recogniſe " this Man as our King, under the Stile of Pro- " tector! A Man without Birth, without Cou- " rage, without Conduct. For my part, I de- " clare, Sir, it ſhall never be ſaid that I made " ſuch a Man my Maſter.

His Speech was heard with ſingular Applauſe. My Lord Falconbridge ſpoke in Anſwer to it, but 'twas viſible that it had ſuch an Effect on the Houſe, as gave the Court no Hopes of a good Iſſue to this Seſſion, tho' they carry'd the Queſtion for the other Houſe, with this Addition, That it ſhou'd be no Bar to ſuch Peers who had faithfully ſerved the Parliament, who by this Vote were admitted to ſit if they pleas'd. But this very Vote was clogg'd with another, That in all Meſſages to, and Conferences with the other Houſe, equal Ceremonies ſhou'd be uſed, and no other Reſpect obſerv'd by the Members of this Houſe, than what is obſerv'd by the Members ſitting in the other. There was ſomething which look'd ſomewhat odd in this Convention, and that was in the Debate of the Members for Scotland and Ireland, thoſe Gentlemen ſitting, arguing, and voting for themſelves, which was thought indecent, if not unjuſt; however, the Court cou'd have carry'd their Point without their Vote.

The Lord Clarendon inſinuates, that the Houſe was very buſy in examining the Publick Accounts, as if there had been enormous Embezlements. He gives every thing he takes in Hand a Turn different from what it really was, pro or con. The Truth of this Matter is, the Houſe ordered the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury to bring in the State of the Account of the Publick Treaſure; accordingly Mr. Sherwyn, Secretary to the Treaſury, and a Member of Parliament, deliver'd it, and Whitlock tells us, it was found to be very exact.

Other Houſe. The Houſe of Commons having paſt a Declaration for a Publick Faſt, ſent it to the other Houſe by Mr. Grove, for their Concurrence, which I take to be the only Matter tranſacted between the two Houſes. The latter were diſguſted at the Neglect put upon them by the former, and well enough pleas'd that at laſt they were recognis'd by this Meſſage, which the Lords Commiſſioners Fiennes, Liſle, and Whitlock, receiv'd at the Bar of the other Houſe, who anſwer'd, That they would take it into further Conſideration; and this Claſhing between the two Houſes, weaken'd the Authority of both, and ſapp'd the very Foundation of the Petition and Advice, the great Charter of the preſent Government.

A.D.1659 Diviſions in Parliament and Army.

Theſe Diviſions were not confin'd within the Walls of the Parliament Houſe, but broke out in the Army itſelf, the Officers every where diſcovering their Jealouſies one of another. They were divided into Three Parties, and neither of them much ſuperior to the other in Number. One Party was known to be well affected to the Common-wealth; another to the Council of Officers, meeting by their own Authority at Wallingford-Houſe, where Lieutenant General Fleetwood liv'd; the Third Party was the Protector Richard's.

The Common-wealth Officers.

Col. Aſhfield, Col. Lilburn, Col. Fitz, Lieutenant Colonel Maſon, Lieutenant Colonel Moſs, Lieutenant Colonel Farley, Major Creed, &c.

The Wallingford-Houſe Officers.

Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Major General Desborough, Treaſurer Blackwell, Col. Sydenham, Col. Clerk, Col. Kelſey, Col. Berry, Major Haines.

Richard Cromwel's Officers.

Fleetwood, intended Succeſſor to Cromwel.

Lieutenant General Fleetwood did, without doubt, expect to have been declar'd Succeſſor to Cromwel, and without doubt had been ſo promis'd by his Father in Law, who thought worſe of his own Son than he really deſerv'd, which is not common in Parents. But Oliver was above any Kindred, but that of Souls; and his Son's Soul not being ſo great as he wou'd have had it, he took it to be leſs than it was: For Richard did not want Senſe; his Want was Firmneſs and Reſolution.

My Manuſcript Author, who had his Memoirs from the Earl of Orrery, affirms Oliver made Fleetwood his Heir; but one of his Daughters knowing where his Will was, took it away and burnt it, before Fleetwood cou'd come at it; and a few Minutes before Cromwel's Death, when he was ask'd, Who ſhould ſucceed him? he made Reply, and ſaid, In ſuch a Drawer of the Cabinet, in my Cloſet, you will find it. Fleetwood found himſelf trick'd indeed, and the whole Council againſt him; ſo he fell in with them, waiting an Opportunity to right or revenge himſelf; which offer'd in the Diviſions between the two Houſes, the Court and Parliament, and between the Court, Parliament, and Army.

Richard Cromwel's Friends, to increaſe their Party, had cajol'd and careſs'd the Royaliſts ſo much, that it gave Offence to the well-affected in Parliament and City. A certain inferior Officer having publickly murmur'd at it, was carry'd to Whitehall to anſwer for it. Richard, beſides other reproachful Language, ask'd him in a ſcornful way, Whether he wou'd have him prefer none but the Godly? Here, continues he, is Dick Ingoldsby, who can neither Pray nor Preach, and yet I will truſt him before ye all. Upon which Ludlow reflects thus: " Theſe im- " prudent, as well as irreligious Words, ſo clear- " ly diſcovering the Frame and Temper of his " Mind, were ſoon publiſh'd in the Army and " City of London, to his great Prejudice. And " from this time, all Men amongſt them, who Common-wealth and Army Parties agree. " made but the leaſt Pretences to Religion and " Sobriety, began to think themſelves unſafe " whilſt he govern'd; and thereupon ſoon form'd " a Reſolution to uſe their utmoſt Endea- " vours to divide the Military from the Civil " Power,

A.D.1659 " Power, and to place the Command of the Army " in Lieutenant General Fleetwood; who having Intimation of this Diſpoſition in his Favour, thought to confirm it, by joining in with the Republicans. To this end, he prevail'd with his Party to ſend Col. Kelſey to Lieutenant General Ludlow, and let him know, that the Gentlemen at Wallingford-Houſe wou'd give him a friendly Reception, if he wou'd come thither and confer with them; which he did, and the Wallingford-Houſe Officers conſented, that an Agreement ſhou'd be propoſed to Sir Arthur Haſlerigge and Sir Henry Vane, who readily approved of it, and promis'd to be aſſiſting in all things for the Publick Service. With this Anſwer Ludlow went to Col. Sydenham, and deſir'd him to acquaint the Company at Wallingford-Houſe with it. Sydenham told the Lieutenant General, that thoſe Gentlemen deſign'd to call a General Council of Officers, and if they cou'd effect it, they doubted not to go a great way towards a good Settlement.

General Council of Officers.

All theſe Steps were againſt the Protector. His Brother in Law, Fleetwood, and his Uncle in Law, Desborough, were the main Agents; and two or three of the Wallingford-Houſe Party finding him alone, took the Opportunity to perſuade him of the Neceſſity of calling a General Council of Officers in order to preſent ſomething to the Houſe for the Regulation and Maintenance of the Army. Richard, not ſuſpecting their Deſign, conſented to the Propoſition; and having iſſu'd out an Order to that Purpoſe, a General Council of Officers met. The Protector's Cabinet Council were the Lord Broghill, afterwards Earl of Orrery, Dr. Wilkins, afterwards Biſhop of Cheſter, and Col. Phillips. Theſe were not made acquainted with the calling of this Council, till after the Order was iſſu'd, and when they knew it, they repreſented to the Protector the dangerous Conſequence of it to his Perſon and Government. However, Broghill, as a General Officer, aſſiſted at the Council, having promis'd Richard to do him what Service he cou'd. There met at Wallingford-Houſe above Five hundred Officers, in the Beginning of April. Dr. Owen made a long Prayer, and then Major General Desborough ſpoke for near an Hour, repreſenting How great the Lord had been to them, how proſperous their Arms had been, which Proſperity, he fear'd, wou'd not continue; ſeeing, ſince their Peace and Happineſs, there were ſeveral Men, Sons of Belial, crept in amongſt them; for whoſe ſakes there wou'd be great Judgments upon the Army; and therefore, he thought, 'twou'd be convenient to purge it by a Teſt, which every Officer ſhou'd take, " That they did believe in their Con- " ſciences that the putting of the late King, Charles " Stuart, to Death, was lawful and juſt. Which Motion was receiv'd with Applauſe, till another was ſtarted which puzled the Cauſe. 'Twas obſerv'd, that as ſoon as Desborough had done ſpeaking, the Lord Viſcount Falconbridge, and the Lord Viſcount Howard roſe up and left the Aſſembly. It was ſuppos'd to carry Advice of it to the Protector. The Lord Broghill ſtood up to anſwer Desborough, beginning his Speech thus: I am not of the ſame Opinion with the Noble Lord who ſpoke laſt, being againſt all Teſts put upon the Army, as Things which wou'd enſlave them, and which they have declar'd againſt. If they once put Teſts upon themſelves, they will quickly have others put Teſts upon them; and ſo will act againſt their own Liberty of Conſcience, which they have ſo much fought and pleaded for. I am in particular againſt the Teſt propos'd, becauſe it is unjuſt and unreaſonable to require Men to ſwear to the Lawfulneſs of that which they were not preſent at the doing of. And many, beſides myſelf, were not preſent when the late King was Try'd and put to Death, and how can they ſwear that what they did not and cou'd not know, was Juſt and Lawful? But if you will have a Teſt to purge the Army, I think I have Liberty to propoſe one, as well as others; which is, That all ſhall be turn'd out of the Army, that will not ſwear to defend the Government, as it is now eſtabliſh'd, under the Protector and Parliament. This is reaſonable, becauſe your Being depends upon it; and lawful, becauſe it is to maintain that Authority by which you ſit. I declare I am againſt all Teſts, and for the Continuance of the Liberty of the Army. If you will have a Teſt, I am for this; and if you will not paſs it here, or do paſs the other, I will move for this Teſt to Morrow in Parliament, where I am confident it will paſs. Many cry'd out, Well mov'd; and Col. Gough and Col. Whaley, between whom Lord Broghill ſat, were brought over by him for his Teſt or none, as they declar'd in two warm Speeches. Upon this, Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Major General Desborough, and others who were in their Secret, withdrew to conſult among themſelves; and when they return'd, Fleetwood ſaid, We have conſider'd what my Lord Broghill has ſpoken, and did not ſee the ill Conſequences of impoſing Teſts upon the Army, till his Lordſhip had hinted them; wherefore we will not put it to the Vote which of them ſhall paſs, but deſire both may be drop'd.

Richard's Cabinet Council.

The Wallingford-Houſe Party ſucceeded better in their other Motions: One of them was, " That it wou'd be more advantageous to the " Army, and more conducing to the Good of the " Nation, if the Military and Civil Power might " be plac'd in different Hands, that the one " might be a Balance to the other. At this Motion there was a Hum. And the next was a Step further declaring their Apprehenſions, That the Common Cauſe was wholly to be ruin'd by the Subtilty and Artifices of thoſe, who had never been able to do it by open Force. Wherefore they deſir'd the Command of the Army might be intruſted to the Care of ſome few Perſons, in whom they might all confide. This Propoſition found ſo general an Approbation, that it was impoſſible for the Protector's Party to reſiſt the Stream: They were extremely alarm'd at theſe Proceedings, well knowing, that a Protector wou'd make a ſorry Figure, when there was a General of the Army who had the whole Military Power. He and his Courtiers put ſome Members of Parliament upon charging the Council with mutinous Words againſt the Government, and againſt the two Houſes; which Accuſation was ſo well ſeconded, that the Houſe of Commons Voted, That the Officers of the Army ſhou'd no more meet as a General Council. Notwithſtanding this Vote, they ſtill met, and the Parliament having Notice, declar'd the Protector General of their Army, authorizing him to diſperſe the Officers to their reſpective Poſts, to turn out ſuch as ſhou'd diſobey, and place others in their room. They alſo Voted it to be High Treaſon in the Officers to meet in Council, contrary to their Orders; and promis'd to cauſe the Arrears of thoſe that ſhou'd yield Obedience, to be forthwith paid, with Aſſurances to take Care of them for the future. The Lord Broghill advis'd Richard Cromwel to join in with the Parliament, and diſſolve the Council of Officers. How ſhall I do it, ſays Richard? Broghill reply'd, If you pleaſe, I'll draw up a ſhort Speech for you, and to Morrow Morning go to the Council, where, after an Hour's ſitting among them, you may ſtand up and ſpeak it. The Protector promis'd to do ſo, and the Lord Broghill

Parliament and Army quarrel.

A.D. 1659 drew up a Speech for him, of about eight or ten Lines, to this Effect.

Gentlemen,

Lord Broghill makes a Speech for Richard.

" I accept of your Service with all Thankfulneſs. I have conſider'd what does moſt aggrieve you, and think the beſt and propereſt Way to redreſs what is amiſs amongſt you, is to do it in the Parliament now ſitting, of which many of you are Members, where I will ſee Things righted, and therefore declare my Commiſſion for holding this Council to be now void, and the Council diſſolv'd, and deſire you to get to your ſeveral Commands.

Who diſſolves the Council of Officers.

Lord Broghill gave Richard this Speech, and he learnt it by the next Morning, when, at ten o'Clock, he came to Wallingford-Houſe, and ſat down in a Chair of State, which pleas'd ſome, and troubled others. After an Hour's Stay, he roſe up and ſpoke, as above; which, tho' mild, gave great Diſtaſte to Fleetwood, Desborough, and that Party, who complain'd in Parliament how much they had been abus'd and affronted by a certain Lord in that Aſſembly, looking ſtedfaſtly on the Lord Broghill, and deſiring Satisfaction; to which End they mov'd for an Addreſs to his Highneſs, to know who advis'd him to diſſolve the Council of War, during the ſitting of Parliament, without the Parliament's Conſent or Knowledge. Broghill ſtanding in his Place, ſaid,

" At the ſame time there is an Addreſs made, " to know who advis'd the Diſſolution of the " Council without the Parliament's Knowledge " or Conſent; I humbly move there may be alſo " another Addreſs, to know who advis'd the " Calling of a Council of War without the Conſent or Knowledge of the Parliament; for if " he be guilty who advis'd the Diſſolution of " the Council, he muſt be much more guilty " who advis'd the Calling it without the Parliament's Knowledge and Conſent." The Houſe cry'd, Well mov'd; and Fleetwood, Desborough, and their Party withdrew to conſult further, and take new Reſolutions, upon which Richard's Fate depended.

Tho' the Protector had diſſolv'd the Council of Officers, yet they continu'd their Meetings in a more private Manner, and try'd all imaginable Ways to oblige Richard to a Compliance with them. But being made General by the Parliament, a Poſt which he knew Fleetwood aſpir'd to, he reſolv'd to ſtick cloſe to his new Friends.

Fleetwood and Richard quarrel.

He ſent for his Brother in Law, Lieutenant General Fleetwood, to come to him, hearing of the Continuance of the Officers Meetings: But the Meſſenger brought no Anſwer. He then order'd his Guards to fetch him; but they deſir'd to be excus'd. The Lieutenant General having Intimation of this Deſign, retir'd to St. James's, where many chief Officers of the Army reſorted to him, and it was concluded the whole Army ſhou'd rendezvous there. The Protector being inform'd of this, made a Shew of diſputing his Authority by Force, and, as General of the Army, order'd a Counter Rendezvous at Whitehall. Accordingly Col. Gough ſent Orders to his Regiment to march to Whitehall; but the Major had already prevail'd with them to draw to St. James's. Three Troops of Col. Ingoldsby's Horſe march'd alſo to St. James's, with Part of two more; ſo that he had only one entire Troop to ſtand by him. Col. Whalley's Regiment of Horſe, for the moſt Part, left him, and went off to St. James's; which he ſeeing, open'd his Breaſt and deſir'd them to ſhoot him. Col. Hacker's Regiment of Horſe being drawn up near Cheapſide, the Protector ſent a Meſſage to the Colonel, with an Order for him to march to Whitehall; but he excus'd himſelf, and ſaid he had receiv'd Orders from Lieutenant General Fleetwood to keep that Poſt. Many of the Life-Guard alſo went to St. James's, and moſt of the Troops that ſtay'd with Richard, declar'd they wou'd not oppoſe any that ſhou'd come to them by Order of Lieutenant General Fleetwood. Thus here was a General without an Army, and ſeveral great Officers without Soldiers, who having boaſted of their Intereſt in the Army, and thereby led the Houſe into their late raſh Proceedings, now being utterly diſappointed in their Hopes and Expectations, knew not what to adviſe, or what to do. A.D. 1659

Let us here pauſe a little, and examine where the Cavaliers are, what they are doing? Every Step taken from this Time draws nearer to the Reſtoration. Who takes theſe Steps? Is there not one Royaliſt come yet into the Scene of Action? Not one of thoſe noiſy Pretenders, who, when it was effected, claim'd the Merit, and had the Reward? Not one, a few Months only before the King came in?

The Lord Viſcount Howard, who was Captain of Cromwel's Guards, was the firſt Man that had any Thoughts of the King, of all thoſe who had any Power to ſerve him. He was made a Lord by Oliver, was a Favourite to both the Protectors, and had ſerv'd them faithfully. But ſeeing Richard's Affairs deſperate, and being aſſur'd that the Common-wealth wou'd not employ him, he reſolv'd to make his Terms with the Exil'd Monarch, and do what he cou'd to reſtore him. However, he harbour'd no ſuch Thoughts, till he had try'd, by all the Arguments he cou'd think of, to prevail with Richard to endeavour to ſtand his Ground. 'Tis Time to look about you, ſays the Lord Howard, Empire and Command are not now the Queſtion. Your Perſon, your Life are in Peril; you are the Son of Cromwel, ſhew your ſelf worthy to be his Son. This Buſineſs requires a bold Stroke, and muſt be ſupported by a good Head. Do not ſuffer your ſelf to be daunted now, and my Head ſhall anſwer for the Conſequence. Fleetwood, Lambert, Desborough, Vane, are the Contrivers of all this: I will rid you of them, do you ſtand by me, and only back my Zeal for your Honour with your Name. The Neceſſity of preſerving your ſelf diſpenſes with the ſevere Laws of Juſtice. If this is not done, the Army will be againſt you, and you are infallibly ruin'd; and you have nothing to fear, I'll take it upon my ſelf, and be anſwerable for the Conſequence.

Lord Howard's Propoſal to Richard.

Richard was ſurpriz'd at theſe Words: He anſwer'd in a Conſternation, That every one ſhou'd ſee he wou'd do no body any Harm: He never had done any, nor ever wou'd: That he ſhou'd be very much troubled, if any one was injur'd on his Account; and inſtead of taking away the Life of the leaſt Perſon in the Nation for the Preſervation of his Greatneſs, which was a Burthen to him, he wou'd not have a Drop of Blood ſpilt. The Lord Howard heard him refuſe his Propoſal with Indignation, when he offer'd to run all the Riſque of it himſelf. Do you think, ſaid he, this Moderation of yours will repair the Wrong your Family has committed by its Elevation? Every body knows, that by Violence your Father procur'd the Death of the late King, and kept his Sons in Baniſhment. If the Father's Crimes cry for Vengeance, ſhall the Son have them paſt over in Silence? Mercy in the preſent State of Affairs is unſeaſonable; we may ſhed that Blood that ſtrives to ſhed ours without being bloodthirſty or cruel; tho' Conſcience may ſometimes obſtruct a Sovereign's ſacrificing an innocent Perſon to his Ambition, it does not oppoſe his execut-

Richard's peaceable Diſpoſition.

A.D. 1659 ing a Criminal for his own Safety. Lay aſide this Puſilanimity ſo unbecoming the Succeſſor of Cromwel. Be quick, for every Moment is precious. Conſider your Enemies ſpend this Time in Acting which we waſte in Conſulting. Lord Howard's Heat cou'd not make it's Way into Richard's Heart. He own'd his Obligation, but did not alter his Mind, cloſing all thus, Talk no more of it, my Reſolution is fix'd. Violent Counſels ſuit not with me; and all you can perſwade me to by what you now give, is, that it proceeds from true Friendſhip, for which I am thankful. Howard having gone ſo far, and finding there was no Hope left in Cromwel, left Whitehall, and engag'd in the Conſpiracies for reſtoring the King, which began to be form'd in London, and ſeveral Parts of England, on Richard's diſſolving the Parliament, and the Diſſolution of his Protectorate ſoon after.

Lord Howard deſerts to the King.

The Officers drew up a Remonſtrance, which they preſented to Richard, April the 14th, ſetting forth the Army's Want of Pay, the Inſolences of the Royaliſts, and their Deſigns, together with ſome in Power, to ruin the Army, and the good old Cauſe, and to bring in the Enemies thereof: To prevent which, and to provide againſt free Quarter, they deſire his Highneſs to adviſe with the Parliament, and to provide effectual Remedy.

This, according to Whitlock, was the Beginning of Richard's Fall. The Houſe diſguſted at the general Meeting of the Council of Officers without their Knowledge and Conſent, not only paſs'd thoſe harſh Votes before-mentioned, but neglected this Remonſtrance, took no Courſe to provide Money, and exaſperated the Soldiery.

Lambert againſt Richard.

Lambert, after Oliver had taken away his Commiſſion, retir'd to his Country-houſe at Wimbledon in Surrey, and ſeem'd to have forgotten that he had ever been a General, in the pleaſant and harmleſs Exerciſe of a Gardiner, with which he diverted himſelf in his fine Gardens, and became ſo skilful, that he was reckon'd the beſt Floriſt in England; but upon an Invitation from the Wallingford-Houſe Party, he came and took a Seat amongſt them, and was as forward as any in puſhing Things to Extremity. The Council of Officers ſent Desborough to Richard to tell him, If he wou'd diſſolve the Parliament, who had ſlighted and abus'd the Army, they wou'd take Care of him. If he refus'd to do it, they wou'd diſſolve them without him, and leave him to ſhift for himſelf. Richard put off giving his Anſwer till the next Morning, and in the mean time held a Cabinet Council upon it, with the Lord Broghill, the Lords Commiſſioners Fiennes and Whitlock, Sir Charles Wolſeley, and Secretary Thurloe. Whitlock was againſt diſſolving the Parliament, and adviſ'd their ſitting a little longer, eſpecially now they had begun to conſider of raiſing Money, which wou'd reconcile them to the Soldiery. But moſt were for complying with the Army, who, by the Union of almoſt all the three Parties, were become formidable to Court and Parliament, and indeed had both in their Power.

The next Morning, April the 22d, the Houſe met, and ſeveral Members made extravagant Motions, rather, as was ſuppos'd, to vent their own Paſſions, than from any Hopes of Succeſs; for whatever were the Reſolutions that were made by the Court Junto, they cou'd not ſuddenly be brought to vote, becauſe the contrary Party was conſiderably encreas'd by this Change of Affairs, which made Richard the more willing to part with them. Few of the Houſe knew of the Diſſolution which was intended; or if they did, were unwilling to take Notice of it; ſo that when the Uſher of the Black Rod, who attended the other Houſe, came to let the Sergeant at Arms know, it was the Pleaſure of the Protector that the Houſe of Commons ſhou'd attend him at the other Houſe, ſeveral Members were againſt admitting the Sergeant into the Houſe to deliver the Meſſage; but the Commonwealth Party demanded and obtain'd that he ſhou'd give the Houſe an Account of what the Gentleman of the Black Rod had ſaid to him. The Aſſembly being under this Confuſion, adjourn'd themſelves till eight a Clock next Morning; but Care was taken to prevent their meeting again, by publiſhing a Proclamation, declaring them to be diſſolv'd, by putting a Padlock on the Door of the Houſe, and by placing a Guard in the Court of Requeſts, with Orders to refuſe Admittance to all thoſe that ſhou'd demand it. This Parliament was fatal to two Speakers, tho' it did not ſit quite three Months, Challoner Chute, Eſq; dying, his Succeſſor was Sir Liſlebonne Long, who dying alſo, Mr. Bampfield kept the Speaker's Chair to the Diſſolution; after which the Protector, his Privy and Cabinet Councils ſat cloſe, to conſult what was fit to be done. Some there were who, rather than ſubmit to be dictated by Fleetwood and the Army Officers, inclin'd to enter into a Treaty with the King, and the Protector himſelf was of the ſame Opinion; but the Majority, deterr'd by the juſt Notions they had of the looſe Principles, and implacable, revengeful Spirit of the Exiles, wou'd not hearken to it. The Lord Falconbridge and the Lord Howard gave themſelves up to that Intereſt, and under Pretence of engaging Monk to ſupport his Maſter Richard's tottering Condition, they went to Scotland, where, no Doubt, they all three came to an Underſtanding, tho' the reſtoring the King was the laſt Thing Monk wou'd comply with.

Parliament diſſolv'd.

The Character of that Monk is in Ludlow and Whitlock. The former tells us, He was a Man of a covetous Temper, of no Principles, of a vicious and ſcandalous Converſation, which fitted him exactly for the Work they were going to ſet him about. And Whitlock informs us, that the French Ambaſſador ſaid of him, He had neither Senſe nor Breeding; conſequently, his true Character muſt be, that he was a Dull, Clowniſh, Covetous, Vicious Perſon of no Principles. I cou'd have gather'd as much out of his Hiſtory, but I choſe to put it in the Words of Whitlock and Ludlow, whoſe Authorities are more than ſufficient againſt Gumble, and Price, and Webſter, and Echard, and the beſt of them, who wou'd make ſomething more of Monk than Lieutenant General Ludlow, and the Lord Commiſſioner Whitlock, and the French Ambaſſador have made of him. Let it not be imagin'd that I have conceiv'd ſuch a contemptible Opinion of him from any thing, but the Accounts that are left us concerning him by judicious Writers, and not from his Perjury and Treachery in betraying the Parliament, who put ſuch Confidence in him. I am as ſenſible, as a grateful Soul can be, of the Bleſſings of the Reſtoration, without which we cou'd have had no King William, no Queen Mary, no Queen Anne, no King George, no Illuſtrious Houſe of Hanover, in whoſe glorious Reigns theſe Nations have been happy at home, and renown'd abroad, enjoy'd, and have, and do enjoy the greateſt Felicities of Life, Spiritual and Temporal Liberty. As for any other Bleſſing, which Monk was a Means of procuring us, I know nothing of it, and therefore ſhall not belie Hiſtory to pay him a Complement.

Monk's Character. P. 643. P. 700.

The Wallingford-Houſe Party were in Poſſeſſion of the Supreme Power upon the Diſſolution

*A.D.*1659 of the Parliament. For tho' Richard publiſh'd a Proclamation for all Papiſts and Cavaliers to depart twenty Miles from London, yet that was the only Act of Government we read of him after the Parliament was diſſolv'd. So we may fix his Protectorate to ſeven Months; at the End of which he was laid down as gently as a Fall cou'd be, and hardly any thing more heard of him. The Common-wealth that was reſtor'd, having ſent a Committee to him, Sir Henry Vane, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Mr. Ludlow and Mr. Scott, to know whether he wou'd acquieſce in the preſent Proceedings, and that they wou'd proviae for the Payment of his Debts, and an Honourable Subſiſtence for himſelf and his Family, they return'd with this Anſwer under his Hand, That he wou'd acquieſce. He ſent them a Liſt of his Debts, and thought of them no more than they did of him. He awoke, as out of a Dream, and return'd to a private Life with more Content and Pleaſure than he aſſum'd the Supreme Authority. He was Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, which Office he voluntarily reſign'd by a Paper under his own Hand, which he ſent to that Univerſity. His Debts were computed at about 29,000 Pounds; but no due Care was taken by the Common-wealth for the Diſcharge of them. They ſent to him in a few Days to quit Whitehall, which he did with great Satisfaction, and retir'd to his Seat at Hurſely in Hampſhire. When he was to remove from his Palace, and the Houſhold Goods were pack'd up, the Quondam Protector order'd his Servants to be particularly careful of two old Trunks, which were depoſited in his Wardrobe. The Men wonder'd why he was ſo ſolicitous for their Preſervation, ſince by their Appearance, and the Place they were put in, they did not ſeem to contain a Treaſure of ſuch Conſequence. And one of his Friends hearing him enquire after them with more Concern than for any Part of the Lumber, ask'd him what was in them, that made him value them ſo much? Why, no leſs, ſays Richard, than the Lives and Fortunes of all the good People of England, alluding to the numberleſs Addreſſes in which they made him thoſe Offers. *A.D.*1659

Richard depos'd.

Richard generally went by the Name of Mr. Wallis; not, as is pretended, that he wanted an Alias to defend him againſt any Debts, except thoſe which were indeed the Debts of the Publick; but becauſe the Curioſity of the People to gaze at a Man who had been in the State of the greateſt Prince in Europe, and was now reduc'd to the State of a plain Country Gentleman, wou'd have been very troubleſome to him, had he always gone by the Name of Richard Cromwel. He liv'd above fifty Years after his Abdication, and dy'd at Cheſhunt in Hartfordſhire. He had a Son, Oliver Cromwel, who had the Look and Genius of his Grandfather, who was very active at the Revolution, and offer'd to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe for the Service in Ireland, if he might name his Captains. But, among other ſuch Advice given King William by ſome falſe Friends, he was refus'd, under Pretence that his Name and his Poſt, with ſuch Advantages, might make him too popular and too powerful at ſuch a Juncture. It was the ſame ſort of Advice that hinder'd Mr. Samuel Johnſon, of the Deanry of Durham, and that put ſeveral pretended Friends to the Revolution into Places of Truſt, by which King William was ſo often in Danger of his Predeceſſor's Fate, and of loſing his Life as well as his Crown.

DURING THE COMMON-WEALTH Reſtor'd.

THE Council of Officers at Wallingford-Houſe were very willing to keep the Power they had got in their own Hands, and had Thoughts of raiſing Money by their own Authority; but upon Conſultation with their Friends, they took a ſafer Method, which was, to reſtore the Members of the Long Parliament. This they did by a Declaration, dated the 6th of May, inviting the Members of that Parliament, who continu'd ſitting till April the 20*th*, 1653, to return to the Exerciſe and Diſcharge of their Truſt.

Sign'd by the Direction of the Lord Fleetwood and the Council of the Officers of the Army.

Tho. Sandford, Secretary.

Several Meetings were held at Sir Henry Vane's, between the chief Officers of the Army and the chief Members of the Long Parliament.

Members,

Sir Henry Vane, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Lieutenant General Ludlow, Major Salloway.

Officers,

Major General Lambert, Col. Jones, Col. Kelſey, Col. Berry,

Who after many Debates about Satisfaction to the Army, reſolv'd that the Long Parliament ſhou'd be reſtor'd. Accordingly Major General Lambert, Col. Berry, Col. Cooper, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Col. Lilburn, Col. Aſhfield, Col. Zanchy, Col. Kelſey, Col. Okey, Treaſurer Blackwell, Major Haynes, Col. Allen, Col. Packer, and Col. Pierſon, went to the old Speaker Lenthal with their Declaration to the Rolls, and preſented it to him and ſeveral Members of that Parliament, who were with the Speaker, and all declar'd their Willingneſs to meet again, which they appointed to do the next Day, May the 7th, in the Painted-Chamber, and about twelve o'Clock the Members went to take their Places in the Houſe, Mr. Lenthal their Speaker leading the Way, and the Officers of the Army lining the Rooms for them as they paſt thro' the Painted-Chamber, the Court of Requeſts, and the Lobby itſelf, the principal Officers

A.D.1659 cers having plac'd themſelves neareſt to the Door of the Parliament-Houſe, every one ſeeming to rejoyce at their Reſtitution, and promiſing to live and die by them. The ſame Day the Houſe appointed a Committee of Safety, Sir Henry Vane, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Major Salloway, Col. Sydenham, Major General Lambert, Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Lieutenant General Ludlow, Col. John Jones, Col. Desborough, Col. Berry, Mr. Scot.

First Committee of Safety.

This Committee were order'd to notify to foreign Ambaſſadors the Reſtoration of the Common-wealth. They impower'd them to diſplace and place all Officers that had behav'd ill in the late Times of Uſurpation. Writs and all Proceedings in Law were directed to run, as formerly, in the Name of the Keepers of the Liberties of England. They ſent down Colonel Whetham to Portſmouth, to take Poſſeſſion of the Government of it, the Houſe being diſatisfied with the Behaviour of Colonel Morley.

There was ſtill a Party, who wiſh'd well to the late Protector Richard, out of Averſion to the Common-wealth, and the Committee of Safety had much ado to get Major General Overton, Col. Rich, Col. Altured, Major Braman receiv'd into Service, they being rigid Republicans, whom the Wallingford-Houſe Party no more affected, than they did the Cromwelians. The Lord Howard's Regiment of Horſe was given to Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Col. Gough's Regiment to Lieutenant General Ludlow, and Col. Altured was made Captain of the Parliament Guards.

The Houſe paſs'd a Declaration concerning their Meeting, and their Purpoſe to ſecure the Property and Liberty of the People, both as Men, and as Chriſtians, and that without a ſingle Perſon, King-ſhip, or Houſe of Peers, and to uphold Magiſtracy and Miniſtry. The next Day after their Meeting, Dr. Owen preach'd a Sermon in the Parliament-Houſe, and an Order was made by the Committee of Safety, That all Officers ſhou'd be ſuch as fear'd God, and had been faithful to the Common-wealth. The former Part of this Order is that which occaſions all the Mirth in the Earl of Clarendon's, and Mr. Echard's Hiſtory, where the Railery is as coarſe as if it had been learnt in a Market; but the Language of theſe Court Writers may be beſt imag'd to the Reader by that of Sir Philip Warwick, who ſpeaking of the Reſtoring the Common-wealth, calls it Subventaneous, or Addle-Eggs, and a Page or two afterwards, a Twiſting of the Guts. They are inimitably polite. They were of the Court when it was at Oxford, and beſides the refin'd Expreſſion of the Rank and Quality, they had that of the Colleges and Schools, and above all that of the Court Paper, Mercurius Aulicus, to refine and poliſh them.

Council of State. Seven Days after the Meeting of the Parliament, they choſe a Council of State, Twenty one to be of their Body, and Ten not to be of it.

The Ten were,

The Lord Preſident Bradſhaw, the Lord Fairfax, Major General Lambert, Col. Desborough, Col. Berry, Sir Horatio Townſend, Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, Sir Robert Honeywood, Sir Archibald Johnſtown, Lord Warriſton, Joſias Berners, Eſq;

The Twenty one, who were Members of Parliament,

Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Sir Henry Vane, Sir James Harrington, Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Col. Algernoon Sidney, Henry Nevil, Eſq; Col. Morley, Thomas Challoner, Eſq; Col. Walton, Robert Wallop, Eſq; Lord Chief Juſtice St. John, Col. Dixwel, Thomas Scot, Eſq; Col. Sydenham, Robert Reynolds, Eſq; Col. Thomſon, Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke, Col. John Jones, Leiutenant General Ludlow, Col. Downs, Humphry Salloway, Eſq; A.D.1659

The Reſt of the Members of the Parliament, term'd in reproach the Rump.

List of the Rump. William Lenthal, Eſq; Speaker, Oliver St. John, Eſq; Col. William Purefoy, Eſq; Sir Henry Mildmay, Nathaniel Fiennes, Eſq; John Liſle, Eſq; Lord Munſon, Sir Thomas Widdrington, Cornelius Holland, Eſq; Iſaac Penington, Eſq; Luke Robinſon, Eſq; Edmund Prideaux, Eſq; Daniel Blagrave, Eſq; Serjeant Wylde, Robert Goodwin, Eſq; Thomas Atkins, Eſq; Miles Corbet, Eſq; John Weaver, Eſq; John Dove, Eſq; ----Rolls, Eſq; Auguſtine Skinner, Eſq; Walter Strickland, Eſq; Gilbert Millington, Eſq; Alexander Popham, Eſq; Sir Peter Wentworth, Col. Richard Ingoldsby, Sir John Fagg, Col. Laſſels, Mr. Lechmere, Mr. Gold, Col. Okey, Michael Oldſworth, Eſq; Mr. Love, Mr. Rawleigh, Mr. Brewſter, Col. Bennet, Mr. Pury, Mr. Say, Henry Martin, Eſq; Col. Hutchinſon, Mr. White, Col. Eyres, Philip Smith, Eſq; Mr. Bingham, Col. Brooke, Mr. Dunch.

Secluded Members had no Right to vote. Echard tells them but Forty. Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, and other Members, were afterwards elected and admitted: However, the Archdeacon's Forty were a Quorum, and Ludlow obſerves, that the ſecluded Members being declar'd incapable of Sitting and Voting by a fair Quorum of Parliament, which is the Law of the Houſe, how will the Lawyers prove that they had afterwards a Right to ſit, and that thoſe who did ſit, were not a legal Parliament? A Quorum can ſeclude twenty as lawfully as two, and I do not ſee how any thing can be determin'd in Parliament, if what is done by a Quorum, is not determinative. The Houſe appointed an Oath to be taken by all Officers of the Army and others, To be true and faithful to the Common-wealth, in Oppoſition to Charles Stuart, or any ſingle Perſon. The Soldiery boggl'd at this Teſt, not on Account of Charles Stuart, none of them thought of him, but of a ſingle Perſon, which many of them thought of, and to ſet up Fleetwood againſt the Parliament, or Lambert, or to reſtore Richard, who, tho' driven from Whitehall, had ſtill an Intereſt among the Soldiers.

Monk's Addreſs to the Parliament. One of the firſt and moſt zealous Addreſſes to the Parliament after their Reſtoration, was from Monk, and the Officers of the Army in Scotland, in which they ſay, A glorious Cauſe, whoſe Intereſt was laid low, even in the Duſt, is in one Day reſtor'd to its Life and Luſtre, when almoſt all the Aſſerters of it had ſo manifeſtly deſerted it by a Dejection of many Years. One of theſe Deſerters was Monk himſelf, as may be ſeen by his Addreſſes to Oliver and Richard. In the Senſe of this, the greateſt of our temporal Mercies, we now come to addreſs your Honours, as thoſe whoſe Preſence we have ſo long wanted. Notwithſtanding their Joy at the Exaltation of both the Cromwels, They beſeech the God of all their Mercies, to heal the Back-ſlidings of his People, and not to charge to their Account, in this his Day of their Deliverance, their Miſcarriages, while they were wandering in dark and ſlippery Places, after the Imagination of their own Hearts, and with all Humility and Affection congratulate their Honours in their happy Reſtoration to the Government of theſe Nations, which God was pleas'd once ſo to own in their Hands. This is General Monk, who a few Months after brought about the happy Reſtoration of King Charles the Second; and having taken the Oath call'd the Engagement, to be true and faithful to the Common-wealth, without King or Houſe of Peers, and having ſworn to be true and faithful to both the Cromwels, and having betray'd the Common-wealth, whom he had engag'd to maintain, I think there is no great Wrong done him, when he is charg'd with Treachery and Perjury. In the mean time the Wallingford-Houſe Party, not forgetting their Deſign, drew up an Addreſs to the Parliament, and preſented it by the chief Officers of the Army. The Heads of it were, That thoſe who had acted under the late Power, might be indemnify'd; that Leiutenant General Fleetwood might be appointed Commander in chief of the Forces; that the Protector's Debts might be ſatisfy'd, and 10,000 Pounds a Year added to his Revenue; that the Government of the Nation might conſiſt of a Repreſentative of the People, and a ſelect Senate; that Care might be taken for Payment of the Debts of the Army; that Liberty of Conſcience might be ſecur'd. The Houſe anſwer'd, that they wou'd give them all poſſible Satisfaction, and that no Man for the future might have an Opportunity to pack an Army to ſerve his Ambition, as had been formerly practis'd, a Bill was prepar'd and brought in, conſtituting the ſeven Perſons following, to be Commiſſioners for the Nomination of Officers, to be preſented to the Parliament. Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Major General Lambert, Lieutenant General Ludlow, Col. Desborough, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Sir Henry Vane, and Col. Berry.

He is treacherous and perjur'd.

Commiſſioners for Officers.

Another Bill was brought in to appoint Lieutenant General Fleetwood Commander in Chief, and that all Commiſſions ſhou'd be ſign'd by the Speaker. Both theſe Acts paſs'd, and were notify'd to the Officers, that they might obey them, and particularly take new Commiſſions from the Speaker.

Speaker to grant Commiſſioners.

The Parliament took very prudent Meaſures for their Preſervation, but having nothing but Prudence to oppoſe to Power, the Army obey'd them juſt as much, and as long, as they pleas'd. The Officers did not reliſh the laſt mention'd Acts, which made them entirely dependant on the Parliament; and as they had reſtor'd them to their Seats in that Houſe, they began to wiſh it undone, and to meditate how to undo it. Deſborough ſaid, he had a good Commiſſion already, and he wou'd take none from the Speaker: But Matters not being ripe enough for a new Change, his Stomach came to him, and he, and all the Officers took their Commiſſions from the Hands of the Speaker.

The Houſe was indefatigable in their Proceedings, and had an Eye to foreign, as well as domeſtick Affairs. They appointed Col. Sidney and Sir Robert Honeywood, to go Ambaſſadors to Sweden, to mediate a Peace between that King, and the King of Denmark. They ſent Mr. George Downing to Holland to tranſact Matters with that Common-wealth, and appointed Col. Lockhart, Governor of Dunkirk, to be their Ambaſſador at the Pyrenean Treaty. The Envoys and Reſidents of France, Sweden, Denmark, Holſtein, Tuſcany, Hamburgh, Hanſe Towns, &c. had Audience, and were referr'd to Commiſſioners concerning their ſeveral Negotiations. They alſo wrote Letters to Charles King of Sweden, and Frederick, King of Denmark, to offer them a Mediation for a Peace between them. Theſe Letters were ſign'd, The Parliament of the Commom-wealth of England, WILLIAM LENTHAL, Prolocutor of the Common-wealth of England.

They made Serjeant Bradſhaw, Serjeant Tyrrel, and Serjeant Fountain, Lords Commiſſioners of the Great Seal.

Lord Chief Baron Wilde, Mr. Baron Thorp, Mr. Baron Parker.

About this time, Mr. Scot, one of the Council of State, inſinuated to them that he had Intelligence of a dangerous Correſpondence carry'd on by Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, and the Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke, with Sir Edward Hyde, beyond the Seas. Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper made the higheſt Profeſſions that could be of his Innocence, denying he had ever any Correſpondence with the King, or Sir Edward Hyde, or any of the King's Miniſters or Friends. His Expreſſions were ſo high, that they bred the more Suſpicion of him in ſome of the Council, tho' he was clear'd by the major Vote. The Lord Commiſſioner Whitlocke poſitively deny'd what he was charg'd with, and the Spy being a beggarly Iriſh Friar, the Matter was wav'd, and no more ſaid of it.

On the 5th of June the Parliament voted, That this Parliament ſhall not continue longer than May the 7th, 1660; but the Officers did not deſign they ſhou'd ſit ſo long. They had in Debate the Regulation of the Law, and order'd a Bill to reform Abuſes in Clerks, Attorneys, Sollicitors and Lawyers. They alſo referr'd it to the Council to take care, that the People be not wrong'd by Bailiffs and Juries. 'Twas worthy the Wiſdom of the Nation to redreſs ſuch enormous Grievances, but were they then redreſs'd, or are they redreſs'd to this Day? It is worth obſerving who have been the Occaſion of the Stop that has been put to ſuch generous Deſigns, and they are found to be Perſons who make their Market of ſuch Wrongs and Abuſes. It is by no Means worthy the Wiſdom of the Nation to be impos'd upon by them.

Monk had little or nothing to do in Scotland, but to enjoy the Fulneſs of his Fortune, with as much Luxury and Licence as a Man of no Principles cou'd allow himſelf. And there's no Reaſon to imagine he had any Thoughts of ſtirring from the Place where he was, till Applications were made to him from England. His Eye-ſight was not good enough to ſee from Edinburgh to London, nor his Fore-ſight to provide for Conſeqences, unleſs they were put into his Head, as we ſhall ſee preſently they were.

As ſoon as Richard was outed of the Government, Sir Charles Coote, then in his Court, went Poſt for Ireland, to carry the News of this great Alteration, to the Lord Lieutenant Henry Cromwel. After him haſten'd Col. Henry Ingoldsby, and it was ſuppos'd, the Deſign was to ſee whether there was any likelihood of their being able to maintain themſelves in the Government of that Kingdom: But the Army there declaring, they wou'd do as the Army did in England, they had no Encouragement to defend Richard againſt the Parliament, tho' Sir Charles Coote try'd what he cou'd do in Connaught, and the Lord Broghil did the ſame in Munſter, as did alſo Lieutenant Col. Flower in Ulſter; and this Party being diſappointed in their Aims to continue Cromwel's Authority, which they divided with him in their ſeveral Stations, out of Deſpight to the Common-wealth, enter'd into Engagements for the Coote and Broghil for Richard.

A.D.1659 King; and it is obſervable, that of all thoſe who ſerv'd his Majeſty in his Reſtoration, there is hardly one Man of Note and Intereſt, who did it out of Principle and Affection, till the Work was done to their Hands.

Ludlow made Commander in Chief.

The Parliament ſent Orders to Henry Cromwel to come to England, and give the Council of State an Account of Affairs there, which oblig'd him to leave that Kingdom; where Lieutenant General Ludlow arriv'd ſoon after, with a Commiſſion to command the Forces in Chief; and, with other Commiſſioners of Parliament, to take upon him the Government. We ſhall leave him there, and ſee what he ſays of the Counſels in England.

Opinions about a Scheme of Government.

At this Time the Opinions of Men were much divided concerning a Form of Government to be eſtabliſh'd amongſt us. The Great Officers of the Army, as has been hinted, were for a ſelect ſtanding Senate to be join'd to the Repreſentative of the People.

Others labour'd to have the Supream Authority to conſiſt of an Aſſembly choſen by the People, and a Council of State choſen by that Aſſembly, to be veſted with the Executive Power, and accountable to that which ſhou'd next ſucceed. At which Time the Power of the ſaid Council ſhou'd determine.

Some were deſirous to have a Repreſentative of the People conſtantly ſitting, by a perpetual Rotation.

Others propos'd, that there might be join'd to the Popular Aſſembly a ſelect Number of Men in the nature of the Lacedemonian Ephori, who ſhou'd have a Negative in Things wherein the Eſſentials of the Government ſhou'd be concern'd; ſuch as the Excluſion of a ſingle Perſon, touching Liberty of Conſcience, Alteration of the Conſtitution, and other Things of the laſt Importance to the State.

Some were of Opinion it wou'd be moſt conducive to the Publick Happineſs, if there were two Councils choſen by the People; the One to conſiſt of about Three hundred, and to have the Power only of propoſing and debating Laws; the Other to be in Number about a Thouſand, and to have the Power finally to reſolve and determine. Every Year a third Part of each Council to go out, and others to be choſen in their Places.

There were ſome, whoſe Scheme was, that there ſhou'd be a King, who might govern without a Parliament, and Impriſon Men, Impreſs Men, and take away Men's Money by his Prerogative only. That he might enter the Parliament-Houſe, and hale away the Members at Pleaſure. That he ſhou'd have a High Commiſſion Court to perſecute, impriſon, and beggar all thoſe that did not think according to a Form preſcrib'd them: And another Court, to cut off the Ears and Noſes of ſuch as gave them the leaſt Offence. That there ſhou'd be a Convocation to make Canons and Creeds too, if they thought fit, to make People do and ſwear as the ſaid Canons enjoin'd; with a Power to turn Religion into Ceremony, and the Lord's Day into a Revel. This Scheme, indeed, was ſo monſtrous, that it was not offer'd to the Publick; but was had up very often in Cabals and Converſations, and produc'd ſomething at laſt, as will be ſeen, if the Reader has Patience to go through this Hiſtory.

Some Members of the Council of State propos'd at the Board, That the Parliament ſhou'd be mov'd to appoint Twenty of their own Number, and Ten of the Principal Officers of the Army, to conſider of a Form of Government, to be reported to the Parliament; and if they ſhou'd approve it, that then the whole Army ſhou'd be drawn out, and declare their Conſent to it; which Propoſition, though it ſeem'd thus to find a general Approbation, yet prov'd abortive; and the Parliament themſelves paſs'd a Reſolution, That on every Wedneſday the Houſe ſhou'd go into a Grand Committee to conſider of that Matter. A.D.1659

To the Act of Indemnity a Clauſe had been incerted, to reſtrain the Favour of the Parliament, in regard of thoſe who, under the Cromwels, had receiv'd exorbitant and double Salaries: Which was to the great Diſcontent of ſeveral conſiderable Perſons, who fear'd they might be concern'd in it. In particular Major General Lambert, now the moſt conſiderable Perſon in the Nation, bitterly exclaim'd againſt it to Lieutenant General Ludlow, ſaying, There is no Security given by the Act to indemnify us for what we have done, but the Parliament have taken Care to make us accountable for whatſoever we have receiv'd. Ludlow reply'd, In my Opinion, all the Soldiers are indemnify'd for what they have receiv'd; and if the Parliament ſhou'd ever make uſe of the Clauſe, it will only be againſt thoſe, who have enrich'd themſelves by the Ruin of the Common-wealth, and have oppos'd the Return of the Parliament to the Exerciſe of their Authority. I am perſuaded, you cannot think ſuch a Sort of Men worthy of their Favour and Conſideration, equally with thoſe who contributed to their Reſtitution. Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, who then join'd them, and heard what they were upon, ſaid, The Act is as full and comprehenſive as can be juſtly deſir'd. Major General Lambert reply'd, It ſignifies nothing, it leaves us ſtill at their Mercy. You are, ſaid Sir Arthur, only at the Mercy of the Parliament. Lambert retorted, I know not why they ſhou'd not be at our Mercy, as well as we at theirs. Both Haſelrigge and Ludlow began from this Converſation, to be jealous of Lambert's Deſigns; which, perhaps, had broke out ſooner, had not the Conſpiracies all over England broken out; which, under the Pretence of a Free Parliament, intended the Reſtoration of the King. A.D.1659

Sir George Booth's Riſing.

The firſt Man who appear'd in Arms, was Sir George Booth, in Cheſhire. With him join'd Sir Thomas Middleton, Colonel Brook, and Mr. Dunch, all Presbyterians and Covenanters; though they had not taken the Covenant ſo often as the King had done. Mr. Whitley, of Cheſhire, had been with his Majeſty in Flanders, to tell him, I ſuppoſe, what the Presbyterians intended to do for him, rather than to deſire any Help from him. The Cavaliers promis'd to join with theſe Covenanters. But whether it was that they were diſpirited with ſo many Routs and Executions, or whether they did not care to truſt their new Confederates, Dr. Calamy tells us they fail'd them, and Coke ſays the ſame. However, Sir George Booth put the Thing to the Venture. The Lord Willoughby of Parham, another Preſbyterian and Covenanter, and Sir Horatio Townſend, one of the preſent Council of State, had contriv'd to poſſeſs Lynne. Another Presbyterian and Covenanter, Major General Maſſey, was to ſurprize Glouceſter, a City he had ſo bravely defended againſt King Charles I. Where are the Royaliſts all this while? The Lord Clarendon informs us, Arundel, Pollard, Greenvile, Trelawney, did indeed hope to poſſeſs Plymouth; which is all that I hear of them, unleſs it be two or three Gentlemen who kept their Words with Sir George Booth; as Oneale, the Lord Kilmurry, Col. Egerton; as did alſo the Earl of Derby, Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Mr. Lee of Limehouſe, and Capt. Morgan.

The

A.D. 1659 Conſpirators taken.

The Earl of Stamford, another Covenanter, had promis'd to join with Booth; but that Earl, the Lord Willoughby of Parham, Sir Horatio Townſend, and Major General Maſſey, were apprehended before they cou'd appear in Arms; ſo were the Duke of Bucks, the Earl of Oxford, the Lord Delaware, and the Lord Falkland. One Baſſet, ſays Ludlow, appear'd with about Sixty Horſe near Bath, and as many near Malmesbury, who were to have Maſſey for their Head, hearing the County Militia only was marching againſt them, diſpers'd. The Shropſhire Gentlemen, Lord Newport, Littleton, &c. were ready to ſecure Shrewsbury, as we read in Clarendon; but prevented being ſecur'd themſelves by lying quiet; for Captain Waring with the Militia Troop, and ſome Aſſiſtance from Wrexham, being more in a Readineſs, ſecur'd the Place for the Parliament. The General Inſurrection all over England was appointed to be on the Firſt of Auguſt, and the King and Duke of York drew down to the Sea-Coaſts to tranſport themſelves on the firſt Occaſion. Ludlow was on his Way to Holyhead to imbark for Ireland, juſt before Booth's Inſurrection happen'd; and receiving a Viſit from Sir Thomas Middleton, the Knight proteſted, He was reſolved to continue ſtedfaſt in the Intereſt of the Common-wealth, which was only a Week or two before he rode into Wrexham at the Head of a Troop of Horſe, and there, brandiſhing his Sword, heard the King proclaim'd in the Market Place. It's great pity ſo good a Cauſe as the Reſtoration, cou'd not have been accompliſh'd without the Breach of ſo many Words and Oaths, ſo many ſolemn Engagements Sacred and Civil!

Lud. p. 687.

King proclaim'd by Sir Tho. Middleton.

The County of Warwick and City of Coventry had like to have revolted by the Treachery of Col. Fotherby, who commanded there for the Parliament. But old Col. Pureſoy took upon him that Command, and ſecur'd that County and City. Col. Crompton and Capt. Bathurſt prevented any Stirring in Staffordſhire. Thus was Sir George Booth pent up in Cheſhire and Part of Lancaſhire, and very much ſtraighten'd by the Forces Lieutenant General Ludlow ſent over from Ireland under Col. Zanchy and Col. Axtel, of whom a Party under Lieutenant Col. Walker prevented a Riſing in Carnarvonſhire and other Parts of North-Wales.

Sir George Booth enter'd Cheſter with 400 Horſe. Col. Croxton, who commanded there, having not a Troop to oppoſe him, retir'd into the Caſtle, and kept it. When Booth came into this City Col. Edmund Temple was there, bound for Ireland: Booth order'd him to be ſeiz'd and brought to him. Upon Examination finding he was going to Ireland, he permitted him to proceed, having ask'd him if he had heard of no Riſing in other Parts? Col. Temple reply'd, He had found all quiet on the Road from London. At which Sir George ſeem'd much ſurpriz'd and diſcourag'd, ſaying, Other Promiſes have been made me. Whitlock tells us, the Presbyterian Miniſters labour'd to further this Riſing, and many of them appear'd in it; for which King Charles II. treated them as they might have expected he wou'd from every thing that had been ſeen or heard of him.

The Night before the Riſing was to be, Major General Maſſey was taken in Glouceſterſhire as he was going to Glouceſter. Information being given to a Captain of Horſe of his being in the Country, and whereabouts, the Officer came up with him, ſeiz'd him, and mounted him before a Trooper; but riding down a ſteep Hill, the Weather being wet, and the Night dark, the Horſe ſlipt in a Wood and fell down, which Maſſey caus'd by checking him. In the Fall he got away and hid himſelf in a Buſh in the Wood. The whole Troop ſearch'd for him; but he crept in ſo cloſe they cou'd not find him; ſo he eſcap'd, and got the next Morning to a Friend's Houſe, where he lay conceal'd two or three Weeks. A.D. 1659

The Parliament had order'd three Regiments of Horſe, one of Dragoons, and three Regiments of Foot to march againſt Sir George Booth, but were perplex'd in the Choice of a Commander. Whilſt the Matter was under Debate, ſome Perſons of the King's Party addreſs'd themſelves to the Wife of Col. Lambert, whom Gregory Leti repreſents as a Lady of Intrigue, who had an Amour not only with the Earl of Holland, but with Oliver Cromwel, by whom he ſays 'tis certain ſhe had a Child, Il eſt pourtant certain que la Femme de ce major devint groſſe dans le Temps qu'elle etoit aimée de Cromwel; but then he ſpoils all by ſaying, Oliver was deſir'd to be Godfather to his own Child; whereas it is moſt certain, that both Cromwel and Lambert were Independants, and that they never had a Godfather or Godmother at any of their Chriſtnings; and if no body elſe had them, 'twou'd prevent the Breach of ſo many thouſand ſolemn and ſacred Promiſes, as are made daily on thoſe Occaſions. Lady Lambert acquainted her Husband with the great Offers that were made him, if he wou'd be the Inſtrument of the King's Return. But Lambert receiv'd thoſe Offers with Diſdain. He thought himſelf as well deſerving, and as well qualify'd to reign as the King was, and had it doubtleſs in his Head. He diſcover'd the Contrivance to Sir Henry Vane, who having communicated it to Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, he perſuaded them to renew their former Friendſhip with Aſſurances on each Part to unite their Endeavours in the Service of the Parliament. It was by this Means chiefly, that Major General Lambert was appointed to command thoſe Forces that were deſign'd to ſuppreſs the Inſurrection in Cheſhire. p. 363.

Lambert appointed to command the Forces againſt Sir George Booth.

Monk had about 7000 Men in Scotland, where Echard tells us, he lay upon the Watch as a Cat watches a Mouſe; a homely Simile indeed! But the Subject is every whit as homely. The Parliament ſent an Order to him to detach two Regiments of Foot, and two of Horſe to march to the North of England, and hinder any Increaſe of Forces coming to Booth. Monk excus'd himſelf under Colour of the Enemy's Strength and Intention to revolt, tho', according to Ludlow, "There were not wanting ſome, who then "thought that his Engagements with the com- "mon Enemy were the true Reaſon of his Re- "fuſal. And it is certain, that a Gentleman "from the King, Nicholas Monk his Brother, a "Devonſhire Parſon, had been with him, and "tho' what paſt between them was not made "publick, yet, ſince he did not ſeize him, as it "was his Duty, but permitted him to return "ſafely from whence he came, he may juſtly be "ſuſpected even then to have betray'd thoſe "whom he pretended to ſerve."

Monk's Treachery.

On the ſixth of Auguſt Major General Lambert march'd from London with the before-mention'd Troops, and a Train of Artillery. Sir George Booth had about 4000 Men with him, and poſſeſs'd himſelf of the Town of Warrington in Lancaſhire, of which the Reverend Mr. Robert Yates was then Vicar, and no doubt very forward in this Buſineſs, he having been try'd for his Life at Lancaſter before Judge Twiſden for only ſpeaking againſt the Engagements, which Monk had ſwallow'd very chearfully. Matters were carry'd ſo far, that Mr. Yates had prepar'd his laſt Speech, being reſolv'd not to retract what he had

A.D.1659 had preach'd: But by the Clemency of the Judge he was pardon'd. Mr. Hiet, Miniſter of Croſton in this Neighbourhood, was ejected for refuſing the Engagement againſt the King and the Houſe of Peers, as was alſo Mr. Henry Finch, Vicar of Walton. Mr. Henry Newcome, Miniſter of Manchester, engag'd heartily in this Inſurrection, and was much eſteem'd by Sir George Booth. Mr. Robert Eaton, joint Paſtor of Walton with Mr. Finch, was Chaplain to Sir George Booth. But all theſe pious and loyal Divines, and ſeveral others of this County, who had refus'd the Engagement, met with moſt grateful Returns from King Charles II. who had not been long reſtor'd before he paſs'd an Act to take away their Bread from them, and turn them out of their Houſes only for being Presbyterians, contrary to the Covenant, which he ſwore three Times, and contrary to the moſt ſacred and ſolemn Promiſes he made in his Declaration, and in his Diſcourſe with the Presbyterian Miniſters at Breda.

Presbyterian Miniſters with Sir George Booth.

Sir George Booth plac'd a Party of 300 Men in the Town of Warrington. The main Body was lodg'd on the other Side of the River, and a good Number poſted to defend the Bridge, where the Forces on each Side met, and Booth's Forces began the Action, by ſending out a Party to skirmiſh with an advanc'd Party of Major General Lambert's; but being repuls'd, and retreating beyond the Bridge, Sir George's Body of Horſe, conſiſting of about 1800, one Half of which the Royaliſts brag'd were Gentlemen, ran before Lambert's Horſe began to charge. The Cavaliers having not yet forgot their old way of fighting, and there were enough of them among Booth's Presbyterians, to ſpoil a better Army than his was. The Foot might have been cut to Pieces without any Aſſiſtance from the Gentry on Horſeback, except only about forty commanded by Captain Morgan, who, endeavouring to ſecure their Retreat, were kill'd in the Action. Many of Sir George's Foot eſcap'd, by leaping over the Hedges and hiding themſelves; but, according to Ludlow, their ſureſt Protection was, their having engag'd againſt thoſe that were more ready to ſave than to deſtroy them; ſo that tho' the whole Force of the Enemy was entirely defeated, yet there were not above forty of them kill'd. About 6 or 700 of their Horſe, in ſcatter'd and broken Parties, fled to Cheſter; but not thinking themſelves ſafe there, they went into North Wales with Sir Thomas Middleton, of Age and Experience too great to have engag'd in ſuch mad Work as this was, the Knight being above fourſcore. Cheſter was ſurrender'd to General Lambert, as was alſo Liverpool, which had been ſeiz'd by Booth's Forces. One ſees all along, that this is one of the fooliſheſt Enterprizes in the whole Hiſtory, and yet there's much more Folly in Echard's Remarks on it than in the thing itſelf: "Colonel "Zanchy might have been met and engag'd in "Angleſey; Col. Lilburne might eaſily have "been broken in Yorkſhire; many other little Par-"ties might have been met and diſperſs'd; and "that one Blow given might have brought "effectual Aid to Sir George's Party;" and if Echard had known better, a great many ſuch idle Reflections might have been left out of his Book.

Sir George Booth routed.

In the mean time the Parliament publiſh'd a Proclamation, declaring Sir George Booth and his Adherents, Rebels and Traitors. The Lord Mayor of London, John Ireton, Eſq; the Aldermen and the two Sheriffs, Sir Anthony Bateman, and Sir John Lawrence attending the Council of State, the Preſident Whitlock declar'd to them, by Command of the Council, the Deſigns of the Enemy; the Care and Vigilance of the Parliament and Council; the taking ſome of the Conſpirators, and defeating their Deſigns; the Enemy's Intention to deſtroy all that had been of the Parliament's Party, and to bring in the King. He then thank'd the City for their good Affections, and faithful adhering to the Parliament, wherein their own and the whole Nation's Safety and Peace were concern'd, and deſir'd them to perſiſt therein. At this very Juncture was Davenant the Poet releas'd out of Priſon, which ſhews us, that the Government was not ſo much afraid of the Royaliſts as of the Presbyterians, Davenant having been an Agent for the King. While Lambert was reducing two or three ſmall Caſtles, and demoliſhing Chirke, Sir Thomas Middleton's Caſtle, Sir George Booth was making as faſt as he cou'd to London, riding in a Woman's Habit behind a Servant of his, another going before them. They put up at an Inn in Newport-Pagnel in Buckingamſhire, where the pretended Gentlewoman, either by alighting from the Horſe, or ſome other Action, rais'd a Suſpicion in the Maſter of the Houſe, that there was ſome Myſtery under that Dreſs; upon which, reſolving to make a full Enquiry into the Matter, he got together ſome of his Neighbours to aſſiſt him, and with them enter'd the Room, where the pretended Lady was; but Sir George ſuſpecting their Intentions, and being unwilling to put them to the Trouble of a further Search, diſcover'd himſelf. The Miniſter of the Pariſh, Mr. John Gibbes, gave the Parliament an Account of his being taken in this Manner, and he was remember'd for it after the Reſtoration. The Biſhop of the Dioceſe had not Patience to ſtay till the Bartholomew Act took place, but turn'd him out before for refuſing to admit the whole Pariſh to the Lord's Supper. Sir George Booth was ſent up to London, and by the Parliament committed to the Tower, where he was examin'd by Sir Henry Vane and Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, and confeſs'd he had receiv'd a Commiſſion from the King, and that many of the Nobility and Gentry had promis'd to appear with him, of whom he diſcover'd ſome, and deſir'd more Time to recollect himſelf concerning others.

Sir George Booth in the Tower.

The Earl of Derby was taken in the Diſguiſe of a Footman by one John Roden. Col. Shelcroſs and others were apprehended. Col. Brook, a Member, making his Appearance in the Houſe, confeſs'd at the Bar his joining with Sir George Booth, was expell'd, and ſent to the Tower for High Treaſon. The Parliament voted to diſſolve the Corporation of the City of Cheſter, and that the County be no more Palatine or diſtinct to puniſh them for their Forwardneſs in this Inſurrection. The Eſtates of thoſe who were concern'd in it were ſeiz'd, particularly Sir Thomas Middleton's, and 3000 Pounds of his Perſonal Eſtate was diſtrubuted among Lambert's Soldiers. The Eſtate of Mr. Henry Finch, a Presbyterian Miniſter above-mention'd, was alſo ſeiz'd for his endeavouring to reſtore the King, who afterwards ſuffer'd the Biſhop to take away his Living on account of his Religion, he being a Reform'd Proteſtant. The Houſe order'd a Letter of Thanks, and a Jewel of a thouſand Pounds for Major General Lambert; but on a Motion of Lieutenant General Fleetwood, to make him Major General of all their Armies, they avoided it, by voting, That there ſhou'd be no more General Officers than what were already made. Fleetwood mov'd it purpoſely to create a Difference between the Parliament and Lambert, who, he doubted not, wou'd reſent this Slur upon him.

Parliament diſguſt Lambert. P. 314.

On the 3d of September the Parliament paſs'd a Vote, That all Officers, when they receiv'd their Commiſſions, ſhou'd take an Engagement in this

A.D.1659 this Form of Words, and Dr. Wellwood aſſures us, Monk actually took it.

Engagement. I George Monk, do hereby declare, that I do renounce the pretended Title of CHARLES STUART, and the whole Line of the late King James, and of every other Perſon, as a ſingle Perſon pretending to the Government of theſe Nations of England, Scotland and Ireland, and the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging, and that I will by the Grace and Aſſiſtance of Almighty God, be true, faithful and conſtant to this Common-wealth, againſt any King, ſingle Perſon, and Houſe of Peers, and every of them, and hereunto I ſubſcribe my Name.

It is pretended by Gumble, Webſter, Price and ſuch Hiſtory Writers, that Monk did not take this Engagement, tho' every one elſe in Office were oblig'd to take it. But what's all this to the Purpoſe, had he not taken the Covenant, and the following Engagement for ten Years before, enjoin'd by an Act, You ſhall ſwear, that you ſhall be true and faithful to the Common-wealth of England, as it is now eſtabliſh'd, without a King or Houſe of Lords, which is equivalent with the laſt Engagement, and was taken by Monk, or he wou'd not have had a Company under his Command? On the breaking out of Booth's Buſineſs, Monk wrote a Letter to the Parliament, with freſh Proteſtations of his Fidelity to them, and his Zeal for their Service, alſo of his Diſapprobation of ſome Proceedings of the Army in England, meaning their Petition from Derby, " wherein " they aſpers'd the Parliament for not endea- " vouring to ſuppreſs the late Rebellion, with " ſuch Vigour as they ought, for not puniſhing " thoſe who had been engag'd in it, and for not " rewarding the Officers who had defeated the " Enemy. They preſs'd for a Settlement of the " Government, in a Repreſentative of the Peo- " ple, and a ſelect Senate, which wou'd have been " Officers, and ſuch only as the Officers pleas'd, " and what diſcover'd fully their arbitrary De- " ſigns." That Lieutenant General Fleetwood might be made Commander in Chief of the Army, without any Limitation of Time; Major Gene- ral Lambert, Major General of the Armies; Ma- jor General Desborough, Lieutenant General; Monk, Major General of the Foot: The latter was nam'd to keep him quiet, but he declar'd, he wou'd not join in thoſe dangerous Counſels, and that he wou'd keep his Officers within the Rules of Modeſty and Obedience to the Common-wealth. This was about four Months before he enter'd into a Treaty with the Common Enemy of that Common-wealth, contrary to all Covenants, Oaths and Engagements.

Monk Treache- rous, ibid. 701.

The Army, not unmindful of their grand Deſign, perſuaded ſome of their Friends in Parliament, to move for an Order to continue Alderman Ireton, then Lord Mayor, and one of their Confidents, a Year longer in that Office; and the Parliament ſeem'd at firſt inclin'd to grant their Requeſt, having perceiv'd great Diſcontents amongſt the Citizens of London, at the Time of the late Inſurrection; but, ſays Ludlow, " The " Spirit of Sedition was much allay'd, ſince the " Suppreſſion of the Rebels;" the very Stile of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and the Lord Clarendon's Artillery turn'd againſt him. " The Ci- " ty petition'd the Parliament, to permit them " the Enjoyment of their Priviledge, to elect " their Lord Mayor, promiſing to employ that " Favour, and all that they had for their Service; " upon which they were permitted to proceed " in that Affair, according to Cuſtom, and Sir " Thomas Allen, a Man of a moderate Spirit, " being choſen, they invited the Parliament, and

" chief Officers of the Army to a ſplendid En- " tertainment at Dinner." The two Sheriffs were, Francis Warner, Eſq; and William Love, Eſq; all three, Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, Preſbyterians, as were all the Aldermen, who were not Independants; tho' Robinſon, who was Sheriff, when Chiverton was Mayor, and Brown, who was Sheriff in the Mayorality of Andrews, being made Baronets after the Reſtoration, became moſt implacable Enemies, and cruel Perſecutors of all thoſe who were not of the Church of England, to which they had themſelves profeſs'd Enmity for twenty Years together. I cannot write Panegyricks upon a Cauſe which took Effect, and was ſupported by Apoſtacy, Treachery and Cruelty.

The Derby Petition coming to the Knowledge of the Parliament, with the Endeavours that were us'd to procure Subſcriptions to it, ſome who knew it to be a Contrivance of Major General Lambert, mov'd that he might be ſent to the Tower, and as Ludlow obſerves, " It had been " well, either that the Motion had better ſuc- " ceeded, or that it had never been made; but it " ended only in paſſing a Vote to diſapprove the " Petition, and the Proceedings thereon, and to " require Lieutenant General Fleetwood to ſend " Letters to all Parts, to obſtruct any further Pro- " greſs in it." This Petition was to have been preſented by Lieutenant General Fleetwood, but he ſhewing it to Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, before it got into the Houſe, Sir Arthur procur'd this Order againſt it; upon which the Officers met at Wallingford-Houſe, and tho' it was pretended to be only in order to declare their Acquieſcence in the Reſolution of the Parliament, yet they fell into furious Debates againſt the Parliament for diſcountenancing the Petition. Lambert, who was the main Mover in this Affair, tho' behind the Curtain, ſitting all the while ſtill, as if he had had no Hand in it, and rather encouraging than reproving their Exceſſes. The Reſult of their Debate was, that a Committee of Council of Officers ſhou'd prepare an Addreſs to the Parliament, wherein, after the ſpecious Promiſes of Obedience, " They de- " ſir'd that thoſe who ſhou'd hereafter miſinform " the Houſe, as had been done in their Caſe, " might undergo the Cenſure of the Parliament. " That a Commander in Chief might be conſti- " tuted without Limitation of Time; that no " Officer might be diſplac'd, unleſs by a Court " Martial; that the Act of Indemnity might be en- " larg'd; that the Revenue of Mr. Richard Crom- " wel might be augmented, his Debts paid, &c." The Parliament taking hold of that Clauſe in their Addreſs, wherein they promis'd Obedience, gave them Thanks for their Affections expreſs'd in it, and promis'd to take the Particulars of the Petition into their ſpeedy and ſerious Conſideration, and do therein according to Juſtice, and as far as they cou'd to their Satisfaction; in purſuance of this Promiſe, the Parliament proceeded to the Conſideration of the ſeveral Parts of the Addreſs, and had made a good Progreſs in it, when Col. Okey communicated to them a Letter, ſubſcrib'd by Major General Lambert, Major General Desborough, Col. Berry, Col. Clerk, Col. Barrow, the Committee nominated by the Council of Officers, which had been ſent to him to encourage Subſcriptions to the Petition lately read in the Houſe. It appear'd by this, that they intended the Petition to be the Ground on which they deſign'd to unite the Army againſt the Civil Authority: The Parliament finding that the Ways of Compliance, which they had been taking, ſerv'd only to encourage the Army to Mutiny and Rebellion, reſolv'd upon ſharper Counſels. And to that End, having caus'd the Door of the Houſe to be lock'd, and fully inform'd themſelves of the Matter of Fact, they voted the Commiſſions of thoſe who had ſubſcrib'd the Letter to be void. They voted the Commiſſion of Lieutenant General Fleetwood to be void alſo, and plac'd, by an Act, the Power of Commanding in Chief all the Forces in England and Scotland, in the ſeven following Perſons, Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Lieutenant General Ludlow, Major General Overton, Col. Morley, Col. Walton, Col. Monk. Then they caus'd the Speaker to demand of Lieutenant General Fleetwood, who was then preſent in the Houſe, if he wou'd ſubmit to this Reſolution of the Parliament, to which he anſwer'd, I will. They alſo declar'd that no Tax ſhou'd be levy'd upon the People, unleſs by Act of Parliament, under the Penalty due to thoſe that are guilty of High Treaſon. This Affair, tho' carry'd with as much Secrecy as cou'd be, yet came to the Notice of the Officers without Doors, who being ſurpriz'd at the Reſolution of Parliament, and convinc'd that the leaſt Delay might prove dangerous, us'd all poſſible Diligence in drawing together their Party, and preparing themſelves for their deſign'd Work.

In the mean Time the Parliament order'd the Regiments of Col. Morley, and Col. Moſs to march forthwith to Weſtminſter, for their Security, and ſent for the reſt of the Troops that were about Town, to draw down to them alſo, with all convenient Speed. In purſuance of which Order, Col. Okey endeavour'd to bring down his Regiment of Horſe, but the greateſt Part of them deſerted him. Major General Lambert was the Perſon who made the firſt Attempt againſt the Parliament's Guard, endeavouring at the Head of a Party of Horſe, to break in upon that Part, where Col. Morley was poſted with his Regiment; but the Colonel advancing, and aſſuring him, he wou'd fire upon him, if he perſiſted; Lambert reply'd, I will then go the other Way, which he did, after he had given Orders to block up the Avenues by the Mill-bank, with Carts and other Impediments, to prevent the Guards of the Parliament from ſallying out upon his Men that Way. The Army plac'd alſo a Party of theirs in King-ſtreet, and in the Church-yard, near the Abbey, ſome of Col. Morley's Regiment having already poſſeſs'd themſelves of the Old Palace-Yard. In this Poſture they continu'd all Night. The next Morning, October the 13th, that Guard of the Army which lay in the Church-yard, advanc'd with one Major Grimes, at the Head of them, towards thoſe of Col. Morley's Regiment that were in the Palace-yard. The Colonel being inform'd of this Motion, drew out thoſe he had with him, and haſten'd to their Relief. Both Parties being come within Piſtol ſhot, thoſe of the Army began to invite Morley's Men to come over to them, deſiring them to remember they had hitherto fought together, and it was unreaſonable now to become Enemies. Morley's Men endeavour'd to bring over Grimes's Soldiers, and the chief Officers at length interpoſing, 'twas agreed that both Parties ſhou'd for the preſent, retire to their Stations. On the other Side, Major General Lambert being advanc'd near the Party, which was commanded by Col. Moſs, demanded of them, if they wou'd ſuffer nine of their old Officers, who had ſo often ſpent their Blood for them, and with them, to be diſgrac'd and ruin'd with their Families? The Colonel anſwer'd, Tho' this ſhou'd be the Caſe, yet it was much better that nine Families ſhou'd be deſtroy'd than the civil Authority of the Nation be trampled under Foot, who deſign'd not the Ruin of any, but only to remove from their Commands nine Officers, who by their ſeditious Carriage, had render'd themſelves unworthy of that Truſt. But Lambert's Oratory was more prevalent with Evelyn, who commanded the Parliament's Life-Guard of Horſe, and marching forth at the Head of his Troop to do his Duty, was met by Lambert, at Scotland Yard Gate. His Men by the treacherous Perſwaſions of one Cathneſs, his Lieutenant, revolted, and the Major General commanded Evelyn to diſmount, which he did at the Head of his Troop, which went over to the General who was a Foot, and none with him. The ſame did ſome of Col. Moſs's Regiment, each Party uſing their Rhetorick to bring over as many as they cou'd. And ſome came over to the Parliament's Party, particularly three entire Companies of Col. Sydenham's Regiment. At laſt the Army gain'd their Point, and plac'd Guards both by Land and Water, to hinder the Members of Parliament from approaching the Houſe, tho' Sir Peter Wentworth being row'd by a Crew of able Watermen, broke thro' their Guard on the River, and got into the Houſe.

Lambert breaks the Parliament.

In the mean Time, the Speaker endeavouring to paſs in his Coach, thro' the Guards of the Army, was ſtopp'd near the Gate of the Palace-Yard, by Lieutenant Col. Duckenfield, who had been very buſy about the Derby Petition. Duckenfield ask'd the Speaker, whither he was going? He anſwer'd, to perform my Duty at the Houſe, and turning himſelf to the Soldiers, he ſaid, I am your General, and expect your Obedience; but the Soldiers forc'd his Coachman to drive back, and as he paſs'd by Wallingford-Houſe, wou'd have compell'd him to drive in at the Gate, telling the Speaker, he muſt go to Lieutenant General Fleetwood; but Lenthal commanded his Coachman to drive home, ſaying to the Officers, If Lieutenant General Fleetwood has any Buſineſs with me, he may come to my Houſe; ſo they deſiſted.

Col. Sydenham endeavouring to juſtify this Violence in the Council of State, ſaying, 'Twas the laſt Remedy made uſe of by a particular Call of divine Providence, the Lord Preſident Bradſhaw, tho' in a languiſhing Condition, ſtood up, and interrupted him, telling the Council, He was now going to his God, and had not Patience to hear his great Name ſo openly blaſphem'd; ſo he left them, departed to his Lodgings, and withdrew himſelf from publick Employment. Lambert and Desborough for the Army, Haſelrigge and Morley for the Parliament, had a warm Debate in the Council about this Tranſaction, but the Officers prevail'd in it, and it was agreed to ſave the Effuſion of Blood, that the Parliament ſhou'd not ſit. So the general Council of Officers undertook the Government, and to draw up a Form for a new Parliament, who were to ſettle all Things. After which the Council of State ſent Orders to the Soldiers of each Party to draw off, and depart to their ſeveral Quarters, which they obey'd.

The Council of Officers declar'd Fleetwood Commander in Chief, ſent Col. Barrow to Ireland, and Col. Cobbet to Scotland, to acquaint the Officers of the Forces there, of their Proceedings, and to deſire their Concurrence. They nominated a Committee of Ten, to conſider of Affairs, Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Major General Lambert, Lord Commiſſioner Whitlock, Sir Henry Vane, Humphry Salway, Eſq; Sir Archibald Johnſton, Lord Wariſtoun, Sir James Harrington, Major General Desborough, Col. Sydenham, Col. Berry.

Committee of State.

The old Council of State was diſſolv'd with the Common-wealth, which had laſted but five Months three Days. Sir Arthur Haſelrigge and his Party, continu'd their Conſultations how to reſtore

A.D.1659 reſtore themſelves, and curb thoſe of Wallingford-Houſe, who had thus affronted them; and they had Hopes of Monk, who they doubted not wou'd be diſguſted at the making Major General Lambert Major General of all the Forces in England and Scotland. The Council of Officers appointed Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Major General Lambert, Sir Henry Vane, Major General Deſborough, Lieutenant General Ludlow, and Col. Berry, to be a Committee to nominate Officers of the Army; and they alſo agreed upon a New Council to manage the great Affairs of the State till the Meeting of the new Parliament.

Committee for Officers.

COMMITTEE of SAFETY.

Committee of Safety. Sir Archibald Johnſtoun, Laird Wariſtoun, Preſident, Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Major General Lambert, Commiſſary General Desborough, Lieutenant General Ludlow, Lord Commiſſioner Whitlock, Sergeant Steel, Sir Henry Vane, Sir James Harrington, Walter Strickland, Eſq; Henry Lawrence, Eſq; Alderman Ireton, Alderman Tichburne, Cornelius Holland, Eſq; Henry Brandreth, Eſq; Mr. Thompſon, Humphry Salway, Eſq; Col. Sydenham, Col. Berry, Col. Hewſon, Col. Clerk, Col. Lilburne, Col. Bennet.

The Writers of Hiſtory, who are tranſported with the Bleſſings of the Reſtoration, without telling us one of them, enter here into the Encomiums of Major General Monk, who, probably, about this Time began to think that he might make himſelf ſome Body, by ſiding with the weaker Party, which was that of the Parliament.

Monk and his Wife's Character. To imagine that a Man of his Head cou'd have foreſeen, amidſt the Deſpair the Royaliſts were in on the ſuppreſſing Sir George Booth's Inſurrection, that he might be able to reſtore the King, is making him to have more Underſtanding, not only than ever he was thought to have had, but more than all the whole Party pretended to. Lord Clarendon ſays, It put an end to all Endeavours of Force, and that the King's Condition was a State of Deſpair, two or three Months only before he was reſtor'd. One need only conſider, that it was not reaſonable for Monk to expect that Lambert, who had reſtor'd the Commonwealth four or five Months before, wou'd deſtroy it again in ſo little time; and without his deſtroying it, Monk might have as well have thought of bringing in the Pope as the King. The Perſons he is ſaid to have conſulted, and to have been advis'd by, were Nicholas Monk, his Brother, a Country Parſon, of very mean Parts, afterwards a Biſhop; his Couſin Morrice, a Pedant, and a conceited Perſon, of no true Judgment, according to Biſhop Burnet, Dr. Thomas Clarges, an obſcure Apothecary, and his Siſter, Monk's Wife, a ravenous, mean, contemptible Creature, as the Biſhop of Salisbury terms her, and Greenvile, who, ſays the Biſhop, thought of nothing but of getting and ſpending. I cou'd expatiate on all theſe Characters, and ſet them further in their proper Light, or rather, their proper Darkneſs, if I were not apprehenſive that I muſt have very good Authority for every thing within this Period. Theſe were excellent Managers to overturn the Government, if unforeſeen Accidents had not fallen out one after another to lead Monk, Step after Step, till the Buſineſs was done before he was aware of it. Yet Echard, putting on a grave Air, tells us, After all, we have the greateſt Reaſons to believe he has not one Reaſon in the World, that his Intention to reſtore the King was very early. Another ſuch Writer affirms, He took a Commiſſion in the Parliament Service, the better to conceal his Intentions of ſerving his Majeſty ſecretly. Webſter, and Gumble, and Price, Eccleſiaſticks, tell us the ſame, which is not only contrary to the Truth, but to Credibility. Dr. Welwood, who ſpeaks better Things of him than he deſerv'd, ſays, I queſtion whether he deſign'd to reſtore the King till after Richard Cromwel was depriv'd, and I queſtion whether he had ever any ſuch Deſign at all, till after he was afraid he wou'd be reſtor'd by ſome body elſe. He proceeds, If he had really ſuch an Intention, he did not prove himſelf to be a very good Chriſtian in it, for he declar'd once again at that time for a Common-wealth, without a King, a ſingle Perſon, or Houſe of Lords, and formally renounc'd the Family of the Stuarts. All which is deny'd by the three Eccleſiaſticks above-mention'd. Warwick, after he has told us of another Twiſt of the Guts, tells us, No Man can ſay, that Monk deſign'd any more than a general Quiet of the Land; tho' Father Orleans affirms he was timerous and heavy, a Man of ſlow Underſtanding; yet it muſt be own'd he had Courage enough, of that ſort of Courage which proceeds from Inſenſibility of Danger, and not from a Deſire of Glory: Or if he had any Thirſt of Fame, it was no other than as it wou'd acquire him Poſts, and bring him in Pay, Biſhop Burnet informing us, that as to the latter he was perfectly ravenous. He and his Wife ſold all that was within their Reach, nothing being deny'd them for ſome time, till he became ſo uſeleſs, that little perſonal Regard cou'd be paid him. But the King maintain'd ſtill the Appearance of it, for the Appearance of the Service he did him. And indeed it was very little more than Appearance: Had much more been wanting to do the Buſineſs, it wou'd not have been done by him. He ſaid little, not having much to ſay; and when he did ſay any thing, 'twas with an ill Grace. He lov'd good Eating and Drinking, and had Plenty of it while he liv'd at Dalkeith, in the Houſe belonging now to the Dutcheſs of Monmouth, where he fed his Cavalier Gueſts high, and had always a Table for the Kirkmen, who wou'd come to him. A Man who can eat and drink well, is, in the vulgar Acceptation, very good Company; and he, who had no other Way of becoming popular, ſucceeded in that. While he was in Scotland he profeſs'd much Friendſhip for the Marqueſs of Argyle; and having receiv'd ſome Letters from that Lord, after he return'd to England, where he unboſom'd himſelf, as to a Friend, concerning the Cauſe they were then both engag'd in, Monk ſent thoſe Letters to Scotland when the Lord Argyle was to be try'd for his Life, which, ſays Biſhop Burnet, was a betraying the Confidence they had liv'd in; and it was the more vile and wicked, for that the Marqueſs was condemn'd upon thoſe Letters. He was little conſider'd, according to the ſame Author, after he had modell'd the Army, and we ſhall ſee in the Courſe of the Hiſtory, that he was more conſider'd before it than the Merit of his Services to his Country amounted to.

Peerage, p. 11.

Lieutenant General Ludlow, a very Wiſe and Brave Man, perceiv'd that the Miſintelligence between the Parliament and Army would neceſſarily bring in the King; and as he had a very juſt Conception of the Characters of that Prince and his Followers, he did his utmoſt to prevent it. In order to which, he endeavour'd to reconcile both Parties: At a Meeting of both, Sir Henry Vane, Major Salway, and Ludlow for the Parliament; Fleetwood, Lambert, Sydenham, and Desborough for the Army, the Matter was debated, and Lambert excus'd what he had done, by Promiſes of what he wou'd do. Mr. Ludlow procur'd another Meeting, and did all he cou'd to moderate the Warmth of his Brother-

*A.D.*1659 ther-Common-wealth's Men, who wou'd hear of no Accommodation, without being reſtor'd to their Seats in Parliament. Some of the Council of State wrote Letters to Monk to encourage him in his Reſolutions to ſtand by the Common-wealth, in Oppoſition to the Wallingford-Houſe Party. No ſooner was Col. Cobbet arriv'd at Dalkeith, than Monk order'd him to be ſeiz'd, together with ſome other Officers whom he ſuſpected, particularly Major Holmes, a very good Soldier, and good Engliſhman; who, Thirty Years after, loſt his Life, not in a very unwarrantable Conteſt, though againſt a very unwarrantable Government; he ſuffering Death for joining with the Duke of Monmouth againſt King Charles's Brother, King James. Dr. Welwood tells a Story, which if it had come off as was deſign'd, wou'd have ſpoil'd all the Projects that Monk himſelf, his Wife, or her Brother Clarges cou'd have invented. The Committee of Safety had form'd a Deſign to ſecure his Perſon, juſt as he was about Marching into England. They diſpatch'd ſecret Orders to Scotland, by the ordinary Packet which us'd conſtantly to touch at Dalkeith while the General reſided there; but this Packet was order'd directly to Edinburgh, four Miles off.

It happen'd that one of Monk's Life-guard accidentally met the Poſt turning out of the Road which led to Dalkeith, and finding he had not touch'd there, brought him back, notwithſtanding the Packet was directed to Edinburgh. Monk ſuſpecting ſomething, open'd all the Letters that were directed to the Officers of the Army; among which, there was one from the Committee to Col. Wilks, ordering him to uſe the moſt effectual, ſpeedy, and ſecret Way to ſecure the Perſon of General Monk, and to ſend him up to London under a ſtrong Guard, in a Frigate which lay in Leith Road; and to take upon him the Command of the Army till farther Order. Having taken out this, and what other Letters he thought fit, together with his own from the ſame Committee, full of high Compliments and Expreſſions of Truſt, he ſent away the Packet as it was directed. But having communicated the Matter to ſome particular Friends, he gave Orders for a General Rendezvous of the Army at Edinburgh, where he Arreſted Col. Wilks, and ſome other Officers of whom he was ſuſpicious, ſent them Priſoners to the Caſtle, and fill'd up their Commiſſions with others of his own Creatures; and alſo declar'd his Reſolution to his Soldiers, To adhere to the Civil Authority, and to reſtore the Parliament.

In the mean Time, the Officers at Wallingford-Houſe took away the Commiſſions of Col. Okey, Col. Morley, Col. Alured, and Lieutenant Colonel Farley; and were more ſolicitous to ſecure themſelves at Home, than to make Proviſion againſt Monk in Scotland; to whom Col. Whalley, Col. Gough, Mr. Caryl, and Mr. Barker were ſent to perſuade him to a right Underſtanding to prevent Effuſion of Blood. The Committee of Safety appointed Major General Lambert to command all the Forces in the North, where there were enough to have cut Monk's, and another ſuch Army to pieces, had not the Parliament Party, under-hand, given him Encouragement, and prevail'd with the Soldiery almoſt to a general Defection.

On the firſt of November the Committee appointed Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Lord Commiſſioner Whitlock, Sir Henry Vane, Lieutenant General Ludlow, Major Salway, and Alderman Tichburne, to conſider of a Form of Government for the Three Nations, as a Commonwealth, and to preſent it to the Committee of Safety; but nothing came of it. Monk ſecur'd Berwick, and attempted Carliſle in vain. Lambert having taken his Leave of the Committee, and earneſtly recommended to them to haſten and perfect the Form of Government, took Poſt for York; where he found Major General Morgan, famous for his Services in Flanders and Artois, who was then going to Scotland to confer with Monk; and promis'd Lambert to uſe his Credit with him, to bring him to an Accommodation. While Morgan was at York, he had ſeveral Conferences with the Reverend and Learned Mr. Bowles, one of the Four Miniſters maintain'd by the State in that City; who ſent a Letter by Morgan to Monk, importing, That the Lord Fairfax, and many others of good Intereſt were willing to join with him, but diſapprov'd his Declaration which was reſtrain'd to that Parliament only, which ſat after the reſt were ſecluded, and was fill'd with Proteſtations for no other Government but a Common-wealth. Thus we ſee here, that the firſt Perſon who inſiſted upon the Admiſſion of the ſecluded Members, which of courſe admitted the King, was a Presbyterian Miniſter. Monk, who was ſtill the Champion of the Republick, ſent Clarges to York, to ſatisfy Mr. Bowles, that whatever his Declaration ſaid, his Intentions were the reverſe of it, but till he had more Strength, he muſt not talk otherwiſe. Clarges was order'd to diſcourſe Mr. Bowles before he ſpoke to my Lord Fairfax: Bowles deſir'd him to ſtay privately in York while he tranſacted the Affair with that Lord, and he did it ſo effectually, that the Lord Fairfax return'd an Anſwer by him to Monk, aſſuring him of Aſſiſtance from himſelf, Mr. Bethel, Mr. Smithſon, and other leading Gentlemen of that large County, all Presbyterians.

Compl. Hiſt. p. 216.

Whatever is ſaid in the Earl of Clarendon's, Warwick's, and Echard's Hiſtories of Monk's Reſervedneſs and Taciturnity, muſt be taken as the beſt Turn they cou'd give to his want of Genius and Expreſſion; for he was not ſo ſilent and ſo reſerv'd, but Men of Senſe knew the very Bottom of him, and wou'd have prevented his doing Miſchief, if the People had not been ſo tir'd with Changes of Government, that they were reſolv'd to ſubmit to any thing, rather than make new Experiments of the late Forms. Lieutenant General Ludlow writes, It was manifeſt to me through all his Diſcourſes, by the Perſons he favour'd and advanc'd, by the Company he kept, and by the Courſe he ſteer'd, that he was not bound to the Harbour he pretended; and cou'd I have prevail'd with the majority of the Parliament to be of the ſame Opinion, he ſhou'd not have carry'd on his Deſign ſo ſmoothly.

Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Lord Commiſſioner Whitlock, Commiſſary General Desborough, with ſeveral Principal Officers of the Army, went to the Common-Council of London the eighth of November, and repreſented to them the Proceedings of Monk, and that his real Deſign was to bring in the King. They ſhew'd the Danger of it to the City, and the People of England, and counſelled them to provide for their own Safety, and to join for the Safety of the whole Nation, and for the Preſervation of the Peace. The Common-Council thank'd them, and ſaid they wou'd follow their Advice; the Officers of the Army in Ireland, and of the Fleeet, wrote to Monk not to oppoſe the General Council of Officers. The Officers of the Fleet, Capt. Richard Stayner, Capt. Richard Haddock, Capt. Chriſtopher Myngs, Capt. Charles Wager, and about twenty more, ſay, It is obvious to us where-ever we come, that few or none take pleaſure in your Actions but the Cavaliers, who

A.D.1659 who make their Boaſt of you, and place their Confidence in you; which, as it is irkſom to us to hear, ſo we truſt, and ſhall pray that the Lord will preſerve you from ſuch a Defection, as knowing that never any proſper'd that help'd them. Theſe diſcouraging Letters gave a Check to Monk's Proceedings, and Lambert's advancing Northward ſo ſtartled him, that he came to a Treaty, and nam'd his Commiſſioners, Col. Wilks (which ſhews that it muſt have been before Welwood's Incident of the Packet) Col. Knight, and Lieutenant Colonel Cloberry, who coming to London, made ſuch ſtrong Profeſſions of Monk's good Intentions, that they convinc'd many of his honeſt Meaning, and by their readineſs to accommodate Matters, took off much of Peoples Thoughts, either as to Monk's Treachery, or their own Danger.

In the mean Time Col. Whetham, Governor of Portſmouth, was prevail'd with to admit Col. Walton, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, and Col. Morley, with two Regiments, into that important Place; upon which they declar'd for the Parliament, and ſent for more Forces to join them. Theſe Officers, impos'd upon by Monk's fair Pretences, gave out, that they were all engag'd in the ſame Cauſe; and this powerful Diverſion, with the Defection of Vice-Admiral Lawſon, and the Officers of the Fleet, from the Wallingford-Houſe Party, gave Monk Encouragement to proceed, eſpecially after he had got 30,000 Pounds of the Scots to pay his Army; whereas the Engliſh Soldiers were unpaid, and in no likelihood of Pay, having a Vote of Parliament againſt raiſing Money without their Act, and there being no Parliament ſitting to raiſe any.

Monk's Intent was ſo well known, that 'twas the common Diſcourſe in Converſation; but the Parliament Party was ſo blinded by Reſentment againſt the Army, that they cou'd not, or wou'd not ſee it. Whitlock informs us, that having told the Convention in Scotland he had a Call from God to march into England, he caus'd an Engagement to be ſign'd, and then began his March about the twentieth of November. While this was tranſacting in Scotland, the Lord Willoughby of Parham, Alderman Robinſon, Mr. Brown, and Mr. Loe, came to the Lord Commiſſioner Whitlock, and confirm'd him in his Suſpicion of Monk's Treachery, and propos'd to him to go to the Lord Fleetwood, and adviſe him to ſend forthwith to the King at Breda, to offer to bring him in upon good Terms. Theſe Gentlemen talk'd like reaſonable Creatures, and wou'd thereby have got beforehand with Monk, who, without queſtion, intended to bring in the King. Whitlock, upon ſerious Thoughts of it, went to Fleetwood, and they had a long private Diſcourſe together on the Twenty ſecond of November. The Lord Commiſſioner told him, "That by the deſire of his "Brother, Sir William Fleetwood, the Lord Wil- "loughby of Parham, and the Gentlemen above- "mention'd, he was come to diſcourſe with him "about their preſent Condition, and what was "fit to be done in ſuch an Exigency as their "Affairs were now in; that it was more than "evident Monk's Deſign was to bring in the "King, and that without any Terms for the "Parliament, whereby all their Lives and For- "tunes wou'd be at the Mercy of the King and "his Party, who were ſufficiently enrag'd againſt "them, and in need of repairing their broken "Fortunes." How natural this was for Men to conſider! Their Fortunes, as Whitlock tells us, were broken, the King and his Followers enrag'd, and there cou'd hardly have been found ſuch another Man as Monk, to conſent to their Return, without ſome Proviſion againſt their Revenge and Rapine. Whitlock proceeded, "The "Inclinations of the Presbyterian Party gene- "rally, and of many others, and of the City, "and moſt of the Parliament's old Friends were "the ſame way, ſo was a great Part of the Sol- "diery; that thoſe here were revolted from "Fleetwood, and thoſe in the North were ready "to revolt from Lambert: That Monk had de- "luded Haſelrigge, and the reſt of the old Par- "liament Men; that all the incens'd Lords and "ſecluded Members wou'd be, and were active "in this Deſign; ſo that the coming in of the "King is unavoidable, and, I think, continues Whitlock, being that muſt be, it is more Prudence for you and your Friends to be the Inſtruments of bringing him in, than to leave it to Monk; by this Means you may make Terms with the King, for Preſervation of your ſelf and your Friends, and of the Cauſe, in a good meaſure, wherein we have been engag'd; but if it be left to Monk, we, and all that has been done, will be left to the danger of Deſtruction. We ſee what a wretched Opinion the Lord Commiſſioner had of his Head and his Heart, his Capacity and Conſcience. Had the King's Reſtoration, for which almoſt all Men wiſh'd, been in good Hands, as he was a well-natur'd Prince, he wou'd have comply'd with their reaſonable Requeſts; and though he wou'd not have put away his Followers, he wou'd not have put them in a Condition to bring ſo much Miſery on their Country as they did by their future Adminiſtration, in reviving the old Laudæan Perſecution, which was one of the Cauſes that produc'd ſuch terrible Effects in his Father's Time.

Ld. Willoughby, &c. deſires Whitlock to bring in the King.

Whitlock again; I therefore propound to you one of theſe two Things, either to give Orders for all your Forces to draw together, and your ſelf and your Friends to appear in the Head of them, and ſee what Strength you can make that will ſtand by you, and accordingly to take further Reſolutions. If you find their Strength but ſmall, as I doubt, then with theſe few you have, to go to the Tower, and take Poſſeſſion of it; and to ſend to the Mayor and Common Council of London to join with you, and declare for a Free Parliament, which, I think, the City will willingly do; and furniſh you with Money for your Soldiers, which will encreaſe their Number.

Lieutenant General Fleetwood ask'd Mr. Whitlock, Will you go with me into the Field and to the Tower? Whitlock reply'd, I will. Then ſaid Fleetwood, What is the other Way you have to propoſe to me in this Exigency? It is this, anſwer'd Whitlock, Send away ſome Perſon of Truſt immediately to the King at Breda, offer him and his Friends Service for his Reſtoration, upon ſuch Terms as the King ſhall agree upon; and for this Purpoſe give your Inſtructions to the Party you ſhall ſend upon this Affair.

Fleetwood ask'd Whitlock, Are you willing to go your ſelf upon this Employment? The Lord Commiſſioner reply'd, I will go, if you think good to ſend me. They had more Talk on this Subject; and Fleetwood ſeem'd fully ſatisfy'd to ſend Whitlock to the King, deſiring Whitlock to prepare himſelf forthwith for the Journey; and in the mean time Fleetwood and his Friends wou'd draw up Inſtructions for him, ſo that he might ſet out that Evening, or next Morning early.

Here was a Criſis for the Liberty and Happineſs of theſe Kingdoms, for the Glory and Happineſs of the King! If Whitlock had gone, and Fleetwood had prepar'd the Army to receive him, his Majeſty might have been on his Throne before Monk was got to Yorkſhire, and been reſtor'd by Men, who wou'd have taken equal Care of A Criſis.

A.D. 1659 his Honour, and the Subjects Peace and Safety, Spiritual and Temporal: They were virtuous, ſenſible Men, of a quite different Character from Monk, who had never till now a greater Name in the World than that of Oliver's Tool. But 'twas the King's and the People's ill Fate, that he fell into the Hands of a Set of Men, who thought of nothing but Titles, Honours, Riches, Pride, Vanity, Luxury, Revenge, Riot and Profuſion! In a Word, he was hardly warm in his Royal Seat, before we have this Deſcription of the Bleſſings he brought with him from Biſhop Burnet, "A Spirit of extravagant Joy ſpread "over the Nation, that brought on with it the "throwing off the very Profeſſions of Virtue and "Piety. All ended in Entertainments and Drunk-"enneſs, which over-run the three Kingdoms to "ſuch a Degree, that it very much corrupted "all their Morals," of which I ſhall have too much Occaſion to ſay more hereafter. For it is an undeniable Proof, that there was hardly any Shadow of Religion left, but what conſiſted in a flaming Zeal for the Laudæan Church, and more flaming Rage againſt the Presbyterians. All this wou'd have been prevented, had Fleetwood, Whitlock, and their Friends conducted this Affair. For without the Stale Covenant (which as much a Jeſt as it was, the King had taken all Sacraments to confirm as ſoon as he was reſtor'd to his Kingdoms) they wou'd have obtain'd ſuch reaſonable Terms, as wou'd have prevented the patching up of the broken Fortunes mention'd by Whitlock, at the Expence of the publick Treaſure, and the cruel Perſecutions which ruin'd the Men who had put it into the King's Power to ruin them. But the Criſis receiv'd it's unhappy Turn by Fate, againſt which no Wiſdom, no Care is a Defence.

The Bleſſings King Charles brought in with him.

Whitlock going away from Fleetwood, met Vane, Desborough and Berry in the next Room, and they deſir'd him to ſtay a little. Whitlock ſuſpected what wou'd be the Iſſue of their Conſultations; and within a Quarter of an Hour Fleetwood came to him, and in much Paſſion ſaid, I cannot do it, I cannot do it. The Commiſſioner deſir'd his Reaſons why he cou'd not do it? The Lieutenant General anſwer'd, Theſe Gentlemen have remember'd me, and it is true, that I am engag'd not to do any ſuch thing without my Lord Lambert's Conſent. Whitlock reply'd, Lambert is at too great a Diſtance to have his Conſent to this Buſineſs, which muſt be inſtantly acted. Fleetwood ſaid again, I cannot do it without him. The Commiſſioner reply'd, You will ruin your ſelf and your Friends. I cannot help it, ſaid Fleetwood; which put an End to this Diſcourſe and Negotiation. It was the King's Work to try every Thing, and every Body, as he did Col. Lockhart, Governor of Dunkirk, long enough after Monk's Brother Nicholas and Greenvile had been with him. Lockhart, after the Peace of the Pyrenees was made, of which we muſt make further Mention, went from Dunkirk to London, where he found Monk, and took all the Pains he cou'd to ſift him. But Monk diſappointed his Penetration by the moſt ſolemn and ſacred Vows, that he wou'd be true to the Common-wealth, and againſt Charles Stuart, about a Month before he reſtor'd him. There's no Defence againſt deteſtable Treachery, ſuch ſteady Defiance of Truth, and of it's God. An honeſt Mind can have no ſuch Conception of Fraud in a Man's Heart, when with a ſettled Countenance he calls the Almighty to witneſs to the Sincerity of his Intentions. Biſhop Burnet tells us further, Lockhart went away perſwaded that Matters wou'd continue ſtill in the ſame State; ſo that when his old Friend Middleton wrote to him to make his own Terms, if he wou'd invite the King to Dunkirk, Lockhart ſaid, I am truſted by the Common-wealth, and cannot betray it. There are not, in a corrupt Age, many ſuch Traitors to be found, who for Lucre will betray a high Truſt, and his beſt Patrons and Friends that confided in him. A Man's Soul muſt be extremely callous, his Conſcience ſear'd, and his Corruption next to Infernal, to turn Traitor to loving and bountiful Maſters, and ſell his Country, his Religion, his Friends, and whatever is precious to good Men, for a ſwelling Title, and ill-got Goods. Lockhart ſaid, if it had not been for the Diviſion in England, the Engliſh might have had what Terms they cou'd have ask'd from France or Spain. Col. Ingoldsby, his Son in Law, Mr. Lee, and the Lord Viſcount Howard, who all bore Kindneſs to the Lord Commiſſioner Whitlock, came to him the next Day, and had Diſcourſe of the Change which they ſaw coming on, inſinuating to him, that, as his Condition was, he cou'd not do better than go away to the King with the Great Seal. The Advice was good; and every ſuch Man wou'd have been a Treaſure to his Majeſty, to balance the raſh Counſels of the weak Men he had about him, if we may believe Cardinal Mazarine. But tho' his going off in that Manner wou'd have been only leaving a Truſt which was of no great Significancy in that State of Confuſion, yet Mr. Whitlock thought the very Appearance to be vile, wicked and abominable, and ventur'd his and his Family's Ruin, tho' of much more Conſequence than Monk's, rather than give his Friends Cauſe to think ill of him. Upon which the three Gentlemen before-mention'd made their Peace with the King in their own Way.

A.D 1659

Treachery, the Infamy of it.

Ludl.

Whitlock refuſes to go to the King.

The Truth is, Lieutenant General Fleetwood had not ſuch an entire Command of the Soldiers, as to be able to draw them whither he wou'd. Moſt of them had ſhew'd a Willingneſs to ſubmit to the Parliament for their Pay; and he had no other Uſe to make of them, than to joyn with the City, and declare for a free Parliament, which probably they wou'd have fallen in with.

Before Monk left Scotland, he had modell'd his Army for his Purpoſe. A great many conſcientious Officers ſuſpecting his Intentions, laid down their Commiſſions, for which they are blam'd by Ludlow, as thereby giving Monk an Opportunity to put in his own Creatures.

Treaty between Monk's and Fleetwood's Commiſſioners concluded

The Treaty between the Wallingford-Houſe Commiſſioners and Monk's was concluded: The latter was to have Money to pay his Forces, to be one of the Committee for Nomination of Officers, a Repreſentative of the People to be ſpeedily call'd, and Commiſſioners appointed to conſider of the Qualifications for the Members; and Commiſſioners were agreed upon by Lockhart refuſes to admit the King into Dunkirk.

Army in Ireland,

Lieutenant General Ludlow, Col. Barrow, Lieutenant Col. Dobſon.

By another Article of the foregoing Treaty, a General Council of the Officers of the Armies in England, Scotland and Ireland were to meet at Whitehall on a certain Day, and to conſiſt of two Perſons choſen out of each Regiment; as alſo

Deputies

A.D.1659 Deputies from the Fleet; which Aſſembly were to prepare Matters for the Conſideration of the new Repreſentative, and to engage for the Army's being obedient to the Settlement they ſhou'd make. This very wiſe and rational Scheme was again fruſtrated by the Management of the Wallingford-Houſe Party, who were loath to part with the Power they had uſurp'd, the Committee of Safety, which was the preſent Government, being their own Creatures. Cloberry and the reſt of Monk's Commiſſioners refus'd to ſhew what Authority they had from him to treat; it is thought they had no regular Authority: However, the Wallingford-Houſe Officers did treat and conclude with them, and by that Means Lambert's Forces were kept from attacking Monk, which Ludlow ſays he was afraid of, having found his own Troops wavering and doubtful. The Confuſion of the Times had infected the Heads of the Officers of the Army, and Lambert, who had as good a one as any in Europe, was ſo confounded, that he gave Monk all manner of Advantages, by modelling his own Army, and corrupting Lambert's, to prepare the Way for his fate March into England; whence he had good Intelligence that the Parliament Party were ſtirring every where, and wou'd be ready to receive and welcome him when he came: Beſides, the Taxes which maintain'd Fleetwood's Soldiers expir'd in January, and then he doubted not they wou'd all deſert to the firſt fair Bidder. In Expectation of theſe Things, which might have been expected with as much Thought as he was capable of, he ſat down quietly at a Village call'd Cold Stream, on the Scotch Side of the River Tweed. From which Village, and his Stay there, his Regiment, made a Regiment of Guards, was call'd the Cold-Stream Regiment, as is the Second of Foot-Guards to this Day.

There was a Project which wou'd have balk'd his Politick Views relating to the Taxes, had it ſucceeded, which too much expoſes the Deſigns of Men of two Faculties to be remembred in my own Words; take it therefore in Lieutenant General Ludlow's:

Tythes to be taken away.

" The Parliament had manifeſted, before their " laſt Interruption, an Inclination to eaſe the Peo- " ple of the Payment of Tythes." The Earl of Clarendon, Mr. Archdeacon, and the Compleat Hiſtorian, do in ſeveral Places urge this Sinking of Tythes againſt the Parliament, to prove they had no Religion, and were meer Infidels. We will not infer from thence, that theſe Hiſtorians and their Diſciples did build Religion on the Foundation of Revenue and Power, becauſe Tythes do inveſt Incumbents with ſo much of every Freeholder's Property, as to enable them to be very troubleſome to their Pariſhioners; but we can't help obſerving, that they avoid letting us know why the Parliament talk'd of it, and how they tended to ſupply the Room of Tythes. Ludlow has it, " The Parliament in lieu of them wou'd " have appropriated a certain Sum of Money for " the Maintenance and Encouragement of the Mi- " niſtry, to be diſtributed in a more equal manner " than had formerly been practis'd; hoping, that " if this cou'd be effected, the Clergy wou'd no " longer have any other Intereſt to promote than " that of the Publick, nor be a diſtinct Party " from the People." What Hopes theſe were? Why they might as well have hop'd for Reformation, Peace, and Union! If ſuch Clergy may not look upon themſelves as Independant of the State, and promote their own, or any other Intereſt, ſeparate from that of the Publick, they wou'd not pride themſelves much in the Eſtabliſhment.

Clergy, a diſtinct Party, p. 251.

The Lawyers, and ſurely they had as much Learning and Diſintereſt as the Lawyers of our own Time! were alarm'd at the Bill for Regulating their Practice, which, as it is now, is ſtill more a Grievance than it was then, fell in with the Clergy. Ludlow proceeds, " Theſe two Par- " ties therefore being equally concern'd to perpe- " tuate the Abuſes practis'd amongſt them, be- " came equally ſenſible of their common Dan- " ger; and in order to prevent it, Whitlock and " St. John for the Lawyers, Dr. Owen and Mr. " Nye for the Clergy, had at this time fre- " quent Meetings at the Savoy, and enter'd into " a private Treaty with the principal Perſons of " the Wallingford-Houſe Party, offering to raiſe " 100,000 Pounds for the Uſe of the Army, up- " on Aſſurance of being protected by them in " the full Enjoyment of their reſpective Advan- " tages and Profits; whereby we were left deſti- " tute of Hope to ſee any other Reformation of " the Clergy. Good God! If there was no Hope " of their Reformation then, when there was " every where to be ſeen the Face of Purity and " Piety, what Hope have we now, when there " is every where to be ſeen the Face of - - - - - - " Our Enemies will tell the reſt with Pleaſure, " than what they themſelves would conſent to, " nor any other Regulation of the Law, than " what the Chief Juſtice and the Commiſſioner " of the Seal wou'd permit." A bold Scheme this! But Monk's approaching, and Lambert's and Fleetwood's Soldiers falling off, hinder'd it's taking Effect.

A.D.1659 Lawyers againſt Regulations of the Law.

There was a pack'd Aſſembly of Officers pur- Army. ſuant to the before-mention'd Agreement. But no Deputies came from Monk, and none from Ireland. Thoſe that did come quarrell'd amongſt themſelves, and it broke up without determining any thing. But there was a Meeting of ſome Officers and ſome Members of Parliament in private, Sir Henry Vane, Major Salway, Lieutenant General Ludlow, Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Desborough, Berry and others, where the reſtoring of Richard was mov'd, and then the reſtoring of Charles Stuart, which was only hinted by Major Salway. The Officers and Members were ſo jealous of each other, that nothing which was ſaid by one had any Influence on another; they all ſtood on their Guard, in a Suſpicion that they all might have reconcil'd themſelves to Monk or the King, to the Parliament or the Army. No body knew on what Ground he ſtood. Every one fear'd it might every Minute give Way under him; and in this Perplexity, Diſtraction and Uncertainty, this Tyranny of Soldiers, this Impotence of the Parliament, what Government cou'd have been propounded to the Nation, which, if they had been in their Wits, they wou'd not have preferr'd to any they had liv'd under for twelve Months paſt? 'Tis true, they were reduc'd to one Choice, and they made it with the Succeſs of thoſe poor People who have but one Choice to make.

In the mean while the Parliament Party was Parliament. not wanting to promote their Intereſt, and to that End form'd a Deſign to ſeize the Tower. Colonel Fitz the Lieutenant had conſented to open the Gates to Colonel Okey, who was to bring 300 Men to change the Garriſon; but by ſome Accident or other the Deſign was diſcover'd to the Lord Mayor, who inform'd the Wallingford-Houſe Officers of it the Night before 'twas to be executed, and Major General Desborough went to the Tower, chang'd the Guards, caus'd Fitz to be apprehended, and left Colonel Miller to command there. Major Croke in Wiltſhire declar'd for the Parliament; ſo did the Governor and Garriſon of Hurſt-Caſtle; and what was much more to the Purpoſe, the Officers of the Fleet ſent Word to Sir Arthur Haſelrigge

A.D.1659 rigge at Portſmouth, that they wou'd not oppoſe the Parliament. With this News was Col. Walton diſpatch'd to Monk, who ſtill pretended to be the greateſt Republican and Presbyterian in the three Kingdoms. Ludlow very juſtly terms the Obſtinacy of the Wallingford-Houſe Party againſt the Parliament to be an Infatuation: Their Ruin was infallibly involv'd in that of the Common-wealth, yet they were harden'd as was Pharaoh, and as all proud Men are, who are fated to Deſtruction.

Cavalier-Plot. We are come within a few Weeks of the Reſtoration, and we yet hear not a Word of the Cavaliers, unleſs from thoſe whom Dr. Davenant, in one of his Political Eſſays againſt the Government, in King William's Reign, calls Under Spur-Leathers. The firſt that Ludlow thought worth taking Notice of was, while Monk lay quiet at Coldſtream. Several of them who fled beyond Sea, return'd ſecretly to London, chooſing rather to venture their Necks at home, than to ſtarve any longer abroad; and hearing there were great Diviſions in the Army, General againſt General, and Regiment againſt Regiment, they hop'd to ſurprize them thus divided, and cut them off one after another, whom they durſt not look in the Face, when united in a Body. The Troops in and about London were moſt expos'd to their ſudden Attempts, the City being exaſperated againſt the Soldiery, for pulling down the Common-wealth, who had always taken Care to oblige them, and endear them by all the friendly Acts that were in their Power, and many of them deſpairing of ſeeing the Parliament reſtor'd, fell in with thoſe who were for reſtoring the King, which very much encreas'd that Party in London, the Suburbs, and Neighbourhood. It was contriv'd among them, that they ſhou'd riſe againſt the Army in ten ſeveral Parts of the City, ſurprize the Soldiers in their Quarters, knock them on the Head, and proclaim the King; but it happen'd that the Army receiv'd Information of that Deſign too, the Night before it was to be executed, and being alarm'd at the Danger, they immediately ſent ſeveral Parties of Horſe and Foot to take Poſſeſſion of thoſe Places which were appointed by the Enemy for their drawing together, by which Means they ſeiz'd ſome of them, who at twelve o' Clock the ſame Night were already come together, compleatly arm'd in a Part of the Temple, near the Water-Side. Others of the ſame Company got over the Wall, and eſcap'd in Boats. Many of the Conſpirators were taken in other Parts of the Town, with Horſes and Arms; ſome of them confeſs'd that the Officer who commanded a Party plac'd near St. Paul's Church, had promis'd to join with them; but here is not the Name of one Royaliſt of Note. They who had contributed ſo much to the driving the King out of the Kingdom, contributed little or nothing to the bringing him in again; for tho' there was an Inſurrection ſoon after, which the Earl of Clarendon writes the Hiſtory of, by the Royaliſts, yet no Man amongſt them was ſo conſiderable, as to deſerve to be remembred. Indeed they were not Men in their full growth of Mind or Body. They were only Apprentices, What the Maſters durſt not publickly own, ſays the Lord Clarendon, the Apprentices did; meeting in great Multitudes to Petition the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, to procure a free Parliament, by which was always underſtood the King. Many of the King's Party, ſays Ludlow, Men of deſperate Fortunes, intermix'd with them, inſomuch that the Army thought it neceſſary to ſend Col. Hewſon with a Regiment to ſuppreſs them; accordingly he march'd into the City, where he was affronted to his Face, his Men fir'd upon from Windows, and Stones thrown down on them from the Tops of the Houſes, and as they proceeded in their March, they were ſo preſs'd on by the Multitude, that the Soldiers, to preſerve themſelves from Violence, were oblig'd to fire upon them, and having kill'd three or four of their Number, the reſt diſperſs'd themſelves for that Time; but Tumults were now become ſo frequent in the City, that the Army Party found themſelves oblig'd to ſend conſiderable Guards thither, almoſt every Day, to ſuppreſs them; one of which being commanded, by Col. Desborough, carry'd themſelves ſo roughly towards ſeveral eminent Citizens, that they greatly diſguſted the whole City. The Aldermen and Common-Council not thinking it convenient openly to patronize thoſe Diſorders, agreed upon a Paper to be preſented to the Council of Officers, wherein having diſown'd the late Tumults, they complain'd of the killing of their Men and of the Guards that were kept in the City, deſiring that they might be withdrawn, and the Guard of the City left to the civil Magiſtrate, who cou'd not otherwiſe undertake to ſecure the Peace, and that a Parliament might be call'd. The Council of Officers return'd for Anſwer, That if the Aldermen and Common-Council wou'd declare againſt the Family of the Stuarts, and promiſe to be true and faithful to the Common-wealth, without a King, ſingle Perſon, or Houſe of Lords, they wou'd withdraw their Soldiers, and leave the City to be guarded by itſelf. They acquainted them alſo that they had already reſolv'd to call a Parliament, and appointed Lieutenant General Ludlow, and five other Members of the Council, to confer with the Aldermen and Citizens, touching the Reaſons of thoſe Reſolutions, and of the late Proceedings in the City. A.D.1659 Tumults.

The Officers, and Aldermen met at Whitehall, and Commiſſary General Desborough, having ſhew'd the Neceſſity of doing what had been done in the City for ſecuring the Peace, and made large Proteſtations of the Army's Friendſhip to them, General Ludlow ſpoke as follows. Lieutenant General Ludlow's Speech to the Citizens.

Gentlemen,

Thoſe who are Members of the Army, can beſt inform you of their own Intentions, in the late Proceedings in the City, wherein I ſhall not intermeddle; but having this Opportunity, and being a Well-wiſher to the Common-wealth, I will take upon me to put you in Mind, that we have all been engag'd together in the Defence of our Rights and Liberties, againſt arbitrary Power. The City has been eminently inſtrumental in aſſiſting the Parliament and Army, to carry on that weighty Affair, by which you have acquir'd Honour to yourſelves, Eſteem among good Men, and Satisfaction in your own Minds. But withal it ought to be conſider'd, that by this you have highly incens'd, and vehemently provok'd the common Enemy againſt you, who tho' they may careſs you for the preſent, and make you the moſt ſolemn Promiſes of future Kindneſs, will never forget the Aid and Support you have afforded to the Parliament, during the whole Courſe of the laſt War, but will certainly take a Time to be reveng'd on you to the utmoſt. Wherefore I deſire you, as you tender the Peace of the Nation, and the Preſervation of your Perſons and Eſtates, that you will not ſuffer yourſelves to be deluded by our common Adverſaries, and ſeduc'd by ſpecious Pretences to promote that Intereſt which, prevailing, will not only render all the Blood and Treaſure that have been ſpent in aſſerting our Liberties, of no uſe to us, but alſo force us under

A.D.1659 ſuch a Yoke of Servitude, that neither we, nor our Poſterity ſhall be able to bear.

This Leſſon, for true Eloquence, Reaſon and Truth, is worth all the Declamations from the Beginning to the End of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion. It is what every good Engliſh Man ſhou'd learn by Heart, and it will defend him againſt the Deluſion and Seducements of the Enemies to the preſent Government.

Can one doubt but that the Cavaliers deluded and ſeduced the Citizens, and others with an extraordinary Concern for their Liberties and Properties, which they had been invading continually ever ſince the Death of Queen Elizabeth? That they groaned under the Calamity of Standing Forces; that their Hearts bled for the immenſe Taxes which were laid on the People; that they cry'd out againſt any War abroad, which was for the Honour and Intereſt of the Nation, as waſting of Blood and Treaſure for Allies only? That they were always preaching up Peace, if it was like to be attended with Loſs and Shame, and in deſpair of any Remedy to their imaginary Evils, but by bringing in the King? They were hearken'd to, they were believ'd! The King was brought in, and his Brother with him; to get rid of whom, it coſt the Nation more Blood and Treaſure, than had been expended in all their Wars from the Reformation to the Revolution.

Cavaliers falſe Pretences.

Lord Broghill for the King before Monk.

By the following Account taken out of the Manuſcript Memoirs of the Earl of Orrery, we ſhall ſtill find that Monk ran away with the Reward, when other Men did the Work; and that what is ſaid in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion about Sir Charles Coote's ſending Sir Arthur Forbes to the King at Bruſſels, is injurious to the Merit and Memory of the Lord Orrery. His Lordſhip, ſoon after Richard's Abdication, went to Ireland, where he was Lord Preſident of the Province of Munſter, and had great Power and Intereſt. He had not been long there before the Parliament's Commiſſioners in Ireland, Serjeant Steel, Lord Chancellor, Col. John Jones, Miles Corbet, Eſq; and Col. Tomlinſon, ſent for him to attend them at the Caſtle of Dublin, where he made his Appearance, and was required to give Security for his peaceable Behaviour under the preſent Government, the Commiſſioners telling him, he muſt be accountable for whatever Diſturbance happen'd within his Province. His Lordſhip anſwer'd, If the Power of the Province was committed entirely to him, he wou'd be accountable; but if any other Commander had Power in his Province, he wou'd not be reſponſible for what might happen where he had not the ſole Command. Serjeant Steel thought what he ſaid reaſonable, and prevail'd with the other Commiſſioners to take my Lord's Word of Honour, that he wou'd do his Utmoſt to keep the Province in Peace.

From that Time the Manuſcript Author informs us, the Lord Broghill finding all other Intereſts broken, or breaking to Pieces, reſolv'd to ſacrifice them all to the King's, and ſet himſelf heartily about it. He ſounded all the Officers of his own Regiment of Horſe, and Regiment of Foot, and found them very well diſpos'd to follow his Fortunes; only the Governor of Limerick, Col. Wilſon, not being immediately under his Command, he was for ſome time cautious of truſting him; but that ſtrong Place wou'd have been an inſurmountable Impediment to his Deſign; ſo he reſolv'd to venture, and try what he cou'd do with him: Accordingly he ſent a truſty Meſſenger to deſire him to come to my Lord as privately as he cou'd, for he had ſomething of the laſt Importance to confer with him about. The Governor came, and Lord Broghill taking him into his Cloſet, after due Preparations, began at firſt to diſcourſe in general of the preſent State of Affairs, how unſettled they were, and what Changes they were ſubject to, adding, What think you of them, Colonel? the latter reply'd, I cou'd wiſh they were otherwiſe, and ſettled ſome way or other. The Lord Broghill continu'd the Diſcourſe thus, I ſee plainly thoſe at the Helm will rather unſettle than ſettle them, and therefore it wou'd be well if ſome Man of Spirit wou'd ſtir and try to bring things into better Order, for they can't laſt as they are now. The Colonel ſaid, You, my Lord, are a fit Man to ſtir, I wonder why you don't; the Lord Broghill reply'd, I am not a Man of any great Intereſt, and am ſuſpected already. No doubt, ſays the Colonel, many Perſons will be glad to join with you in ſo neceſſary an Undertaking: For my part, I will be one. Well then, reply'd my Lord, Will you indeed join with me in any good Deſign? The Colonel anſwer'd, I will, there's my Hand, and I will ſtick cloſe to you to the Death. Lord Broghill proceeded, Theſe Kingdoms will never be well without a free Parliament, every one complains of the Oppreſſions of Committees; Will you join with me in declaring for a Free Parliament? I will, ſays the Colonel, with all my Heart, I will: Will you do it, continued my Lord, if there were a King at the Bottom? The Colonel anſwer'd, I like it the better. Then Lord Broghill acquainted him what his Intentions was, to ſend to his Majeſty and invite him to come to Ireland, where all Munſter was ready to receive him; adding, I will ſend to Sir Charles Coote in the North, and to Colonel Monk in Scotland, to deſire them to declare for the ſame Thing; which the Colonel highly approv'd of, and vow'd he wou'd live and die with him in it. My Lord enjoin'd him to Secrecy, upon which the whole Matter depended, and the Colonel immediately ſwore it. After which he return'd to Limerick to prepare for putting the Deſign in Execution; and by a Gentleman who accompany'd him thither from Lord Broghill's Houſe, he return'd a Letter to my Lord, wherein he ſaid, He wrote it and ſubſcrib'd it purpoſely with his own Hand, that if ever he prov'd falſe, that Letter might riſe up in Judgment againſt him.

The Reader will obſerve, that this is before Coote or Monk had taken one direct Step towards reſtoring the King.

Lord Broghill diſpatch'd a Gentleman in whom he cou'd confide, to Sir Charles Coote in the North of Ireland to diſpoſe him to engage with him in declaring for a Free Parliament; which Coote did very readily, wanting only ſuch an Invitation from a Perſon of Name and Intereſt; for he had taken Diſguſt at the Superiority of Lieutenant General Ludlow, and the Parliament's Commiſſioners, and thought that his Services, which had been very eminent, were not ſufficiently recompens'd by the Preſidency of Connaught. Lord Clarendon tells us, he had not ſo much Guilt as Lord Broghill, but I don't know how he cou'd make it out. He had kill'd more Papiſts than Broghill; he had hung up a Biſhop as well as Broghill; he had courted and ſerv'd both the Protectors as much as Broghill: But, in ſhort, there's no underſtanding what the Earl of Clarendon ſometimes means by Guilt, by Merit, by Religion, by Schiſm, by Rebellion, by Loyalty, and the like; they muſt very often be read backwards.

When the Gentleman return'd from Sir Charles Coote, and told the Lord Broghill what his Reſolution was, his Lordſhip got a Letter ſign'd by moſt of the Chief Officers in Ireland to invite the King, then at Bruſſels, to that Kingdom.

A.D. 1659 Lord Broghill's Brother, the Lord Shannon, was ſent with this Letter, which his Majeſty receiv'd before Matters were quite ſettled with Monk, and reſolv'd to embark at Calais for Cork, where the Lord Broghill promis'd to receive him with a good Force; but before he cou'd take Shipping, an Addreſs came from the Convention in England, which invited him thither, and put off the Voyage to Ireland.

In the mean time it began to be rumour'd that Broghill and Coote held Intelligence with Monk, and that their Deſign was for a Free Parliament. Coote, impatient of Delay, or rather greedy of the Reward he might expect for the Service, made that Declaration, having engag'd a good Part of the Army in Ireland to join with him in it. Col. Brayfield, Governor of Athlone, refuſing to do it, Sir Charles Coote brought down his Forces before it, and by tampering with ſome of the Garriſon, and falſly affirming that Brayfield wou'd deliver them up to him, he prevail'd with them to ſet open the Caſtle Gates, and to betray the Governor into his Hands. You ſee how the Work is done, Falſhood and Treachery again! Col. Temple poſſeſs'd himſelf of Carlo, and turn'd out Col. Pretty; Capt. Liſle diſpoſſeſs'd Col. Deſborough of Drogheda; Col. Fouke, aſſiſted by the Cavaliers, ſeiz'd Tonghall; Major Stanley had done the ſame at Clonmel; Col. Cooper was remov'd from his Command in the North, and a Friend of Coote's put into it with little or no Oppoſition, and leſs ſtill in Munſter, where the Lord Broghill declar'd for a Free Parliament, though not ſo haſtily as Sir Charles Coote did, which caus'd a Letter from the latter to his Lordſhip, wherein he tells him, The Deſign of declaring for a Free Parliament begins to take Vent, and I am therefore forc'd to declare before the Time determin'd, leſt I ſhou'd be circumvented or hinder'd by the Rump Party; upon which Account I deſire your Lordſhip forthwith to do the ſame, that the whole Force of the Enemy may not be employ'd againſt me, but be divided. Remember, your Lordſhip firſt put me upon this Deſign, and therefore ſhou'd not leave me in what you firſt put me upon. Lord Broghill, who was ready to begin the Work if he had thought the Time proper for it, cou'd not help thinking Coote had precipitated it; yet finding he had ſo done, he reſolv'd to ſupport him, and accordingly declar'd for a Free Parliament, which was then underſtood to be the King, whom they did not care directly to mention, it being made Treaſon by ſo many Laws. By this Means the Parliament Party were thrown into great Perplexity, and knew not which way to turn, being pent in as they were between two Powers, and Lord Broghill and Coote met with as little Oppoſition as cou'd well be expected from Perſons that were in Poſſeſſion of the Government. Theſe Gentlemen ſent Capt. Campbell to Monk to acquaint him with their Proceedings, but he had no more Concern in the Revolution in Ireland, than the Lord Broghill had in that of England: Both appearing in the ſame Cauſe, were both Inſtruments in carrying it on, and both ſucceeded in the ſeveral Iſlands where they commanded, without receiving the Aſſiſtance of a Troop or Company from each other. Sir Hardreſs Waller, Major General of the Forces in Ireland, ſhut himſelf up in the Caſtle of Dublin, and one Stanley, a rank Republican, and a Major in the Parliament Army, Lieutenant Colonel Warren, and others, immediately join'd themſelves to him. It was reſolv'd amongſt them to ſend out a Party to ſeize Sir Charles Coote, Col. Theophilus Jones, and their Adherents, who were come to Dublin by Encouragement from the Citizens; inſtead of which, Coote tamper'd with the Garriſon of the Caſtle ſo effectually, that they deliver'd up their Governor and his Adherents. Lieutenant General Ludlow was oblig'd to return to England, and there found no very good Welcome; for Broghill and Coote declar'd firſt for the Parliament only, and ſent Word to England that Ludlow was againſt them, in favour of the Army, which occaſion'd his being recall'd to vindicate himſelf, as ſoon as the Rump were reſtor'd, which happen'd the 24th of December.

Parliament reſtor'd.

Lieutenant General Fleetwood finding himſelf deſerted by moſt part of the Army ſent the Keys of the Parliament-Houſe to Mr. Lenthal, the Speaker, with Notice that the Guards were withdrawn, and that the Members of Parliament might attend the Diſcharge of their Duty. Col. Miller, Governor of the Tower, ſent him Word alſo, that he and his Garriſon were ready to receive his Orders. Col. Alured and Col. Okey muſter'd the Forces about Town in Lincolns-Inn Fields, where, after they had declar'd for the Parliament, they march'd by the Speaker's Houſe in Chancery-Lane, and ſaluted him as their General, as he ſtood at his Door. About the ſame Time Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Col. Morley, and the reſt of the Officers from Portſmouth, coming to London by the Bridge, were receiv'd with loud Acclamations. The Speaker, Lenthal, Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Weaver, and Mr. Berners, went to the Lord Mayor, and diſcours'd with him and the Sheriffs concerning the Parliament's meeting again, and found them to like well of it.

Admiral Lawſon wrote to the City, and to the Militia of London, to declare for the Parliament, which was no ſmall Argument, conſidering he lay at the Thames Mouth with Twenty five Men of War; and that Officer, who was a rigid Independant, was brought into this Temper by the Perſuaſion of Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, whoſe Merit, as to the Reſtoration, will be found upon Enquiry to be much more than Monk's. The Committee of Safety ſent Sir Henry Vane, and two other of their Members to confer with Lawſon, whom they knew to pay great Deference to Vane's Judgment; but when they came aboard his Fleet, they found Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper had been there before them, and ſo wrought upon Lawſon, that he was determin'd to declare for the Parliament, telling Sir Henry Vane plainly, he wou'd ſubmit to no other Authority.

From the Lord Mayor, the Speaker, Lenthal, went to the Tower, and, as General of the Common-wealth, remov'd Col. Miller, and put Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper in his Place.

At the ſame Time Commiſſary Desborough's Regiment, which was ſent by Lambert to keep the City in Awe, having march'd as far as St. Albans, and heard what was done by their Fellows at Weſtminſter, with whom they were to join, reſolv'd not to be laſt in their Submiſſions, but declar'd for the Parliament, and gave the Speaker Notice of their Obedience; which put an End to the Committee of Safety, after an Uſurpation of Ten Weeks Four Days.

The

The COMMON-WEALTH.

A.D.1659 ON the 26th of December the Speaker, Mr. Lenthal, and the Members of Parliament then in Town, met at Whitehall, and from thence walk'd together to the Parliament-Houſe in the Evening, the ſame Soldiers ſhouting as they paſs'd by, who not long before kept them by Force from ſitting.

Parliament. They immediately paſs'd ſome Votes for the Pay of the Army, and appointed a Committee to direct and order the Forces.

Committee for the Army. Alexander Popham, Eſq; Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, Thomas Scot, Eſq; Col. Okey, Col. Thompſon, Col. Alured, Col. Markham.

No ſooner was this Committee ſettled, than Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper gave a ſingular Proof of the Dexterity of his Management. He immediately procur'd a great Number of Clerks, whom they inſtantly order'd to tranſcribe as many Copies of a Form of a Letter as were wanted, wherein they recited, That it had pleas'd God to reſtore the Parliament, who had given them a Commiſſion to command the Army; wherefore they commanded him, the Officer to whom the Letter was directed, immediately with his Troop, Company or Regiment, as it happen'd, to march to - - - - - Theſe Letters were directed to the Chief Officers of any Part of the Army, who had their Quarters in any Part of the Kingdom. They were diſpatch'd away by particular Meſſengers that very Night; and coming to the ſeveral Officers ſo peremptorily to march immediately, they had not Time to aſſemble and debate among themſelves what to do. They had no other Intelligence but that the Parliament was reſtor'd, and that London, Portſmouth and other Parts of England had declar'd for them. The Officers durſt not diſobey, but all of them march'd according to their ſeveral Orders, ſome one Way, and ſome another; ſo that thoſe Forces which were the Support of the Wallingford-Houſe Party, were by this Means quite diſpers'd, and render'd perfectly uſeleſs to the Committee of Safety, who were hereby totally reduc'd under the Power in the Parliament, as ſo many diſarm'd Men, to be diſpos'd of as they thought fit. This fine Stroke of Policy is ſo ſuperior to any thing in Monk's Character, or in any of the Characters of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, that, after reading this, they will all appear lame and contemptible in the Article of Politicks. Thus is the Way every where clearing for Monk, tho' he was ſo far from being acceſſary to it, that he knew nothing of the Matter.

Digreſſion about Monk. Yet how do Webſter, Gumble, Price, Warwick and others labour to make him the main Mover in all things. Warwick calls him a great Man, without conſidering that there never was, and never will be a great Man a Traitor to his Truſt, Ingrate, Falſe and Forſworn. He was an Admiral, a Major General; he had beat, and been beaten, as was the Chance of War; but never had the ſole Conduct of any great Action, tho' he had the joint Execution, and was hardy enough to run into thoſe Dangers, of which he had no Foreſight. Warwick owns, that no earthly Power cou'd have deſtroy'd the Common-wealth, and that Monk's Treachery and Army wou'd have ſignify'd nothing, if God in this Work had not made his own Arm bare, and his Interpoſition viſible, by bowing the Hearts of all Iſrael to their exil'd David. This cou'd be done by none but him who ſaid he wou'd deſtroy Iſrael, but ſave Judah, but not by the Bow or Sword. You ſee how they cant, and yet how loudly do they vilify the Presbyterians for canting? Wou'd not one think that this exil'd David was the Man after God's own Heart? and that his Followers in Exile were the choſen People of the Lord; whereas in Truth Col. Doleman, a Cavalier, ſaid, If you call home the King, you will put the Government under Pimps and Whores; and Sir William Morrice, Monk's Couſin, afterwards made Secretary of State for calling him home, ſaid, Colonel Doleman was the trueſt Prophet he ever met with in his Life. Yet Warwick, fifteen or ſixteen Years after his Coming, and the fulfilling of the Prophecy, terms him the Favourite of Heaven, and the holy David of our Iſraelites, at the ſame Time that he rails at Cromwel for making uſe of Scriptural Phraſes. This is one of Echard's chief Guides in Stile and Fact, and no doubt he learnt all his Delicacy from thoſe delicate Expreſſions in him, a third Twiſting of the Guts, and a Man ſmells not his own Dung. I digreſs thus to ſhew what Metal they are made of, and if there is now need of it, to prevent the Reader's being impos'd upon by Names, and nothing elſe.

Warwick.

The Lord Commiſſioner Whitlock had very dexterouſly ſhifted with the Wind in almoſt all the Changes, and been almoſt of all the Councils, whether of State or Safety. The laſt ſtuck cloſeſt to him. The Republicans highly reſented his giving any Countenance to the Army, inſomuch that Scot ſaid, He ſhou'd be hang'd with the great Seal about his Neck; but Scot's Menace came home to himſelf. Whitlock however abſented himſelf from the Houſe till he receiv'd a Letter from the Speaker, and when he attended, he found his old Acquaintance, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Nevill, and others, very ſhy to him, which boded not well on that Quarter; ſo he retir'd into the Country till the Heat was ſomewhat abated, ſending the Great Seal to the Speaker by his Lady.

Major Wildman and Colonel Henry Ingoldsby, with 300 Voluntier Horſe, coming before Windſor, the Governor, Colonel Whitchcot ſurrender'd it for the Uſe of the Parliament, and Commiſſary General Desborough ſent them an humble Letter, acknowledging his Fault, and promiſing future Obedience.

The Houſe approv'd of Monk's placing and diſplacing of Officers, and order'd a Letter of Thanks to him under their Seal for his Fidelity and great Services; and indeed the Services he did them were as ſignal as his Fidelity. They alſo order'd Thanks to Vice-Admiral Lawſon, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Robert Wallop, Eſq; Col. Walton, Col. Rich, Col. Whetham, Col. Morley, Mr. Nevill, Mr. Love, Major Braman, William Lenthal, Eſq; Speaker.

Monk in placing and diſplacing Officers, little deſerv'd the Thanks of the Parliament, which moſt of the other Gentlemen did for their Fidelity and Zeal. Lieutenant General Ludlow informs us, "that in his March he remov'd many "Officers from their Commands, placing in their "room, Perſons of profligate Lives and ruin'd "Fortunes. In particular he diſcharg'd from "their Employments, ſeveral Officers of Col. "Zanchy's Iriſh Brigade, who had been the moſt "zealous for aſſerting the Parliament's Authority, and fill'd their Places with ſuch as had "been diſmiſs'd for their vicious Lives, and cor-"rupt Principles," which was extreamly natural ral and agreeable to the Account the ſame Author gives of his own Morals and Principles. Harry Martin, the only merry Member of the Rump, ſaid in the Houſe, that Monk was like a Taylor, who being ſent for to make a Suit of Cloaths, brought with him a Budget full of Carpenter's Tools, and being told, ſuch Things were not at all fit for the Work he was deſir'd to do, he reply'd, It matters not, I'll do your Buſineſs I'll warrant ye. The Lord Clarendon, and all writing Royaliſts, labour nothing more than to ſilence Monk's Taciturnity, his working like a Mole under Ground, and the like, whereas every one, but the Cavaliers, cry'd out againſt the Bare-facedneſs of his Deſign to bring in the King, and the Madneſs of the Parliament and Army to let him. If they cou'd have been reconcil'd, even after Monk had lodg'd himſelf at White-hall, they might have turn'd him out, as eaſily as they did Richard Cromwel: And he muſt have been content with Richard's Impotence and Obſcurity afterwards.

P. 643 Martin's Saying of Monk.

The Order of the Army Commiſſioners abovemention'd coming to Lambert as well as to other Generals, he found himſelf all at once deſerted by both Officers and Soldiers. Lord Clarendon aſſures us, the Parliament ſent him no other Order, and that being abandon'd by his Soldiers, he was left in a moſt diſconſolate Condition, and with ſcarce 100 Men attending him, return'd towards London, where, as ſoon as he arriv'd, he was apprehended and confin'd firſt to his own Houſe, and then to Holmby, the Place of the late King's Confinement. Where was Monk's Hand in all theſe things? He lies quiet at Cold-Stream, and when the Way is thus made for him, he moves heavily forward, as if he did not think himſelf out of Danger, tho' there was not a Man in Arms againſt him, after the Parliament reaſſum'd the Government, and own'd him in all his Proceedings. On the laſt Day of the Year the Houſe agreed upon Perſons to be a Council of State, whoſe Names were as follow; Lord Fairfax, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Col. Morley, Col. Walton, William Love, Eſq; Robert Wallop, Eſq; Thomas Scot, Eſq; John Weaver, Eſq; Robert Reynolds, Eſq; Luke Robinſon, Eſq; Miles Corbett, Eſq; Major General Monk, Mr. White, Mr. Rolls, John Say, Eſq; Thomas Challoner, Eſq; Alderman Foot, John Fagg, Eſq; Serjeant Terrel, Hugh Bethel, Eſq; Mr. Berners, Mr. St. John, Sir Thomas Widdrington, Sir James Harrington, Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, Vice-Admiral Lawſon, Henry Nevil, Eſq; ——— Love, Eſq; Col. Dixwell, Col. Thomſon.

Lambert confin'd.

Council of State.

Col. Dixwell was made Governor of Dover, and all Poſts and Offices diſpos'd of by the Parliament were given to Men in whom they might confide.

During theſe Tranſactions at home, the King and his Courtiers were in great Anxiety and Melancholy abroad. They were flatter'd from time to time with Hopes of ſome ſudden Change in England in their Favour, but ſcarce receiv'd the News which brought them Hope, before the next Letters brought them Deſpair. All Attempts for the King's Reſtoration prov'd in vain; and upon the Suppreſſion of Sir George Booth's Inſurrection, the King, who was in Bretagne waiting for Advices to call him over to England, left France, and poſted away to St. John de Luz, on the Frontiers of France and Spain, where the Miniſters of the Two Kings were treating of a Peace and a Marriage to confirm it. This other ill-advis'd Step only expos'd him to ſuch ill Uſage as never Prince met with from Crown'd Heads, much leſs from their Miniſters. Princes ſhou'd be ſure of their Treatment before they put their Perſons into the Hands of Strangers. There's a long Account of this Journey in the Lord Clarendon and Mr. Echard's Hiſtories, to which I refer thoſe whoſe Curioſity is inſatiable. What I ſhall ſay after good Authorities will, I think, ſhew, that it was not worth ſo many Words.

King Char. II.

Cavaliers in Deſpair.

A. D. 1659

It is very ſhort in Biſhop Burnet, "The King "went to the Meeting at the Pyrenees, where "Cardinal Mazarine and Don Lewis de Haro "were negotiating a Peace. He apply'd to both "Sides to try what Aſſiſtance he might expect "upon their concluding a Peace. It was then "known that he went to Maſs; yet it was carry'd ſecretly, and was confidently deny'd.

Dr. Wellwood is a little longer about it. "King "Charles made this long Journey to no Purpoſe. "It's true, Don Lewis de Haro receiv'd him "with all poſſible Marks of Reſpect: But the "Cardinal poſitively deny'd him Acceſs. All he "cou'd be brought to, after ſeveral Meſſages, "was to allow the Duke of Ormond to talk to "him upon the Road from St. John de Luz to "the Place of Treaty, as if it had been but an "accidental Rencounter. Ormond obtain'd no-"thing of the Cardinal but general ambiguous "Anſwers, till being preſs'd, he told Ormond "plainly, All my Maſter can do for his Couſin "the King of England, is to compaſſionate his "Misfortunes, as not being in a Condition him-"ſelf to break with the Government of England, "with which his Affairs oblige him to keep a "good Correſpondence. Beſides this Neglect of "Mazarine's, King Charles had the Mortifica-"tion to ſee Ambaſſador Lockhart receiv'd at "the ſame time with the greateſt Pomp and "Splendor, having the Cardinal's Coaches and "Guards ſent a Day's Journey to receive him, "and the Cardinal giving him the Right Hand, "which was a Reſpect he deny'd the Ambaſſa-"dors of Crown'd Heads. Nor was Don Lewis "kinder upon the Matter to King Charles; for "having ask'd the Command of the Army in "Flanders, which the Prince of Conde was by "the Treaty to quit, Don Lewis refus'd it, as "any one might have reaſonably expected.

The Conteſts among Authors about King Charles the Second's Religion, are the more pleaſant, becauſe nothing is more certain than that he had no Religion at all in a Chriſtian Senſe of the Word; but if Profaneneſs and Lewdneſs may conſiſt with Religion in the ſame Perſon, he may be allow'd to be a Papiſt, tho' not of ſo late ſtanding as Echard makes it, this Journey to St. John de Luz, from whence paſſing to Fonterabia in Spain, he was there reconcil'd to the Romiſh Idolatry, as were alſo the Earl of Briſtol and Sir Henry Bennet, whom he made Secretary of State, an Earl, and Lord Chamberlain, if Dependance cou'd be made on any thing in Echard's Hiſtory, which, as he boaſts of this, he had not from the publick Writers. This Vanity is the more extravagant and whimſical, for that there is not in any Book more Trifling, more Hearſay, more Poverty, and more of every thing which debaſes Hiſtory! The Biſhop of Salisbury affirms, he chang'd his Religion before he left Paris, ſeveral Years before this pretended Converſion in Spain, as was well known to Cardinal de Retz and the Lord Aubigny. The Marqueſs de Roucy, a Hugonet, related to De Retz, being much preſs'd by him to turn Papiſt, urg'd to him, that the Proteſtant Religion muſt certainly be ruin'd, for the Proteſtants cou'd expect no Protection from England, both the Princes, Charles and James, being turn'd Papiſts. Monſieur de Roucy told this in great Confidence to the Paſtor of the French Church, who, after his

P. 73.

A.D. 1659 Death, ſent Biſhop Burnet Advertiſement of it. Sir Allen Broderick declar'd on his Death, that King Charles the Second made Profeſſion of the Popiſh Religion at Fontainbleau, where Sir Allen attended him, before he was ſent out of France to Colen. After three ſuch Witneſſes, what becomes of Echard's rare Account, never printed before, that he turn'd Papiſt at Fonterabia? and with what Front can People extol this King's Zeal for the Proteſtant Church of England, when he was a Member of the Church of Rome! and what Opinion muſt one have of the Honour, the Honeſty of thoſe, who got an Act paſs'd, after he was reſtor'd, which made it Ruin for any one to ſay the King was a Papiſt! one of the firſt Bleſſings of that Bleſſed Reign. Echard wonders why this ſhameful Hypocriſy is ſunk in the Earl of Clarendon's Hiſtory. A little Thing will make him wonder. For my Part, whatever is ſaid, or not ſaid, in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, is not ſtrange to me, for they were to do, and ſay any thing that wou'd cover the Wolf with a Sheep's Cloathing, and the Sheep with a Wolf's. King Charles wanted not good Senſe, nor good Nature, when he was not a Slave to his Pleaſure or Paſſion, and his Severity and Ingratitude to the Presbyterians, were inſpir'd by Hyde, Coſins, Morley and others, his Companions in Exile, who cou'd never forget how they were pinch'd by Want for twelve Years together, and came home ready to burn with Revenge. The Biſhop of Salisbury writes, He ſeem'd to have no Senſe of Religion, both at Prayers and Sacraments; he took Care to ſatisfy the People, that he was in no ſort concern'd in that about which he was employ'd, there was not the leaſt Appearance of Religion in him. He ſaid, he cou'd not think, God wou'd make a Man miſerable, only for taking a little Pleaſure out of the way. "He diſguis'd his Po- "pery to the laſt, but cou'd not help ſpeaking "againſt the Reformation. He commended In- "fallibility and implicit Faith." This is the King whom Sheldon, Morley, and Coſins were wont to ſtile their moſt religious King in their moſt ſolemn Worſhip of God. This is the King whom Hyde, Warwick, Turner, &c. extol for his Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, and his Love to the Church! You have it in all their Hiſtories and Speeches at the ſame time that ſome of them knew he was a Papiſt, and all of them knew he was an Atheiſt in his Life and Converſation. This is the King of whom Echard tells us, that Sir Edward Hyde wrote in his Letters to Dr. Berwick, The King has done all that is in his Power for the Church; he means while he was at Paris, Cologne, Bruſſels, Bruges, St. Maloes and Breda. I'll quote no more of it, 'tis too incredible, as is the next Paragraph, that the Duke of York's Marriage with Chancellor Hyde's Daughter, was kept a Secret from the Chancellor. I cannot animadvert upon it out of Reſpect to the two great Queens that ſprang from it, whoſe Memory will be immortal and dear to all good Engliſh Men, and good Proteſtants. But the Chancellor's Hiſtory is never the truer for that, nor the leſs liable to Objection. His Majeſty return'd from Fonterabia to Bruſſels, while Monk lay on the Banks of the Tweed, and he had but cold Comfort from England; all Advices from thence, ſpeaking only of the Reſtoration of the Common-wealth, at whoſe Name only the Princes of Europe trembled, and the Royaliſts in Exile were confirm'd in their Deſpair.

A wicked Saying of his.

Major General Monk, Major General Morgan, Col. Fairfax, Col. Rede, Col Lidcot, Col. Hubblethorn.

In his March he enter'd Werk Caſtle, belonging to the Lord Grey, and took away a conſiderable Sum of Money, which Gumble, his Chaplain ſays, was reſtor'd after the Reſtoration of the King. Coke p. 87. Monk enters England.

On the 2d of January he took up his Quarters at Weller, where he receiv'd Letters from the Parliament, thanking him (to uſe Whitlock's Words) for his high Deſervings, and to deſire him to come up to London, as ſpeedily as he can.

He came to Morpeth on the 5th of January, where he was met by Alderman Fowke, Alderman Robinſon, and a Committee of the City Common-Council, whoſe Inſtructions were to deſire him to uſe his Intereſt to procure a Free Parliament. The next Day he enter'd Newcaſtle, and thence diſpatch'd Gumble with Letters to the Parliament, and Council of State, full of Proteſtations of Duty and Fidelity. His Meſſenger receiv'd Aſſurances from both Parliament and City, that they wou'd favour his Patron's Deſign; the former gave him a hundred Pounds, and recommended him to be a Fellow of Eaton College, whoſe Abilities hardly qualify'd him to be an Uſher to a Country School; however, he was equal enough to the Poſt he was in. When he return'd to his Maſter, he found Monk at Manſfield, and acquainted him with the Diviſions at London, and the Inclinations of the City, which with the Reception he had met with in Yorkſhire, puff'd him up with a Swell of Pride and Arrogance, the ſure Effect of Succeſs in narrow Minds. Vows Fidelity to the Parliament. His Pride.

The Lord Fairfax, Sir Hugh Bethel, Col. Smithſon, Mr. Arthington, and other Yorkſhire Gentlemen, had appear'd in Arms at York, before Monk came thither, and were immediately join'd by Zanchy's Iriſh Brigade of 1500 Men, the Rear of Lambert's late Army. Lord Fairfax invited Monk to Appleton, his Seat in that County, and ſays Echard, "Much was expected "of two ſuch great Men and Soldiers." Then he gives the beſt Reaſon he had, why there were ſuch Expectations. Becauſe of their Taciturnity. Much was expected from Perſons noted for ſaying nothing. This way of Ratiocination runs thro' all their Books, whether Story Books or others. The Lord Fairfax, and all the Gentlemen with him, deſir'd either the reſtoring the ſecluded Members, or a Free Parliament, which he was well pleas'd with; but, ſays Echard, took all Occaſions publickly to declare for the Common-wealth. He adds, Mr. Bowles the Miniſter, one of the Earl of Clarendon's illiterate factious Aſſembly-Men, being alone with him at Mid-night, went further than a Free Parliament, urging him to ſtay at York, and declare for the King, aſſuring him of great Aſſiſtance; which being immediately told Mr. Price, another ſuch worthy Chaplain as Gumble, he put him in Mind of the Saying of Guſtavus, when he enter'd the German Empire, If my Shirt knew what I intended to do, I wou'd tear it from my Back and burn it. The Truth is, he then intended nothing but to make a Penny of his Market in that Way which offer'd ſooneſt and ſafeſt. Warwick confeſſes, No Man can poſitively Monk treacherous.

A.D.1660 ſay, he deſign'd any more than a general Quiet of the Land, and ſo he fram'd all his Deſigns ſuitable to the Opportunity; then follows an Example of his Oratory and Politeneſs, that were p. 409. given him, but that he wiſh'd that, They were all bred at ſome Univerſity or other, all fine Scholars, Eloquent and Learned, tho' the Remnants of Latin in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, might eaſily have been pick'd up by Indexes, as the Texts of Scripture before each Book were by Concordances, and Doctors, and College-Men cou'd not be without ſuch Helps. Echard goes on, So the General wiſely reſolv'd to ſleep, till he got within the Walls of London, and then to open his Eyes extreamly metaphorical, and the more juſt, becauſe there is a Heavineſs in the Character of his Hero, which is very dormitorious. In Yorkſhire, he gave Lambert and Lilburn's Regiments of Horſe, to Sir Hugh Bethel and Col. Smithſon, both Presbyterians ſtill, and there is not a Word ſaid of a Cavalier in all his Monk's further Treachery. March to London. He receiv'd a Letter from the Devonſhire Gentry, who for a long while Ludl. 811. were as proud of their Countryman Monk, as he was of his Garter, when he had one. They wrote to him for the Reſtitution of the ſecluded Members, and he in anſwer to them, ſaid, I cannot do it, becauſe it is not only contrary to my own frequent Declarations, but directly oppoſite to the Intereſt of the Common-wealth, as well as to that of the Army, a Thing not to be done by me, or born by you, being a total Reverſing of all that has been done for the laſt twelve Years in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and tending to charge the Nation with all the Blood that has been ſhed during that Time. Here does this falſe, forſworn Monk's Letter againſt the Church and King. Man, take on him the Blood of 2 or 300,000 Men, who fell during that twelve Years. For as we ſhall ſee preſently, he himſelf reſtor'd theſe ſecluded Members, and then, to ſhew how he hated the Church of England, he adds, It will unſettle the Poſſeſſion of Deans, Chapters, Delinquents, Crown, and Rebel Lands. He calls the Royaliſts Rebels, How does this agree with Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory of Rebels? If we ſuffer Monarchy to return amongſt us after ſo long a Fruition of a Common-wealth, we ſhall be driven to 812. a worſe Condition than ever, and put paſt all Hopes of appearing to defend our Liberty. He printed this Anſwer, that his Perfidy might remain upon Record againſt him. Is it not Prodigious that the Heart of Man ſhou'd be capable of ſuch a Mixture of Bigotry and Villainy? I am ſorry that it is made neceſſary to defile Hiſtory with ſuch a Word. There is an Hiſtorian, and a Dignitary, who ſpeaking of Fleetwood's p. 749. Dejection, and that he ſaid, God had ſpit in his Face, upbraids him that he cou'd not be bravely perfidious for Church and King as Monk was: No, though every Man of common Underſtanding in the Kingdom muſt then have deſir'd the Reſtoration of the King and the old Conſtitution, to be deliver'd from an odious Anarchy, yet no Man but Monk cou'd have done it, in defiance of a hundred Oaths and Proteſtations, and with no manner of Concern for the future Intereſt and Liberty of his Country.

Parliament. In the mean while, the Parliament paſs'd a Vote to confirm the Seclusion of the Members in 1648, who about ſix Weeks after were admitted by Violence, Monk being the Agent, as they had been ſecluded by Violence, when Pride was the Agent. Nor muſt it be thought a Leſſening to Monk, that Pride, the Brewer, is nam'd with him, who, according to Warwick, deſcended from the Plantagenets by the help of ſome Harlotry: For I think they became ſo nearly related, as that Pride's Son or Grandſon pretended Heirſhip to his Eſtate, in the great Trial between Bath and Montague about it in King William's Reign. I heard his Name mention'd, and ſomething relating to Monk's and his Lady's Virtue, which, though no Secret Hiſtory is too biographical and too ſcandalous for this. A.D.1660

The Parliament paſs'd a Bill to Renounce the Title of Charles Stuart, and the Line of King James. 'Tis pretended Monk and others boggled at it: What then, they had all done it before: They renounc'd Charles Stuart in renouncing a King and Houſe of Lords, as by the Engagement often mention'd; nay, Monk was not content with ſuch a Renunciation himſelf, he made the Scotiſh Nobility abjure him and his Intereſt, as we read in Coke; and in Orleans, That he always abhor'd that wicked Oath, which is p. 92. juſt as true as where he ſays he was a great Genius.

Sir Henry Vane being ſent for by the Parlia- Sir Henry ment, came and took his Place in the Houſe, and Vane was queſtion'd for his acting during the late In- expell'd. terruption; to which he made an ingenious Anſwer, and it was Voted, That he ſhou'd forthwith repair to his Houſe at Raby in the County of Durham, and remain there during the Pleaſure of the Parliament, of which he was diſcharg'd from being a Member.

Commiſſary General Desborough, Col. Aſhfield, Col. Berry, Col. Kelſey, and Major Creed, were confin'd to their Houſes furtheſt off from London.

Thomas Scot, Eſq; was made Secretary of State, and Cuſtos Rotulorum of the City of Weſtminſter: He, and Luke Robinſon, Eſq; were order'd by the Houſe to meet Monk, to congratulate his great Services, good Succeſs, and Repairing towards London, and to let him know the Parliament wou'd provide Money for his Forces. They expell'd Col. Sydenham and Major Salway for acting againſt them during the Interruption, and ſent one Downing their Agent to Holland. Downing. He was an obſcure New England Fanatick, who had a ſort of American Learning, which got him the Character of a Man fit for Negotiation; and his Enthuſiaſm and blind Zeal againſt Epiſcopacy and Monarchy, prefer'd him under the two Protectors.

The Parliament appointed new Commiſſioners Commiſſi- for Ireland: Sir Hardreſs Waller, John Weaver, oners for Eſq; Robert Goodwyn, Eſq; Sir Charles Coote, Ireland, Col. Markham; but Coote let them ſhare no more of the Government than he thought fit.

Sir Thomas Widdrington, Serjeant Tyrrel, Ser- and of the jeant Fountain were made Commiſſioners of the Great Seal. Great Seal about four Months before the Author of the Hiſtory of the Rebellion was made Lord High Chancellor of England. The Parliament paſs'd an Order for ſelling the Eſtates of thoſe who were with Sir George Booth.

Before Monk arriv'd at London, he wrote to the Parliament, that for the greater Security of the publick Peace, the Forces which were in and about London amounting to 7 or 8000 Horſe and Foot, more than enough to have driven him and his Army into the Caledonian Sea, if the Parliament had kept them where they were, and made uſe of them for that Purpoſe, might remove. But Infatuation was upon them, and purely out of Spite to Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, who pretended to have the greateſt Intereſt in theſe Forces. They had ſo contriv'd it, that Monk ſhou'd write that Letter for their Removal, as we are told by General Ludlow, who was upon the Spot, and in the Se- 814. cret of the Counſels at that Time. Yet War- Warwick wick aſſures us the Removal of thoſe Forces was errs as to entirely owing to the Contrivance of Monk, and Monk. thoſe that deny him that Honour, intrench upon his

A.D.1660 his Foresight. Such is their Infatuation, such their Judgment and Sincerity! Warwick intimates if you will allow nothing else, you must allow that this Arrow cou'd come out of no Quiver but his own; and Ludlow affirms, that in order to lessen Haselrigge's Power in the Army, it was contriv'd that Monk shou'd write to the Parliament, &c. Sir Philip Warwick is one of the main Buttresses of Echard's Stupendous Fabrick, and you see what his Authority is.

420. Mr. Scot, before mention'd, had by Letters been much courted by Monk, and always maintain'd a friendly Correspondence with him. In the Time of the Committee of Safety, Mr. Scot publish'd some of that Treacherous Man's Letters, wherein Monk declar'd his Resolution to live and die with the Parliament, without a King or single Person, or House of Lords. I wou'd not have the Reader censure me for my plain dealing with this double Dealer, I am authoriz'd to do it by his own Confession; for the Lord Commissioner Whitlock tells us, Monk sent Letters to the Parliament, frankly owning his Prevarications with Fleetwood for their Service.

Monk Treacherous.

Lud. 812.

691. Mr. Scot and Mr. Robinson being at Leicester, went out six Miles to meet Monk, who, by his slow Marches, seem'd willing to keep near enough to run back to Scotland in case Peril came upon him, and Way was not made for him to approach with Safety. When Robinson and Scot met him, his Forces were drawn up, and saluted them with Vollies of Shot, and the Bells rung in every Village through which they pass'd. Monk alighted from his Horse to receive them, went with them into their Coach, and rode with them to Leicester, where they supp'd together in Scot's Quarters. He profess'd inexpressible Devotion to the Service of the Parliament, and complemented their Commissioners, especially Mr. Scot, in an extraordinary Manner.

Several Addresses were presented to Monk, as he march'd along in great State and Security, for the Restitution of the secluded Members, or a Free Parliament, to which he avoided giving Answers, as not knowing what Answer to give, till he saw how Matters wou'd go at London. But as much as he abhor'd the Abjuration Act, when he came to Northampton he oblig'd those of his Officers who had not done it before, to abjure

Coke p. 91. Charles Stuart and his Interest. Clarendon, and Echard, and the rest of them, are positive that he abhor'd this Abjuring.

When the London Commissioners apply'd themselves to him about the secluded Members, he told them he reserv'd them to the Parliament, again Lud. p. 816. to whom he was resolv'd intirely to submit; and Sir Arthur Haselrigge is reported to have said, Monk can't be such a Devil to betray a Trust so freely repos'd in him: But Sir Arthur, it seems, knew not how much of that Spirit was in him.

The Gentlemen of the West having drawn up a Remonstrance against the late Changes and Usurpations, sent it to Monk, to encourage him to come to their Assistance. The Gentleman whom they chose to carry it, was Thomas Bampfield, Esq; Recorder of Exeter, who had been Speaker of Richard Cromwel's Parliament; and who, after the Restoration, was thrown into Goal for being a Presbyterian.

While Monk was at Northampton, a hundred Gentlemen presented an Address to him, that he wou'd be instrumental for the secluded Members, or for a Free Parliament; to which he answer'd, I am a Servant to the Parliament in a Military Capacity, and these Things, of Great and Civil Concernment, are to be left to them. The High Sheriff of Hertfordshire met him at St. Albans the 28th of January; and the Lord Richardson, Sir John Hobart, and Sir Horatio Townsend, brought an Address from Norfolk to the like Purpose, and had a like Answer. A.D.1660

On the first of February, Dr. Clarges, the Apothecary, was made Commissary General of the Musters: Monk, his Brother in Law, was made Custos Rotulorum of Devon, and Keeper of St. James's Park. Orders were issu'd for the Soldiers in and about London to march forth to make room for Monk's, which so disgusted them, that many refus'd to march till their Arrears were paid. The Mutiny began at Somerset House, where one whole Regiment were Quarter'd, who were join'd by several Parties of the rest. The Cavaliers and Presbyterians of the City now lovingly united to the Ruin of the latter; hop'd to improve this Opportunity, and invited them to join with the City, as they term'd their Party then, promising them their whole Arrears, constant Pay, and a present Gratuity, giving them some Money in Hand as an Earnest of the rest. The Soldiers took their Money, but threaten'd them, that unless they departed immediately they wou'd fire upon them. Ludlow writes of it thus, "The Council of State, that they also might "cut the Grass from under their own Feet, "sent Orders to Monk to hasten his March, "and with all Diligence to come to their Re- "lief. These Malecontents were very numerous, "above 4000 Horse and Foot; but the Colonel "of the Regiment at Somerset House, Sir John "Lenthal, and their Officers, prevail'd with them "to march the next Morning, on promise of "Payment of their Arrears; and the other Sol- "diers march'd with them according to the Or- "ders they receiv'd.

Soldiers in London Mutiny.

On the 4th of February Monk march'd into London in all State with his Horse and Foot, not above 6000 Men, and came to Whitehall, where the Prince's Apartment was fitted up for him and his Wife, who had been a Sempstress in the New Exchange, before, if not whilst she was his Wife. The Speaker met him in the Strand. Monk alighted, and the Speaker came out of his Coach. They embrac'd each other with the extraordinary Signs of Joy; and in the Evening Monk went to the Council of State, who tendring the Abjuration Oath, the Substance of which he had so often sworn to, he desir'd Time to consider of it. Several of the King's Party came soon after to London from beyond Sea, giving out, they were sure the King wou'd be in England very shortly, but not one of them even yet is nam'd to have lent a helping Hand towards it.

Monk comes to London.

Cavaliers not yet concern'd in the Restoration.

Mr. Scot, Monk's fast Friend, and Mr Robinson, were sent to him by the House to congratulate his Arrival in Town, and desire his Attendance the next Morning. All the Members of Parliament, and Persons of the best Quality, visited and complimented him.

Mr. Scot reported to the House, Febr. the 6th, that Monk was come to attend them, and in the Court of Wards, The Serjeant at Arms was sent for him, and brought him into the House, accompany'd still with his dear Friend Mr. Scot and Mr. Robinson. A Velvet Chair was set for him on the left Hand within the Bar, and he having made his Obeysance, was desired by the Speaker to sit down; but he pray'd to be excus'd, and stood behind the Chair, while the Speaker made a fulsome Speech to him, magnifying his Service and Merits, which however had as yet cost nothing but Words, and giving him the hearty Thanks of the House. Monk began his Answer with Hands and Eyes lifted up to Heaven, extolling the Mercy of their Restitution, and acknowledging the Goodness of God in making him instrumental therein, which was but his Duty, Speech in the Parliament-House.

A.D.1660 Duty, and desir'd not the Honour they had done him. He desir'd that no Cavalier might have a Share in the Civil or Military Power, and said every one ought to acquiesce in their Judgment, as to the Secluded Members, who had frequent Meetings with their Friends in the City, particularly Mr. Edmund Calamy, a Reverend learned Divine of great Prudence and Moderation. Several Members of Parliament conferr'd with them, and were earneſt Promoters of their Return to the Houſe, as Col. Laſſels, Col. Ingoldsby, Col. Hutchinſon, all three Members of the High Court of Juſtice for putting the King to Death. The Parliament wanted not good Adviſers to be provided againſt the wicked Deſigns of treacherous, perjur'd Perſons. Ludlow and others, Men of Sagacity and Foreſight, adviſ'd them to accept the Aſſiſtance of their old Servants to encourage their Fidelity, as the only Means to preſerve themſelves and the Common-wealth from certain Ruin. But they are deaf to all ſalutary Counſel, and reſolv'd to finiſh the Work with the new Inſtruments which they had choſen. To that End they proceeded on the Bill for filling up the Houſe, which by wiſe Men was thought a moſt dangerous Expedient in that Conjuncture, unleſs Monk ſhou'd prove more honeſt than they cou'd believe him to be.

City of London oppoſe the Parliament.

The City of London alſo took upon them in their Common-Council to receive Petitions from the adjacent Counties touching the Payment of the Taxes and other publick Affairs, preſuming not only to call in the Petitioners, and to give them Thanks for their kind Affections, but alſo to paſs a Vote, that they wou'd pay no Taxes but ſuch as ſhou'd be impos'd by a Free Parliament. The Council of State having receiv'd a particular Account of theſe Proceedings, ſent for Monk to conſult with him concerning the beſt Means to put a Stop to theſe Diſorders. Some of them moving, that the Common-Council ſhou'd be forbidden to ſit; ſome few of the moſt active were ſeiz'd, the Gates of the City taken down, the Portcullices wedg'd, and the Poſts with their Chains pull'd up. Monk ſaid, If you do no more, that will ſerve for nothing, becauſe the Damage may be ſoon repair'd. The Diſaffection of the City is ſo great, that they will never be quiet till ſome of them are hang'd; and it is abſolutely neceſſary for the preſent to break their Gates and Portcullices in Pieces, to burn their Poſts, and carry away their Chains to the Tower. If you command it to be done, I'll ſee your Orders put in Execution. Echard, who takes no Care to keep within Credibility, affirms, that this very Action which Monk himſelf adviſ'd, and voluntarily offer'd to execute, was unavoidably forc'd upon him. The Council of State order'd him to march into the City with his Forces early the next Morning, Febr. the 9th, before the Occaſion of his coming amongſt them ſhou'd be known. Various Reports were publiſh'd touching the Deſign of his March into the City, and many ſuſpected he had already declar'd for the King; tho', as Biſhop Burnet obſerves, None had any Ground to believe he had any Deſign that Way. Some have thought he intended to try, if poſſible, to ſet up for himſelf; others rather believ'd he had no ſettled Deſign any way, which is alſo my Belief, but reſolv'd to do as Occaſion ſhou'd be offer'd to him, tho' all the while he declar'd in a moſt ſolemn Manner for a Common-wealth.

Monk's Speech againſt the City.

London Poſts and Chains pull'd up by Monk.

The Houſe being met, the Council of State made their Report, and inform'd them of the unwarrantable Proceedings of the Common-Council, and of their own Reſolutions and Orders concerning them. In the Execution of which they aſſur'd the Parliament Monk had by that Time made a conſiderable Progreſs, having already pull'd up their Poſts and Chains, taken down the Portcullices and Gates of the City, which he had begun to cut to Pieces, and ſeiz'd ſome of the moſt active of the Common-Council. The Houſe approv'd of what the Council of State had done, and order'd Monk fifty Pounds to defray the Expence of his Dinner that Day, he having refus'd to dine at the Charge of the City, tho' earneſtly importun'd by ſeveral Citizens. Sir Arthur Haſelrigge was ſo tranſported at this News, that he broke out in theſe Expreſſions, All is our own; he will be honeſt. But as Ludlow ſays, It was not long before his Wine was turn'd into Water. For in the Afternoon a Letter was preſented to the Speaker from Monk, the Contents of which made them eaſily perceive, that his Zeal in their Service began to cool: A.D.1660

His Letter to the Speaker.

" He acquainted them with what he had done " in Proſecution of the Orders he had receiv'd, " and that he wanted Tools and Inſtruments to " finiſh the Work, having already ſpoil'd all " thoſe he had brought with him to cut the " Gates and other Defences of the City in " Pieces; that the Mayor and Citizens had pro- " mis'd Obedience to the Parliament for the " Time to come, and therefore he deſir'd they " wou'd reſpite the Execution of what remain'd " of his Inſtructions, hoping what had been done " wou'd be a ſufficient Admonition to the City " for their future Behaviour." The Houſe highly reſented Monk's Preſumption in neglecting and diſputing their Commands, and diſpatch'd a Meſſage to him, requiring the exact Performance of the Orders he had receiv'd; at which Monk ſeem'd much diſturb'd, and yielded little or no Obedience to them, but lay that Night in the City.

His bold Letter to the Parliament.

The Day following, Febr. the 10th, he return'd with his Forces to Whitehall; and on the 12th or 13th ſent a Letter to the Houſe, directed to the Speaker, and ſubſcrib'd by himſelf and ſome of his Officers, " Wherein they complain'd " that the Parliament had put them upon the " late diſobliging Work in the City to render " them odious to the City; that they continu'd " to favour the Fanatick Party, by not proſecuting thoſe who had acted with the Army in the " Committee of Safety, and by permitting Sir " Henry Vane and Col. Lambert to ſtay in Town, " contrary to their own Order, for their Remo- " val; that they admitted Men to ſit with them " in the Houſe, who lay under Accuſations of " High-Treaſon, meaning Lieutenant General " Ludlow and Mr. Miles Corbet; that on the " contrary they ſhew'd a Backwardneſs to repoſe " any Confidence in thoſe who were their trueſt " Friends, upbraiding them with refuſing to ap- " prove ſome Officers that had been preſented " to them, and delaying to grant Commiſſions " to others, whom they had approv'd. They " alſo reflected upon the Parliament, for not " making Proviſion for the Army, nor mind- " ing the publick Work, putting them in Mind " of the Vote for their Diſſolution in May fol- " lowing, and adding ſome threatning Expreſſi- " ons in caſe they ſhou'd not iſſue out Writs for " filling up the Parliament.

After the reading of this Letter, moſt of the Members who had Affection for their Country, appear'd much dejected. But the Parliament having diveſted themſelves of their own Strength, and abandon'd all into the Hands of Monk, tho' no Man had ever before dar'd to addreſs himſelf to them in ſo inſolent a Manner (they are Ludlow's Words) took his Letter into Conſideration, and reſolv'd to give him as much Satisfaction as they cou'd with any Colour of

Juſtice

A.D.1660 Juſtice. They ſent Mr. Scot and Mr. Robinſon to him, to aſſure him of their good Intentions. He was then at Alderman Wale's Houſe in the City; for he had left Whitehall, and quarter'd his Army in London, that he might have the more Opportunities to ingratiate himſelf with the Citizens. He drew up his Forces in Finsbury Feb. the 12th, din'd with the Lord Mayor and Aldermen at the Bull-Head in Cheapſide, and was follow'd by Multitudes of People, congratulating his coming into the City, making loud Shouts and Bonefires, and ringing the Bells. He was every Day and all Day long viſited by the chief Citizens and Miniſters, as Mr. Arthur Jackſon, Miniſter of St. Faith's; Mr. Edmund Calamy, Miniſter of Aldermanbury; Mr. Thomas Gouge, Miniſter of St. Sepulcher's; Dr. Drake, Miniſter of St. Peter's Cheap; Dr. Manton, Miniſter of St. Paul Covent Garden; Mr. Watſon, Miniſter of St. Stephen Walbrook; Dr. Bates, Miniſter of St. Dunſtan in the Weſt; Mr. Simeon Aſh, Miniſter of St. Auſtin's; Mr. Matthew Pool, Miniſter of St. Michael Quern; Mr. Matthew Haviland, Miniſter of Trinity Pariſh, Mr. William Blackmore, Miniſter of St. Peter's Cornhill; Mr. Samuel Slater, Miniſter of St. Katherine's, Tower; Dr. Anneſly, Miniſter of St. Giles's Cripplegate; Mr. William Taylor, Miniſter of St. Stephen's Coleman-ſtreet; Dr. Jacomb, Miniſter of St. Martin's Ludgate. I mention only ſome of the moſt noted, of whom Mr. William Taylor was by good Churchmen call'd The Loyal Presbyterian. All theſe, and almoſt all the other London Presbyterian Miniſters, were as Loyal as Mr. Taylor, and moſt of them very inſtrumental in the Reſtoration, which I deſire may be remember'd, when we come to ſee how the King rewarded them. For if Ingratitude is the baſeſt and blackeſt of all Sins, 'tis no Wonder it has not been in the Power of Eloquence and Adulation to brighten the ſucceeding Reign. Of theſe Miniſters Mr. Calamy and Mr. Aſh, Dr. Bates, Dr. Manton and Dr. Jacomb, very much influenc'd the City in their earneſt Deſire for the King's Reſtoration, in which they were encourag'd by the Earl of Mancheſter, who had a particular Correſpondence with the King and Hyde, by Mr. Hollis and Mr. Anneſley, who had the ſame without Participation, and all three carry'd on the great Work as well as Sir Anthony-Aſhley Cooper, in their own Way, before Monk was ever thought of as an Agent in it. Mr. Aſh wrote to Col. Sanders, Col. Barton and others in Monk's Army, to engage them for the King.

Monk had forgot his boſom Friend Scot, and did not admit him to his Preſence without Difficulty; and when he condeſcended to ſpeak to him and Robinſon, his Diſcourſe tended always to the ſame Purpoſe with his Letter. Yet for all his inſolent Carriage to the Parliament, ſays Ludlow, his Party in the Houſe had the Confidence to move, that he might be made General of their Forces. But the Parliament ſtill retaining ſome Sparks of that Courage with which they had formerly been animated, choſe rather to periſh by the Hands of an Enemy, if Monk ſhou'd prove ſo, than by the Deluſions of a pretended Friend; and therefore having rejected the Propoſal to make him General, they paſs'd a Vote, that their Armies in England and Scotland ſhou'd be govern'd by Commiſſioners, who were, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, Major General Monk, Col. Morley, Col. Walton, Col. Alured.

Tho' Monk was diſturb'd at this, yet he endeavour'd to diſguiſe his Diſſatisfaction, and began again to court the Members of Parliament, whilſt, with the Advice and Aſſiſtance of his Party in the City, he was forming a Militia there, and nominating Officers to command them, who were choſen for the Purpoſe, rather on account of their Diſaffection to the Parliament than any other good Quality. He got the Lord Mayor to call a Common-Council, and went to Guild-Hall; and all the Way as he went, leaning on Colonel Cloberry's Shoulder, the Cry was, A Free Parliament. Monk ſaid nothing; but Col. Cloberry told them, They ſhou'd have a Free Parliament. At Guild-Hall he excus'd what he had been conſtrain'd to do in the City by Order of Parliament, tho' the Advice was his own: "He aſſur'd them "he was much troubled for that rigorous Work; "that he had been long of the ſame Opinion "with them, but had been oblig'd to conceal it, "till he might have an Opportunity to diſcover "his Sentiments with better Advantage. He "added, he had ſent a Letter to the Parliament, "that they wou'd fill the Houſe, and put "an End to their ſitting by the 6th of May." The Citizens receiv'd this Declaration with great Joy, and the Rabble were as mad, as when they ran after Sacheverel in the late Queen's Time. They made no leſs than 6000 Bonfires at Night all over the City; and to ſhew that they cou'd be witty too upon Occaſion, the Cavaliers and Loyal Presbyterians roaſted Rumps, and burnt thoſe they did not eat, as they ſerv'd the Pope afterwards.

A.D.1660

Lieutenant General Ludlow viſited Major General Monk at Alderman Wale's, to ſatisfy him concerning his Conduct in Ireland; and having, in Converſation with him, ſaid, that Fidelity and Zeal for the Common Good were the beſt Qualifications for publick Service, Monk cry'd, Yea, we muſt live and die together for the Common-wealth. And Ludlow dropping a Hint, as if the Secluded Members, when reſtor'd, wou'd bring in the King, Monk ſaid, It may be they may attempt it; but they ſay they will not; and I aſſure you, tho' I bear as much Reſpect to Parliaments as any Man, yet, if I ſhou'd obſerve a Parliament to be about ſuch a thing, I wou'd interrupt them in it. Sir Henry Vane being about to leave London, purſuant to an Order of Parliament, Ludlow gave him a Viſit; and Sir Henry told him, Unleſs I am much miſtaken, Monk has yet ſeveral Masks to pull off. As for what concerns myſelf, I have all poſſible Satisfaction of Mind, as to thoſe Actions God has enabled me to do for the Common-wealth, and hope the ſame God will fortify me in my Sufferings, how ſharp ſoever, to bear a faithful and conſtant Teſtimony. For he foreſaw the Exiles wou'd murder him if ever they had him in their Power. The Opinion they juſtly had of his prodigious Genius being Death to them. Ludlow confers with Monk and Vane.

By the Giddineſs of Monk's Conduct at this Time, I take his Mind to be in as much Agitation as it was capable of, whether to ſet up himſelf, or to reſtore the Secluded Members and the King, or to continue the Common-wealth, himſelf to have the Power of a Stadtholder as in Holland. It is evident he had yet determin'd nothing, and very probable that he was driven away with the Tide of Peoples Inclinations for the King, which were every where for reſtoring the Secluded Members, and leaving the Free Parliament and the King's Reſtoration to them. To this End Monk procur'd a Meeting of twelve of thoſe Members, with as many of the Parliament then ſitting. The latter alledg'd at this Conference, "That the General had declar'd, "when he firſt appear'd for them againſt the "Army, that it was for the Parliament as it ſat "the 11*th of* October." The Secluded Members reply'd, "That their Re-admiſſion was no "Infringement of it, for the ſame Parliament Monk in Uncertainty.

" ral's Declaration was to reduce the Military " Power in Obedience to the Civil, and that they Echard. Members. The other engag'd upon their Honours, " Not to look upon what had been done

" ſince their Excluſion, nor diſturb the Propriety
" or Pretences of any, but wou'd amicably Sit
" and Vote for the Good of their Country, till
" by their Diſſolution they made a Way for ano" ther Parliament." Here is not one Word of Anſwer to the Safety of the Sitting Members, but the Parole of the Secluded Members, of which one Word was not kept; as if they had been infected with Falſhood and Perfidy by their Patron Monk, who declar'd arbitrarily, That in Juſtice the ſecluded Members ought to be admitted before the calling of another Parliament. Anneſley, one of the ſecluded Members, reflected ſo indecently upon the Proceedings of the Parliament ſince their Seclufion, that Sir Arthur Haſelrigge roſe up haſtily, and deſign'd to leave the Company; but Monk, in a droling way, deſir'd him to be patient till he ſhou'd moderate Anneſley, which, ſays he, I know well enough how to do. Anneſley had been a Covenanter, a Presbyterian, a zealous Parliamentarian, a Commiſſioner in Ireland, and done the laſt King as much Diſſervice as he cou'd; but he had made his Peace with his preſent Majeſty, receiv'd a Letter from him, and given himſelf up Body and Soul to his new Maſter and Principles. Himſelf, Mr. Hollis, Sir Harbottle Grimſton, Sir Anthony-Aſhley Cooper, and other leading Men, met often with the Earl of Mancheſter, the Lord Roberts, and the reſt of
The Preſbyterians deſire the Cavaliers to be quiet, and do nothing for fear of ſpoiling all. the Presbyterian Party. Mr. Hollis told Biſhop Burnet that the Presbyterians preſs'd the Royaliſts to be quiet, and to leave the Game in their Hands; for their appearing wou'd give Jealouſy, and hurt that which they meant to promote. The Miniſters of London were very active in the City. Anneſley continuing his Railing, Haſelrigge loſt all patience, roſe up and left the Company; but Mr. Scot, Mr. Robinſon, Col. Morley, Mr. Rawleigh, and the Lord Chief Juſtice St. John, ſtaid with the ſecluded Members till Monk declar'd himſelf for them. Ludlow owns that Monk did not ſtir up the Riot and Diſorder in the City, though he was not a little pleas'd with it; and ſpeaking of the Parliament thus inſulted by Rump-roaſting, he ſaid, They rais'd the Glory of the Nation from the Duſt, meaning the Reigns of the Stuarts, wherein it had been buried by the Negligence and Corruption of the preceeding Governments, and had render'd the Engliſh Name formidable to all Europe. When any of this Author's Enemies can prove what he ſays here to be falſe, we will paſs over all the Falſities in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, in Echard's and the Compleat Hiſtory. A. D. 1660

About a Week after Monk return'd to his former Lodging at Whitehall, where, according to a Summons from him, he was attended by all the ſecluded Members, and the Archdeacon aſſures us he told them abundance of notable Things, whereas they were the Contents of a Paper which his Secretary read to them, and of which the following are two Paragraphs.

" As to the Intereſt of this famous City (which Monk's Speech to the ſecluded Members.
" hath been in all Ages the Bulwark of Parlia-
" ments, and unto whom I am for their great " Affection ſo deeply engag'd) certainly it muſt
" lie in a Common-wealth; that Government on" ly being capable to make them, through the " Lord's Bleſſing, the Metropolis and Bank of " the Trade to all Chriſtendom, whereunto God
" and Nature hath fitted them above others.

" And as to a Government in the Church, the " Want whereof hath been no ſmall Cauſe of " theſe Nations Diſtractions, it is manifeſt, that " if it be Monarchical in the State, the Church
" muſt follow, and Prelacy muſt be brought in,
" which theſe Nations I know cannot bear, and
" againſt which they have ſo ſolemnly ſworn.
" Indeed, moderate Presbyterian Government, For the Presbytery.
" with a ſufficient Liberty for tender Conſciences,
" appears to be the moſt indifferent and accept-
" able Way to the Settlement of the Church".

And two or three Years after this, he ſends his Dragoons about the Country to hunt down the Presbyterians as the Proteſtants were hunted in France. This Paper, which he cou'd no more draw than he cou'd write Clarendon's Hiſtory, has a pretty deal of the London Clergy in it.

Before this Matter cou'd be brought about, Mr. Praiſe God Barebone, with a Multitude of Watermen, preſented a Petition to the Parliament, For excluding Charles Stuart and all that Family; and that thoſe who refus'd to renounce them, might be uncapable of any Employment; for which the Houſe thank'd them.

Robinſon, Haſelrigge, and Nevill, who pretended to be moſt in Monk's good Graces, did and ſaid what they cou'd to hinder the Admiſſion of the ſecluded Members, but no body cou'd prevail with him to prevent it, and no body durſt oppoſe him. The Spirit of the People in general, eſpecially of the Presbyterians, ran that way, and the Cavaliers were the more eager for it, as the Way to bring in the King.

On Tueſday the 21ſt of February, Monk having given the Command of the Guard to Sir Anthony-Aſhley Cooper, the ſecluded Members march'd from Whitehall to the Parliament-Houſe, William Prynne, Eſq; with a great Basket-hilted Sword by his Side, leading the Way. Secluded Members admitted.

The LONG PARLIAMENT.

THE firſt Thing the Parliament did after the ſecluded Members were admitted, was to vacate all the Votes made by the Houſe in 1648, and 1649, againſt themſelves; then they Voted their Champion, George Monk, Eſq; General of all the Forces in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and John Lawſon, Eſq; Vice-Admiral of the Fleet. They repeal'd the Commiſſion of the Gentlemen who were impower'd to govern the Army, they releas'd Sir Robert Pye and Colonel Fincher of their Impriſonment: The ſame they did by Sir George Booth, Colonel Brooke, Lord Crawford, Lord Lauderdale, Lord Sincler, the London Apprentices, and ſeveral Addreſſers to the former Houſe. They alſo Voted to make all void that had been done in Parliament againſt thoſe of Sir George Booth's Party; they made John Thurloe, Eſq; and John Thompſon, Eſq; Secretaries of State, and Dr. Clarges the Apothecary, Monk's Wife's Brother, Clerk of the Hanaper-

A.D.1660 naper-Office. They alſo paſs'd an Act for a Council of State, who were Arthur Anneſly, Eſq; Lord Preſident, Lord Fairfax, General Monk, William Pierpoint, Eſq; John Crew, Eſq; Richard Knightly, Eſq; Alexander Popham, Eſq; Edward Harley, Eſq; John Swinſen, Eſq; John Weaver, Eſq; Oliver St. John, Eſq; John Birch, Eſq; John Trevor, Eſq; John Maynard, Eſq; Denzil Hollis, Eſq; Sir Anthony-Aſhley Cooper, Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Sir Thomas Widdrington, Sir John Evelyn, Sir Richard Onſlow, Sir William Waller, Sir John Temple, Sir Harbottle Grimſton, Col. Morley, Col. Montague, Sir John Potts, Sir William Lewis, Col. Roſſiter, Sir John Holland, Col. Norton, Col. Thompſon.

Council of State.

Echard tells us, the ſober Part of theſe Gentlemen were for clogging the King's Return with Conditions, naming the Conceſſions the King made at the Iſle of Wight, though no wiſe Man cou'd expect thoſe Articles cou'd be put in Practice. You ſee this is ſaid with the utmoſt Aſſurance; yet that moſt wiſe Magiſtrate the Lord Chief Juſtice Hale, mov'd in the next Houſe of Commons, of which he was a Member, That a Committee might be appointed to look into the Propoſitions that had been made, and the Conceſſions that had been offer'd by the late King, particularly at the Iſle of Wight, to be ſent over to the King: Biſhop Burnet adds, To his coming in without Conditions may be well imputed all the Errors of his Reign; more of this hereafter.

Bp. Burnet, p. 88.

Several Members of Parliament, who thought the Admiſſion of thoſe who had been ſecluded to be irregular and illegal, refus'd to act. Ludlow, before they were admitted, mov'd that the Parliament ſhou'd adjourn to the Tower, gather their Friends and Forces about them, and vindicate their Authority, but he was not ſeconded. After the others were admitted, he refus'd to ſit with them; and being ask'd the Reaſon of it by Mr. George Montague, as he was walking in Weſtminſter Hall, Ludlow anſwer'd, Having done as much as I cou'd to ſerve the Common-wealth, and ſeeing an Impoſſibility of contending againſt the preſent Torrent, I have reſolv'd to abſent myſelf from the Place where the Parliament us'd to meet, that I might publickly diſown the Authority of thoſe who have violently poſſeſs'd themſelves of the Houſe, and not ſeem to conſent to the Confuſions they are bringing upon us. Mr. Montague reply'd, "The Conditions on which the "ſecluded Members have enter'd the Houſe, are "in my Opinion more diſhonourable than thoſe "upon which others are gone out, and I am not "willing to ſit amongſt them, they having en"gag'd to make Monk General of all the Forces "by Sea and Land, to ſettle a conſtant Mainte"nance for the Army, to appoint a new Parlia"ment to be choſen, and when theſe Things "are diſpatch'd, to put a Period to themſelves "within a Day or two at the moſt.

Ludlow.

About Seventeen of the Common-wealth Members, of whom ſeveral were of the late Council of State, went to Monk, to be inform'd from his own Mouth of the Reaſons of theſe Proceedings. He receiv'd them with no leſs Civility than formerly, and having underſtood from them the Occaſion of their coming, he made as ſolemn Proteſtations of his Zeal to a Common-wealth Government as he had ever done. This was two or three Weeks only before he at once broke all Oaths and Proteſtations, and deliver'd up his Maſters, his Friends, his Country, to the Mercy of implacable Enemies. He deſir'd theſe Gentlemen to believe, that the Permiſſion he had given to the ſecluded Members to enter the Houſe, was only to free himſelf from their Importunity, and that he wou'd take effectual Care to prevent them doing any Hurt in that Place. But theſe Gentlemen having reſolv'd to try him to the utmoſt, demanded further, If he wou'd join with them againſt Charles Stuart and his Party? In Anſwer to which he apply'd himſelf to Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, who was one of them, and ſaid, Sir Arthur, I have often declar'd to you my Reſolution ſo to do; then taking off his Glove, and putting his Hand in Sir Arthur's, he added, I do here proteſt to you in the Preſence of all theſe Gentlemen, that I will oppoſe to the utmoſt the ſetting up of Charles Stuart, a ſingle Perſon, or a Houſe of Peers. After this he began to expoſtulate with them touching their Suſpicions, ſaying, What is it that I have done in bringing theſe Members into the Houſe? Are they not the ſame that brought the King to the Block, though others cut off his Head, and that juſtly? This is the Earl of Clarendon's good Lord General! This is the Man whom that Earl commends ſo much for his Zeal for the Church, and this is the Man who a few Months afterwards hang'd his dear Friend Scot, for agreeing to the Sentence for cutting off the King's Head.

A.D.1660

Juſtifies cutting off the King's Head. Ludlow 847.

Col. Montague, who had been in the Sound ſome time, concluding a Peace between Sweden and Denmark, in Conjunction with the Dutch Admiral de Ruyter, was made joint Admiral of the Engliſh Fleet with General Monk, at which the latter was diſguſted, it being contrary to the Bargain he had made with the ſecluded Members, to have the Chief Command by Land and by Sea, without a Partner. However, he thought not convenient to inſiſt upon the Alteration of that Particular, Montague, and the Fleet's Aſſiſtance, being very neceſſary to him for carrying on his Projects, be they what they wou'd.

He took away Col. Walton's Regiment of Horſe, and gave it to Col. Howard; he made Choice of Two hundred Horſe for his own Guard, and gave the Command of them to Col. Philip Howard; Col. Rich's Regiment he gave to Col. Ingoldsby.

The grand Deſign of deſtroying the Common-wealth, being ſo far advanced, Monk caus'd a Declaration to be drawn in the Name of the Officers about London, and recommended to the reſt of the Officers in the three Nations, declaring it to be their Duty and Reſolution, to ſubmit to the Authority that was over them, and to obey ſuch Orders as they ſhou'd receive from them, which when they were upbraided with, as a thing contriv'd to betray the publick Cauſe. Many of the Officers ſhew'd themſelves ſo ſenſible of the Conſequences of it, that they earneſtly preſs'd that a Council of War might be call'd.

Here was another Criſis, had this Council of War been call'd, all Monk's pretended Schemes had vaniſh'd at once. The Officers urg'd ſeveral Reaſons for it to their General, but the true Reaſon was to unite themſelves to each other, and in a publick Manner expreſs their Reſolutions to lay down their Lives for the Common-wealth; but Monk being inform'd of their Deſign, diſpers'd them to their reſpective Command, to which they tamely ſubmitted, notwithſtanding the big Words they had ſpoken without Doors.

Another Criſis.

Sir Arthur Haſelrigge being ſummon'd to attend the ſecluded Members, made his Submiſſion, and promis'd to acquieſce under the preſent Power. Major General Lambert ſurrender'd himſelf to the new Council of State, but refuſing to give Security that he wou'd behave quietly, he was committed to the Tower, the very Name of him being a Check to all Monk's Exultations in this Hurricane of Joy.

Moſt

*A.D.*1660

Moſt of the Republican Party were very ſenſible of the Danger they were in, and that they might not be altogether wanting to their own Preſervation, and to the Service of the Publick (to uſe Ludlow's Phraſe) ſome of the principal Perſons among them had ſeveral Meetings; at one of which, Ludlow made the following Propoſitions, That ſeveral of the Council of State, and three of the Generals that had been appointed by the Parliament, ſhou'd Sign ſuch Orders as were neceſſary for putting their Deſign in Execution: That the Regiment of Col. Moſs, which lay in Kent, and not far from London, and another which lay in the Borough of Southwark, commanded by Lieutenant Col. Farnly, conſiſting in all of 2000 old Soldiers, of whoſe Integrity and Affection they had good Aſſurance, ſhou'd be order'd to march to the Tower to join with Col. Morley's Regiment, which was then there, and wou'd be ready to receive them, having ſent to Ludlow, to let him know the Tower ſhou'd be at his Command, whenever he pleas'd to deſire it. That the Commanders of theſe Forces ſhou'd take with them Proviſions for ſix Months, giving Tickets for the Quantity ſo taken, payable by the Parliament of England. That the Militia of London, which had been liſted during the Government of the Parliament, ſhou'd be authoriz'd to meet as there ſhou'd be Occaſion to aſſiſt the Forces in the Tower. That four or five Places of Rendezvous ſhou'd be appointed for the Forces of the Army that lay ſcatter'd up and down, in ſeveral Parts of the Nation, and that Officers ſhou'd be agreed upon to appear at the Head of them. That the Soldiers, both Horſe and Foot, ſhou'd have the Liberty, either to follow their old Officers, or to appoint new. That thoſe Officers who ſhou'd prevail with the major Part of their Men to follow them, ſhou'd continue in their reſpective Poſts, and that thoſe who appear'd heartily to promote this Deſign, tho' they cou'd not perſwade the greateſt Part of their Soldiers to follow them, ſhou'd have Proviſion made for them, equal to their Merits: That the Country Militia, both Horſe and Foot, ſhou'd be authoriz'd to draw together, and be impower'd to ſeize, and diſarm ſuch Perſons in the reſpective Counties, as were known Enemies to the Commonwealth. That the Fleet ſhou'd be order'd to declare at the ſame time, and to ſend one or two Thouſand Seamen to the Aſſiſtance of thoſe in the Tower, which General Ludlow conceiv'd might be done, without Danger to the Nation, becauſe the Enemies they were to contend with, were inteſtine and not from abroad. Admiral Lawſon, who commanded the Fleet, had declar'd his Reſolution, to continue faithful to the Parliament, which cou'd not well be doubted, by any that wou'd reflect upon his former Conduct, he having readily taken the Oath for Abjuring the King's Family. Lieutenant General Ludlow propos'd further, "That all Perſons who ſhou'd "act by the Parliaments Authority, in this Ser- "vice, ſhou'd be juſtify'd in ſo doing. That the "Governors of Garriſons ſhou'd be requir'd to "refuſe Obedience to any Power, which was "not deriv'd from the lawful Authority of the "Parliament, whoſe Place the ſecluded Mem- "bers had now uſurp'd, and that a Declara- "tion ſhou'd be forthwith prepar'd, to ſhew the "Grounds and Reaſons, together with the Ne- "ceſſity of theſe Proceedings.

A Deſign of the Republicans againſt Monk.

Some of the Officers and Gentlemen, who were at this Conſultation, promis'd to adviſe with their Friends of the Council of State, and hop'd that a Quorum of them, as well as of Generals, might be found to put the Things in Execution that ſhou'd be agreed on: "But, con- "tinues Ludlow, we being ripe for the Corre- "ction of Heaven, nothing cou'd prevent our "Enemies ſucceeding in all their Attempts, and "all our Endeavours proving Abortive. *A.D.*1660

This Scheme ſeems to be very chimerical, if we don't conſider that Monk had left his beſt Commander, General Morgan, and his beſt Troops behind him, to keep Scotland in Awe; and that the Army in England were generally Republicans, inſomuch, that I'm ſatisfy'd 4 or 5000 of them, under ſuch reſolute and principled Men as Ludlow, wou'd have clear'd City and Suburbs of him and his ſecluded Members; but there being no regular Oppoſition, he ſwam down with the Current, which, ſays the Biſhop of Salisbury, ran ſo ſtrong for the Reſtoration, that Monk only went into it dexterouſly enough to get much Fame and great Rewards: If he had dy'd ſoon after, he might have been more juſtly admir'd, becauſe leſs known, &c. Again, Monk had the Praiſe and Reward, tho' I have been told a very ſmall Share of it belong'd to him, as is all along very viſible. The Share he had, was in the Extent of his Conſcience, which enabled him to do every thing, and any thing that fed his Appetite of Gain, which, as has been hinted, the Biſhop tells us was very ravenous; and Mr. Calamy ſtuck not to tell him ſo from the Pulpit, even after the Reſtoration; for Monk by Profeſſion was a Presbyterian, and one of Mr. Calamy's Hearers, after he had brought in the King. That pious Man, preaching on a Sacramental Day, had Occaſion to ſpeak of filthy Lucre; And why, ſaid he, is it call'd Filthy, but becauſe it makes Men do baſe and filthy Things? Some Men will betray three Kingdoms for filthy Lucre's Sake, ſaying which, he threw his Handkerchief, which he uſually wav'd up and down, while he was preaching, towards Monk's Pew; however, his hearing of godly Sermons, made him not in love with Godlineſs. His Life being very immoral, I uſe Lieutenant General Ludlow's Words, who knew him as well as the Earl of Clarendon, and tells us, "The Companies of London made a great En- "tertainment for Monk, the 3d of March, where "the Bargain they had driven with him, was "ratify'd and confirm'd by deſolute and unbe- "coming Debauchery: For it was his Cuſtom "not to depart from thoſe publick Meetings, "'till he was as drunk as a Beaſt." Gumble aſſures us, he was ſo temperate, he wou'd faſt thirty Hours together, and his Countryman Mr. Prince, a Devonſhire Vicar, affirms, he ſo abhorr'd the Debauchery of Drinking, that he wou'd never prefer an Officer who was guilty of it. Do theſe reverend Authors need Remark? Col. Okey attending him at this very Meeting to take his Leave of him, before he repair'd to his Command, and deſiring to be ſatisfy'd of his Intentions touching Charles Stuart, he gave him his Hand before all the Officers then preſent, as a Pledge of his Sincerity, ſaying, I will oppoſe him to the utmoſt.

Monk had no great Share in the Reſtoration.

Monk's Treachery.

The Parliament having voted him a Sum of 1000 Pounds a Year, it was debated, whether Hampton-Court ſhou'd not be ſettled upon him for it, and was carry'd in the Affirmative. Several of the ſecluded Members, ſays Ludlow, hating the Traitor, tho' they accepted the Treaſon, and gave their Vote for it, That the Grant might be uſeleſs to him; but his Tools in the Houſe got it chang'd to an Order for 20,000 Pounds at once, to be paid him out of the publick Money.

Mazarine, who had put great Slights, if not Affronts, on the King and his two Brothers, was ſo far from any Diſpoſition to change his Conduct, on Account of the Changes in England, that

The French Ambaſſador offers to make Monk King or Protector

A.D.1660 that he order'd the French Ambaſſador at London, to offer Monk the Aſſiſtance of France, if he wou'd uſurp the Government, as Cromwell had done, which Offer was not made out of Fear of the King, or Love to Monk. I know not one Male of the royal Houſe we are writing of, who was ever fear'd abroad; and Monk's Qualities were ſuch, as no body cou'd be enamour'd with, but then they were exactly ſuch as a hearty Enemy to this Nation might have wiſh'd in a ſupream Governor, who cou'd not avoid being hated and deſpis'd by every one over whom he had uſurp'd Lordſhip. An Enemy to England cou'd not have done her ſo much Miſchief by War, as by impoſing ſuch a Governor upon her, who had neither Capacity nor Virtue, nor any other Qualification for Government. It was like putting a Man, blind or drunk, at the Helm of a Ship in a Storm. And when the Engliſh were once ruin'd by him, Mazarine matter'd not what Religion they were of afterwards. Echard writes, Some ſay he bravely reſiſted the Propoſal, but what is his ſome ſay? When Mr. Locke ſays, that he accepted of it, and he had his Information from Sir Anthony-Aſhley Cooper, who was the very Perſon that hinder'd its taking Effect. Sir Anthony having certain Intelligence of the Bargain made between Monk and Monſieur Bourdeaux, the French Ambaſſador, procur'd the Council of State, of which he was a Member, to be ſummon'd immediately. Monk attending as uſual, the Doors of the Council Chamber were lock'd, and the Keys laid on the Table. He then began to charge Monk, not in direct and open Accuſation, but in obſcure Intimations and doubtful Expreſſions, giving Ground of Suſpicion, That he was playing falſe with them, and not doing as he promis'd. This he did ſo skilfully and intelligibly to Monk, that he perceiv'd he was diſcover'd, and was perplex'd what Anſwer to give, which made the reſt of the Council ſuſpect him, though they knew not what the Matter was: At laſt he aver'd, That what had been ſuggeſted was upon groundleſs Suſpicions, that he was true to his Principles, and ſtood firm to what he had profeſs'd to them; that he had no ſecret Deſigns that ought to diſturb them, and that he was ready to give them all manner of Satisfaction. Sir Anthony clos'd with him, and made a further Uſe of what he ſaid than he intended. For Monk meant no more than to gain Time to make his Eſcape from them; but Sir Anthony-Aſhley Cooper told him, That if he was ſincere in what he ſaid, he might preſently remove all Scruples; he ſhou'd preſently take away their Commiſſions from ſuch and ſuch Officers in the Army, and give them to thoſe whom he nam'd, and that preſently before he went out of the Room. Monk, as Echard tells us, was no quick Man, and being alone among a Company of Men who fell in with Sir Anthony, and inſiſted on that Satisfaction, he knew not how to avoid it, but in the Fear and in the Surprize, took away the Commiſſions of ſuch Officers as were nam'd to him, and ſign'd Commiſſions for others, particularly for Sir Edward Harley, Father of the late Robert Harley, who was made Governor of Dunkirk in the room of Sir William Lockhart: By which means, ſays Mr. Locke, the Army ceas'd to be at Monk's Devotion, and was put into Hands that wou'd not ſerve him in the Deſign he had undertaken. The French Ambaſſador, who had the Night before ſent away an Expreſs to Mazarine, poſitively to aſſure him, that Things went as he deſir'd, and that Monk was fix'd by him in his Reſolution to take on himſelf the Government; was not a little aſtoniſh'd the next Day to find Things taking another Turn, and according to Echard, this ſo much diſgrac'd Monſieur Bourdeaux in the French Court, that he was preſently call'd home, and ſoon after broke his Heart. For Mazarine having made the Contents of Bourdeaux's Letters known, there were Bonfires all over Paris, the French were ſo well pleas'd to hear that England was ſo near Ruin under ſuch a Dictator. This, continues the Archdeacon, was that which gave the great Turn to the Reſtoration of King Charles, ſo that hitherto, his Taciturnity, his Slowneſs, his Craft, and all the other Topicks in the Panegyricks upon him, were of no Uſe to the King, and are therefore thrown away; what Warwick writes is one of the greateſt Whimſies that ever crept into Memoirs. His great Sagacity comes upon the Stage to perfect the laſt Scene, which wou'd have been finely perfected indeed, had it not been for the Lord Shaftsbury, He was a Men cut out to do ſuch a Work, to make himſelf a Monarch of three Kingdoms. He was a fit Inſtrument in the Hand of divine Providence, to work his Majeſty's Reſtoration: You ſee how he was working it to almoſt the very Minute that Sir John Greenvile came to him from the King. It were to be wiſh'd that ſuch Men as Warwick, who had been Witneſſes of the Torrents of Lewdneſs and Impiety, which overwhelm'd the Court and Country, after the Reſtoration had been more ſenſible of the righteous Workings of divine Providence, than to turn thoſe Incidents into Happineſs, which are more juſtly interpreted, Correction.

Sir Antho-ny-Aſhley Cooper hinders it.

Here, and in a great many other Places, will the Reader obſerve, that the Author walks in Fetters and Chains, and laments the Loſs of that Roman Liberty, which allow'd Hiſtory in every thing that was true. As it is ſo in Temporals, 'tis much more ſo in Spirituals, where the Force of Truth is here often broken out of complacency to Eſtabliſhment, and where in moſt Caſes at leaſt, the Ground is made ſo ſlippery, that there's no walking upon it, without ſliding, if not falling. 'Tis a Shame to Literature, to abridge the Freedom of Thought, and a Shame to any Cauſe not to be able to ſtand what is true, without the Butrices of Penalties and Puniſhments. It is not my Fault, that this is not fully explain'd, I can do it to Satisfaction; but let our Poſterity, as well as ourſelves, regret the Incumbrances with which Bigotry and falſe Zeal have loaded all Kinds of Writing.

Of Liberty in Hiſtory.

The Temper of King Charles the Second, wou'd eaſily have reconcil'd People to his Government, if ſome of the old Counſellors, whoſe bad Counſel had deſtroy'd the Father, had not remain'd ſtill about the Son. There wou'd have been no Occaſion of Complaint, as to arbitrary Government or Perſecution, had his Majeſty been left to the bent of his own Mind, which inclin'd him to Eaſe and Indulgence; but the Knowledge of the bitter Spirit of his Followers in Exile, made their Return ſo dreadful to the Republicans, that they wou'd have ſubmitted to any Government, rather than have admitted them again to it. It was for this Reaſon ſome of the Chief of them propos'd to Monk, to reſtore the Common-wealth, with a ſingle Perſon at its Head, and himſelf to be the Man. I do not ſuppoſe that he was reſtrain'd by his Oath againſt a ſingle Man, becauſe a Day or two after he ſacrific'd all the Engagements he had ſolemnly enter'd into, to a Compliment he receiv'd from the King, by Sir John Greenvile, to whom he gave Audience, as to a Meſſenger ſent by the King at the Perſwaſion of Mr. William Morrice, a noted Presbyterian of Devonſhire, and a Member of Richard's Parliament. The Archdeacon is once in the Right, and thinks very juſtly, Monk receives a Meſſage from the King.

A.D.1660 juſtly, that Monk was fix'd by the Management of Sir Anthony-Aſhley Cooper, or thought if he did not ſtrike with Expedition the Work wou'd be taken out of his Hand, ſo he reſolv'd to cloſe with Greenvile. This was about the 20th of March. Monk met Greenvile at Mr. Morrice's Lodgings, receiv'd a Letter from the King, as alſo a Commiſſion for him to be his General, at ſight of which he ſtep'd back and frown'd; but on a Word or two from Greenvile, he call'd him his Dear Couſin, begg'd the King's Pardon for what was paſt, and proteſted that his Heart was ever faithful to him, even when he made the Scotch Nobility and the Engliſh Officers abjure him, and that he was now ready to obey his Commands. Then Morrice told Greenvile what was to be done, That the King ſhou'd write a Letter to Monk, in which, after ſome Gracious Expreſſions, he ſhou'd deſire him to deliver a Letter and Declaration to the Parliament, the Contents of which were minuted; and Monk adviſ'd Greenvile to deſire his Majeſty to leave the Spaniſh Netherlands, and go to Breda, otherwiſe he wou'd be ſeiz'd by the Spaniards. Why, or to what Purpoſe no body can imagine? If they had ſtopp'd him a few Days, the Temper of the People might have alter'd, and then they might have kept him for the Money he ow'd them. Thus inſtructed, Sir John Greenvile taking the Lord Mordaunt with him, went to Flanders, where the King met him very privately with Chancellor Hyde, Secretary Nicholas, and the Marqueſs of Ormond. Then, according to Mr. Archdeacon, one of the firſt Things that fell into Debate upon this hopeful Proſpect of Affairs, was what ſhou'd be done with the Lands, and then what ſhou'd be done with the Presbyterians. He confeſſes it was wiſely urg'd that a Granting a general Toleration for Religion cou'd not conſiſt with the Peace of the Kingdom. But after great Deliberation, it was reſolv'd to draw up one Letter to the General, another to the Houſe of Commons, another to the Houſe of Lords, and another to the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council of London; in each of which was inclos'd a Declaration, that will be mention'd again hereafter; and Sir John Greenvile was ſent back to England with theſe Diſpatches. But before he went, he let his Majeſty know that he had offer'd Monk in the King's Name, 100,000 Pounds a Year, and to be Lord High Conſtable of England, but he had generouſly refus'd it; he alſo offer'd him to be Lord High Chancellor of England, which he alſo generouſly refus'd; and in Imitation of this unparalled Generoſity, the Archdeacon aſſures us Greenvile refus'd all Propoſals of Reward. But when he came to open the Packet of Letters, he found there, like the Cup in Benjamin's Sack, a Warrant for an Earldom, an Aſſurance of 3000 Pounds per Ann. and a Promiſe to pay his and his Father's Debts. He carry'd to the General another Commiſſion, which impower'd him to make a Secretary of State; and by the Advice of Sir John Greenvile, he confer'd that Honour upon Mr. William Morrice, who not long after was made a Knight, and his Son a Baronet. This Secretary has been mention'd before, and Biſhop Burnet informs us, Monk follow'd his own Judgment in the Choice of Morrice; and what his Judgment was we read in his Lordſhip's Hiſtory. For when afterwards King Charles was weary of Morrice, and wou'd have turn'd him out, had it not been for his General, the latter expreſs'd himſelf to this Purpoſe, I know not what is neceſſary for a good Secretary of State in which he is defective; for he can ſpeak French, and write Short-hand. I ſhall have more Occaſion in the Courſe of this Hiſtory to ſpeak of theſe excellent Politicians.

Sir John Greenvile goes to Flanders and returns.

Great Offers to Monk.

Echard.

p. 99. Secretary Morrice's Merits.

While theſe Things were upon the Anvil, the Lords perceiving which Way Things were turning, ſollicited Monk that they might take their Places according to antient Cuſtom in the Houſe appointed for their ſitting, alledging, that nothing done by the Commons without their Aſſent, cou'd juſtly be eſteem'd legal. But Monk had now made his Agreement with Bourdeaux the French Agent, and therefore he not only gave a poſitive Denial to their Demand, but plac'd a Guard of Soldiers upon their Houſe, to prevent the Lords from acting the ſame Part that the ſecluded Members had done. A.D.1660

The Houſe of Commons, to bear their laſt Teſtimony againſt Biſhops, and ſhew how zealous they were for Presbytery, order'd Copies of the Covenant to be fairly drawn, and hung up in every Pariſh Church throughout England. The Aſſemblies Confeſſion of Faith was alſo confirm'd by an Act. The Parliament paſs'd another Act for the Militia, with a Clauſe in it, that every Commiſſioner before he acted, ſhou'd acknowledge and declare, That the War undertaken by both Houſes of Parliament in their Defence againſt the Forces rais'd in the Name of the late King, was juſt and lawful; and that Magiſtracy and Miniſtry are the Ordinances of God. They paſs'd a Vote to diſcharge Dr. Owen from being Dean of Chriſt-Church, and Dr. Reynolds to be put in his Place; and another Vote, to diſable thoſe who had been in the War againſt the Parliament to ſerve as Members of the next Parliament. Monk's Officers were diſſatisfied with the Militia Bill, for all the Common-wealth's Friends being excluded Commands by it, they repreſented to him, that it wou'd be a Means of putting Commiſſions in the Hands of thoſe who were known to be Favourers of the King's Party, which might prove Injurious, if not Deſtructive to the Army. Upon which he wrote a Letter to the Parliament, letting them know, "That being inform'd of "the Diſaffection of the Commiſſioners nomi-"nated in the Militia Act, he deſir'd they wou'd "forbear the Execution of it, leſt the Perſons "they had entruſted therein might erect ſuch a "Power in oppoſition to the Army, as might be "ſufficient to bring in Charles Stuart." Many of the Members were perplex'd with this Letter, but others knew Monk better, and that it was one of his Masks; ſo Mr. Prynne procur'd the Act to be printed immediately, and diſpers'd before any Stop cou'd be put to it; and Sir William Waller, to carry on the Farce, was ſent to let Monk know, that no Man cou'd be a Militia Commiſſioner, who did not firſt ſubſcribe a Paper acknowledging the Juſtice of the Parliament's Cauſe. Monk was contented with this Anſwer, though, ſays Ludlow, All Men ſaw how little Conſcience the Cavalier Party made of ſigning any Paper in order to promote the Intereſt of their Faction. 863.

The Houſe of Commons zealous againſt Epiſcopacy.

Vindicates the War with the King.

The Council of State ſummon'd Mr. Praiſe-God Barebone to attend them, and upon his ſigning an Engagement not to act any thing in Diſturbance of the Peace, he was let go. Mr. Scot did the like, but Lieutenant General Ludlow avoided it by keeping out of the Way. Colonel Berry was committed by them. Major General Desborough, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, and Colonel Kelſey ſign'd the Engagement.

About the ſame Time, March the 16th, the Act paſs'd for Diſſolving the Parliament, after it had continu'd in ſeveral Forms Nineteen Years, Four Months, and Thirteen Days, and from the reſtoring of the ſecluded Members Twenty three Days only. They had Enacted that a new Parliament ſhou'd meet the 25th of April following, and Writs were iſſu'd out accordingly in the

A.D.1660 the Name of the Keepers of the Liberties of England.

Convention call'd in the Name of the Keepers of the Liberties.

Before they broke up, John Crew, Eſq; who had been as forward as any Man in beginning and carrying on of the War againſt the laſt King, mov'd, that before they diſſolv'd themſelves, They ſhou'd bear their Witneſs againſt the horrid Murder of the King. This unexpected Motion prevail'd with many then preſent to deny their Concurrence to that Act againſt the King, though not to reflect in the ſame Manner on thoſe who had been concerned in it. And one of them concluding his Diſcourſe with proteſting that he had neither Hand nor Heart in that Affair, Thomas Scot, Eſq; who had been ſo much deluded by the Hypocriſy of Monk, in Abhorrence, ſays Ludlow, of that baſe Spirit, ſaid,

Mr. Scot's Speech about the Murder of the King.

" That though he knew not where to hide his " Head at that Time, yet he durſt not refuſe to " own, that not only his Hand but his Heart alſo " was in it;" and after he had produced divers, Reaſons to prove the Juſtice of it, he concluded A.D.1660

" That he ſhou'd deſire no greater Honour in " this World, than that the following Inſcription " might be engraven on his Tomb, Here lieth " One who had a Hand and Heart in the Execu- " tion of Charles Stuart, late King of England."

Having ſo ſaid, continues Ludlow, " He and " moſt of the Members who had a Right to ſit " in Parliament, withdrew from the Houſe, ſo " that there was not the fourth Part of a Quo- " rum of lawful Members preſent in the Houſe, " when the ſecluded Members, who had been " Voted out of the Parliament by thoſe that had " an undiſputed Authority over their own Mem- " bers, undertook to diſſolve the Parliament, " which was not to be done unleſs by their own " Conſent; and whether that Conſent was ever " given, is ſubmitted to the Judgment of all im- " partial Men.

The Long Parliament was legally diſſolv'd.

COUNCIL of STATE.

ABOUT the Time of the Diſſolution of the Parliament, there was a very conſiderable Sum of Money rais'd by the Common-wealth Party to pay ſuch Troops as ſhou'd be willing to draw together againſt Monk and his Adherents; and two of their Number were to be Security for Major General Lambert's peaceable Behaviour, in 5000 l. Bail, which was to be paid out of this Stock, if it was forfeited. The principal Manager in this Affair was Slingsby Bethel, Eſq; who viſiting Sir Arthur Haſelrigge to confer with him upon it; he found him in a moſt melancholly Poſture ſitting in a Chair, and leaning his Head upon both his Hands; Mr. Bethel ask'd him, Why ſo ſad? Sir Arthur reply'd, I have been this Morning with Monk, and preſſing him to give me ſome Aſſurance of his Care of the Common-wealth, reminding him of his Oaths and Proteſtations of Fidelity to the Cauſe, he treated me in an unuſual Manner, demanding how I cou'd expect any thing from him, whom I had endeavour'd to make leſs than he was before he march'd from Scotland. Ah, Mr. Bethel, we are undone! we are undone! and his Deſpair was ſo great, that it put off the intended Diſcourſe.

Sir Arthur Haſelrigge in Deſpair,

While the Elections for the enſuing Parliament were carrying on, Major General Lambert made his Eſcape out of the Tower, and immediately ſent the Man, who had aſſiſted him in eſcaping, to Lieutenant General Ludlow to give him Notice of it, and deſire Ludlow to draw the Weſtern Forces together, and meet him in Oxfordſhire. Ludlow was willing to ſee what Troops came to Lambert's Rendezvous, which was to be at Daventry, before he appear'd openly; but he in the mean Time diſpatch'd Meſſengers to ſeveral Officers, who commanded the Forces in Dorſet, Somerſet and Wilts, to be ready to march upon Occaſion, and receiv'd Aſſurance, that the Caſtle of Taunton ſhou'd be deliver'd to him. Several other conſiderable Places were alſo promis'd him. A few Days after Major Whitby came to him from Lambert, who he ſaid, had near 1000 Horſe with him, and good Aſſurance, that moſt Part of the Army wou'd join him. Ludlow was willing enough to engage, but he was always jealous of Lambert's Ambition, and ask'd Whitby, what Lambert had declar'd for. The Major reply'd, This is not a Time to declare what we will be for, but what we will be againſt, which is that Torrent of Tyranny and Popery, which is ready to break in upon us. Ludlow was deſirous to be ſatisfy'd in that Point before he went further, and Lambert's Party was diſpers'd ſoon after Whitby return'd. The Lieutenant General had Reaſon to diſtruſt Lambert's Deſigns, who was ſo far from meaning a Republick, that it is ſaid, he had promis'd the Papiſts to turn if they wou'd join with him, and get him Aſſiſtance from abroad. That he told his Soldiers they ſhou'd have the Plunder of London, and his Plot was to ſtab Monk if his Soldiers cou'd have come at him, and have ſet up for himſelf: 'Tis ſaid the Papiſts ſav'd his Life by their Intereſt with the King. The Council of State had proclaim'd Lambert, and all his Adherents Traitors, and requir'd all Perſons to endeavour to ſuppreſs them, but theirs and Monk's Fears were ſoon over. The People being weary'd out with ſo many different Governments within a few Months, hop'd for little Relief by any one of them, and reſolv'd to return into the old Way. Tho' Col. Cobbet, Col. Axtel, and Col. Okey, were got to Lambert, he cou'd make but two or three Hundred Horſe; againſt theſe were ſent Col. Ingoldsby, with a Regiment of Horſe, and Col. Streater's Regiment of Foot, and Col. Roſſiter with other Forces, advanc'd from Lincolnſhire and Nottinghamſhire. Ingoldsby making the beſt of his Way towards Daventry, a Party of his met Capt. Haſelrigge, Son to Sir Arthur, whoſe Troop was with Lambert. Col Ingoldsby examin'd him, and young Haſelrigge ſaid, that not liking Lambert's Deſigns, he had quitted the Party, wherefore he hop'd he ſhou'd be ſet at Liberty; but Ingoldsby told him, that unleſs he wou'd bring off his Troop alſo from Lambert, his quitting them, ſhou'd be of no Advantage to him: Haſelrigge promis'd to uſe the beſt of his Endeavours to ſerve him; upon which he was permitted to return to Lambert. When the two Parties were ready to engage, he brought off his Troop, as he had promis'd to endeavour, which rais'd ſuch a Conſternation among Lambert's Men, that moſt of them went over to Ingoldsby, and thoſe who did not, ſhifted for themſelves as well as they cou'd, leaving Lambert talking with Ingoldsby, and endeavouring to diſſwade him from engaging further againſt him. But Ingoldsby had made his Bargain with Monk, and inſtead of being hang'd up with the reſt of

When Col. Ingoldsby came to Northampton with Major General Lambert, then his Priſoner, the Crowd ſhouting at his Succeſs, Lambert put Ingoldsby in Mind of what Cromwel had ſaid to them both in the Year 1650, when they were returning victorious from Worceſter, and were met on the Road towards London by innumerable Crowds of People ſhouting and rejoicing at their Succeſs. Lambert ſaid to Cromwel, he was glad to ſee that the Nation was for them; Cromwel anſwer'd, Do not truſt to that, for thoſe very Perſons wou'd ſhout as much, if you and I were going to be hang'd; Lambert added, I look on my ſelf as in a fair Way for that, and begin to think Cromwel had propheſy'd. Col. Rich endeavour'd to have engag'd his Regiment, which was quarter'd at Bury, but the Common-wealth Party were now as much bewitch'd as the Cavaliers had been after the Battel of Naſeby. They had a hearty Contempt for Monk, but had not Spirit enough left to make one bold Attempt to ſave themſelves.

In the mean time the Royaliſts to remove all Obſtacles that lay ſtill in the Way of the King's Reſtoration, threw the Wolf off, and put on the Sheep; and as if they had really meant a Syllable of what they ſaid, they publiſh'd a Declaration, wherein "They reflected on their "paſt Sufferings, as from the Hand of God, "and therefore did not cheriſh any violent "Thoughts or Inclinations againſt any Perſons "whatſoever, who had been inſtrumental in them, "and if the Indiſcretion of any particular Per"ſon ſhou'd tranſport them to Expreſſions con"trary to this their general Senſe, they ſhou'd "diſclaim them." There were many other ſoothing flattering Expreſſions, which they made good after the Reſtoration, as the King did his Promiſes of Indemnity and Indulgence. This Declaration was ſign'd by the Marquis of Dorcheſter, Earl of Northampton, Earl of Devonſhire, Earl of Berkſhire, Earl of Dover, Earl of Peterborough, Earl of Norwich, Earl of Cork, Earl of Carbery, Earl of Deſmond, Viſcount Ogle, Viſcount Grandiſon, Viſcount Lumley, Viſcount Brounker, Lord Bellaſis, Lord Loughborough, Lord Lexington, Lord Lucas, Lord Brereton, Biſhop of Kerry, Sir Jervace Cliſton, Sir William Thorold, Sir Thomas Corbet, Sir Thomas Littleton, Sir Arthur Gorge, Sir William Compton, Sir Thomas Preſtwich, Sir Edward Pye, Sir Thomas Smith, Sir William Carey, Sir Hugh Cartwright, Sir Henry Chichely, Sir Edward Savage, Sir John Stevens, Sir William Howard, Sir William Dawes, Sir Anthony Jackſon, George Morley, D. Cavaliers Declaration.

We ſhall find after the Reſtoration how meekly George Morley, D. D. behav'd, and how well he kept to the Letter of this Declaration, which was follow'd by another from the King himſelf, wherein he granted a Free and General Pardon to all his Subjects, of what Degree or Quality ſoever, who within Forty Days after publiſhing thereof, ſhall lay hold upon his Grace and Favour, and ſhall by any Publick Act declare their doing ſo. Again, Let all our Subjects, how faulty ſoever, rely upon the Word of a King, that no Crime whatſoever committed againſt Us or Our Royal Father before the Publication of this, ſhall ever riſe in Judgment, or be brought in Queſtion againſt any of them, to the leaſt Indamagement of any of them, either in their Lives, Liberties, or Eſtates. It will be very proper to read this with Attention when the Blood of Sir Henry Vane is going to be ſpilt. Again, nay not ſo much as to the Prejudice of their Reputation, by any Reproach or Terms of Diſtinction from the reſt of our beſt Subjects, ſuch as Regicides, King-killers, Forty-one Men, Fanaticks, Rebels, Schiſmaticks, and as many more as Malice and Ribaldry cou'd invent, and foul Language and foul Mouths expreſs. This was ſo notorious, that Anneſley, Preſident of the Council of State, who when a Motion was made in it to call in the King by Treaty and Covenant, perſuaded them to truſt the King Abſolutely: I ſay, this very Anneſley cry'd out againſt the ſhameleſs Licence with which the Cavaliers, countenanc'd by the King, abus'd and inſulted the very Men that brought him and them into the Kingdom. He is ſpeaking of the Lord Commiſſioner Whitlock's Memorials, and his fair Way of Writing, glancing at the ſame Time at the Intemperance of Tongue and Pen after the Reſtoration. "You find always in Whitlock that "Principle of a Gentleman, not to report diſho"nourably of an Enemy;" What then was the Earl of Clarendon's Principle? What that of Mr. Archdeacon? "Livy every where made "honourable Mention of Scipio, Afranius, and "even Brutus and Caſſius, yet was not he the "leſs belov'd of Auguſtus Cæſar. Nor did thoſe "Times ever call them ROGUES and REGI"CIDES, Terms that afterwards a more dege"nerate Un-Roman Generation under the Mi"niſtry of Sejanus, beſtow'd upon them." Let this be alſo remembred when we come to Clarendon's and Turner's Speeches about the Conformity, and other Acts. His Majeſty again, We deſiring and ordaining that henceforward all Notes of Diſcord and Difference of Parties be utterly aboliſh'd among all Our Subjects, whom We invite and conjure to a perfect Union among themſelves, under Our Protection. The King's Pardon. Pref. to Whitlock.

The next Portion of it relates to Religion, and deſerves eſpecial Obſervation, it being an admirable Preamble to the Bartholomew Bill. And becauſe the Paſſion and Uncharitableneſs of the Times have produc'd ſeveral Opinions in Religion, by which Men are engag'd in Parties and Animoſities againſt each other; which when they ſhall hereafter unite in a Freedom of Converſation, will be compos'd or better underſtood; WE DO DECLARE A LIBERTY TO TENDER CONSCIENCES, and that no Man ſhall be diſquieted or call'd in Queſtion for Differences of Opinion in Matters of Religion. One of the firſt Laws he made was againſt Liberty of Conſcience, and to diſquiet and call in Queſtion every Man and Woman that differ'd in Opinion

A.D.1660 with Coſins and Morley in Matters of Religion. It began well.

The Elections for Parliament Men went every where as the Party of the ſecluded Members wou'd have it, except in a few Places only, there being no more than theſe following Members who had ſat in the Common-wealth Parliament ſince the King's Death, and were choſen to ſit in this.

Republicans choſen. William Lenthal, Eſq; Col. Francis Laſſels, Col. Richard Ingoldsby, Sir Thomas Widdrington, Sir Thomas Wroth, William Cawley, Eſq; Robert Reynolds, Eſq; Luke Robinſon, Eſq; Alexander Popham, Eſq; Thomas Scot, Eſq; Edmund Ludlow, Eſq; John Hutchinſon, Eſq; John Lambert, Eſq; John Weaver, Eſq; Admiral Montague, Robert Wallop, Eſq; John Blagrave, Eſq; William Pierpoint, Eſq; Lord Broghill, Henry Cromwel, Eſq; Lord Howard. A.D.1661

There were ſeveral that had ſat in Oliver's Parliament, but few of the above-nam'd did ſit, though choſen. Mr. Robinſon, who had been very fierce againſt the King, highly magnify'd his Goodneſs and Clemency in the abovemention'd Declaration. Mr. Ludlow was choſen for Hendon in Wiltſhire, but Sir Thomas Thynne being alſo return'd for that Borough with Mr. How, the Election was brought before the Committee, who gave it for Mr. Ludlow. The Parliament choſe Sir Harbottle Grimſton their Speaker: He had been a zealous Parliamentarian, Presbyterian and Covenanter, and the major Vote of this Houſe was for the Presbytery.

Convention choose Sir Harbottle Grimſton Speaker.

The CONVENTION.

THE Parliament not being call'd by the King's Writ, is by our nice Chroniclers term'd the Convention, who, as ſoon as they met, appointed a Day of Humiliation, and choſe Dr. Gauden, afterwards a Biſhop, Mr. Calamy, and Mr. Baxter, to carry on the Work of the Day.

King's Letters to Monk. Two Days after, April the 27th, Sir John Greenvile, who was return'd from Flanders, deliver'd a Letter from the King to the General, which was cold enough conſidering the Importance of the Subject. Monk carry'd the Letter into the Houſe of Commons, of which he was a Member, being choſen by that Learned and Venerable Body the Univerſity of Cambridge to be their Repreſentative. He told the Houſe, he had not only receiv'd a Letter from his Majeſty, but that the Meſſenger who brought it, Sir John Greenvile, was at the Door, with another to them. Upon which he was call'd for, and having deliver'd his Letter, the General's Letter and that were both read in the Houſe with as much Joy as People, who did not very well know why they were ſo joyful, cou'd expreſs. Sir John Greenvile deliver'd a Letter to the Lords from the King, the Contents of which was a Congratulation of their being reſtor'd to their Authority; another was deliver'd by him to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, all which had the like Effect on the Perſons to whom they were addreſs'd, as had that to the Houſe of Commons. In a Word, Their, and the whole Nation's Joy, was without Meaſure. The People were out of their Wits, and to ſhew that a Man had any left, was enough to have had his Brains beaten out.

Conditions for the King rejected. When the Motion for ſending Conditions to the King, preparatory to his Admiſſion, was mention'd in the Houſe, the Perſons who mov'd and ſeconded it, though the Wiſeſt and Graveſt in that great Aſſembly, were diſregarded as ſupercilious and impertinent; and General Monk, who ſpoke in Anſwer to the famous Lord Chief Juſtice Hale, as he was inſtructed, according to Biſhop Burnet, put an End to that extravagant Debate. He told the Houſe, "That there was "yet, beyond all Mens Hope, an univerſal Quiet "all over the Nation; but there were many In- "cendiaries ſtill on the Watch, trying where they "cou'd firſt raiſe the Flame. He ſaid, he had "ſuch copious Informations ſent him of theſe "Things, that it was fit they ſhou'd be gene- "rally known; he cou'd not anſwer for the Peace "either of the Nation or the Army, if any De- "lay was put to the ſending for the King. What "Need was there of ſending Propoſitions to him? "Might they not as well prepare them, and of- "fer them to him when he ſhou'd come over? "as he was to bring neither Army nor Treaſure "with him, either to fright them or corrupt "them: So he mov'd that they wou'd imme- "diately ſend Commiſſioners to bring over the "King, and added, he muſt lay the Blame of all "the Blood or Miſchief that might follow on "the Heads of thoſe who ſhou'd ſtill inſiſt on "any Motion that might delay the preſent Set- "tlement of the Nation." This was eccho'd with ſuch a Shout over the Houſe, that neither Judge Hale, nor any other Member, durſt venture to ſay a Word more of it. Biſhop Burnet obſerves, this was the Great Service he did. And it was explain'd afterwards by that Right Noble and Virtuous Peer the Earl of Southampton, whoſe Loyalty was not more Exemplary than his Love to his Country. Take it in my Lord Sarum's Words: "When the Lord Southampton came to "ſee what King Charles was like to prove, he "ſaid once in great Wrath to Chancellor Hyde, "It is to you we owe all we either feel or fear; "for if you had not poſſeſs'd us in all your Letters "with ſuch an Opinion of the King, we wou'd "have taken Care to have put it out of his Power "either to do himſelf or us any Miſchief, which "is like to be the Effect of our truſting him ſo "entirely." Chancellor Hyde anſwer'd, "He "thought the King had ſo true a Judgment, and "ſo much good Nature, that when the Age of "Pleaſure ſhou'd be over, and the Idleneſs of "his Exile, which made him ſeek new Diver- "ſions for want of other Employment, was "turn'd to an Obligation to mind Affairs, then "he wou'd have ſhaken off thoſe Entangle- "ments." How he ſhook them off, he ſhew'd the very firſt Night after his Reſtoration-Day, by a new Entanglement which he cou'd never clear himſelf, or perhaps never deſir'd to clear himſelf of, though it was ſuch a mortal Wound to his Conſcience and Honour; I mean the taking away Roger Palmer's Wife, which muſt be mention'd more than once in this Hiſtory.

Earl of Southampton repents truſting the King.

The Acclamations of Lords and Commons were ſo great, that they had hardly Leiſure to paſs ſerious Votes; but the Tempeſt of Joy at laſt ſubſided ſo much, that having Voted Thanks again and again to their General, and to Sir John Greenvile, they appointed a Committee to draw up an Anſwer to his Majeſty's moſt Gracious Letter, and order'd 50,000 Pounds for the King, 10,000 Pounds for the Duke of York, and 5000 Pounds for the Duke of Glouceſter. Both Houſes alſo agreed that the King ſhou'd be ſolemnly proclaim'd, and it was done with as much Ceremony

One may eaſily imagine the Common-wealth Men are creeping every where into Corners and Holes, and their Enemies every where ferreting them out of them. Ludlow ſat in the Houſe a Week or two, but it ſoon grew too hot for him, though he receiv'd good Offices from Mr. Hale, Mr. Anneſley, Major Robert Harley, Serjeant Glynn, and Mr. Pierpoint. He writes of it thus in his Memoirs, "In the Convention Things went "high, Men not daring to ſhew Moderation; "but in private, ſeveral Members of both Houſes "declar'd their Opinion, that a General Indemnity ought to be granted for all that had paſt, "without any Exception. The Earl of Northumberland was heard to ſay, Though I had no Part in the Death of the King, yet I am againſt queſtioning thoſe that had been concern'd in that Affair." The Reaſon he gives for it is entirely Republican, and conſequently very irrational and unwarrantable, That the Example might be more uſeful to Poſterity, and profitable to future Kings, by deterring them from the like Exorbitances; which I can hardly believe the Lord Northumberland ever ſaid, it being very inconſiſtent with Monarchical Principles, which his Lordſhip eſpous'd; and Ludlow is ſometimes too credulous, when his Judgment and Diſcretion are ſubjected by his Paſſion and Reſentment. He proceeds, "The Lord Fairfax on that Sub-"ject plainly ſaid, If any Perſon muſt be excepted, I know no Man that deſerves it more than my ſelf, who being General of the Army at that Time, and having Power ſufficient to prevent the Proceedings againſt the King, had not thought fit to make uſe of it to that End.

"Several Members mov'd in the Houſe of "Commons, That Limitations and Conditions "might be drawn up, on which they ſhou'd conſent to receive the King, till at length finding that Monk, who had the Power in his Ib. p. 11. "Hand, gave conſtant Intelligence of all that "was ſaid, and by whom, none of them durſt "inſiſt any further on thoſe Heads. And that "he might compleat his Treachery, when the "Lord Say propos'd to him, that for the Quiet "of Men's Minds, an Act of Indemnity ſhou'd "be paſs'd, in which ſome of thoſe who had "been principally concern'd in the Death of the "King might be excepted; he in a great Rage "anſwer'd, Not a Man; for if I ſhou'd ſuffer "ſuch a Thing, I ſhou'd be the arranteſt Rogue "that ever liv'd." We have this Account of his managing the Houſe in Burnet. "Yet for all "this, under Colour that the Houſe might have "better Terms from the King by relying on his "Ingenuity, than by Capitulating with him, "eſpecially at a diſtance, he had the Confidence to move them, That their Commiſſioners might be impower'd ſimply to invite him into England; "which Motion concurring with the Opinion of "the Unforeſeeing Cavaliers among them, and "diſlik'd only by thoſe who had not Courage "enough to publiſh their Diſſent, for fear of ex-"poſing themſelves to a future Revenge, was "taken for the Senſe of the whole Houſe, and "ſo paſs'd." However, one of thoſe Cavaliers hapning to call the Civil War a Rebellion, the Houſe cry'd out, To the Bar, to the Bar; and he was reprimanded upon his Knees, the Speaker by their Order declaring, It was a Defenſive War to preſerve the Peoples Rights and Privileges.

For the CLERGY,

Dr. Reynolds, Dr. Manton, Mr. Calamy, Mr. Caſe, Mr. Bowles.

Dr. Calamy tells us, They were ſent by the Parliament and City, and Echard very idly and inviduouſly ſays, They wou'd not be look'd upon as Chaplains to the reſt, but as the Repreſentatives of that Party, the ſame which brought in the King, and before he is come Mr. Archdeacon begins to inſult them for it. Twenty Aldermen and principal Citizens alſo attended his Majeſty. The Parliament being about to diſpoſe of the Great Seal, the Earl of Mancheſter was nam'd for it; but upon Intimation that the Seal was diſpos'd of abroad already, that Matter drop'd. Col. Bowyer, without any Order from them, took a Party of the Staffordſhire Militia, and by his own Authority ſeiz'd Major General Harriſon, with his Horſes and Arms. The Major General had Notice that Bowyer wou'd do ſo if he did not fly for it, which he abſolutely refus'd, looking upon it as a Flying from the Cauſe, though in Truth the Cauſe fled from him, and there was as much Enthuſiaſm in his Political as his Religious Principles. Sir Charles Coote in Ireland ſeiz'd the Lord Chief Juſtice Cook, and they being both ſent to London, were impriſon'd in the Tower by the Parliament.

and L. C. J. Cook.

The King ſtaid all this bleſſed Time at Breda, in Expectation of Times ſtill more bleſſed in England, as he expreſs'd it, when he ſaid, What a World of Love ſhall we have there! Mr. Archdeacon will excuſe me for not ſpeaking it as it was ſaid. Applications were daily made to him by Perſons of all Parties and Denominations. The Cavaliers brought him or ſent him great Boaſts of Services; the Presbyterians and Parliamentarians paid their Compliments in Money; Mr. Lenthal, the late Speaker, ſent 3000 Pounds, with a Hint that it wou'd be acceptable to him to continue in his Place as Maſter of the Rolls, but he miſs'd his Aim.

The King at Breda.

There was great Contention in the Houſe of Commons who ſhou'd be of the Number of the above-mention'd Commiſſioners, to be early in paying their Reſpects to his Majeſty; every Man expecting ſome Mark of Favour to be conferr'd on him for this Service. To theſe, many others, Ludlow ſays, of the Looſer Sort of Men, added themſelves; and ſome, to make an early Offer of their Subjection, and to provide themſelves of Places, went over before the Commiſſioners. Theſe Men being one Day in the King's Apartment boaſting of their Loyalty and Services, his Majeſty call'd for Wine, and applying himſelf to the Duke of York, drank to the Health of thoſe Gentlemen with this Remark, That he was now even with them, having, as he thought, done as much for them as they had done for him. Echard repeats this after Ludlow, and I hope I ſhall be allow'd the Uſe of that Hiſtorian as well as Mr. Archdeacon in this and other Caſes.

Sir Cha. Coote's Injuſtice to Lord Broghill.

Theſe Gentlemen did not only over-value their own Merits, but they under-valued the Merits of one another; an Inſtance of which I have in my Manuſcript Author. When the Lord Broghill came to pay his Duty to his Majeſty, after his Acceſſion to the Throne, the King, inſtead of giving him Thanks for his Services in Ireland, of which we have given ſome Account, gave him a very cold Reception, at which he was extremely ſurpriz'd and troubled; and it being obſerv'd by his Brother the Lord Shannon, he deſir'd to know the Reaſon of it, which Lord Broghill acquainted him with, and entreated him to uſe all the Intereſt he had with the Courtiers to find out what might be the Occaſion of his Majeſty's Coldneſs to him. Lord Shannon was ſo happy in his Enquiry, that he underſtood Sir Charles Coote had told the King, He was the firſt Man that ſtir'd for him in Ireland; that the Lord Broghill oppos'd it, and was at laſt, with much ado, prevailed upon to cloſe in with it. Lord Shannon being well aſſur'd, that Coote had given this Miſrepreſentation of the Matter, told it to his Brother Broghill; who, ſays my Reverend Author, wonder'd at the Impudence and Slander of Sir Charles Coote; and immediately bethought himſelf of the Letter Coote had written him, which he had ſtill by him, and in which were theſe Words, Remember, my Lord, you firſt put me upon this Deſign, and I beſeech you, forſake me not in that which you firſt put me upon. Meaning the declaring for a Free Parliament, a ſafer Phraſe for the King. This Letter was delivered to Lord Shannon, to let his Majeſty have a Sight of it, which was done; and Lord Broghill was not only receiv'd very favourably afterwards, but made Earl of Orrery, Sworn a Privy-Counſellor of England and Ireland, and at laſt was admitted into the Cabinet-Council: Theſe petty Treacheries are eaſily forgotten, amidſt a Number of enormous Ones, and it is not at all ſtrange, that Men ſhou'd betray their Friends, whoſe Conſcience wou'd let 'em betray their Country. While the King was at Breda, with his two Brothers, and his Siſter the Princeſs of Orange, whoſe City it was, in Right of her Son the Prince of Orange, a Minor, our late glorious Monarch William III, the Governor of the Spaniſh Netherlands, and Cardinal Mazarine invited him, the one to take Flanders, and the other to take Calais, in his Way to England, their Countenances towards him being changed with the Face of his Affairs in England: But his Majeſty preferr'd an Invitation he receiv'd from the States General of the United Provinces, who ſent Deputies to him on Purpoſe; and when they return'd with his Majeſty's Acceptance of it, they laid themſelves out to make Amends by his Entertainment then, for their refuſing to give him any at all, or even Shelter in their Dominions, five or ſix Years before.

Parliament Commiſſioners at Breda,

The Commiſſioners arriv'd at Breda, three or four Days before the King's Departure from thence to go to Holland. The Temper of the Cavaliers appear'd at the firſt Appearance of thoſe Commiſſioners; for Mr. Denzil Hollis being appointed Spokeſman, at leaſt for the Commoners, was interrupted and ruffled by Mr. Henry Howard, Brother to the Earl of Arundel, who ſaid, It is inſolent in him to pretend to that Honour which belongs to ———; another of the Commiſſioners, who was his own Kinſman; but he miſtook his Man. Mr. Hollis was not wont to part with an Inch of Ground which he had a Right to keep, and affirm'd, the Houſe had entruſted him with their Compliments and Deſires. Upon which the King thought fit to make up the Difference, and to ſuffer Mr. Hollis to perform his Part, which was to preſent the Parliament's Supplication, "That his Majeſty wou'd be pleas'd to return "and take the Government of the Kingdom "into his Hands, where he ſhould find all poſ-"ſible Affection, Duty and Obedience." And then the Commiſſioners did the moſt welcome Part of their Commiſſion, preſenting the King and his two Brothers, with the Money the Parliament had given them, which, with the other Preſents they had received from particular Perſons, amounted to more than the Three Princes had ever ſeen in all their Lives before, and was ſufficient to enable them to pay their Debts in Breda and Holland: For probably thoſe in Flanders were left to another Seaſon, when Money was ſtill more Plenty. The Lord Fairfax was moſt taken notice of, of all the Commiſſioners, all Foreigners having an inſatiable Curioſity to ſee a Captain, who ſome Years before was at the Head of the moſt victorious Army in the Univerſe. But this Commiſſion was fatal to Sir Anthony-Aſhley Cooper, afterwards Earl of Shaftsbury, who travelling in a Brabant Waggon ſome Part of the Road, was by ſome Accident or other ſo bruis'd in his Side, that it occaſion'd a Tumour, which was incurable, and the Chirurgeons were forced to keep it open to prevent the Humours falling back on the Vital Parts, which occaſioned that dull and ſcandalous Reflection of the Tap, as that gave Occaſion to much of the Party's Wit in the middle of the following Reign.

A.D. 1660

His Majeſty Knighted all the London Commiſſioners, and no doubt Echard ſpeaks Truth in this too; that they were wonderfully pleas'd with Knighthood, which tho' it coſt the King nothing, was chargeable enough to the City, who preſented him and his Brothers with 10 or 15000 Pounds.

and Preſbyterian Miniſters.

The poor Presbyterian Miniſters, who were in this Commiſſion, and had juſt done the King's Buſineſs, were receiv'd the worſt of all of them, if what Mr. Archdeacon ſays is true, which is as much to be queſtion'd here, as in other Places. He tells us indeed, they declared they were no Enemies to moderate Epiſcopacy, who knew not that! There is not a Man in England, of common Senſe, and common Knowledge, who is againſt moderate Epiſcopacy; neither were the Presbyterians in King Charles the Firſt's Time againſt it: It was againſt the High Commiſſion Court Epiſcopacy; the Star-Chamber Epiſcopacy; the Laudæan Epiſcopacy; the Croſſes, the Cringings, the Suſpendings, Silencings, Baniſhings, Scourgings, Beggarings, and the intolerable Pride, Oppreſſion and Cruelty of Laud and his perſecuting Brethren, which the Presbyterians were then, and are now againſt: But not an Epiſcopacy in the Hands of ſuch reverend and pious Fathers of our Proteſtant Church, as are now its Pillars and Ornaments. Such Biſhops, and almoſt all ſuch as have been admitted into that ſacred Order, ſince the Revolution, are never intended, when Epiſcopacy and Prelacy are animadverted upon in this Hiſtory. Echard repeats what the Presbyterian Miniſters ſaid to the King about the Common-Prayer-Book, and he repeats it, as if what they ſaid, was extravagant and unpardonable, The Book of Common-Prayer having been long diſcontinued in England, the People are ſo diſus'd to it, that many of them had never heard it in their Lives, and it wou'd be much wonder'd at, if his Majeſty at his firſt Landing in the Kingdom, ſhou'd revive

A.D. 1660 revive the Uſe of it in his own Chapel, whither all Perſons would reſort; wherefore they pray'd, that he wou'd not uſe it, entirely and formally, but have only ſome Parts of it read, with Mixture of other good Prayers to be us'd by his Chaplains. Echard, as if this King had had any Religion in him, or matter'd any Prayer at all, unleſs it was taken out of the Maſs-Book, ſays, his Majeſty anſwer'd with ſome Warmth, While I give you Liberty, I will not have my own taken from me. His Liberty was to be an Atheiſt and Papiſt in Belief and Practice. I have always us'd that Form of Service which I thought the beſt in the World. Thought he ſo when he was at Fontainbleau or Fonterabia? What cou'd Echard mean, by repeating ſuch Hypocriſy and Abſurdity? The Presbyterians, according to him, made another moſt impious Requeſt, that the Uſe of the Surplice might be diſcontinued by his Chaplains. The King, adds he, immoveable here too, reply'd, Tho' he was oblig'd for the preſent to tolerate much Diſorder and Indecency (he means a long Cloak and extempore Prayer) yet he wou'd not diſcountenance the good Order of the Church, otherwiſe than as my Lord of Sarum informs us, by keeping no
P. 93. Order at all at Divine Service, and taking Care even at the Sacrament, that the Aſſiſtants ſhou'd obſerve, he did not think of what he was about. He told Dr. Burnet, he thought God wou'd not damn him for taking a little Pleaſure out of the Way. This is he whoſe Conſcience was ſo ſcrupulous in the Worſhip of God, that he cou'd not bear the Indecency of Prayer without a white Linen Veſtment! The Folly of theſe Men is prodigious, to think the Church honour'd by the Pollutions of a Prince who abhor'd or deſpis'd it, as he muſt do, believing it, as much as he believ'd any Thing that is Sacred, to be a Hereſy. But I have obſerv'd theſe Men care not what Hands their Dignities, nay, their very Religion, Revenues and Powers paſs thro', provided their Point is gained by it. Tho' I do not ſuppoſe King Charles ſaid a Word of what Echard makes him ſay; yet I do ſuppoſe, he was Libertine enough to have ſaid it; but as he had good Nature, when Coſins and Morley, Hyde and Bennet, did not influence him, and had always good Senſe, when he gave himſelf Time to think, ſo I cannot believe, he wou'd have aſſum'd that Air, and us'd thoſe diſagreeable Expreſſions to Men, who had ventur'd every thing to recover three Kingdoms for him. Did Mr. Archdeacon never hear that his Majeſty, on the contrary contriv'd it ſo, that the Miniſters ſhou'd be plac'd in a Chamber, as by Accident, which join'd to a Cloſet where the King was to be at Prayer, extempore too, for its greater Efficacy with the Presbyterians, and
The King's Prayer. that he thank'd God in his Prayer for his being a Covenanted King; that he hop'd the Lord wou'd give him an humble, meek, forgiving Spirit, that he might have Forbearance with his offending Subjects, as he expected Forbearance from offended Heaven, with a great deal more of it, full of Cant and Enthuſiaſm, which deceiv'd ſome, but not all of the Miniſters. Thoſe who were impos'd upon, wrote Home, that the King of the Covenant was coming: But others of them heard ſuch Accounts of his Morals and Principles, that they began to raiſe Fear in the Breaſts of the moſt Sanguine.

From Breda the King went to the Hague, where Crouds from the three Kingdoms were waiting for him, and where the States had made Preparations for the Entertainment of himſelf and his Court, and the Commiſſioners that attended him, who were all provided for at their Expence. Echard ſays, the Latter had their first Audience at the Hague, but Ludlow and others place it at Breda. Admiral Montague, who had made his particular Bargain with the King by the Management of Mr. Edward Montague, his Kinſman, of the Halliſax Family, came with the Engliſh Fleet before Scheueling, about the ſame Time that the King came to the Hague, where he made his Brother the Duke of York, Lord High Admiral of England, and he went aboard the Fleet to take Poſſeſſion of the Command. Nor can it be deny'd, that he did ſomething in his Poſt, for he alter'd the Names of the Ships, as being Remembrances of the late Times, ſuch as the Victory, the Triumph, and other Names which were ſuitable to the Glory the Engliſh Fleet had acquir'd, to give the Ships Names more ſuitable to the Diſgrace that was coming upon it, as the Katherine, the Fubs, &c. which are to be met with in the Navy Rolls from the Year 60 to 80. At the Hague, all the Ambaſſadors and publick Miniſters of Kings, Princes and States, complimented his Majeſty on this Change of his Fortune: So that it might well be thought, according to our excellent Hiſtorian, that he was reſtor'd by the Activity of Chriſtendom. How quaint his Expreſſion is!

A.D. 1660

Among others who came to the Hague, was one Sharp, afterwards Archbiſhop, who carry'd a Letter from the Earl of Glencairn, to Sir Edward Hyde. This Sharp had been employ'd by the Reſolutioners, as their Agent with Cromwel. We will make uſe of the Biſhop of Salisbury's Words, " He ſeemed more than ordinary " zealous for Presbytery, and while he was in " Cromwel's Court, Dr. Wilkins, afterwards " Biſhop of Cheſter, having only mentioned E- " piſcopacy, Sharp could not hear the Diſ- " courſe, and rejected it with Horror. The " Earl of Glencairn's Letter recommending " him to Hyde, as the only capable Perſon to " manage the Deſign of ſetting up Epiſcopacy " in Scotland. Pray mind what Perſons they " make uſe of, and what their Practices are!

" He was receiv'd into great Confidence, and P. 92. " as he had obſerv'd very carefully the Succeſs " of Monk's ſolemn Proteſtations againſt the " King, and for the Covenant, it ſeems he was " ſo pleas'd with the Original, that he reſolv'd " to copy after it, without letting himſelf be " diverted from it by Scruples: For he ſtuck " neither at ſolemn Proteſtations, both by Word " of Mouth, and by Letters (of which I have " ſeen many Proofs) nor at Appeals to God, of " his Sincerity in acting for the Presbytery, " both in Prayers, and on other Occaſions, join- " ing with theſe many dreadful Imprecations on " himſelf, if he did prevaricate." Archdeacon Echard calls him an illuſtrious Perſon, and the Biſhop of Sarum further explains what you muſt underſtand by illuſtrious in their Characteriſticks. " He was all the while maintained by the " Presbyterians, as their Agent, and continued " to give them a conſtant Account of the Pro- " greſs of his Negotiation in their Service, while " he was indeed undermining it. This piece " of Craft was ſo viſible, he having repeated " his Proteſtations to as many Perſons as then " grew jealous of him, that when he threw off " the Mask, about a Year after this, it laid a " Foundation of ſuch a Character of him, that " nothing cou'd bring People to have any tole- " rable Thoughts of a Man, whoſe Diſſimula- " tion and Treachery was ſo well known, and " of which ſo many Proofs were to be ſeen un- " der his Hand." As this Man is illuſtrious with Echard, ſo is he the Pious and the Holy

*A.D.*1660 with others of them, and his Grace in every Sentence that is ſaid of him.

The King's Entertainment at the Hague, was very magnificent and expenſive. His Majeſty made them in Return, all the Profeſſions of Amity, to uſe Echard's Words, that were due to their generous Civilities; and at his Departure, the States made a fulſome Speech to him, of which we ſhall have Patience to repeat a little, becauſe it is ſpoken by Men, who, four or five Years before had forbidden him their Country.

States Speech to the King.

Your Majeſty might obſerve in the Looks of all our People, the Joy they had in their Hearts, to ſee a Prince cheriſh'd of God; a Prince wholly miraculous, and a Prince who probably will make a Part of their Quietneſs and Felicity: Your Majeſty ſhall preſently ſee all the Streets filled, all the Way cover'd, and all the Hills loaden with People, who will follow you to the Place of your Embarkment, and wou'd not leave you, if they had wherewithal to carry them to your Kingdoms, &c. Mr. Archdeacon informs us, The Hollanders ſhew'd all Expreſſions of Joy at his coming, and at his going. The Hills were throng'd with innumerable Multitudes, and his Majeſty mounting on the Stern of his Ship, caſt his Eyes on the friendly Shore, and ſaid, I think my own Subjects can ſcarce have more Tenderneſs for me than theſe People, in whoſe Affections I ſee I reign, no leſs than I am going to reign in the Wills of the Engliſh. So Rhetorical, that one may be ſure it was extempore. Eight thouſand of theſe loving Dutchmen were kill'd four or five Years after, by his Brother the Duke of York, and above Thirty of the States capital Men of War taken, ſunk and burnt.

While theſe Ceremonies were paſſing in Holland, the Houſe of Commons were preparing the Bill of Indemnity, that it might be ready to paſs at the Arrival of the King. They unanimouſly agreed, that ſome of the King's Judges ſhou'd be excepted, both as to Life and Eſtate; the remaining Diſpute being only about the Number. Some propoſed that all might be excepted, others would be contented with twenty, and many with thirteen. But, ſays General Ludlow, "Monk who had betray'd them all, "pretending to be for Moderation, the Number "was reduced to nine, which Mr. Prynne, con- "trary to the Order of the Houſe, undertook to "name." Monk at laſt prevail'd with the Houſe, to bring the Number to ſeven. The Commons in preparing this Act, were very careful not to let any Blot or Blemiſh remain on the Civil War, which the Long Parliament engag'd in, to defend their Religion, Laws and Liberties. This particularly appear'd in the Caſe of Mr. William Lenthal, who had been Speaker of that Parliament, and was a Member of this, and hapning to drop this Expreſſion, in the Debate about the Indemnity, He who firſt drew his Sword againſt the late King, committed as great an Offence as he who cut off his Head. He was ſeiz'd by the Serjeant at Arms, and Sir Harbottle Grimſtone, the Speaker, by Order of the Houſe, reprimanded him in theſe Words; Sir, the Houſe hath taken great Offence at ſome Words you have let fall in this Debate; which in their Judgment, contain as high a Reflection on the Juſtice and Proceedings of the Lords and Commons of the laſt Parliament, in their Actings before 1648, as cou'd be expreſſed. They apprehend there is much Poiſon in the ſaid Words, and that they were ſpoken out of a Deſign to inflame, and to render them who drew the Sword to bring Delinquents to Puniſhment, and to aſſert their juſt Liberties, into a Balance with them who cut off the King's Head.

Bill of Indemnity.

Parliament vindicate the Civil War.

I mention'd ſomething of this elſewhere, and it had been ſo little taken notice of, that I received Letters from Gentlemen to produce the Proofs of a Matter which ſo ſolemnly juſtifies the Proceedings of that Long Parliament, call'd by the Earl of Clarendon the Grand Rebellion. Monſieur des Maizeaux informs us, Echard has been very diſingenuous in repreſenting it, "He wou'd "make us believe, that the Commons proceed- "ed with all Tenderneſs and Caution, with re- "ſpect to the late Civil War." You ſee Men of Candour and Sincerity never call it the Grand Rebellion, nor the Parliament Rebels, as the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Echard do, and therefore were unwilling totally to condemn the Parliaments Part in it: But this is a groſs Miſrepreſentation of their Proceedings. Mr. Archdeacon will perceive I am not ſingular in my Opinion of his Integrity; "For they did not "proceed with Tenderneſs and Caution in that "Reſpect, but expreſſed their Senſe of it with great Warmth and Freedom; and ſo far from "being only unwilling totally to condemn the "Parliament's Part in the Civil War, that "they fully juſtified it by declaring as above. "And that Mr. Lenthal's Words were a high "Reflection on the Juſtice of the Lords and Com- "mons in their Actings." Thus are all the Lord Clarendon's and Mr. Echard's Reflections on thoſe Actings declared to be highly Injurious, and the Hiſtory of England, and that of the Grand Rebellion, which treat that glorious Parliament as Rebels, are condemn'd in the moſt ſolemn Manner by the Declaration of the Houſe of Commons pronounc'd by their Speaker.

*A.D.*1660 Life of Clarendon, p. 306.

The King being ſuddenly expected, great Numbers of thoſe who had been Officers in the Cavalier Army, or were otherwiſe zealous for him, procured Horſes and Cloaths; Ludlow ſays, for the moſt Part, upon Credit, and form'd themſelves into Troops, under Charles Stuart, Earl of Litchfield, Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Cleveland, and Major General Brown, whom Ludlow calls the Apoſtate Woodmonger, in order to attend him at his Reception: And News being brought that he was put to Sea, Monk, accompany'd with a Guard of Horſe, marched to Dover, and received him at his Landing, May the 25th. The King embrac'd him, kiſs'd him, and call'd him Father; and, according to my Author, it might be truly ſaid, that in ſome Reſpects they were very nearly ally'd. At Canterbury, his Majeſty preſented him with the George and Garter. The firſt was put on by the Duke of York, the other by the Duke of Gloucester. And becauſe it was ſuſpected, that the Army which had fought againſt him, might ſtill retain ſome of their former Inclinations, it was reſolv'd, that the King with his two Brothers ſhould lodge at the Houſe of Colonel Gibbons, one of their Officers at Rocheſter. Many Knights were made in this Journey, and Bonfires were to be ſeen in great Numbers on the Road. Ludlow tells us, the inconſtant Multitude in ſome Places, burning the Badges of their own Freedom, the Arms of the Common-wealth. Ludlow proceeds, "Monk's Army was drawn "up on Black-heath, and by the beſt Judges, "was thought to deſerve the Fool's Coat, rather "than the Soldier's Caſaque. The Lord Mayor, "Sheriffs and Aldermen of the City, treated "the King with a Collation under a Tent, plac'd "in St. George's Fields. Five or ſix hundred "Citizens cloath'd in Coats of black Velvet, and "(not improperly) wearing Chains about their "Necks, by an Order of the Common-Council, "attended on the Triumph of that Day, with "much more empty Pageantry, which I pur-

His Entry.

A.D.1660 " poſely omit. But I muſt not paſs over the Folly " and Inſolence manifeſted at that Time by thoſe " who had been ſo often defeated in the Field, " and had contributed nothing either of Brave- " ry or Policy to this Change, in ordering the " Soldiery to ride with Swords drawn, thro' the " City of London to Whitehall, the Duke of " York and Monk leading the Way, intimating, " as was ſuppoſed, a Reſolution to maintain " that by Force, which had been obtain'd by " Fraud." Sir John Stawel, at the Head of about one hundred Cavalier Gentlemen, who had ſpent their Eſtates in the late King's Service, attended the Cavalcade, and ſome Time after told his Majeſty he had a Son who lov'd Dogs, and being fit for nothing but the Country, he deſir'd his Majeſty to make him Keeper of the Buck-hounds, a Place then void; which being deny'd, he took the Liberty to repreſent to the King, that he had expended, and been ſequeſter'd to the Value of 105,000 Pounds: The King ſaid, You might have compounded, and ſav'd a good Part of it, and ſent it to me. Sir, reply'd Sir John, Since it is ſo, I have four Sons, and I ſhall give them Advice, not to venture any more for any Monarch in England. Mr. Fox, afterward Sir Stephen Fox, who had liv'd with the King in Exile, was ſent to London the Day before the Entry, which was on the 29th of May, the King's Birth-Day alſo, with Orders to ſpeak to all the Lords in Town, and deſire them to do themſelves the Honour to attend his Majeſty when he made his Entry, which they were all very ready to do, and had prepar'd the moſt rich Dreſs and Equipage for that Purpoſe, inſomuch that the Lord Wharton, a zealous Presbyterian, laid out above 10,000 Pounds for his Appearance in the Cavalcade, and it is ſaid to have been the fineſt in it, tho' a finer Shew was never ſeen. But an Accident happen'd which hinder'd Mr. Fox himſelf from making one in it. It is well known that he was a temperate abſtemious Perſon, not us'd to drink much; and one of the Lords prevailing with him to drink a Glaſs of Cyder only, at about five a-Clock in the Morning, it ſo intoxicated him, that he fell from his Horſe, and was uncapable of ſitting it all that Day. He had over-heated himſelf with riding from one Houſe to another in the hot Sun-ſhine, and was caught in the Manner I have related. The Archdeacon ſeems to be entirely out of his Wits for Joy at his Majeſty's Reſtoration. He has the infinite Bleſſings of it over and over again, tho' in its Infancy he confeſſes, the Court gave all Encouragement to all Sorts of Pleaſure, and the greateſt Licentiouſneſs. The truly ineſtimable Bleſſing we have enjoy'd, and do ſtill enjoy by it, is its making Way for the glorious Reigns of King William, Queen Mary, Queen Anne, and King George; wherein the People of England have taſted of the Sweets of Liberty, without that Irregularity and Confuſion, which imbitter'd it in the Days of Uſurpation.

An Accident to Sir Stephen Fox.

The Court vicious.

We ſhould do great Injuſtice if we did not diſtinguiſh the Courtiers in King Charles's Reign, who abhor'd the above-mention'd Licentiouſneſs, from thoſe who wallowed in that Mire; and among the former will be found the illuſtrious Names of Seymour, Butler, Wriotheſley, Bertie, Montague, Berkley, Hollis, Piercy, Fiennes. But the Counſels and Morals of theſe noble Lords were ſoon found to give Way to the prevailing Taſte and Example.

Good Courtiers.

Inſtead of deſcribing the Day of Reſtoration as a Celeſtial Jubilee, and Beatifying it, as if it had been a kind of Reſurrection from the Dead, and the opening Scene was Heaven, as Echard labours to paint it, the Biſhop of Salisbury inverts it, and it is a Gulph in his Hiſtory, which we cannot look into without Horror. A.D.1660

" With the Reſtoration of the King, a Spirit " of extravagant Joy ſpread over the Nation, " that brought on with it the throwing off the " very Profeſſions of Virtue and Piety. All " ended in Entertainments and Drunkenneſs, " which over-run the three Kingdoms to ſuch a " Degree, that it very much corrupted all their " Morals. Under Colour of drinking the King's " Health, there were great Diſorders and much Riot every where; and as a Man cou'd not be a good Courtier, without doing as the King did, ſo few were deficient in following his Example.

What bleſſed Times he brought with him, may be gueſs'd by his Character, as it is given by Biſhop Burnet.

King Charles's Character, by Biſhop Burnet.

" He was liberal of good Looks, kind Words, and " fair Promiſes, becauſe he intended nothing by " them: He had no Senſe of Religion, both at " Prayers and Sacraments: He, as it were took " Care to ſatisfy the People, that he was in no ſort " concern'd in that about which he was employ'd; " ſo that he was very far from being an Hypocrite, " unleſs his aſſiſting at thoſe Performances, was a " ſort of Hypocriſy (as no doubt it was) but he " was ſure not to encreaſe that, by any the leaſt " Appearance of Religion. He ſaid once to " my ſelf, He was no Atheiſt, but he cou'd not " think God wou'd make a Man miſerable, only for taking a little Pleaſure out of the Way. " He diſguis'd his Popery to the laſt; but when " he talk'd freely, he cou'd not help letting " himſelf out againſt the Liberty, that under " the Reformation, all Men took of enquiring " into Matters of Religion. He ſaid often, he " thought Government was a much ſafer and " eaſier Thing where the Authority was believ'd " infallible, and the Faith and Submiſſion of the " People were implicit. He had a very ill Opinion both of Men and Women, and did not " think that there was either Sincerity or Chaſtity in the World out of Principle, but that " ſome had either the one or the other out of " Humour or Vanity. He thought that no Body " did ſerve him out of Love, and ſo he was quit " with all the World, and lov'd others as little as " he thought they lov'd him. He hated Buſineſs, " and cou'd not eaſily be brought to mind any. " The Ruin of his Reign, and of all his Affairs, " was occaſion'd chiefly by his delivering himſelf " up at his firſt coming over to a mad Range of " Pleaſure. One of the Race of Villiers, then " marry'd to Palmer a Papiſt, ſoon after made " Earl of Caſtlemain, who afterwards being ſe- " parated from him, was advanc'd to be Dutch- " eſs of Cleaveland, was his firſt and longeſt " Miſtreſs, by whom he had five Children: " She was moſt enormouſly vitious and raven- " ous, &c." Such was the Prince, who, according to Warwick, was brought in by the Good Angel of God, and according to Echard, by the all merciful Hand of Heaven, according to Clarendon, by the merciful Hand of God. Divine Providence directs every thing ſometimes to bleſs, ſometimes to curſe; and to what End it directed here, let the Reader determine by the enſuing Reign.

As his Majeſty paſs'd through the City towards Weſtminſter, the London Miniſters attended over againſt the School in St. Paul's Church-Yard, and Mr. Arthur Jackſon, Miniſter of St. Faith's, at the Head of them, preſented him with a Bible richly adorn'd, for which the King thank'd them, and promis'd to make that Book The Rule of his Government and Life; and it muſt be own'd, that it was as much the Rule of his

The King's Saying of the Bible.

A.D.1660 his Life as of his Government. Two Years after, Mr. Jackſon was turn'd out of his Living only for being a Presbyterian.

The Lords and Commons receiv'd the King at Whitehall, after this tedious Cavalcade, and their Speakers made ſurfeiting Speeches, as may be ſeen at large in the Common Hiſtories. Ludlow tells us, "The Speakers of both Houſes loaded "him with Complements, and took the beſt "Care they cou'd to make him believe himſelf "to be the beſt, greateſt and braveſt Prince in "the whole World. His Anſwer to them was "ſhort, by Reaſon as he ſaid, of his preſent "Diſcompoſure, caus'd by the great Acclamations he had receiv'd in his Paſſage, which "yet he pretended had been very agreeable to "him, as they were Expreſſions of the Affections "of his People. Moſt of thoſe who had attended his Entry, finding the Streets thro' "which they had paſs'd, to be full of People, "return'd to the City, by the Way of Holborn; "by which Means I had a View of them from "the Houſe where I then was; and I confeſs "it was a ſtrange Sight to me, to ſee the Horſe "that had formerly belong'd to our Army, now "put upon an Employment ſo different from "that which they had at firſt undertaken; eſpe-
The Army corrupted, "cially when I conſider'd, that for the moſt "Part they had not been rais'd out of the "meaneſt of the People, and without Di-"ſtinction, as other Armies had been, but "that they conſiſted of ſuch as had engag'd A.D.1660 "themſelves, from a Spirit of Liberty, in the "Defence of their Rights and Religion: But "having been corrupted under the Tyranny of "Cromwel, and kept up as a ſtanding Force "againſt the People, they had forgotten their "firſt Engagements, and were become as mer-"cenary as other Troops. The Diſſolution and and the "Drunkenneſs of that Night was ſo great and Nation, "ſcandalous, in a Nation which had not been "acquainted with ſuch Diſorders for many Years "paſt, that the King who ſtill ſtood in need "of the Presbyterian Party, which had betray'd "all into his Hands, for their Satisfaction caus'd "a Proclamation to be publiſh'd, forbidding the "Drinking of Healths: But reſolving for his "own Part to be oblig'd to no Rule of any "Kind, he publickly violated his own Or-"der in a few Days, at a Debauch in the Mul- by the "berry-Garden, and more privately at another King's Ex-"Meeting in the City, where he drank Healths ample."to the utmoſt Exceſs, till two in the Morning."

It is credibly reported, he took Barbara Villiers from her Husband that very Night, notwithſtanding, as we are told by Warwick, he made his Preſence-Chamber his Oratory, wherein to pay his Devotions that Night to God; and the Compleat Hiſtorian, after him, He paid his Devotions and Thanks to God in the Preſence-Chamber.

THE HISTORY of ENGLAND, During the REIGN of King CHARLES II.

THIS Reign is full of Creations, Honours, Pomps and Ceremonies, and we are to live in it like Men who feed upon Sauces. Purveyors, Cooks and Heralds are the Men of Buſineſs, unleſs what was carry'd on by Lord Lauderdale and the Ladies. I own it will be impoſſible for one to go thro' it without Pain. Here's ſuch a Run of Pleaſure and Perſecution, of Riot and Bigotry, of Lewdneſs, Diſgrace and Shame, that common Patience is not ſufficient to ſupport it.

Creations. George Monk, beſides the George and Garter, had theſe Titles beſtow'd upon him, Duke of Albemarle, Earl of Torrington, Baron Monk of Potheridge, Beauchamp and Teyes; but his Figure and Manners were ſo rude, that he became all this as ill as a Bear wou'd a Roquelaure. Edward Montague the Admiral, was created Baron Montague of St. Neots, Viſcount Hinchingbroke, and Earl of Sandwich, by Patent dated the 12th of July. He had alſo the George and Garter given him, together with the Marquis of Hertford, created Duke of Somerſet, and Thomas Earl of Southampton, who deſerv'd every thing the King cou'd give him.

A.D.1660 Comptroller of the Houſhold; Sir Edward Nicholas, Sir William Morrice, Secretaries of State; Sir Edward Hyde was created Earl of Clarendon; Arthur Anneſley, Eſq; Earl of Angleſey; Denzil Hollis, Eſq; Lord Hollis; Sir John Berkley, Lord Berkley; Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Lord Cornwallis; Sir Anthony-Aſhley Cooper, Lord Cooper; Lord Colepepyr was made Maſter of the Rolls; Sir Robert Foſter, Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench; Sir Thomas Mallet, Sir Thomas Twiſden, Sir Wadham Windham, Juſtices; Sir Robert Hyde, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas; Sir Thomas Tyrrel, Sir Samuel Browne, Juſtices; Sir Orlando Bridgman, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer; Sir Matthew Hale, Sir Edward Atkins, Sir Chriſtopher Turner, Barons; Sir Jeffry Palmer, Attorney General; Sir Heneage Finch, Sollicitor General. And all the Offices Civil and Military, were put into ſuch Hands as were fit for the Work they were to be ſet about, only the two Secretaries wou'd have been very unfit, had there been any Work for them to do. Of Morrice, Biſhop Burnet ſays, He had no great Judgment about Foreign Affairs; of Nicholas, He had no Underſtanding in Foreign Affairs. What need was there of Underſtanding or Judgment about Affairs abroad? the Name of England was no more terrible to Foreigners. All the World knew the King had given himſelf up to his Miniſters and his Pleaſures; and that the Miniſters were too buſy about Church Matters to ſtudy Politicks, or have any Concern for the Balance of Power. The chief of them, Hyde, according to Burnet, never underſtood Foreign Affairs, and yet meddled too much with them.

Echard blames the Presbyterians for challenging the chief Hand in the wonderful Revolution, which he attributes to the Wiſdom of the VICTORIOUS GENERAL, who by the way, never ſtruck a Stroke for his Victory, and the immoveable Fidelity of the royal Party, who had not a Finger in the whole Affair. I will not ſay how ungenerous, but how baſe and ungrateful, as well as falſe and impudent, are the Pretenſions of theſe Men who, as Ludlow affirms, contributed nothing towards the Change, as we have prov'd in every Paragraph, that has Relation to it. The royal Party was in the moſt deſperate, deſpicable Condition that ever poor Wretches were; their Heads and their Hearts were ſo ſunk, that they durſt not think of Oppoſition, or look an Enemy in the Face; they had been beaten, baffled, and hang'd for fifteen or ſixteen Years together, as often as they ſtir'd againſt their Rulers; and if the Presbyterians had not deliver'd them out of their Miſery, they might have been ſtill as miſerable as when the Common-wealth was in the height of its Glory.

I ſhall make uſe of the Words of a modern Author on this Subject, "While the Affair of "the Reſtoration was tranſacting, the Presbyterians were hugg'd and careſs'd by the King "and his Party, as Perſons who were really what "they afterwards pretended to be, the only Reſtorers of the King. But as ſoon as they had "reſtor'd him, both the King and his Party "grew cold to them at firſt, and afterwards ungrateful and cruel. Read what the Archdeacon writes: Whatever the Presbyterians did "in this Matter, was principally to relieve themſelves from the Oppreſſion of the Independants, who had wreſted the Power out of their "Hands, and not out of any Affection for the "King and the Church, which very much alter'd the Merit of their Services. Why had "not theſe ingenious Gentlemen talk'd after "this Rate before? Why did they not tell them, "You ſhall not bring in the King unleſs you do A.D.1660 "it out of Zeal for the Church: To talk thus, "now they were about to reward them with Poverty and Priſons, only adds Inſolence to Ingratitude, and blackens the latter ſtill more. "I confeſs, the Presbyterians will have no great "Reaſon to boaſt of their Knowledge of Men "and Things, if they expected any thing better from the Pride, Arrogance, Revenge, Rage, "and Neceſſity of their Enemies. Had the "Cavaliers been ever guilty of Moderation and "Charity, their giving themſelves up to them, "and putting their Fortunes and Liberties into "their Hands, wou'd have ſavour'd leſs of Inconſideration and Raſhneſs. Again, The Preſbyterians had much more ground to complain, "as having been the ſole Cauſe of the Reſtoration; I do not ſay Helpers towards it, but "Cauſers of it; and that it wou'd not, it cou'd "not have been brought about by any other "Party. The Independants and Baptiſts were "Republicans almoſt to a Man. The Cavaliers "were ſo totally ſuppreſs'd, that they durſt hardly ſhew their Heads, or open their Mouths; "and to act ever ſo cautiouſly in behalf of the "King, was only a ready Way to the Gallows," as Echard obſerves on Sir John Greenvile's delivering his Majeſty's Letter to the Parliament: So mighty a Change was this, that a Servant of the King's, who for many Years together had been in Priſons and Confinements for being his Servant, and but a few Months before wou'd have been brought to a ſhameful Death, if he had been known to have ſeen the King, ſhou'd now be rewarded for coming from him.

Again, "Through the whole Tranſaction, Presbyterians re- "there was ſcarce one Agent who was not a ſtor'd the "Presbyterian, above the Character of a Letter- King. "Carrier. There was not one Man who had In- "tereſt with a Foot Soldier in the Army, who "acted for the King, but he was or pretended "to be a Presbyterian. General Monk was a "Presbyterian, or rather an Independant; ſo "were his two Chaplains, Gumble and Price. "Sir Anthony-Aſhley Cooper was a Presbyterian, "ſo was Mr. Anneſley, and even Sir William "Morrice, Monk's great Confident and Counſellor in this Buſineſs, which he promoted "more than Monk, himſelf having a better "Head, though not a much better, and more "Practice in Politicks, though not much more." He was a Member of Richard's Parliament, and ſo zealous for Presbytery, that he wrote a Book in Vindication of its Principles; yet directly contrary to all this is Mr. Echard, He will not enter farther into the Controverſy. In Truth, it never was controverted by any Man which had not Forehead enough to controvert the Senſes, and aſſert in the Face of the Sun there is no ſuch Thing as Light in the World.

Biſhop Burnet very juſtly repreſents their Enemies, "They were follow'd by the Herd of the "Cavalier Party, who were now very fierce and "full of Courage over their Cups, tho' they had "been very diſcreet Managers of it in the Field, "and in Time of Action. But now every one of "them boaſted he had kill'd his Thouſands, "and all were full of Merit, and as full of high "Pretenſions. Again, Vices of all ſorts were Wicked "the open Practices: Drinking was the moſt Times. "notorious of all, which was often continu'd "through the whole Night; and many Diſorders hapning after theſe irregular Heats, the "People, who had never before that Time ſeen "any thing like it, look'd with an ill Eye on "every thing that was done by ſuch a Set of lewd and vicious Men. This laid in all Minds a "new Prejudice againſt Epiſcopacy." The Scene is

A.D.1660 partly in Scotland, but it will not be pretended that it was purer in England. 'Tis highly neceſſary to clear up and aſcertain theſe Things, that when we (as we ſhall preſently) come to the burning Zeal of theſe People, we may the better judge from what Spirit it came, and whether there cou'd be any real Concern for Religion and the holy Worſhip of God in ſuch a Set of lewd and vitious Men; or whether Perſons, who cou'd be ungrateful to the higheſt Degree of Infamy, cou'd really be capable of any Principle truly Religious and Sacred.

Bp. Burnet.

Two Days after the King's Arrival, he went to the Parliament Houſe, the two Princes his Brothers accompanying him, where he paſs'd an Act conſtituting the preſent Convention to be a Parliament; an Act for 70,000 Pounds a Month, as had been before levy'd; and An Act for Continuance of Proceſs, and all Judicial Proceedings. After which the Lord Chancellor, according to Echard, made a handſome Speech; indeed it was handſomer than moſt of the reſt of the Lord Chancellor's Speeches, becauſe it was ſhorter: For as I have obſerv'd already, his Speeches and Declarations are a String of ſtudy'd Periods, full of Words and Declamations muſical and well choſen, but with a very ſmall Portion of Reaſon, Argument, Sincerity, and Truth, which I ſhall be very ready to prove when call'd upon; and in the mean while beg Leave to make Uſe of no more of them than will ſerve to give an Idea of the reſt. Echard has them at length, and takes them to be the greateſt Ornaments of his Hiſtory, which indeed is not otherwiſe much ornamented; and it wou'd be unconſcionable to rob him of any Riches amidſt ſo great Penury. The Lord Clarendon told them, The King wou'd in all Points make good his Declaration from Breda, particularly, That he granted a Free and General Pardon to all, except thoſe whom the Parliament excepted.

The Chancellor's handſome Speeches.

King promiſes Liberty of Conſcience.

That no Man ſhou'd be diſquieted or call'd in Queſtion for Differences of Opinion in Matters of Religion.

Theſe Things, ſays the Chancellor, He will in all Points make good. A Man needs a vaſt deal of Patience that writes of theſe Times after ſuch Copies as Echard's. Here are a Set of lewd, vitious Men rais'd out of the Duſt by the help of the Presbyterians, and now hear how they bluſter. The Commons thought that neither themſelves nor the People of England were freed from that Guilt and Puniſhment which the unhappy Times had contracted, unleſs they laid hold of his Majeſty's Grace mention'd in the Declaration; which they did very formally, by a Paper which Denzil Hollis, Eſq; preſented to the King in the Banqueting-Houſe.

In direct Oppoſition to every Teſtimony born of this King and his Morals, Echard gives us his Evidence, That his Majeſty gave all ſuch Teſtimonies of Virtue as might render him deſervedly Glorious in the Eſteem of all ſober Perſons; and to prove this ſtaring Falſity to be the naked Truth, he informs us the King iſſued a Proclamation for puniſhing Debauchery, Profaneneſs, and other Vices, of which himſelf was a moſt notorious Example.

On the 5th of July the King din'd at Guild-hall upon the moſt exquiſite Rarities, ſays Echard, or I ſhou'd not have ſaid it, as not being very Hiſtorical.

The Lord Clarendon propos'd at the Council-Board, to burn all the Memorials of the Parliament and Oliver, which met with Oppoſition even from his Friend the Earl of Southampton, who ſaid, It was better to leave thoſe Papers as an Example of Rebellion, to deter others from proſecuting the ſame Meaſures, and the Council A.D.1660 fell in with his Opinion.

His Majeſty affected a great Impatience at the Parliament's delaying the Act of Oblivion, and ſent a long Meſſage about it to the Commons by Secretary Morrice. He made a Speech alſo concerning it in the Houſe of Lords, and ſent an obliging Meſſage to the Commons to ſettle a Revenue upon him in lieu of what he ſhou'd loſe by the Oblivion Act; which, continues Echard, did not only produce the hearty Thanks of the Houſe, but likewiſe a particular Order for the ſettling ſuch a Revenue on his Majeſty as might maintain the Splendor and Grandeur of the Kingly Office, which was never better maintain'd in this Reign than by the Expence.

A Proclamation was publiſh'd againſt Duels, and then, ſays Mr. Archdeacon, his Majeſty took Care of the Church, which he explains by the Terms Revenues, Glebe-Lands, and other Emoluments, without one Word of God or Religion in a long Paragraph; and informs us, that the Houſe of Commons thank'd his Majeſty for his pious Intentions. It is prodigious! that People of a Holy Profeſſion ſhou'd be to learn what Piety is, and that it does not refer to Gold and Silver, Lands and Houſes, to Vanity or Lucre of any Name or Kind whatſoever! p. 773.

The Act of Indemnity, ſo much boaſted of as an Effect of his Majeſty's unparallel'd Clemency, receives another Turn in Ludlow's Memoirs. One cannot deny but there is ſometimes a Bitterneſs of Spirit in thoſe Memoirs, and a very warm Republican Zeal; but he was a Gentleman otherwiſe of too much Virtue and good Senſe to mingle Falſhood with Fact, and his Mind was too Roman to ſubmit to the Baſeneſs of Malice and Slander.

When the Oblivion Bill was firſt in Debate, Seven Perſons only were to be excepted; Major General Harriſon, John Liſle, Eſq; William Say, Eſq; Thomas Scot, Eſq; Col. John Jones, Cornelius Holland, Eſq, Col. Barkſtead. Oblivion Act.

One Col. Skipwith mov'd that Lieutenant General Ludlow might be one of the Seven, but not being ſeconded, Col. Barkſtead was nominated. After this Three others were Voted for Exception, Lord Chief Juſtice Cook, Mr. Broughton, Mr. Edward Dendy. Ludlow proceeds, "And that no Means of gratifying the Paſſions "of our Enemies might be omitted, having al- "ready under Pretence that ſome of the late "King's Judges were fled, order'd their Eſtates "to be ſeiz'd; it was contriv'd by the Creatures "of the Court, who were a great Part of the "Houſe, that a Petition ſhou'd be drawn and "preſented to the King to iſſue out a Procla- "mation for requiring all thoſe of the late King's "Judges, and others therein nam'd, to ſurren- "der themſelves within the Space of Fourteen "Days, under Pain of Exception from the Be- "nefit of the Act both for Life and Eſtate. This "Petition having had its Riſe from the Court, "and on that Account receiv'd with Joy by the "King, ſoon produc'd a Proclamation;" upon which Lieutenant General Ludlow ſurrender'd himſelf, and gave Security for his forth-coming; notwithſtanding which, he had Notice from Secretary Morrice, That where-ever he was he wou'd do well to ſtand upon his Guard, for if he was taken he was a dead Man. About this Time the Lord Broghill was prevail'd upon to write to Sir Charles Coote in Ireland, that Mr. Ludlow's Perſonal Eſtate there might be deliver'd to his Agent, upon Security to be reſponſible where it ſhou'd be adjudged to belong. But Coote was ſo far from ſatisfying his own Conſcience or the Lord Broghill in this Matter, that fearing Coot's Baſeneſs.

A.D.1660 Ludlow might be in a Condition to call him to an Account for the Injuſtice he had done him, he wrote a Letter to the King, in which having firſt inveigh'd againſt him as the moſt bitter of all his Enemies, he inform'd him, that dining with Ludlow at his Houſe, he had aſſur'd him that Cromwel had not proceeded to Extremities againſt the late King, if Ludlow had not preſs'd him, and almoſt forc'd him to that Reſolution. And for the Confirmation of the Truth of this, he deſir'd that the Lord Broghill, who he ſaid had din'd with them the ſame Day, might be interrogated. But when the King ask'd the Lord Broghill concerning this Buſineſs, he proteſted he had not charg'd his Memory with any ſuch Thing, adding, He thought it unbecoming a Man of Honour to remember any thing to the Prejudice of a Gentleman who had ſpoken freely at his own Table.

Lud. p. 33. While theſe Things were doing, Lady Vane told Mrs. Ludlow that Mrs. Monk the Exchange-Woman had ſaid, She wou'd go upon her Knees to the King, and beg that Sir Henry Vane, Major General Lambert, and Lieutenant General Ludlow might die without Mercy: And ſome Time after Monk himſelf ſaid to the King, There was not a Man in the Three Nations more violently againſt you than Col. Ludlow. To which his Majeſty reply'd, I have been otherwiſe inform'd by many of my Friends who receiv'd Civilities from him in their Troubles. We ſee by this, how the King's old and new Friends labour'd to irritate him againſt thoſe whom they hated and fear'd, and whoſe Blood they thirſted after. His Indolence and Love of Pleaſure wou'd not have driven him upon thoſe ſanguinary Acts which rais'd ſo much Horror in the Beginning of his Reign, if he had not been incited to it by the Revenge and Cruelty of others. It was his Father's laſt Charge to him, and ſome of his laſt Words, to forgive his Murtherers, as Dr. Juxon, Biſhop of London, inform'd the Council of State. Had Hyde and his Counſellors fallen in with his natural Clemency, I believe there wou'd have been little or no Blood ſpilt; for it is very well known he us'd to reflect ſeverely on his Father's Conduct, and loſing his own Life to ſave the Lives of Delinquents who little deſerv'd it of him. Coke tells us, I do not find he ever regarded the Memory of his Father. On the contrary, he induſtriouſly endeavour'd to have it believ'd that the Portraiture of his Father's Sufferings, a Book of late ſo much controverted, was none of his. Nay, I have been inform'd by a Perſon of Honour, and at the Head of Affairs ſome Years ago, that a certain Noble Lord taking Notice of this King's Swearing in common Diſcourſe, his Majeſty retorted, Your Martyr ſwore more than ever I did: All which induces me to think that he was put upon the Bloody Executions by the vindictive Exiles, as well Spiritual as Temporal, whom he brought home with him, and who had no hard Task to work up his Spirit to thoſe Cruelties, conſidering how many Years he had been forc'd to live in Baniſhment and Beggary. There are ſome Particulars in Ludlow concerning the King's Judges, which are very curious.

Vol. iv. p. 101. King Charles I. a Swearer.

The Bill of Indemnity being brought to the Houſe of Lords, a great Contention aroſe concerning the Number of Perſons to be excepted. The Widow of Dr. Hewet and Mrs. Penruddock, with other Widows, ſolliciting them with ſuch Importunity for particular Satisfaction on Account of their Relations who had been put to Death, that they found themſelves oblig'd to appoint a Committee to hear their Demands. The Lords alſo, ſays Ludlow, were inclin'd to revenge their own Order on the Perſons of ſome in the high Court of Juſtice, by whom ſome of their Number had been condemn'd, and to except one of the Judges for every Lord they had put to Death; the Nomination of the Perſon to be excepted being refer'd to that Lord who was moſt nearly related to the Perſon who had ſuffer'd. According to this Regulation, Colonel Croxton, Governor of Cheſter, was nominated by the next Relation to the Earl of Derby, Major Waring by the Kinſman of another. The Earl of Denbeigh being deſir'd by the Houſe to name a Judge for his Brother in Law Duke Hamilton, nominated a Perſon who was dead; and being call'd upon to name another, his Lordſhip deſir'd to be excus'd from naming any more. The Earl of Denbeigh, ſays my Author, being known to be a generous Man, and a Lover of his Country. A.D.1660

Sir John Winter, a Papiſt, Secretary to the Queen Mother, viſited Lieutenant General Ludlow, to inform him that Sir Henry Vane, Sir Arthur Haſelrigge, and the Marquis of Argyle, were thrown into Priſon by the King's Order, and to adviſe him rather to withdraw than to truſt to the Mercy of his Enemies.

Col. Ingoldsby was pardon'd for his Service againſt Lambert, tho' he had been as zealous againſt the late King at his Trial, as any one of the Judges; yet having join'd with Monk in his treacherous Deſign, he had obtain'd a Pardon from the King, while he was beyond Sea. Major Liſter came off by the Credit and Intereſt of William Pierpoint, Eſq; Col. Thomlinſon upon the Information of Mr. Seymour, that the late King had ſignify'd to him his Pleaſure, that the Colonel ſhou'd receive Favour, on Account of his civil Carriage to him. The Earl of Litchfield objected againſt it, for the ſame Reaſon the preſent King did, that he might have betray'd his Truſt as Monk had done, and have let the late King eſcape; but the Earl of Briſtol being engag'd for Thomlinſon, reprov'd the Earl of Litchfield ſo ſharply, it had like to have ended in a Duel. The Lord Litchfield ſollicited in behalf of Lieutenant General Fleetwood, and ſpeaking to the Lord Sturton for him, the latter promis'd to be for Fleetwood, if the Earl of Litchfield wou'd be for Lieutenant General Ludlow, whom the Lord Sturton, tho' a Papiſt, and his Lady, viſited in the Place of his Concealment. Lud. p. 36.

Thus the Oblivion Bill met with many Obſtructions in the Houſe of Lords, and the King coming to the Houſe, thank'd the Lords for excepting thoſe who had been the Judges of the King his Father, Who, he ſaid, were guilty of ſuch a Crime, that they cou'd not pardon themſelves, much leſs expect it from others. This is ſo little agreeable to the Truth, that they pardon'd themſelves in an extraordinary aſtoniſhing Manner; but a Turn of Thought, tho' ever ſo ſmall and trifling, is very apt to miſlead the Author of the Hiſtory of Rebellion, who is the chief Speech-Maker of the Times. Echard aſſures us, the King's Judges were ſo far from thinking they needed Pardon, or expreſſing the leaſt Repentance, that they glory'd in it. Another reverend Hiſtorian writes, None betray'd a Repentance, moſt of them glory'd in it, and juſtify'd the Cauſe and Authority by which they acted; a particular Inſtance of which we have in Sir John Bouchier, one of theſe Judges, who being old and infirm, was ſeiz'd with a Fit of Sickneſs, about the Time of this Oblivion Act; his Relations deſpairing of his Recovery, deſir'd him to ſign a Paper, acknowledging his Sorrow for the Part he had in the Condemnation of the King: But according to Ludlow, He being highly diſpleas'd, roſe ſuddenly from his Chair, which p. 780. King's Judges impenitent.

A.D.1660 for ſome Days he had not been able to do without Aſſiſtance, and receiving freſh Vigour from the Memory of that Action, cry'd out, I tell you, it was a juſt Act of God, and all good Men will own it; and having thus expreſs'd himſelf, he ſat down again, and ſoon after dy'd.

John Carew, Eſq; Brother to Sir Alexander Carew, who loſt his Head for ſerving this King's Father, being apprehended by the Warrant of a Juſtice of Peace, in which his Name was miſtaken, the Officer refus'd to keep him in hold, till the Error was amended. Mr. Carew, however, told him, he believ'd he was the Perſon intended, and that he was going to ſuch a Place, where he was found again and ſecur'd within the fourteen Days limited by the Proclamation for the Judges to ſurrender themſelves; yet he was excepted out of the Indemnity Bill, contrary to the Tenour of that Proclamation: So was Col. Adrian Scrope, notwithſtanding the Commons had contented themſelves with a Year's Forfeiture of the Value of his Eſtate, and of Col. Laſſels, "Yet continues my Author, upon Infor- "mation from the Renegade Browne of ſome "private Diſcourſe between Col. Scrope and him, "in which the Colonel, as he ſaid, had juſtify'd "the Part he had in the King's Trial, he was "condemn'd without a Hearing, and added to "the Exception in Reſpect to Life and Eſtate. "An Action of ſuch a Nature, that I ſhall forbear to give it the Name it deſerves; but the "King not ſatisfy'd with theſe Sacrifices, greedy "of Revenge, and forgetting his Meſſage from "Breda, encourag'd his Creatures in the Houſe "of Lords, to inſiſt upon their Exceptions; however the Commons being averſe to break the "publick Faith in every Particular, a Conference of both Houſes was appointed, in "which ſome of the Lower Houſe preſſing the "Promiſe of the Proclamation, Hyde the Chancellor preſum'd to affirm, That the Proclamation was in the Nature of a Subpœna," which puzled the Cauſe with technical Cant, that had no more Agreement with the Publick Faith, given in the Proclamation, than with the Confeſſion of Faith in the Liturgy. The wiſe and virtuous Earl of Southampton, conceiv'd a juſt Indignation againſt this daring Breach of Promiſe in a Matter of Blood, and mov'd, That ſince it was not thought fit to ſecure the Lives of thoſe who had been induc'd to ſurrender their Perſons, upon the Faith of the Proclamation, they ought at leaſt to give them the like Number of Days for ſaving themſelves as were appointed by that Paper for their coming in. But as my Author proceeds, "Finch, who had formerly fled from "the Juſtice of the Parliament, oppos'd that "Motion, ſaying, By ſuch Means they may be "enabled to do more Miſchief, as he knew had "happen'd in his own Caſe." Upon this, the following Perſons who had ſurrender'd themſelves on the Publick Faith in the Proclamation, were in Breach of that Faith excepted for Life and Eſtate, as Thomas Challoner, Eſq; Col. Roe, Auguſtine Garland, Eſq; Col. Harvey, Mr. Smith, Henry Marten, Eſq; Sir Hardreſs Waller, Col. Scrope, John Carew, Eſq; Alderman Tichburn, Col. J. Temple, Col. P. Temple, Col. Wayte, Simon Mayne, Eſq; William Heveningham, Eſq; Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Alderman Pennington, Col. Lilburne, Gilbert Millington, Eſq; Vincent Potter, Eſq; Thomas Wogan, Eſq; John Downes, Eſq. Of theſe Col. Scrope and Mr. Carew were excluded the Benefit of the Act, by which in Caſe they were attainted, Execution ſhould be ſuſpended till the King and Parliament ſhould order it.

The King's Promiſe broken.

Lud. 43.

The following Judges were excepted abſolutely, as to Life and Eſtate; Sir Michael Liveſey, John Liſle, Eſq; Lieutenant General Ludlow, William Say, Eſq; Commiſſary General Whalley, Major General Harriſon, William Cawley, Eſq; Daniel Blagrave, Eſq; Cornelius Holland, Eſq; Gregory Clement, Eſq; Thomas Scot, Eſq; Miles Corbet, Eſq; Nicholas Love, Eſq; Col. Walton, Col. Barkſtead, Col. Okey, Col. Hewſon, Col. Goffe, Col. Jones, Col. Hacker, Col. Axtell, Col. Dixwell, Chief Juſtice Cook, Sergeant Dendy, Mr. Broughton, Mr. Hewlett, and Mr. Peters. Mr. Hugh Peters was not one of the King's Judges, but he was a Miniſter, and had been too buſy; ſo there was no room for Mercy. A.D.1660

The following Judges were attainted, tho' in their Graves; Oliver Cromwel, Eſq; Captain General, Henry Ireton, Eſq; Lieutenant General, Col. Ewer, Col. Pureſoy, C. Alured, Col. R. Dean, Col. Horton, Major General Skippon, Preſident Bradſhaw, Col. Hammond, Col. Pride, Sir John Danvers, Sir Thomas Maleverer, Sir William Conſtable, Sir John Bouchier, Sir Gregory Norton, John Blackſton, Eſq; Francis Allen, Eſq; Peregrine Pelham, Eſq; John Venn, Eſq; Thomas Andrews, Eſq; Anthony Stapely, Eſq; John Fry, Eſq. All theſe having no Lives to loſe, were to forfeit their Lands, Goods, Rights, and Truſts. The following were excepted from receiving any Benefits of their Eſtates, and ſubjected to ſuch farther Puniſhments as ſhou'd be inflicted upon them, Sir Henry Mildmay, Sir James Harrington, Robert Wallop, Eſq; the Lord Mounſon, James Challoner, Eſq; and Mr. John Phelps. Sir Henry Mildmay's fine Eſtate at Wanſtead in Eſſex, and the Lord Mounſon's at Rygate in Surry, were given to the Duke of York, and Part of it forfeited by him afterwards with his other Poſſeſſions. When News was brought to the King, that Sir Henry Vane, Sir Arthur Heſelrigge, Major General Lambert, and Col. Axtell, were voted by the Lords to be excepted both for Life and Eſtate, he is ſaid to be overjoy'd at it; and when Monk or Buckingham, told him, St. John narrowly eſcap'd, he cry'd, I wiſh'd he had been in alſo. St. John and ſeventeen more were excepted, only upon their taking any Office in England, Eccleſiaſtical, Civil or Military.

This is the Scene which is ſo carefully painted in the Compleat Hiſtory and the Archdeacon's; thus have they open'd it, expecting the Reader ſhou'd be tranſported with it, as much as with the glittering, dazling Luſtre of a Stage Triumph. They are both as buſy about the Executions, as if they had themſelves been the Executioners: They are not mov'd at the Stream of Blood which ran down our Streets, nor the mangled Carcaſſes of thoſe unhappy Gentlemen that were dragg'd about, and hang'd up in every Quarter of the City. Echard, who makes nothing of falſifying Hiſtory, will get off of what I am about charging him with by the Letter of the Text; After all, we muſt not forget, ſays he, that Sir Henry Vane and John Lambert were entirely excepted out of the Act. The Truth is told us by Ludlow, "Sir Henry Vane, and Major "General Lambert were excepted for Life and "Eſtate, with this Reſerve, that if upon Trial "they ſhou'd be found guilty, the two Houſes "were then to join in a Petition to the King, for "the Pardon of their Lives." This is what Echard calls entirely excepted, and let the Reader judge what a faithful Hiſtorian he is.

My Author proceeds, "At laſt the Com- "mons, partly from Inclination, and partly "from their own Safety, paſs'd the Lords, or "rather

A.D.1660 " rather the King's Alterations in the Indemnity " Bill; which Buſineſs being over, the Houſe " order'd the Serjeant at Arms to deliver thoſe " of the King's Judges who were in his Cuſtody, " into the Hands of the Lieutenant of the Tower;" accordingly he deliver'd to him Col. Adrian Scrope, Mr. William Heveningham, Mr. George Fleetwood, Col. James Temple, Mr. Peter Temple, Mr. Henry Smith, Mr. Simon Mayne, Col. Vincent Potter, Col. Thomas Wayte, Mr. Henry Marten, Alderman Pennington, Col. John Downes, Mr. Gilbert Millington, Col. Robert Lilburn, Mr. Auguſtine Garland, Col. Owen Roe, Col. Edmund Harvey. Sir Hardreſs Waller, and Alderman Tichburn had ſurrender'd themſelves, but afterwards withdrew from the Serjeant at Arms. The former was got to France, but return'd to England, and ſurrender'd himſelf again; as did alſo Alderman Tichburn, and were both ſhut up in the Tower: But notwithſtanding that the Crime theſe Gentlemen were accus'd of, was done in the moſt open flagrant Manner, yet it was not thought fit to be very expeditious in trying them. Ludlow, one of them, gives us this Reaſon for it; " It was delay'd during the time " that William Love, Eſq; was to continue She- " riff of London, he being no way to be induc'd, " either for Fear or Hopes, to permit Juries to " be pack'd in order to ſecond the Deſigns of " the Court; but after new Sheriffs had been " choſen, Sir William Boulton and Sir William " Peake, more proper to ſerve the preſent Oc- " caſion, a Commiſſion for hearing and deter- " mining of this Matter, was directed to Thirty four Perſons," as will be farther ſpoken of in the Courſe of the Hiſtory.

With the Oblivion Act ſeveral others paſs'd; as an Act for Confirmation of Judicial Proceedings in Law, Equity, &c. ſince the Firſt of May, 1642; an Act for Money to pay off the Army and Navy; an Act for Reſtraining the taking of exceſſive Uſury; and another for eſtabliſhing a new Holiday the Twenty-ninth of May, the King's Birth-Day and Day of Reſtoration. At the paſſing of theſe Acts his Majeſty made a Speech, wherein he ſpoke of his Perſon's being traduc'd, and earneſtly recommended Rigor and Severity againſt thoſe who ſhou'd expreſs a Diſlike of his Government by Words. He alſo remember'd them that he wanted Money, adding, And that which troubles me moſt, is to ſee many of you come to me at Whitehall, and to think you muſt go ſomewhere elſe to ſeek a Dinner.

Sir Harbottle Grimſton's notable Speech.

Sir Harbottle Grimſton the Speaker made a long Speech, in which he ſhew'd himſelf to be an apt Scholar in the Sentiment and Language which became the Mode. Your Majeſty offer'd us a Pardon before we had the Confidence to ask it; looking over a long black prodigious diſmal Roll and Catalogue of Malefactors, we there met not with Men but with Monſters, guilty of Blood, precious Blood! precious Royal Blood! incomparable in all kind of Villanies by the worſt of Miſcreants, Perverters of Religion, Subverters of the Government. Some are ſet apart as an Antidote to expel the Poiſon of Sin and Rebellion, Sacrifices to God's Wrath, and to ſatisfy Divine Vengeance. He had a few Days before reprimanded the former Speaker, Mr. Lenthal, for confounding the Civil War with the Death of the King, and he confounds them now himſelf. This very Parliament juſtify'd the Civil War by his own Mouth, and the Civil War is the Rebellion, according to the Earl of Clarendon, Mr. Echard, and all the Compleat Hiſtorians. The Death of the King was the Act of a Set of Men diſown'd by thoſe who began and carry'd on the Earl of Clarendon's Grand Rebellion; and yet Sir Harbottle ſacrifices them in this Speech for that Rebellion. The King's Trial and Death were after the Civil War was over, and are a Murder in Law and Reaſon, an Act of Violence and Blood. This is the ſame Sir Harbottle who made a Speech twenty Years before, wherein he told the Houſe of Commons, that the Convocation by their Canons wou'd have us ſwear to a Damnable Hereſy; you ſee he had a ſtrong Way of expreſſing himſelf, and that Matters neceſſary to Salvation are contain'd in the Diſcipline of our Church. Again, Nay Mr. Speaker, they go a little farther, for they wou'd have us ſwear that the Government of the Church by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, Archdeacons, &c. is Jure Divino; whereas we meet not with the Name of an Archbiſhop, or a Dean, or an Archdeacon in all the New Teſtament. And whatſoever may be ſaid of the Function of Biſhops, it is one Thing, but for their Juriſdiction it is merely Humana Inſtitutione, and they muſt thank the King for it.

A.D.1660 Rushw. p. 39. Againſt Archbiſhops, &c.

Who are they that have countenanc'd and cheriſh'd Popery? Who are they that have given Encouragement to thoſe that have boldly preach'd thoſe Damnable Hereſies in our Pulpits? Who are they, Mr. Speaker, that have of late Days been advanc'd to any Dignity in the Church, but ſuch as have been notoriouſly corrupt in their Doctrines, and for the moſt part vicious in their Lives?

Now turn to the Earl of Clarendon; There was not one Churchman in any Degree of Favour of a ſcandalous Condition of Life. As diametrically oppoſite as this is to what Sir Harbottle Grimſton tells us, and he tells us the Truth, the Lord Clarendon or the Chriſt Church Men aver, Not one Churchman in any Degree of Favour cou'd be found out that was of a vicious Life, after the ſtricteſt Inquiſition that ever was made. Sir Harbottle Grimſton is the Man of whom, now he is concurring with him and his Partiſans, he ſaid, that he rather ſat in the Long Parliament, than concurred with them; which is as falſe in Fact as affected in Expreſſion. He ſhew'd his Concurrence ſtill farther in this ſame Speech:

Clarend. wrong. p. 755.

Who are they that have overthrown our two great Charters Magna Charta, and Charta de Foreſter?

What Impoſition hath been laid down, or what Monopoly hath been damned in any Court of Juſtice?

Hath not Ship-Money, Coat and Conduct-Money, and Money for other Military Uſes been collected and levied with as great Violence as ever they were, in Violation of our Liberties confirm'd to us in our Petition of Right; notwithſtanding all our Supplications and Complaints the laſt Parliament?

And who are they that have caus'd all theſe dangerous Convulſions, and all the deſperate unnatural bloody Diſtempers that are now in our Body Politick? Mr. Speaker, I will tell you a Paſſage I heard from a Judge in the King's Bench: There was a poor Man committed by the Lords for refuſing to ſubmit to a Project; and having attended a long Time at the King's Bench Bar upon his Habeas Corpus, and at laſt preſſing very earneſtly to be bailed, the Judge ſaid to the reſt of his Brethren, Come, Brothers, let us Bail him; for they begin to ſay in the Town, that the Judges have overthrown the Law, and the Biſhops the Goſpel. This is the Gentleman who did not concur. The reſt of this, and his other Speeches are full of the like Negatives in Concurrence; and the repeating it here is intended to caution the Reader againſt truſting too much to the Speeches of ſuch as are no more

consiſtent

Sir Harbottle ſat in the ſame Parliament with ſome of the Sacrifices he is now making to Divine Vengeance, and Voted as they Voted, to the End of the Lord Clarendon's Grand Rebellion, if the Civil War is meant by it, and as much as his Indignation was rais'd by the Hainouſneſs of their Crime afterwards, his Fellowſhip with them ſo many Years made ſuch Expreſſions as Villains, Monſters, Miſcreants, leſs decent in his Mouth than it wou'd have been in Chancellor Hyde's, who was excepted out of every Pardon propos'd by that Parliament; to which Sir Harbottle ſpoke about the Overthrow of Law and Goſpel. He made another Speech a few Days after, the 29th of Auguſt, when he preſented a Bill to the King for raiſing 100,000 Pounds for a preſent Supply; another for ſettling a Revenue upon him of 1,200,000 Pounds a Year; another for raiſing 240,000 Pounds in two Months; another to disband the Army and Garriſons, and pay off part of the Fleet; another for encouraging and encreaſing Shipping and Navigation; an Act for reſtoring ſome Miniſters into their Places, and for confirming others in vacant Places; an Act for regulating the Bay Trade. He gave due Praiſes to all theſe ſeveral Acts, and clos'd with a Foreſight of the inexpreſſible Happineſs of the People, if they cou'd reſt and wholly rely upon his Majeſty's Grace and Goodneſs. The King ſpoke after the Speaker, and told them, He hop'd they wou'd join with him in reducing of Parliaments to their antient Rules and Orders, the deviation from which had done them no good. And he ſhew'd how he join'd in keeping to antient Rules, by his continuing the next Parliament to this Eighteen or Nineteen Years, whereas the antient Rule was to continue them not ſo many Weeks; and to renew the Parliamentary Writs every one, two, or three Years at moſt. Then the Lord Chancellor made his Speech, wherein he told them, He conjur'd them from the King to join with him in reſtoring the whole Nation to its primitive Temper and Integrity, to its old good Manners, to its old good Humour, and its old good Nature, &c. He ſaid it was penal by the Act of Indemnity to uſe Names or Words of Reproach, and that ſurly Looks were within the Equity of the Statute. To prove the Integrity of theſe Speeches, we need only mention a Book mention'd by Echard, and written by the infamous Roger L'Eſtrange. The Reverend Hiſtorian fills one of his Folio Pages with what he takes out of that Notable Piece; wherein ſome of the Presbyterians prefer'd by the King for reſtoring him to his Kingdom, are call'd Cromwel's Creatures, Bradſhaw's Creatures, St. John's Creatures, meaning the Great Grandfather of the St. John in Harley's Time, Paraſites, Villains, Knaves, Seditious Miniſters, Conſtitution Maſters, Rank Separatiſts, Scandalous Lecturers; which Libel was countenanc'd, applauded, and bought up by the Creatures of the Court, and ſufficiently ſhew'd what Dependance was to be made on the moſt fair Words, and indeed the moſt ſolemn Promiſes in publick Speeches and Declarations.

Sir Har. Grimſton's other Speech.

Echa. 793.

Mention has been made of the King's thanking the Parliament for excepting his Father's Judges out of the Act of Indemnity. Upon which Ludlow writes as follows, " By which he " not only manifeſted his own revengeful Tem- " per, and the little Regard he had to the Pro- " miſe he had made in his Proclamation from " Breda, to refer himſelf wholly to the Parlia- " ment for pardoning what had been done du- " ring the late Troubles; but his Imprudence " in this ſo early Violation of the Privileges of " the Parliament, by taking Notice of what was " depending before it came to be judicially pre- " ſented to him, and by that Means fomenting " a Diviſion between them concerning an Affair " in which he himſelf was principally intereſted. " He told them, other Ways might be found to " meet with thoſe who were of turbulent and factious Spirits; inſinuating, if I miſtake not, That " his Intentions were not to be guided by the Direction of the Laws, but that he had ſome " ſecret Reſerves to render the Act of Indemnity inſignificant; concluding with Deſires that " they wou'd be careful to make Proviſion for " his Iriſh Subjects, who had manifeſted great " Affection to him during his Exile; expreſſing " the ſame Zeal in the latter Part of his Speech " for the bloody Iriſh Rebels, as he had done " in the former againſt thoſe who had dar'd to " defend the Liberties of England.

By this Means the Iriſh grew immediately to that Confidence, that one Fitzharris publickly affirm'd in Weſtminſter Hall, that they were the beſt Subjects the King had, and for that Reaſon ſhou'd be ſoon reſtor'd to the Poſſeſſion of their Lands; of which the Parliament being inform'd, they committed him to the Gate-Houſe, but after two Days he was by the prevalency of the Court Faction diſcharg'd from his Impriſonment. Papiſts inſolent.

It far'd not ſo well with a Scots Gentleman, the Laird of Swinton, who was ſeiz'd and ſent to the Tower. The Cauſe of his Seiſure was at firſt reported to be for a Deſign to ſtab the King as he was curing the King's Evil; but afterwards 'twas ſaid he was impriſon'd for deſerting the Scots after the Battle of Dunbar.

The Impriſonment of the Marquis of Argyle has been ſpoken of. The Marquis of Antrim coming to Court about the ſame Time, was ſent after him to the Tower. He had been an Iriſh Rebel, and gave out That the Iriſh were authoriz'd by the late King to act as they had done. However, Lord Argyle was ſent to Scotland to loſe his Head on a Scaffold, and Lord Antrim to Ireland to have the Eſtate that had been taken from him for his Rebellion. I think theſe Things need no Explanation nor Remark.

Commiſſion for trying the King's Judges.

The Commiſſion for trying the King's Judges being iſſu'd ſoon after there were proper Sheriffs choſen, as Ludlow obſerves, the following Perſons were the Commiſſioners: Sir Thomas Allen, Lord Mayor of London, Lord Chancellor Hyde, Earl of Southampton, Duke of Albemarle, Marquis of Ormond, Earl of Lindſey, Earl of Manchеſter, Earl of Dorſet, Earl of Berkſhire, Earl of Sandwich, Lord Say, Lord Roberts, Lord Finch, Mr. Denzil Hollis, Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Sir Charles Berkley, Secretary Nicholas, Secretary Morrice, Sir Anthony-Aſhley Cooper, Mr. Arthur Anneſley, Sir Harbottle Grimſton, Sir William Wild, Recorder of London, Sir Orlando Bridgman, Lord Chief Baron, Judge Hyde, Judge Foſter, Judge Malles, Baron Atkins, Judge Twiſden, Baron Turner, Judge Tyrrel, Serjeant Browne, Serj. Hale, Mr. John Howel.

PROSECUTORS,

WITNESSES,

Mr. William Lenthal, Mr. John Ruſhworth, Mr. Anthony Mildmay, Col. Tomlinſon, Col. Hunks,

A.D.1660 Hunks, Mr. Maſterſon, Richard Browne, Eſq; Lord Mayor elect, &c.

The Commiſſioners met at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old Bailey on the 9th of October, and the Grand Jury being ſworn, Sir Orlando Bridgman open'd the Court with a Speech, the Subſtance of which was what ſure no body needed to be taught, that for private Perſons to take Arms againſt the King is Rebellion, and that to kill the King is Treaſon. Neither needed any body to have been told that the Army garbled the Houſe of Commons, and that after above a hundred Members had been excluded by Force, the reſt was not a perfect Repreſentative of the People; that conſequently while the King and the Lords were in being, the Acts of ſuch a Parliament muſt be invalid and null of themſelves. Surely Cook, who had been Chief Juſtice of Ireland, knew all theſe Things as well or better than he did; and if he had no Plea againſt ſuch plain Truths, he and his fellow Priſoners muſt be ſtupid if they expected to get off by Trial in a Court erected by the King's Commiſſion. Indeed the Trials were Formalities, neceſſary however in a Country where the Lives of the People are guarded by good Laws.

The Priſoners brought to be try'd were Lieutenant General Fleetwood, Sir Hardreſs Waller, Major General Harriſon, Col. Adrian Scrope, John Carew, Eſq; Mr. Gregory Clement, Col. John Jones, Henry Marten, Eſq; Col. Daniel Axtel, Thomas Scot, Eſq; Col. Francis Hacker, Mr. John Cook, Mr. Hugh Peters, Col. John Downes, Mr. Hewlett.

Of theſe, Sir Hardreſs Waller and Lieutenant General Fleetwood knowing very well that it was in vain to deny a Fact which for Twelve Years paſt they had been glorying in, pleaded Guilty. Mr. Echard informs us, that when Mr. Peters pleaded, there was a Horſe Laugh in the Court, becauſe he deſir'd to be try'd by the Word of God. Their Jeſts have all the ſame Turn. Mr. Peters had been ſo long us'd to a Set of Scripture Phraſes, that it wou'd have been difficult for him to have talk'd ſeriouſly in any other Stile, and he was now upon a very ſerious Matter. He err'd in Form, and conſidering what was ſure to be his Fate, ſuch an Error was not as laughable as the Court made it.

Fifteen of the Commiſſioners, ſays Ludlow, had actually engaged for the Parliament againſt the late King, either as Members of Parliament, Judges, or Officers in their Army; as Monk, Manchester, Anneſley, Sandwich, Holles, Allen, Wild, Grimſton, Aſhley Cooper, Browne, Atkins, Tyrrel, Say, Roberts, moſt, if not all of them, having been put into Places of Truſt and Profit ſince the late Revolution.

I ſhall not endeavour to extenuate the Guilt of the Priſoners; it will bear no Extenuation: If I had been then living, and upon the Jury, I muſt have found every Man of them Guilty, or I cou'd not have diſcharg'd my Conſcience. But I ſhou'd not have been fond of ſuch an Office, I ſhou'd not have taken Delight in a Seat on that Bench; I ſhou'd not have been in an Extaſy when Sentence of Death had been pronounc'd againſt them, nor ſhou'd I have ſeen them rip'd up and quarter'd with Tranſport, as our Compleat Hiſtorians ſeem to do. This Matter in my Opinion bears this Face, as in a modern Writer. "The "reſt of the Judges no doubt were as willing to "ſit on that Bench as on any other; but ſome of "theſe Judges had ſat in Parliament along with "ſome of the Priſoners, and were as deeply en"gag'd in the Civil War, till the Soldiery uſurp'd "the Maſtery. As for the Duke of Ormond, "the Earl of Clarendon, the Earl of Berkſhire, "Sir Charles Berkley, Secretary Nicholas, and the "Lord Finch, they doubtleſs rejoyc'd that they "cou'd pour down Vengeance on the Heads of "thoſe that had beaten and baffled them. They "were doing no more than their Duty, and eve"ry honeſt Man muſt have done the ſame thing "in the ſame Place. But for Monk and Mon"tague, two of Oliver's Lords, for Manchester "and Roberts, two of the Parliaments Colonels, "for Say and Hollis, two of the leading Mem"bers in both Houſes, for Atkins and Tyrrel, "two Parliament Judges; for theſe to judge "and condemn their Brethren, if it was the "higheſt Honeſty, it was not the higheſt De"cency," as the Archdeacon repreſents it. A.D.1660

Mr. Denzil Hollis, and the Earl of Manchester, were two of the five Commoners and one Lord, whom the Court wou'd have proſecuted to Death, for inviting in the Scots before the beginning of the War. Ludlow muſt needs have been exaſperated at their Conduct, when he wrote as follows: "Hollis and Manchester had con"tributed the utmoſt of their Endeavours to en"gage ſeveral of the Gentlemen (upon whom "they were now to ſit as Judges) on that Side, "and were not content to abandon them in this "Change, but aſſiſted in condemning them to "die for their Fidelity to that Cauſe which they "themſelves had betrayed. Mr. Arthur An"neſley, who had been alſo a Member of the "Parliament whilſt they made War againſt the "King, was one of this Number. Finch, who "had been accuſed of High Treaſon twenty "Years before by a full Parliament, and who "by flying from their Juſtice had ſav'd his Life, "was appointed to judge ſome of thoſe who "ſhou'd have been his Judges; and Sir Orlando "Bridgman, who upon his Submiſſion to Crom"wel had been permitted to practiſe the Law "in a private manner, and under that Colour "had ſerved both as Spy and Agent for his "Maſter, was entruſted with the principal Ma"nagement of this tragical Scene." The Compleat Hiſtorians do not treat it as if it was a Tragedy, but give their Readers Reaſon to believe they were never in a merrier Mood, than when they were writing of it. The firſt Priſoner who was try'd, upon his pleading Not Guilty, was Major General Harriſon, who, beſides the conſenting to the King's Death, was charg'd with ſaying, Gentlemen, it will be good for us to blacken him, pray let us blacken him, which confeſſes the Fraud even in the very reading. For the pretended Charge againſt the King was ſufficiently blacken'd by the Lawyers, and wanted no Helps at the Trial; beſides, his Judges were ſo appriz'd of the Subſtance of it, that they doubtleſs came prepar'd and determin'd what Judgment to give.

Major General Harriſon pleaded not guilty, and juſtify'd the Sentence paſt on the King, and the Authority of thoſe who had commiſſion'd him to act as one of his Judges; he plainly told them, when Witneſſes were produc'd againſt him, That he came not thither with an Intention to deny any thing he had done, but rather to bring it to Light; he own'd his Name ſubſcrib'd to the Warrant for executing the King, to be written by himſelf, charging ſeveral of thoſe who ſate on the Bench, as his Judges, to have been formerly as active for the Cauſe, in which he had engag'd, as himſelf, or any other Perſon; affirming that he had acted by no other Motive, than the Principles of Conſcience and Juſtice; for Proof of which he ſaid, it was well known he had choſen to be ſeparated from his Family, and to ſuffer a long Impriſonment, rather than to comply with thoſe who had abus'd the Power they had Major General Harriſon try'd.

A. D. 1660 aſſum'd, to the Oppreſſion of the People: He inſiſted that having done nothing, in relation to the Matter in Queſtion, otherwiſe than by the Authority of the Parliament, he was not juſtly accountable, either to this or any other inferior Court, which being a Point of Law, he deſir'd to have Council aſſign'd upon that Head, but the Court over-rul'd it, and by interrupting him frequently, and not permitting him to go on in his Defence, They clearly manifeſted, ſays Ludlow, a Reſolution of gratifying the Reſentments of the Court upon any Terms, ſo that a haſty Verdict was brought in againſt him; and the Queſtion being ask'd, If he had any thing to ſay, why Judgment ſhou'd not paſs? he only ſaid, Since the Court has refus'd to hear what was fit for me to ſpeak in my Defence, I have no more to ſay. Upon which Sir Orlando Bridgman pronounc'd the Sentence. Mr. Ludlow cannot help proceeding thus; "And that the Inhumanity of theſe "Men may the better appear, I muſt not omit "that the Executioner in an ugly Dreſs, with "a Halter in his Hand, was plac'd near the "Major General, and continu'd there during the "whole time of his Trial, which Action, I doubt "whether it was ever equall'd by the moſt barbarous Nations; but having learnt to condemn "ſuch Baſeneſs, after the Sentence had been pronounc'd againſt him, he ſaid aloud as he was "withdrawing from the Court, I have no Rea-"ſon to be aſham'd of the Cauſe in which I have "been engag'd." Echard owns that the Priſoner having ſaid, that he acted in the Fear of the Lord, the Court and Audience were amaz'd, and cry'd, Away with him, for he makes God the Author of his Treaſons and Murders. Sir Edward Turner added, He has the Plague all over him. This Knight had not the Plague, but it is moſt certain that a ſmall moving Member of his, was full of deadly Poiſon. Turner and all of them are in aſtoniſhment, that the Priſoners ſhou'd plead Authority of the Parliament; why had they any thing elſe to plead? Or was there any Plea in the World that cou'd have ſerv'd one that was brought before them, in caſe he was arraign'd for this Crime?

Condemn'd.

Cruelty and Inſolence to- - - - - him.

Col. Adrian Scrope's Trial came on next. He deny'd nothing of the Charge, but pleaded the Authority of the Parliament in his Juſtification, denying that he had been acted by any Motive of Malice, as the Indictment had ſuggeſted, and aſſerting, that in what he had done, relating to the King, he had follow'd the Light of his Reaſon, and the Dictates of his Conſcience. At this Trial, the principal Witneſs was that Browne, who having been Major General in the Parliament's Service, and mention'd already in this Work to be of a mercenary Spirit, was now brought to betray a private Converſation, and to depoſe, that talking one Day with Col. Adrian Scrope, in the Speaker's Chamber, and telling him that the Condition of the Nation was ſad ſince the Death of the King, the Colonel anſwer'd, Men have different Opinions touching that Matter, and being deſir'd by the ſaid Browne to explain himſelf, he reply'd, I ſhall not make you my Confeſſor, which amounts to nothing at all; for nothing is more ſure than that Men had different Opinions touching that Matter. Lieutenant General Ludlow wou'd have been hang'd, drawn and quarter'd for it in England. In Switzerland, the Lords of the Canton of Berne granted him their Act of Protection, and as to his ſaying he wou'd not make Browne the Woodmonger his Confeſſor, it prov'd nothing but his Contempt of the Man he ſpoke to; yet Echard ſays, he had ſo much the Port and Language of a Gentleman, that had it not been for the Evidence of Sir Richard Browne, Lord Mayor elect, it is juſtly believ'd he wou'd have eſcap'd with Life, and if that Evidence hang'd him, I will leave it to the Reader to make a Judgment of the Juſtice and Humanity of the Times. He was found guilty as haſtily as Major General Harriſon had been.

Col. Adrian Scrope. try'd.

A. D. 1660

Condemn'd.

John Carew, Eſq; was Brother to Sir Alexander Carew, of the antient Family of that Name in Cornwal. He had his Education in one of the Univerſities, and at the Inns of Court; he had a plentiful Eſtate as well as Col. Scrope, which is no ſmall Aggravation to Guilt in bad times. He had been a Member of the Council of State, and employ'd in many important Affairs, wherein he ſhew'd great Ability; he found the ſame Uſage from the Court as Major General Harriſon had done, being frequently interrupted, and Council deny'd, tho' earneſtly deſir'd by him, in that Point of Law, touching the Authority by which he had acted; tho' I do not ſee what Advantage Council cou'd be to him. For if he pleaded that Authority was by Parliament, nothing was better known than that the Parliament was under Force; and had not the Soldiers purg'd the Houſe, the Act for Trying the King cou'd never have paſs'd. And it is not on Account of the Priſoners that I take Notice of the Hardſhips they complain'd of, but to give as good an Idea as I can of the Perſons then in Power, who in a Year or two will ſhew us ſome other Acts of theirs in favour of the Church, as theſe are in favour of the State.

John Carew, Eſq; try'd.

When Mr. Carew found all he cou'd ſay was to no Purpoſe, he frankly acknowledg'd that he ſat in the High Court of Juſtice, and had ſign'd two Warrants, one for ſummoning the Court in order to the King's Trial, and another for his Execution. Upon this the Court, who, ſays my Author, were well acquainted with the Diſpoſition of the Jury, permitted him to proceed, and he began his Defence thus. In the Year 1640, a Parliament was call'd according to the Laws and Conſtitution of this Nation, and ſome Differences ariſing between the King and that Parliament, the King withdrew his Perſon from them, upon which the Lords and Commons declar'd. ------ Here the Court interrupted him, contrary to the Liberty they had promis'd him, alledging that what he was about to ſay, tended not only to juſtify the Action for which he was accus'd, but to caſt a Ball of Diviſion among thoſe who were preſent. Mr. Carew neglecting that Ball of Diviſion, began again, The Lords and Commons in their Declaration, ---- Here Judge Foſter interrupted him again, and told him, "He "endeavour'd to revive thoſe Differences which "he hop'd were laid aſleep, and that he did ſo "blow the Trumpet of Sedition, demanding if "he had ever heard, or cou'd produce an Act "of Parliament made by the Commons alone:" To this he wou'd have anſwer'd, but was not permitted to finiſh what he began to ſay, or hardly any one thing he endeavour'd to ſpeak in his Defence, during the whole Trial. Mr. Arthur Anneſley particularly charging him with the Excluſion of the Members, in the Year 1648, of which Number he had been one; Mr. Carew only reply'd, It ſeems ſtrange that a Man who ſits as Judge on the Bench, ſhou'd give Evidence as a Witneſs in the Court. My Author adds, "Theſe irregular Proceedings ſo unbecoming a "Court of Judicature, oblig'd Mr. Carew to ad-"dreſs himſelf to the Jury, leaving them to judge "of the Legality of his Trial," and having ſaid this Matter, had been controverted in the Face of the whole World, and that the Lord had given an Anſwer upon ſolemn Appeals to theſe things.

Sir

A D. 1660 he is condemn'd.

Sir Orlando Bridgman bad him remember, The Devil ſometimes appears as an Angel of Light. The Jury without removing from the Bar, brought him in guilty.

Mr. Scot's Trial.

Thomas Scot, Eſq; late Secretary of State, being next at the Bar, was brought to a Trial, Ludlow ſays, or rather to receive the Sentence of Condemnation. He was charg'd with Sitting in the High Court of Juſtice, at the King's Trial, and ſigning the two Warrants before-mention'd, as alſo with deſiring that the following Inſcription ſhou'd be engrav'd on his Monument, Here lies Thomas Scot who adjudg'd the late King to die. Several Witneſſes were produc'd to prove theſe Things, and among the reſt William Lenthal, Eſq; Speaker to the Parliament, who, tho' when the King enter'd the Houſe of Commons, and had demanded of him the five Members, he knew how to anſwer, I have neither Ears to hear, Eyes to ſee, or Mouth to ſpeak, except what
p. 67. the Houſe gave, cou'd now appear as an Evidence againſt Mr. Scot for Words ſpoken in Parliament, which he was conſcious to himſelf was a high Breach of Privilege; acquainting the Court that the Perſon accus'd had juſtify'd in the Houſe the Proceedings againſt the King. Mr. Scot urg'd in his Defence, " That whatever had " been ſpoken in the Houſe ought not to be " given in Evidence againſt him, not falling un- " der the Cognizance of any Inferior Court, as " all Men knew; that for what he had done in " relation to the King, he had the Authority of " the Parliament for his Juſtification; that the " Court had no Right to declare whether that " Authority were a Parliament or not." And being demanded to produce one Inſtance, to ſhew that the Houſe of Commons was ever poſſeſs'd of ſuch an Authority, he aſſur'd them he cou'd produce many. He began with the Saxon Times; immediately the Court interrupted him, and told him the Things of thoſe Ages were obſcure. Finding he might not be permitted to proceed in that Way, he took the Liberty to tell them, He cou'd not ſee for what Reaſon it was not as lawful for that Houſe of Commons in which he had ſat as a Member to make Laws, as for the preſent Convention, which had been call'd by the Authority of the Keepers of the Liberties of England. I had the Authority of Parliament, the Legiſlative Authority to juſtify me. Here the Court interrupted him, and Ludlow writes, Having no Reaſon to give, Finch ſaid in a Paſſion, Sir, if you ſpeak to this Purpoſe again, I profeſs for my own Part I dare not hear any more; 'tis a Doctrine ſo Poiſonous and Blaſphemous, that if you proceed upon this Point, I ſhall (and I hope my Lords will be of the ſame Opinion) deſire that the Jury may be immediately directed. Mr. Scot reply'd, My Lord, I thought you wou'd rather have been my Council, as I think 'tis the Duty of your Place; but in this Matter I am not alone, neither is it my ſingle Opinion, even the ſecluded Members of whom ſeveral were then ſitting upon the Bench, own'd us to be a Parliament, elſe why did they, ſupported by an arm'd Force, intrude themſelves contrary to the Reſolution of the Houſe, in order to procure the major Vote for our Diſſolution? To which Mr. Anneſley anſwer'd, If the ſecluded Members had not appear'd in Parliament, and by that means put an End to all Pretences, the People had not ſo ſoon arrived at their Happineſs. After ſome little Struggle more, ſays Echard, the Jury, as directed, ſoon brought him in Guilty.

My Author proceeds, " Col. John Jones and " Mr. Gregory Clement finding all that had been " ſaid in Vindication of the Things objected a- " gainſt the Gentlemen who had been already " tried, to prove ineffectual, inform'd the Court " that they cou'd ſay no more than had been al- " ready alledg'd, and therefore confeſs'd the " Fact, upon which they were declar'd Guilty, " as the Perſons before-mention'd had been. A. D. 1660 TheſeFive Priſoners receiving Sentence together, Echard informs us Sir Orlando Bridgman made an affecting Speech to them. I knew well enough before what a fine Judge he was of the Pathos in Eloquence, and was only confirm'd by this Saying of his now in my Opinion, that his Judgment was equal to his Practice, there being not a moving Word in it, unleſs this is the Pathetick: " There is a Spiritual Pride; Men may o- " ver-run themſelves by their own Holineſs, and " may follow pretended Revelations. How af- " fecting it is! Men may ſay, I have pray'd a- " bout ſuch a thing; a Man may commit a " Robbery or Murder merely becauſe he will, " and may come and ſay, I have pray'd againſt " it, and cannot underſtand it to be a Sin, as the " Man in Shropſhire did, and yet notwithſtand- " ing kill'd his own Father and Mother." Which puts me in Mind of an old Saw upon Similies, As Tinterden Steeple was the Cauſe of Goodwin Sands, ſo good People love one another.

Mr. Solicitor Cook's Trial.

The next brought to his Trial was Mr. John Cook, who was not one of the King's Judges, but Sollicitor to the High Court of Juſtice appointed by Parliament, as they call'd themſelves, and were call'd by others. Mr. Cook's Plea ſhews us that his Capacity was much ſuperior to the Lawyers that ſat upon him; and the Lord Chief Baron Bridgman muſt be a Man of Reſolution to put his Abilities in oppoſition to Mr. Cook's, whoſe Cauſe, 'tis true, was as bad as Bridgman's was good; and it was as great pity that Bridgman made no more of it, as that Cook made ſo much of his.

He was accus'd of preferring in the Name of all the good People of England, an Impeachment of High Treaſon to the High Court of Juſtice againſt the late King; that he had ſign'd the ſaid Impeachment with his own Hand; that upon the King's Demurrer to the Juriſdiction of the Court, he had preſs'd that the Charge might be taken for confeſs'd, and therefore had demanded Judgment from the Court againſt the King; but this Indictment is more particularly charg'd upon him in the three following Articles.

I. That he with others had propounded, counſelled, contrived, and imagined the Death of the late King.

II. That to bring about this Conſpiracy, he with others had aſſum'd Authority and Power to accuſe, kill, and murder the King.

III. That a Perſon unknown did cut off the King's Head, and that the Priſoner was abetting, aiding, aſſiſting, countenancing, and procuring the ſaid Perſon ſo to do.

One can eaſily believe that he did counſel and imagine the King's Death, that he did accuſe him and demand Juſtice, and really I think that was enough of Conſcience to do what they did to him, without adding what no body will believe, that he kill'd the King himſelf, or that he went for the Hangman, as in the ſecond and third Article. Mr. Cook's Anſwer ſhews us how a very bad Cauſe may be colour'd over by an artful experienc'd Counſel.

He anſwer'd firſt, " That he cou'd not be juſt- " ly ſaid to have contriv'd or counſell'd the Death " of the King, becauſe the Proclamation for " the King's Trial, even by the Confeſſion of his " Accuſer, was publiſh'd on the 9th of January, " which was a Day before he was appointed Sol- " licitor to the High Court of Juſtice.

A.D.1660 " In the ſecond Place, tho' the Court ſhou'd " not admit that to be an Act of Parliament " which authoriz'd him to do what he did, yet " he aſſur'd himſelf they wou'd allow it to be " an Order, which was enough to juſtify him.

" Thirdly, That he who had neither been Accuſer, Witneſs, Jury, Judge, or Executioner, " cou'd not be guilty in this Caſe.

He urg'd, " That having acted only as Coun- " cil, he was not anſwerable for the Juſtice or " Injuſtice of the Cauſe he had manag'd. I take that to be the ſtrongeſt Part of his Anſwer, If Hyde, or Bridgman, or Palmer, or Turner, were to have been accountable for the Injuſtice of all the Cauſes they had managed, which muſt be ſuppos'd to be all the Cauſes wherein they were caſt, it wou'd not have been poſſible for them to have held out long enough to ſit upon that Bench. Solicitor Cook alledg'd farther, " That being plac'd " in that Station by a publick Command, it cou'd " not be ſaid he acted maliciouſly, or with a " wicked Intention, as the Indictment menti- " on'd. That Words ſpoken do not amount to " Treaſon, much leſs when ſet down in Writing " by the Direction of others; eſpecially ſince no " clear Proof had been produc'd that his Name " ſubſcrib'd to the Charge againſt the King was " written by himſelf. He ſaid, That to pray " and demand Juſtice, though Injuſtice be done " upon it, cou'd not be Treaſon within the Sta- " tute; that when he demanded Juſtice, it might " be meant of Acquittal as well as Condemna- " tion; and that if it ſhou'd be accounted Trea- " ſon in a Counſellor to plead againſt the King, " it muſt alſo be Felony to plead againſt any " Man who may be unjuſtly condemned for Fe- " lony. That the High Court of Juſtice, tho' " now call'd Tyrannical and Unlawful, was yet " a Court, had Officers attending them, and " many think had Authority, there being then " no other in this Nation than that which gave " them their Power; and if this will not juſtify " a Man for acting within his own Sphere, it " will not be lawful for any one to exerciſe his " Profeſſion, unleſs he may be ſure of the Le- " gality of the Eſtabliſhment under which he " acts."

So ſays General Ludlow; the Archdeacon adds more of his Anſwer, on purpoſe to ſhew how well it was anſwer'd from the Bench. He obſerv'd, " That the Word Inſtrumental in the Ex- " ception of the Act, was inſignificant, or other- " wiſe incomprehenſive of him." After all his long Pleadings, ſays the Archdeacon (and by long there, means dull and tedious, as I do when I mention certain long Speeches in his Hiſtory) he was anſwerd by the Court, and then he tells us how, That he had been ſufficiently prov'd inſtrumental, &c. and ſo was every one that brought the King from Holmby to the Army, and from Hurſt-Caſtle to Windſor, and from Windſor to St. James's, and from St. James's to Weſtminſter-Hall, and from thence to the Scaffold: Not to puſh that Argument farther, all concern'd in any of thoſe Actions were inſtrumental. This has no manner of relation to the Juſtice or Injuſtice of the Cauſe; it turns only on the Exception in the Act, and then the Queſtion is, Whether the Degree of Inſtrumentality does or does not except the Perſon? which I ſuppoſe will not be allow'd by Lawyers at this Time. But to give the Reader an Idea of the Argumentation of this Bench, we will repeat a Paragraph, the rather becauſe Echard has repeated it, and did not ſee there was nothing at all in it. " As no " Man can have a lawful Call to purſue the Life " of his King, ſo for a private Perſon, though " he only intends to beat a Man, yet if he dies " thereupon, in Law it is Murder; and if a Man " counſels another to commit Murder, he is " guilty himſelf." Here are As and So attended with as much Nonſenſe as ever they were ſince they were Adverbs. As no Man can lawfully purſue the King's Life, ſo no Man can lawfully purſue another Man's. Or it muſt be, As it is not lawful to purſue the Life of the King, ſo it is not lawful to beat a Man, if he dies upon it. But it may be lawful to intend to beat a Man only, and the Man may thereupon die without committing Murder, as is the Caſe of all legal Correction, by the Severity of which many Perſons in all Ages and Conditions have dy'd, though Death was not in the Intention. I do not leave out what few Arguments this Court give, for any other Reaſon than that they are no better than this, when they leave the ſubſtantial one, and they wanted no other, which is, That to imagine and conſpire the Death of the King is Treaſon; and that the Priſoners imagin'd and conſpir'd was never deny'd by themſelves, though they pretended they were juſtify'd by the Authority of the Remnant of the Parliament, which cou'd not be, becauſe Force had been put upon the Aſſembly, and what they did afterwards cou'd not be legal.

A.D.1660

Ludlow gives this Account of the Succeſs of Mr. Cook's Pleadings. " Theſe, and divers " other things of no leſs Weight, he ſaid in his " Defence; but the Cabal thinking themſelves " concern'd to prevent the like in Time to come, " and to terrify thoſe who were not only able, but " willing alſo to be employed in ſuch Service, " procured from the Jury a Verdict of Condem- " nation againſt him, according to their Deſire. p. 73. Condemn'd.

After which Mr. Hugh Peters, of - - - - - Col- lege in Cambridge, was try'd for compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, as Ludlow ſays; probably he miſtook, and it was for imagining and compaſſing; and probably he did not miſtake, conſidering the Heads of the Lawyers that were at Work upon this Buſineſs, For conſpiring with Oliver Cromwel; methinks this Indictment ſhou'd have been prefer'd in Oliver's Life-time, and then he might have been made an Example of as well as Hugh is, at ſeveral Times and Places, and procuring the Soldiers to " demand Juſtice; by preaching divers Sermons " to perſuade the Soldiery to take off the King, " comparing him to Barabbas, and applying part " of a Pſalm, where 'tis ſaid, They ſhall bind " their Kings in Chains, &c. to the Proceed- " ings againſt him, aſſuring them, if they wou'd " look into their Bibles, they ſhou'd find there, " That whoever ſheddeth Man's Blood, by Man " ſhall his Blood be ſhed; and that neither the " King, nor any other Perſon, are excepted " from this general Rule. He was alſo ac- " cus'd of ſaying, That the Levites, Lords, and " Lawyers muſt be taken away, in order to eſta- " bliſh a Common-wealth. That the King was " a Tyrant, and that the Office it ſelf was charge- " able, uſeleſs, and dangerous." All which Things and many more of the like nature were ſworn againſt him, and I doubt we ſhall have but a poor Defence from him; ſuch as it is you have it in Ludlow, " That the War began before " he came into England; that ſince his Arrival " he had endeavour'd to promote ſound Reli- " gion, the Reformation of Learning, and the " Law; which Sir Anthony-Aſhley Cooper, one of his Judges, might have witneſs'd for him if he wou'd, having been a joint Committee Man with him for that Purpoſe. " That for the better " effecting theſe Things, and the Employment " of the Poor, he had eſpous'd the Intereſts of " the Parliament, in which he had acted with- out

Mr. Hugh Peters. Ib.

A.D.1660 " out Malice, Avarice, or Ambition; and that " whatever Prejudices or Paſſions might poſſeſs " the Minds of Men, yet there was a God who " knew theſe things to be true." This is what Echard calls ſpeaking meanly. Ludlow gives it another Turn; It was not expected any thing he cou'd ſay ſhou'd ſave him from the Revenge of the Court, and therefore he was without Heſitation brought in Guilty.

Condemn'd.

Col. Axtel try'd.

The next Priſoner brought to his Trial was Col. Daniel Axtel, who had eſcap'd, as he thought, ſays Echard, the Exception in the Act, but was lately added, on Account of other Blood that lay upon him, which is falſe; for that other Blood lay more upon Monk than it did upon him, and as much upon Montague Earl of Sandwich, both then ſitting in Judgment upon him. The Blood of the King needed no Aggravation, it wou'd make one tremble, even but to read it, had not the Rage, Malice, and Stupidity of ſome Hiſtory Writers diverted part of ones Thoughts when we meet with it in their Writings. The chief Heads of the Indictment againſt Col. Axtel were, " That he commanded the Guards " both at the Trial and Execution of the King; " that he order'd the Soldiers, in a tumultuous " Manner, to demand Juſtice, and afterwards " Execution; that he threaten'd to ſhoot a La- " dy (Lady Fairfax) who from a Gallery that " was near the Court where the King was try'd, " had contradicted the Preſident when he was " ſpeaking concerning the Charge. That he ſent " for and encourag'd the Executioner, and that " he upbraided with Cowardice, one of the Per- " ſons to whom the Warrant for ſeeing Ex- " ecution done upon the King was directed, for " refuſing to ſign it." Ludlow adds, Theſe, with ſome other things of leſs Weight, were call'd compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King. Echard mentions his charging the Perſon with Cowardice for refuſing to ſign the Warrant, but does not tell us who that Perſon was, becauſe he was a very willing Witneſs againſt his Brother Officer. It was Col. Hercules Huncks, who, according to Ludlow, was one of the three to whom that Warrant was directed, one of the forty Halberdiers attending the High Court of Juſtice, and one who had oppos'd with more than ordinary Vehemence, all thoſe who were for the King. This Man was the principal Witneſs againſt Col. Axtel, who having firſt acknowledg'd his Ignorance in Matters of Law, and therefore deſir'd that no undue Advantage might be taken on that Account, proceeded to ſpeak to this Effect.

His Defence.

" That the War was made by the joint Autho- " rity of the Lords and Commons aſſembled in " Parliament, who claim'd a Right in employ- " ing the Military Force of the Nation for the " publick Safety, as appears by divers Acts and " Declarations publiſh'd by their Order. This " Authority rais'd an Army, made the Earl of " Eſſex General. Then the Earl of Mancheſter, " ſitting on the Bench, General of the Forces of " the Eaſtern Aſſociation, and after that created " and authoriz'd Sir Thomas Fairfax to be Ge- " neral of all their Forces." —Having thus ſtated the Caſe, he proceeds, Under this Authority I acted, which I conceive to be legal, becauſe this Parliament was not only call'd by the King's Writ, which the Parliament then ſitting was not, and choſen by the People, but alſo becauſe a Bill had paſs'd, that they ſhou'd not be diſſolv'd otherwiſe than by their own Conſent. Having this unqueſtionable Authority for my Juſtification, I preſume my Caſe comes not within the Reach of the Statute, 25 Edward III. which cou'd by no Means intend ſuch a Power, as was not only own'd and obey'd at home, but acknowledg'd by Princes and States abroad, to be the chief Authority of the Nation, by ſending Ambaſſadors and Agents to them. The Judges, who ought to be the Eye and Guide of the People, acted under them; divers of them publickly declaring that it was lawful and juſtifiable to obey the Parliament, but if their Acts may not be accounted ſuch, tho' they carry'd that Title, and were obey'd by the Judges, Miniſters, Officers of State, and the whole Nation; yet ſurely they cannot be deny'd to be Orders of Parliament, which wou'd be ſufficient to juſtify any Man who acted by them. This Parliament ſo conſtituted, ſo acknowledg'd, ſo obey'd, having made choice of a Perſon to be General of their Forces, I was by that General, Sir Thomas Fairfax, in Virtue of the Authority he had receiv'd from them, conſtituted an Officer under him; and therefore whatever I have done, was as a Soldier, and according to the Duty of my Office: For if I was in Weſtminſter-Hall at the time of the King's Trial, I was there by command of the General; and if it be ſo great a Crime to have been an Officer in that Army, which was rais'd by the Earls of Eſſex, Mancheſter, the Lord General Fairfax, Monk, and others, who have acted by the ſame Authority, were no leſs criminal than my ſelf. Here he cited the Declarations of the Lords and Commons, publiſh'd when they engag'd the People to take Arms, in which they aſſerted, " That it was repugnant to Reaſon that " the Judgment and Actions of the Parliament " might not be a Rule and Guide to the Na- " tion in their Duty, and declar'd, that the Per- " ſons who ſhou'd act under their Authority, " ought not to be queſtion'd for ſo doing.

A.D.1660

Wherefore, continues he, I preſume that an inferior Court will not expound the Law, contrary to the Judgment of the high Court of Parliament. If the Houſe of Commons, who are the Repreſentatives of the whole Nation, may be guilty of Treaſon, it will follow, that all the People of England who choſe them, are guilty alſo; and then where will a Jury be found to try the Cauſe? My Commiſſion is dated the 27th of March, 1648, ten Months before the King's Death. The Commiſſion by which General Fairfax was authoriz'd to give mine to me, he receiv'd from the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament. I did nothing but my Duty in going to my Regiment; for if the General ſays, Go to ſuch a Place and ſtay there, if I refuſe, by the Law of Arms, I am to die; but if I obey, it ſeems I am in Danger alſo: The Queſtion therefore in Law, I humbly conceive will be this, and I deſire it may be truly and fairly ſtated, Whether a Man who is guided by the Judgment of the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament, and acting only according to that Judgment of Parliament, and under their Authority, can be queſtion'd for Treaſon?

To this the Council anſwer'd, " That he was " not accus'd of levying War, but of aſſiſting " at the Trial and Examination of the King, " and encouraging the Soldiers to clamour for " Juſtice and Execution." The Colonel reply'd, I am no more guilty than the General, my Preſence in Weſtminſter-Hall was not voluntary, and I was there by Command.

I do not find that any Attempt was made to anſwer this; but it was ſaid that he was not commanded to cry Execution; that to cry Juſtice and Execution, was an Overt Act, which was confirm'd in his wrathful Speech to the Lady, who, according to the Teſtimony of the reverend Hiſtorian, he call'd Whore, and according to other Teſtimony, he ſmil'd. His Anſwer was, If any Lady talk'd loud during the King's Trial, to the Inter-

A.D. 1660 Interruption and Diſturbance of the Court, I ſuppoſe it was no Treaſon to bid her hold her Tongue. If I ſmil'd, as Col. Temple depos'd, it cannot amount to ſo great a Crime. If ſome Soldiers did cry out Juſtice, it was not by my Inſtigation; yet I hope that to deſire Juſtice, which is one of the principal Attributes of God, is not high Treaſon. Having ſaid theſe, with many other Things in his Defence, he addreſs'd himſelf to the Jury, ſaying, Gentlemen, I leave my Caſe and my Life in your Hands. Tho' he was not one of the King's Judges, and acted as a Soldier by Command of his General, at leaſt as far as his Attendance at the King's Trial; yet thoſe Gentlemen took not the leaſt Notice of it. Lieutenant General Ludlow reflects on the Lord Chief Baron Bridgman for directing the Jury as he did. " In an- " ſwer to theſe Arguments Bridgman, who was " the Preſident of this Aſſembly, contented him- " ſelf with repeating that ſtrange and unheard " of Doctrine;" That no Perſon whatſoever, nor Community, not the People, either collectively or repreſentatively, have any coercive Power over the King. " For this he quoted ſome Precedents, " as little to the Purpoſe as the Aſſertion it ſelf, " and then concluded the Caſe to be ſo clear, " that the Jury need not ſtir from the Bar. It " ſoon appear'd that he knew the Men, for they " fully anſwer'd his Expectation, and as they " were directed, without any Difficulty declar'd " Col. Axtel to be guilty of the Treaſon with " which he had been charg'd.

Condemn'd.

Col. Francis Hacker try'd.

The next Priſoner brought to the Bar was Col. Francis Hacker; the Indictment againſt him was like that againſt Col. Axtel, for compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, which being read, Witneſſes, of which a Cloud was at the Service of the Court, were produc'd to prove that he was one of the Perſons who were upon the Guard, and kept the King Priſoner; that the Warrant for ſeeing the Sentence which had been pronounc'd by the High Court of Juſtice againſt the King, put in Execution, was directed to him: That in the Proſecution of that Commiſſion, he had ſign'd a Warrant for executing the King, and that he took the King by virtue of the Warrant he had receiv'd, out of the Cuſtody of Col. Thomlinſon, and conducted him to the Scaffold, on which he had been put to Death. Col. Hacker excepted not againſt any of the Jury, finding all of them to be of the ſame Stamp, and ſaid little more in his Defence, than that he had acted by the Command of his Superiors, and that he had always endeavour'd to ſerve his Country; ſo that his Trial was quickly diſpatch'd, and he declar'd guilty of High Treaſon.

Condemn'd.

Capt. Hewlet try'd.

Capt. William Hewlet was alſo accus'd and try'd for cutting off the King's Head, or at leaſt for being one of the Perſons that ſtood mask'd upon the Scaffold during his Execution. Several creditable Witneſſes depos'd, that Gregory Brandon, who was the Common Hangman, had confeſs'd and own'd to have executed the King; that he affirm'd as much to the Lord Capel, when he ſuffer'd by the ſame Ax: And Capt. Hewlet offer'd to make it appear that he was not upon the Scaffold that Day, nor near it; nay, that he was ſeiz'd and ſecur'd for refuſing to be there: However, the Jury clear'd their Way, and found him guilty of the Indictment; but, ſays Ludlow, " the Court being ſenſible of the Injury " done him, procur'd his Reprieve.

Condemn'd.

One may ſee what ſort of Juſtice was like to be adminiſtred in this Reign by the Condemnation of Hewlet for a Crime of which he was not guilty, as appears plainly by what Lilly writes of the Matter in his own Life; " The next Sunday " but one after Charles the Firſt was beheaded, " Robert Spavin, Secretary to Lieutenant Gene- " ral Cromwel, invited himſelf to dine with me, " and brought Anthony Pierſon and ſeveral others " along with him to Dinner. Their principal " Diſcourſe was who it was that beheaded the " King: One ſaid it was the Common Hangman, " another Hugh Peters; others were alſo nomi- " nated, but none concluded. Robert Spavin, " as ſoon as Dinner was done, took me by the " Hand, and carrying me to the South Window " ſaid, Theſe are all miſtaken, They have not " nam'd the Man that did the Fact, it was Lieu- " tenant Colonel Joyce: I was in the Room when " he fitted himſelf for the Work, ſtood behind him " when he did it, and when done went in again " with him. There's no Man knows this but my " Maſter Cromwel, Commiſſary Ireton, and myſelf.

A.D. 1660 Joyce cut off King Charles's Head. p. 91.

We come now to thoſe of the King's Judges, whom we have mention'd before to have been excepted both for Life and Eſtate, with a Reſerve, that if upon Trial they ſhou'd be found guilty, Sentence of Death ſhou'd not be executed againſt any of them, except by Act of Parliament, as theſe following, Col. Harvey, Alderman Pennington, Col. Henry Morley, Alderman Tichburne, Col. Owen Roe, Gilbert Millington, Eſq; Col. Lilburn, Henry Smith, Eſq; Col. Downs, Auguſtine Garland, Eſq; Col. Potter, William Heveningham, Eſq; Col. James Temple, Peter Temple, Eſq; Col. Wayte, Simion Meyne, Eſq; Theſe were all brought to Trial before this Court, where ſome of them pleaded Guilty ſimply, but others, tho' they acknowledg'd the Guilt, deny'd the Malice, and ſome confeſſing the Fact deny'd the Guilt. Of the laſt was Col. Henry Marten, who was charg'd with ſigning the Precept for ſummoning the High Court of Juſtice, and ſigning the Warrant for executing the King; with ſitting in Court almoſt every Day of his Trial, and particularly that on which he receiv'd Sentence of Death.

Judges condemn'd, but reprieved.

Col. Henry Marten's Trial.

To theſe Things he anſwer'd, that he declin'd not to acknowledge the Matter of Fact that was alledg'd againſt him, the Malice imputed to him by the Indictment ſet aſide. Upon which being told by one of the Council employ'd by the Court, that he ſeem'd to be of Opinion, that a Man may ſit and adjudge a King to Death, and ſign a Warrant for his Execution, meekly, innocently, charitably and honeſtly. Now on a Suppoſition, that the Authority by which theſe Judges, and Col. Marten in particular, acted, had been legal, All That, might have been done, and it was for want of common Senſe, that that Counſellor pretended to Wit; for a Judge having a lawful Commiſſion, or believing upon the beſt Conviction his Mind cou'd give him, that his Commiſſion was lawful, may meekly and charitably paſs a Sentence, as I doubt not wiſe upright Judges always do. Col. Marten anſwer'd, that tho' he ſhou'd not compare his Knowledge in the Law with that of ſuch a learned Gentleman, yet according to the little Underſtanding he had been capable of acquiring, he preſum'd that no Fact cou'd be nam'd, which in it ſelf is a Crime, but only as it is circumſtantiated; and to make good his Aſſertion, gave ſeveral Inſtances: But the Council, to prove that he had acted maliciouſly, produc'd a Perſon who depos'd, That he ſign'd the Warrant merrily, and in a jeſting Way, as he was rallying with Lieutenant General Cromwel. I think this ſhews too what Heads they had; to which Col. Marten immediately retorted, Then it was not in Malice. General Ludlow adds, " The Council finding their In- " ſinuations and Aggravations of the Charge " againſt him ſo eaſily blown away by theſe and " other Anſwers, made up with Paſſion what

A.D.1660 " they wanted in the Weight of Reaſon, Finch " the Sollicitor General exclaiming, That all " good People abhorr'd the Action, and that he " was ſorry to ſee ſo little Repentance. To this " the Colonel ſaid, I hope what is urg'd by the " Council, will not make that Impreſſion upon " the Court and Jury as ſeems to be deſign'd." If it were poſſible for that Blood to be in the Veins again, and every Drop of what was ſhed in the late Wars, I cou'd wiſh it with all my Heart; but I preſume it may be lawful to ſay in my own Defence, that what I did, I thought at that time I might do. There was a Houſe of Commons, as I underſtood it to be, tho' perhaps your Lordſhips think them not to have been a Houſe of Commons; however, they were then the ſupream Authority in England, and acknowledg'd and reputed ſo to be, both at home and abroad. I ſuppoſe he who gives Obedience to the Authority de Facto, ſufficiently ſhews himſelf of a peaceable Temper, and far from a Traitor. If it ſhou'd be ſaid that the Authority by which we acted, was only one Eſtate of Three, and but Part of that, I anſwer, it was all that was then exiſting; and I have heard Lawyers ſay, if there be Commons appurtenant to a Tenement, and that the Tenement be all burnt down except one ſmall Stick, the Commons ſtill belong to that ſmall Piece, as much as when the Tenement was all ſtanding. I ſhall alſo humbly offer it to Conſideration, Whether the late King, for ſome time before his Trial, cou'd truly and properly be call'd a King, who was not in the Execution of his Office, but made a Priſoner, and no ways concern'd in the Adminiſtration of Publick Affairs? All which had no more Effect upon the Jury than it had upon the Goalers.

Colonel Downs try'd. Col. Downs to a like Indictment pleaded, That at the King's Trial he had caus'd the Court to adjourn, and had ſaid and done what wou'd have been of the higheſt Importance to the King, had he not been over-rul'd. But that hinder'd not his being condemn'd with Col. Marten, and the reſt laſt mention'd.

Sentence being to be pronounc'd againſt the convicted Priſoners, Echard tells us, the Lord Chief Baron Bridgman made another affecting Speech to them, after he had acknowledg'd many of them to be of liberal Education and great Parts.

It is on no other Account worth repeating, than as it ſhews again what Mr. Archdeacon underſtands of Affecting in Diſcourſe: " He repeated to them ſome things he had formerly ſaid " concerning the legal Supremacy of the Kings " of England; How Pathetick it is! He told " them, no Body or Community of Men had any " Coercive Power over them; wonderfully moving! Then he nam'd the Words of the Act " of the Firſt of King James, wherein the Lords " and Commons did acknowledge a natural Liege " Obedience to the King as Supreme, his Heirs " and Succeſſors; and in the Name of themſelves " and all the People, humbly ſubmit themſelves " until the laſt Drop of their Blood (that affects) " be ſpent in Defence of the King and his Royal " Poſterity. Remember, added he, theſe were " not Words of Complement, &c." I will repeat no more of it, but refer to Mr. Archdeacon's Hiſtory, where many ſuch Parcels of affecting Eloquence, ſome longer, ſome ſhorter, are to be found, from this Page 779, to the End of his Hiſtory. p. 779.

What is to come of their Dealings with the King's Judges has no Parallel in any Story; and to uſe the Words of the Compleat Hiſtorians, One cannot but think there was the Spirit of Hell in it. For though theſe condemn'd Criminals were juſtly to ſuffer the Law, and their Puniſhment ſhou'd have been as Exemplary as their Crime was Capital, yet to make Sport with dying Men, and Diverſion of the Butchering Part, cou'd not have happen'd but in Times as wicked as thoſe when Sodom periſh'd in a Tempeſt of Fire. A.D.1660

The firſt that was dragg'd on a Hurdle thro' the City to Charing-Croſs, where a Gallows was erected for them, was Major General Harriſon, who was hang'd on the 13th of October, with his Face towards the Banqueting-Houſe; the People, ſays Echard, loudly ſhouting at his Fall. He adds, he was cut down alive; and another Author ſays, He was cut down alive, and ſaw his Bowels thrown into the Fire. I don't find any Reaſon given for putting the Gallows at Charing-Croſs by any Writer but Ludlow, who tells us, it was that the King might have the Pleaſure of the Spectacle, and inure himſelf to Blood. The Major General's Body being quarter'd, was plac'd upon the City Gates, and his Head upon Weſtminſter-Hall. M. Gen. Harriſon ript up alive. p. 69.

The Major General declar'd, The Lord's Spirit did witneſs with his Spirit that all his Sins were done away in Jeſus Chriſt; that he was about to ſuffer for the moſt glorious Cauſe that ever was in the World; that he believ'd the Lord would e'er it be long make it known from Heaven, that there was more of God in it than Men were aware of.

Two Days after John Carew, Eſq; was brought to the ſame Place, and was hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd; but in Conſideration that his Brother, Sir Alexander Carew, was beheaded for ſerving the late King, his Quarters were permitted to be put into a Grave. Mr. Carew declar'd, What he ſaid was of the Lord, and if it were to be done again, he wou'd do it. The Lord has once already juſtify'd the Cauſe in the Field, and will again do it with a witneſs. I die not in the Lord only, but for the Lord; and think not that this bleſſed Cauſe will be loſt, for it ſhall reach to the End of the Earth. Mr. Carew quarter'd.

The Day following Mr. John Cook, who had been Lord Chief Juſtice in Ireland, and Mr. Hugh Peters the Miniſter, were together brought to the ſame Place, and executed in the ſame manner. When Mr. Cook was drawn upon his Sledge, the Head of Major General Harriſon, with his Face uncover'd, was plac'd before him, to the great Deteſtation of the People, as we read even in Echard, and in Ludlow, " That it was ſo " far from producing the deſign'd Effect on Mr. " Cook, that he not only ſeem'd to be animated " with Courage from the Reflection he might " make upon that Object, but the People every " where expreſs'd their Abhorrence of ſuch " Uſage." He is doubtleſs bely'd in the Hiſtory of England, where the candid Author tell us, he cou'd not conceal the Laſhes of a troubled Conſcience for this particular Crime, when he was in the height of Preferment: For if that Conſcience had ever been troubled, it wou'd have been moſt viſible in the laſt Moments of his Life, when the vileſt Hypocrite can no longer diſſemble; inſtead of which, the ſame Excellent Author aſſures us, he began his Speech upon the Ladder in theſe Words: The moſt glorious Sight that ever was ſeen in the World was our Lord Jeſus upon the Croſs, and the moſt Glorious next to that, is to ſee a poor Creature ſuffer for him in his Cauſe. He has theſe Words in his Prayer, I believe an Army of Martyrs wou'd willingly come from Heaven to ſuffer in ſuch a Cauſe as this I come here to ſuffer for. He declar'd, " He had us'd the utmoſt of " his Endeavours that the Practice of the Law " might be regulated, and that the Publick Juſtice might be adminiſter'd with as much Ex- Mr. Cook and Mr. Peters quarter'd.

A. D. 1660 " pedition and as little Expence as poſſible; and " that he ſuffer'd a more than ordinary Perſe- " cution from thoſe of his own Profeſſion on that " Account. He ſaid, he underſtood not the " Meaning of the Court, when they affirm'd, " That if the Lords and Commons had brought " the King to the Bar, it had been Treaſon." It was Sir Orlando Bridgman who ſaid it, and conſequently that all the Members of the moſt Honourable Houſe of Peers, and all the Members of the Honourable Houſe of Commons, were liable to be hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd for bringing a King to Trial. He may not be Try'd, but he may have Articles of Miſ-government brought in againſt him. He may not be Beheaded, but he may be Abdicated, as King James the Second, the beheaded King's Son was. That Sir Orlando wou'd have given in upon Oath, if he had been then living, as all the Judges have done ever ſince the Revolution, in renouncing and abjuring King James and the Pretender. Mr. Cook proceeded, As to the Part I had in the Action with which I was charg'd, I am ſo far from repeating what I have done (mind the Laſhes of his Conſcience) that I am ready to ſeal it with my Blood. Here one of the Sheriffs, Boulton or Peake, rudely interrupting him, he reply'd, It has not been the Cuſtom in the moſt barbarous Nations, much leſs in England, to inſult over a dying Man; adding, I think I am the Firſt who ever ſuffer'd Death for demanding Juſtice. As ſoon as Mr. Cook was cut down, and brought to be quarter'd, one Col. Turner call'd to the Sheriffs Men to bring Mr. Peters to ſee what was doing; which being done, the Hangman came to him, and rubbing his bloody Hands together, ask'd him, How he lik'd it? Mr. Peters reply'd, I am not terrify'd, and you may do your worſt. Mr. Echard tells us, That during theſe Executions, the King and Miniſtry were uſing all ſoftning Methods. When Mr. Peters was on the Ladder, he ſaid to the Sheriff, Sir, You have butcher'd one of the Servants of God before my Eyes, you have forc'd me to ſee it, in order to terrify and diſcourage me, but the Lord has permitted it for my Support and Encouragement. Echard avers he was drunk, and that Mr. Cook ſaid, He was not fit to die. Sure I am, that Men who are capable of abuſing, belying, and inſulting Perſons, otherwiſe than as King's Judges, of ſingular Virtue and Eminence, in the laſt Moments of Life, are not fit to live. Major General Harriſon and Mr. Carew are alſo ſaid by him to have made themſelves drunk with Cordials and ſtrong Liquors. There never liv'd Men of more Temperance than Mr. Harriſon and Mr. Carew; and as to their Religion, it has been obſerv'd elſewhere, that they are cenſur'd rather for having too much than too little. Mr. Cook's Head was plac'd upon Weſtminſter-Hall, and that of Mr. Peters's upon London Bridge.

On the 16th of October, Mr. Thomas Scot, and Mr. Gregory Clement were drawn in one Sledge, and Col. Adrian Scroop, and Col. John Jones in another, to Charing Croſs, in order to ſuffer Death as the reſt had done. Mr. Scot had ſurrender'd himſelf within the Time limited by the Proclamation, however he far'd not the better for it. He behav'd at the Place of Execution with the greateſt Chearfulneſs and Satisfaction of Mind; he attempted ſeveral Times to ſpeak, and none of his Judges cou'd ſpeak better; but, ſays Ludlow, Thoſe who fear'd nothing ſo much as Truth, interrupted him ſo often, that he found himſelf oblig'd to ſay, It ſurely muſt be a very bad Cauſe which cannot ſuffer the Words of a dying Man. He declar'd, He cou'd not repent of what he had done as to the King's Trial, but did repent of his asking the Benefit of the King's Proclamation. Mr. Clement ſaid, Nothing troubled him ſo much as his pleading Guilty, which he did to ſatisfy the Importunity of Friends; and by doing of it, had render'd himſelf unworthy to die in ſo glorious a Cauſe. Col. Scrope's Speech was to this Purpoſe. Though I have been accuſtom'd to be ſeen in better Places, and other kind of Circumſtances, yet it being the Will of God I ſhould be brought into this Condition, I ſubmit chearfully; I never entertain'd Malice againſt any Man, and I now wiſh no Ill either to the Jury who found me Guilty, or to the Judges who pronounc'd Sentence, or even to the Perſon by whoſe Means I am brought to this Place, who I preſume is ſo well known that it is not neceſſary to name him, Browne, the Mayor Elect, whom Ludlow calls the Renagado Woodmonger. I ſhall not boaſt of my * Birth or Education, or the private Conduct of my Life, becauſe I am going to appear before a Tribunal where all Men muſt come, and where the Juſtice or Injuſtice of every Action will be manifeſt. I deſire the People in the mean Time not to think uncharitably of me, for I am firmly perſuaded I ſuffer for the Cauſe of God and my Country. Col. Jones going into the Sledge, ſaid, It is like Elijah's fiery Chariot, only it goes through Fleet-ſtreet; and being dragg'd along in it to Charing Croſs with Col. Scrope, Mr. Ludlow ſays, " The Gravity and " graceful Meen of theſe aged Gentlemen, ac- " company'd with viſible Marks of Fortitude " and internal Satisfaction, ſurpris'd the Specta- " tors with Admiration and Compaſſion.

A. D. 1660

* He deſcended from the Lord Scrope of Bolton.

That this dreadful Spectacle might ſpread another Length of the Town, Col. Hacker and Col. Axtel were drawn from Newgate to Tyburn, and there hang'd, imbowell'd and quarter'd. Col. Hacker read a Paper at his Execution, wherein he ſaid, I thank the Lord I have nothing lies upon my Conſcience as Guilt, whereof I am now condemn'd, and do not doubt to have the Sentence revers'd. Echard, who writes of all this with much Jollity, ſays as a Joke, Axtel very charitably wiſh'd, That his Blood might not cry to the third and fourth Generation. Colonel Axtel did indeed ſay, If I had a thouſand Lives I cou'd lay them all down for this Cauſe, tho' they had nothing againſt me, neither by God's Law nor their own Law, to condemn me; wherefore my Death is meerly Murther, and they might as well have done it at the Tower, as have brought me hither to make this Buſtle.

Col. Hacker and Col. Axtell hang'd and quarter'd.

From the Beginning of thoſe Tragedies to the End, the Reverend Author laſt mention'd, and the Reverend Author of the Compleat Hiſtory, have not one Sentiment of Compaſſion; nay, the laſt Reverend Author, mentioning the Trials and Speeches at large of theſe Sufferers, printed after their Deaths, does not ſtick to ſay, Some of their ſurviving Friends were ſo very inſolent, that they publiſh'd their Pleadings, Prayers and Speeches to all the Advantage that the Spirit of Hell cou'd invent. And the other Reverend Hiſtorian ſays of their Prayers and Dying Speeches, Such were the prodigious Effects of Enthuſiaſm, Poſſeſſion, as if the Devil was in them, or ſomething that wants a Name which is ſufficient to raiſe Horror in good Men, and Infidelity in bad." 'Tis there he alſo tells us, that it was the Effect of Drunkenneſs as well as Poſſeſſion, and in the ſame charitable Diſpoſition affirms, Mr. Peters the Miniſter had a Whore with him.

Neither of theſe Hiſtorians had Sobriety enough to obſerve that theſe repeated Executions one Day after another, were a wretched Effect of the Want of good Policy as well as good Nature in thoſe who then had the Adminiſtration

A. D. 1660 of Affairs. Biſhop Burnet lets us into the Truth of the Matter, where he writes thus, " In one " Thing the Temper of the Nation appear'd to " be contrary to ſevere Proceedings; for tho' the " Regicides were at that Time odious beyond " all Expreſſion, and the Trials and Executions " of the firſt were run to by vaſt Crouds, and " all People ſeem'd pleas'd with the Sight, yet " the Odioufneſs of the Crime grew at laſt to be " ſo much flatten'd by the frequent Executions, " and moſt of thoſe who ſuffer'd dying with " much Firmneſs and Shew of Piety, juſtifying " all they had done, not without a ſeeming Joy " for their Suffering on that Account, that the " King was adviſ'd not to proceed any farther, " at leaſt not to have the Scene ſo near the " Court as Charing-Croſs." I have often been oblig'd in this Work to take Notice of the Want of Senſe as well as Temper in the Miniſters of the former Reign as well as this. They ſeem to be guided wholly by Fury and falſe Zeal. Their Rage againſt Major General Harriſon was ſuch, that without thinking that the Man was intrepid and firmly principled in the Cauſe he had engag'd in, that he deſpis'd the Power they were got into, and made a Merit of his Sufferings, they, without Thought or Patience, wou'd needs begin with him, " The ill Effect of which, " ſays Biſhop Burnet, ſoon appear'd, for he was " a Man of great Heat and Reſolution, fix'd in " his Principles, and ſo perſuaded of them, that " he had never look'd after any Intereſts of his " own, but had oppos'd Cromwel when he ſet " up for himſelf. He went thro' all the Indig- " nities and Severities of his Execution, in which " the Letter of the Law in Caſes of Treaſon, " was punctually obſerv'd with a Calmneſs, or " rather a Chearfulneſs that aſtoniſh'd the Spe- " ctators. He ſpoke very poſitively, that what " they had done was the Cauſe and Work of " God, which he was confident God wou'd own " and raiſe up again, how much ſoever it ſuf- " fer'd at that Time.

Harry Marten did not ſuffer, and the Biſhop informs us that his Life was ſpar'd out of Complacency to his Vices, which were pretty near of a Size with thoſe of the Court.

After Echard has ſeen all theſe Sufferers ript up and mangled, he performs the laſt Office, and kills them in their Characters.

p. 165. King's Judges abus'd by Echard.

Thomas Harriſon, ſays he, was a Butcher's Son, ſo was Thomas Wolſey, Archbiſhop of York and Cardinal. A long Anceſtry of Gentlemen gives no Man a Right to inſult another for the want of it; but for a Perſon to do it who is no otherwiſe a Gentleman than as he is enroll'd in a Profeſſion or Faculty, is equally prepoſterous and ridiculous. Harriſon turn'd a Fifth-Monarchy Man, and was re-baptiz'd to pleaſe the Anabaptiſts.

Cook was a Man of mean Birth and inconſiderable Fortune. Ludlow ſays, Mr. John Cook in his younger Years had ſeen the beſt Part of Europe; and at Rome had ſpoken with ſuch Liberty and Ability againſt the Corruption of that Court and Church, that great Endeavours were us'd there to bring him into that Intereſt; wherefore he departed to Geneva, and reſided ſome Months in the Houſe of Signior Gio. Diodati, Miniſter of the Italian Church. Fair Proof of his being a Man of mean Birth and inconſiderable Fortune. Hugh Peters was whip'd out of Cambridge. Ludlow, Mr. Peters had been a Miniſter in England for many Years, till he was forc'd to leave his Native Country by the Perſecution ſet on Foot in the Time of Archbiſhop Laud.

Thomas Scot was born of obſcure Parents in Buckinghamſhire, by whom, according to Ludlow, he was ſent firſt to Weſtminſter School, and then to Cambridge. He liv'd privately in the Country till he was choſen a Member of Parliament. A. D. 1660

Gregory Clement was firſt a Merchant and broke: He then forc'd himſelf into the Parliament Houſe. Ludlow, Mr. Gregory Clement was a Citizen and Merchant of London, who by trading with Spain had rais'd a very conſiderable Eſtate.

Mr. John Jones, a Man of a mean Family in Wales, Servant to Sir Thomas Middleton. Ludlow, Col. John Jones was a Gentleman of a competent Eſtate in North-Wales.

Col. Hacker was a Soldier of Fortune. Ludlow, Col. Hacker was a Gentleman of a conſiderable Eſtate, deriv'd to him from his Anceſtors in Leiceſterſhire.

Whatever has been ſaid of the King's Judges, their Trials and Executions, is not intended to render them the leſs criminal in the Reader's Opinion. If I had been living and one of the Jury, I wou'd have given Judgment againſt them, and ſhou'd have pronounc'd it, had it been my Office, tho' not with ſo much Pleaſure, yet with as much Conviction of the Juſtice of the Sentence as Sir Orlando Bridgman did. The Intention is only to ſhew the Temper and Turn of Mind of the Court and Miniſtry after the Reſtoration, what Work was done, and what Tools they work'd with, that the Reader may make his Uſe of it when he finds them buſying themſelves about Matters of Religion, which have the next Place in the Archdeacon's Hiſtory.

State of Religion.

Tho' we have ſufficiently prov'd the Falſhood and Ingratitude of thoſe who deny the Presbyterians to have had the Honour of the Reſtoration, yet in further Confirmation of it, we ſhall repeat what Mr. Richard Baxter, one of the King's Chaplains, ſaid of it.

Presbyterians reſtore the King.

" What the Presbyterians did to preſerve and " reſtore the King, is a Thing that we need not " go to any Corners or Cabinets to prove. The " Votes for Agreement upon the King's Conceſ- " ſions in the Iſle of Wight prove it. The Eje- " ction and Impriſonment of moſt of the Houſe " of Commons, and all the Houſe of Lords, " prove it. The Death of Mr. Love, with the " Flight of other London Miniſters, prove it. " The Wars in Scotland, and their Conqueſt by " Cromwel, prove it. The Riſing of Sir George " Booth, and his Army's Overthrow, prove it. " The Surprize of Dublin Caſtle by Colonel " Bridges and others in Ireland, prove it. The " Gratulations of General Monk in England, " the Concurrence of the Londoners, and the " Miniſters there, prove it. The actual Prepa- " rations of the reſtor'd Members of the Long " Parliament, and the Conſent of the Council of " State, prove it. The Calling in of the King " by the next Parliament without one contradict- " ing Voice, and finally the Lords and Gentle- " men of the King's own Party addreſſing them- " ſelves to the Parliamentarians, and the King's " grateful Acknowledgments in his Letters, and " his Speeches in Parliament, do all put this " Matter out of Queſtion.

We are going to ſee how he rewarded them for it, even after his ſolemn Promiſe in his Declaration at Breda, That no body ſhou'd be diſturb'd on account of Conſcience, and even after a ſecond Declaration he publiſh'd in England in October, which was drawn by the Lord Chancellor Hyde, and for its Eloquence and Reaſon may match with the beſt of his Performances.

Before the King was reſtor'd, Mr. Baxter and Dr. Manton had a Meeting with Dr. Gauden and Dr. Bernard, to diſcourſe of an Agreement between the Presbyterian and Epiſcopal Party; but tho' both Sides expreſs'd a Deſire for Concord,

A.D.1660 cord, yet neither that Meeting, nor another with Dr. Morley, came to any thing.

Biſhops reſtor'd. In the mean time the Biſhops who were living were reſtor'd to their Sees; as Dr. William Juxon to the See of London, Dr. William Pierce to that of Bath and Wells, Dr. Robert Skinner to that of Oxford, Dr. John Warner to that of Rocheſter, Dr. William Roberts to that of Bangor, Dr. Matthew Wren to that of Ely, Dr. Bryan Duppa to that of Salisbury, Dr. Henry King to that of Chicheſter, Dr. Accepted Frewen to that of Coventry and Litchfield: And the following Doctors were made Biſhops; as Dr. John Coſens Biſhop of Durham, Dr. William Lucy Biſhop of St. David's, Dr. Benjamin Laney Biſhop of Peterborough, Dr. Richard Stern Biſhop of Carliſle, Dr. Bryan Walton Biſhop of Cheſter, Dr. Hugh Lloyd Biſhop of Landaff, Dr. John Gauden Biſhop of Exeter, Dr. George Griffith Biſhop of St. Aſaph, Dr. Gilbert Ironſide Biſhop of Briſtol, Dr. William Nicholſon Biſhop of Glouceſter, Dr. Robert Sanderſon Biſhop of Lincoln, Dr. George Morley Biſhop of Worceſter, Dr. Iſaac Barrow Biſhop of Man.

Dr. Reynolds, a Presbyterian, was offer'd the Biſhoprick of Norwich, and he afterwards accepted of it. Mr. Baxter was offer'd that of Hereford; Mr. Calamy the Biſhoprick of Coventry and Litchfield, on the Tranſlation of Dr. Frewen to the Archbiſhoprick of York. Dr. Manton was offer'd the Deanery of Rocheſter, Dr. Bates the Deanery of Coventry and Litchfield, Mr. Bowles the Deanery of York; but all refus'd on account of the uncertain Continuance of the Terms of the ſecond Declaration.

Presbyterians King's Chaplains. Several Presbyterian Divines were made King's Chaplains; as Dr. Reynolds, Dr. Manton, Dr. Bates, Dr. Spurſtow, Dr. Wallis, Mr. Calamy, Mr. Aſh, Mr. Caſe, Mr. Baxter, Mr. Woodbridge. Mr. Newcomen refus'd it; and none of the above Miniſters were call'd to preach at Court but Mr. Calamy, Dr. Reynolds, Mr. Baxter, and Dr. Spurſtow, each of them once.

The Earl of Mancheſter introduc'd Mr. Baxter, Mr. Aſh, Dr. Reynolds, and all the Presbyterian Miniſters who were King's Chaplains to his Majeſty, who was with the Lord Chancellor and the Earl of St. Alban's in the Lord Chamberlain Mancheſter's Lodgings. They congratulated his Majeſty on his Reſtoration, and then the Miniſters ſpoke to the King of a Union among his Proteſtant Subjects. His Majeſty bad them draw up ſuch Propoſals as they thought fit, telling them that he was glad they enclin'd to an Agreement, and that he reſolv'd to do his Part to bring them together. Accordingly they did it in Conjunction with Dr. Worth, afterwards a Biſhop in Ireland, Dr. Fulkwood, afterwards Archdeacon of Totneſs, Mr. Matthew Newcomen, &c. Theſe Divines, becauſe they wou'd give as little Occaſion of Exception as poſſible, reduc'd all their Requeſts to Archbiſhop Uſher's Reduction of Epiſcopacy, which they deliver'd to the King with an humble Addreſs concerning Preaching, the Obſervation of the Lord's Day, Ceremonies, &c. They were promis'd a Meeting of Epiſcopal Divines before the King when their Propoſals were ready, but none of them came; and inſtead of a Meeting, the Presbyterian Miniſters receiv'd a Paper full of bitter Oppoſitions by way of Confutation of their Propoſals.

The Biſhops, in their Anſwer to the Presbyterians Propoſals, have ſome extraordinary Things worth repeating, as Biſhops Plea. " We believe Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy to be " for the main, the true, antient, primitive Epiſ- " copacy; " that is, the antient Apoſtolical Biſhops had Courts Prerogatives, Chancellors, Commiſſaries, Officials, Proctors, Paritors, Powers under their Pagan Princes. A.D.1660

" We cannot grant that the Extent of any " Dioceſs," ſuch as Lincoln, conſiſting of Lincoln County, 630 Pariſhes, Leiceſter 200, Bedford 124, Buckingham 185, Huntington 120, Hertfordſhire in Part 41, in all 1300 Pariſhes, " is ſo great, but that the Biſhop may well per- " form that, wherein the proper Office and Du- " ty of a Biſhop doth conſiſt."

They do acknowledge that Miniſters are not deny'd the Uſe and Exerciſe of their Gifts before and after the Sermon.

They do believe that the laying aſide of the Common-Prayer, was one of the great Cauſes of our ſad Diviſions. The Presbyterian Divines made a Replication, and ſome very learned godly Men amongſt them ſaid, It is a vain Attempt to endeavour a Reconciliation with ſuch Men; their Minds are exaſperated, and they are reſolv'd to monopolize the Favour of our Prince, and all Honours and Preferments to themſelves. There's no Hope they will do any thing for the promoting of ſtrict ſerious Godlineſs, or any thing that deſerves the Name of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline. They undoubtedly do but draw us on, partly to ſpin out the time, till they are ready to perſecute us without any Danger to themſelves, and partly to ſet us together by the Ears, and otherwiſe abuſe us, by drawing us to grant them that which they know our Brethren cannot grant.

Presbyterian Anſwer.

Shortly after this, inſtead of the Dioceſan's Conceſſions, the Miniſters were told, his Majeſty wou'd put all that he thought fit to grant into the Form of a Declaration, wherein the King repeated the Promiſe of Liberty of Conſcience, which he made at Breda; and that no Man ſhou'd be diſquieted, or call'd in Queſtion for Differences of Opinion in Matters of Religion. This was in October, about two Years before 2 or 3000 Presbyterian Miniſters were turn'd out of their Livings, and 2 or 300,000 Families were diſquieted by an Act of this very King's. This Declaration was read by the Lord Chancellor Hyde, at the Earl of Mancheſter's Houſe, in Preſence of his Majeſty, King Charles II. Duke of Albemarle, Duke of Ormond, Dr. Sheldon Biſhop of London, Dr. Morley Biſhop of Worceſter, Dr. Henchman Biſhop of Salisbury, Dr. Coſens Biſhop of Durham, Dr. Hacket, Dr. Barwick, Dr. Gunning, Earl of Angleſey, Earl of Mancheſter, Lord Hollis, Dr. Reynolds, Dr. Spurſtow, Dr. Wallis, Mr. Calamy, Mr. Aſh, Mr. Baxter. After the Declaration was read, there was much Diſcourſe about ſeveral Parts of it; Biſhop Morley ſeeming to charge Mr. Baxter as if he had contradicted what he had written in his five Diſputations of Church Government, Mr. Baxter told him, He had beſt Reaſon to know what he had written, that he was ſtill of the ſame Mind, that he ſtood to it all, and ſpoke nothing againſt it. A great many Words paſs'd about Prelacy and Re-ordination. Dr. Gunning and Biſhop Morley ſpoke almoſt all on one Side, and Dr. Henchman and Dr. Coſens ſometimes. Mr. Calamy and Mr. Baxter ſpoke moſt on the other Side. Mr. Calamy anſwer'd Dr. Gunning from Scripture, againſt the divine Rights of Prelacy, as a diſtinct Order; and when Dr. Gunning told them Dr. Hammond had ſaid enough againſt the Presbyterians Cauſe, and Ordinations, and was yet unanſwer'd, Mr. Baxter reply'd, I have anſwer'd the Subſtance of his Arguments, and ſaid enough againſt the Dioceſſan Frame of Government, and to prove the Validity of the Engliſh Presbyters Ordination, which indeed is unanſwer'd, tho' I am very deſirous to ſee an Anſwer to it.

King's Declaration in Favour of them.

The

A.D.1660 The Earl of Clarendon produc'd a Paper, being a ſort of Petition from the Independants and Baptiſts: in behalf of themſelves, for whom this Clauſe was added to the Declaration. Others ſhall be permitted to meet for religious Worſhip, ſo be it they do it not to the Diſturbance of the Peace, and no Juſtice of the Peace or Officer ſhou'd diſturb them; which when the Earl had read, he deſir'd them all to think on it, and give their Advice; but all were ſilent. The Presbyterians perceiv'd as ſoon as they heard it, that 'twas intended to tolerate Popery, and Dr. Wallis whiſper'd Mr. Baxter in the Ear, that he ſhou'd ſay nothing, 'tis an odious Buſineſs, let the Biſhops ſpeak to it. But the Biſhops wou'd not ſay a Word, nor wou'd any one of the Presbyterians ſpeak to it. At length Mr. Baxter fearing their Silence wou'd be miſinterpreted, ſpoke to this Purpoſe; Dr. Gunning, a little before, ſpeaking againſt Sects, nam'd Papiſts and Socinians. For our Parts, we do not deſire Favour for ourſelves alone, and rigorous Severity againſt none; but as we humbly thank his Majeſty for his declar'd Indulgence TO OUR SELVES, ſo we diſtinguiſh the Tolerable from the Intolerable; for the former we humbly crave juſt Lenity, but for the latter, ſuch as the two ſorts mention'd; for our Parts we cou'd not make their Toleration our Requeſt. The King reply'd, There are Laws ſufficient againſt Papiſts. Mr. Baxter anſwer'd, We underſtand the Queſtion to be, whether thoſe Laws will be executed or not, ſo that Matter drop'd. Several Alterations were made, and the Earl of Angleſey, the Lord Hollis, Biſhop Morley, Biſhop Henchman, Dr. Reignolds, and Mr. Calamy were appointed to determine any Diſpute that might ariſe about Words in the Declaration. Accordingly the Declaration came out ſo amended, with ſuch a paſtoral perſuaſive Power of Governing left to the Miniſters, with the Rural Deans, as that it was fitted to be an Inſtrument of Concord and Peace, if ſettled by a Law; and ſo, continues Dr. Calamy, the Diviſion might have been heal'd upon the Alteration of the Liturgy, as the Declaration promis'd, with other Matters.

King's Declaration about Religion.

The Preamble to this Declaration is worth reading: "When we were in Holland we were "attended by many grave and learned Miniſters "from hence, who were look'd upon as the moſt "able and principal Aſſertors of Presbyterian "Opinions, with whom we had as much Con"ference as the multitude of Affairs wou'd per"mit us to have; and to our great Satisfaction "and Comfort, found them Perſons full of Af"fection to us, of Zeal for the Peace of Church "and State, and neither Enemies, as they have "been given out to be, of Epiſcopacy or Li"turgy, but modeſtly to deſire ſuch Alterations "in either, as without ſhaking Foundations "might allay the preſent Diſtempers." Echard cries out againſt this Declaration as over-ſtrain'd, not only to over-rule the Canons (the Lord help them! What ſignify the Canons to the Peace of Church and State?) and diſable the Diſcipline of the Church, but likewiſe to lie hard upon the Conſtitution, by diſpenſing with the Statutes. What Strength there is in what he ſays! If thoſe Statutes, or any Statutes, tended to the Diſturbance of Church or State, they ſhou'd have been repeal'd rather than diſpens'd with; but theſe were Times that requir'd irregular Methods. The Reaſon and Temper of this irregular Declaration, as he terms it, are equally conſpicuous, and oblige him, notwithſtanding what he has ſaid, and what he wou'd have ſaid againſt it, to recommend it as an excellent Pattern of Wiſdom and Goodneſs. Had it been as ſincere as it was wiſe and good, the Happineſs of the Times wou'd have deſerv'd another Sort of Panegyriſt than that Hiſtorian. The Subſtance of it was, "That A.D.1660 "the King reſolv'd to promote the Power of God"lineſs, to encourage the Exerciſe of Religion, "take Care that the Lord's Day ſhou'd be applied "to holy Exerciſes, without unneceſſary Diver"tiſements, ſuch as the Book of Sports had en"joyn'd; that inſufficient, negligent, and ſcan"dalous Miniſters ſhou'd not be permitted in the "Church; that no Biſhop ſhou'd ordain or ex"erciſe any Part of Juriſdiction without the Ad"vice and Aſſiſtance of the Presbyters, and nei"ther do nor impoſe any thing but what is ac"cording to the known Laws of the Land: That "Chancellors, Commiſſaries, and Officials be ex"cluded from Acts of Juriſdiction." Here King Charles and the Earl of Clarendon declar'd themſelves againſt Spiritual Courts, ſo juſtly odious to the Engliſh Nation, and of no other Uſe than to feed the Malice and Revenge of paſſionate, inſolent Prieſts, or the ſplenetick, litigious Humour of revengeful, malicious Layicks, and pamper a parcel of ravenous, vitious Advocates and Proctors.

"That the Power of the Paſtors in the ſeve"veral Congregations ſhou'd be reſtor'd, and a "Liberty granted to all Miniſters to aſſemble "Monthly for the Exerciſe of the paſtoral per"ſuaſive Power to the promoting of Knowledge "and Godlineſs in their Flocks.

No mention here of our Archdeacon or his Viſitation, which, whether to the promoting of Knowledge and Godlineſs, I refer to our Dignitary himſelf.

"That the Miniſters ſhou'd be freed from the "Subſcriptions requir'd by the Canons, and the "Oath of Canonical Obedience, and receive "Ordination, Inſtitution, and Induction, and ex"erciſe their Function, and enjoy the Profits of "their Livings without being oblig'd to it: And "that the Uſe of Ceremonies ſhou'd be diſ"pens'd with where they were ſcrupled." If this moſt Chriſtian Declaration had been purſu'd, all Nonconformity had been confounded: There wou'd have remain'd no Pretence for Scruple, and not to conform, wou'd have been a ſad Effect of Stupidity, as it is now of Miſtake.

The Lord Clarendon, who drew up this healing Declaration, told the Parliament a very few Months after, That the Clergy ſtill repeated their old Errors, and were not effectually ſubdu'd. Inſtead of a Conference, 'tis turn'd about to a Conqueſt; inſtead of Comprehenſion, 'tis now Perſecution. The Truth is, King Charles never intended to relieve the Diſſenters; and it is more than probable that the Earl of Clarendon drew up the above-mention'd Declaration and the Act of Uniformity at one and the ſame time, or within a few Days odds, though they differ one from the other as much as Reward and Puniſhment.

Some of the above-mention'd Biſhops, as Morley, Henchman, and Coſens, being but Elects, tho' not Conſecrated, the Presbyterian Miniſters call'd them my Lords; which Dr. Morley once return'd thus upon Dr. Reignolds, Mr. Calamy, and Mr. Baxter, We may call you alſo I ſuppoſe by the ſame Title, meaning the Biſhopricks to which thoſe three Miniſters were nominated. Theſe Divines had frequent Diſcourſe together on that Subject. They all thought a Biſhoprick might be accepted according to the Deſcription of the Declaration, without any violation of the Covenant, or owning the antient Prelacy. But all the Doubt was, whether this Declaration wou'd be made a Law, as was then expected, or whether it were but a temporary Means to draw them in to all the Dioceſans deſir'd. Mr. Baxter, after much Conſideration and Conſultation, refus'd to

A.D.1660 accept a Biſhoprick, and gave his Reaſons in a Letter to the Lord Chancellor Hyde. Dr. Reignolds accepted it a little in haſte, as it was thought, ſaying, A Friend had taken out the Congé d'Elire for him without his Knowledge.

The London Miniſters were divided in their Sentiments concerning the Declaration; ſome thought it to be a Breach of the Covenant they had taken againſt any Sort of Prelacy, others, that it was reduc'd in the Declaration ſo far, as not to be within the Obligation of that Oath againſt the old Epiſcopacy. The latter drew an Addreſs of Thanks to the King, and preſented it November the 16th: 'Twas ſign'd by Dr. Jacomb, Dr. Bates, Dr. Meriton, Mr. Caſe, Mr. Clark, Mr. Gouge, Mr. Rawlinſon, Mr. Sheffield, Mr. Sangar, Mr. Cooper, Mr. Whittaker, Mr. Lye, Mr. Jackſon, Mr. Pledger, Mr. Gibbon, Mr. Poole, &c. All this fair Proceeding was meer Grimace, and intended to blind the Presbyterians till the Army was disbanded, and the Prelatical Party cou'd throw off the Mask with Safety.

The King did not forbear ſhewing his Diſlike of his Presbyterian Company, and Mr. Caſe the Miniſter, who thought he had deſerv'd highly of the King by what he had done towards his Reſtoration, wou'd once have preſs'd with his uſual Freedom into his Preſence, and being deny'd Entrance, ſent in his Name. The King ſuffer'd him to be admitted in compliance with his Importunity; but by the Carriage of thoſe who were preſent, their deriding his Habit and uncourtly Addreſs, he might eaſily perceive he was not welcome at Whitehall. His Majeſty ask'd him, What he had to ſay? Mr. Caſe told him, He had a Word of Advice to offer concerning the Brethren of the Presbytery; but the King preſently interrupted him, ſaying, I do not remember I have made you one of my Council.

The Princeſs of Orange, Mother to King William III. paid her Brother King Charles a Viſit about the latter End of the Summer. Juſt before ſhe landed, her Brother Henry of Oatlands, Duke of Glouceſter, dy'd of the Small Pox. He was the moſt Virtuous of the three Brothers, and the moſt belov'd. It is ſaid he reconcil'd himſelf to the Church of Rome in France, and that the Papiſts had more Hopes of him than of the two other Princes, King Charles and the Duke of York, he being principled in their Religion, whereas thoſe Princes did not much trouble themſelves about Religious Principles. Echard affirms, he was an invincible Aſſertor of the Proteſtant Faith; which he cou'd not learn of his Mother, nor any about her. He adds, that to preſerve him from Temptation, his Siſter the Princeſs of Orange allow'd him half of her yearly Income; and conſidering ſhe allow'd ſomething too to her other Brothers, the King and the Duke, ſhe cou'd not have much left out of about 15,000 Pounds per Annum.

Duke of Glouceſter's Death.

He aſſures us he had all this from an unqueſtionable Hand, and I take on me to aſſure the Reader, that what I ſay of his being reconcil'd to the Church of Rome, I had from a Miniſter of State, a Man of known Wiſdom and Probity, who liv'd many Years abroad in France and Holland, and was in particular Favour with his Highneſs the Prince of Orange at the Hague.

Within a few Days after arriv'd the Queen Mother, and her Daughter the Princeſs Henrietta Maria, with Prince Edward, his late Majeſty King George the Firſt's Uncle. Whatever Buſineſs the Queen came to do, there's no doubt it was bad enough for the Intereſt of England and the Proteſtant Religion. Echard tells us, She propos'd a Match between the King and the Lady Hortenſea Mancini, Cardinal Mazarine's Neece, who was to have twenty Millions of Livres to her Portion, which is as credible as other Parts of his Hiſtory. She is the ſame Lady who afterwards liv'd and dy'd in England in a mean Condition, both as to Fortune and Character. A.D.1660 Dutcheſs of Mazarine.

Ludlow ſpeaks of this Viſit very differently from the Archdeacon. "Henrietta Maria of France, Widow to the late King Charles, who had been a principal Inſtrument to adviſe and encourage him in his illegal Actions, paſs'd over into England about this Time, and being arriv'd at London, the Houſe of Commons, in which were many Perſons who had been Members of that Parliament which had threaten'd to accuſe her of High Treaſon, not only congratulated her Return, but preſented her Daughter who had accompany'd her in her Journey with 10,000 Pounds. But notwithſtanding all the flattering Subſerviency they cou'd ſhew, and all that they cou'd do to procure themſelves to be thought fit for the Service of the Court, yet being not thoroughly principled to do the Work of the Church, they were acquainted when they met again in November, that they ſhou'd be diſſolv'd on the 24th of December; againſt which Time it was deſir'd that all Bills under Conſideration might be made ready. And leſt the People ſhou'd upon the Diſſolution of this Aſſembly form a Body of Men, and aſſert their Liberties, it was pretended that a great Plot to ſeize the King and the Tower, to kill the Queen, with all thoſe that ſhou'd be found of the French Nation, and to reſtore the Parliament, was carrying on throughout England." Under this Colour Major General Desborough, Major General Overton, Colonel Salmon, Colonel Duckenfield, Lieutenant Colonel Farley, Major Whitby, Major Anthony Morgan, were ſeiz'd and impriſon'd, though it was not poſſible for any Man of common Senſe to believe that theſe Gentlemen, who in the height of the Common-wealth Party were by no means the Men of Intereſt, ſhou'd now ſet themſelves up againſt the King, the Army, the Fleet, and the Kingdom, while every Head was yet hot with Joy for his Majeſty's Reſtoration. Queen Mother in England. A Plot.

During the Noiſe of this Conſpiracy, the Queen, accompany'd with her Daughter and Jermyn, return'd to France, the latter having been a particular Favourite of hers for many Years. Some believ'd ſhe was terrify'd by the Rumour of Deſigns againſt her Perſon; but, ſays Ludlow, "She who knew the Plot to be no more than a Fiction, had other real Grounds for her Departure. She had endeavour'd to perſuade her Son to remove the Chancellor Hyde from his Councils, and finding ſhe effected nothing by her continual Sollicitations, ſhe ſoon grew weary of England; where, though by the Importunity of the King, ſhe had at laſt admitted the new Dutcheſs of York into her Preſence, yet by applying herſelf to other Company, not deſiring her to ſit, and taking the firſt Opportunity to withdraw from the Room, ſhe abundantly ſhew'd that ſhe thought her not worthy to be treated as a Daughter. Theſe were the principal, if not the only Reaſons that mov'd the Queen to quit the Court of her Son, and to retire into her own Country; though to give a better Colour to her Departure, and to conceal theſe Domeſtick Diviſions, they made uſe of the Pretences before-mention'd.

In November, Lewis of Naſſau, Lord of Beverweart, Simon Van Hoorn, Michael Van Gogh, and Mr. de Ripperda, Ambaſſadors from the States General of the United Provinces, arriv'd at Dutch Ambaſſadors.

A.D.1660 London from Holland. They were receiv'd at the Tower by the Earl of Craven, having with him about twenty Coaches and ſix Horſes, who conducted them to Sir Abraham Williams, Maſter of the Ceremonies, where their Expences were defray'd; and they were treated in all Reſpects, as well at their Audience, as on other Occaſions, with the ſame Honours that are done to Ambaſſadors of Crown'd Heads. The King had as yet freſh in his Memory the Reſpect which had been ſhewn him in Holland, when he paſs'd through that Province in order to his Imbarkation near the Hague, where the States of Holland had been at the Expence of 250,000 Crowns for his Entertainment; and this was the firſt Time that the Ambaſſadors of the States General were treated as the Miniſters of Crown'd Heads.

King Charles's Match with Portugal.

The King of Portugal's Miniſter was early with his Maſter's Complements, and Propoſals of a Marriage between the King and the Infanta Katharine of Portugal, which the King of Spain's Miniſters endeavour'd to prevent: Nay, they went ſo far in it, as to offer two Millions Portion, if his Majeſty wou'd make Choice of any other Princeſs for a Wife, even though ſhe was a Proteſtant. Some ſay the Queen Mother's Errand to England was about this Match with Portugal, the French King engaging to pay 400,000 Pounds with her: Others tell us ſhe came over to treat with her Son about marrying her Daughter to Monſieur the French King's Brother; and others again ſay it was about the Sale of Dunkirk.

Beſides the Reſident of France, there were in the Court of England Monſieur D'Eſtrades, and Monſieur Courtin, Ambaſſadors Extraordinary from the French King; and from the King of Spain, the Prince de Ligny, and the Baron de Batteville, to congratulate his Britannick Majeſty on his Reſtoration, and promote their Maſters ſeveral and different Intereſts. The French, who had driven the Royal Family of England out of France, found Means to be prefer'd in King Charles's Friendſhip, though it was apparently for his and the Kingdoms Intereſt to have cultivated a Friendſhip with Spain. The Caſe was much alter'd ſince Cromwel's Treaty with Mazarine, who dy'd about this Time. France was in Peace at Home and Abroad, under a Prince of great Ambition and Genius. Spain was govern'd by a ſickly old King, without an Heir Male, and his Dominions were like to encreaſe the exorbitant Power of France, eſpecially on the Side of Flanders, which is the Barrier of England. By the Treaty Cromwel made with France, the Commerce of England had a Credit Balance of 5 or 600,000 Pounds a Year, by lowering the Duty on Woollen Manufactures from England; which Treaty King Charles rejected, becauſe 'twas made by an Uſurper; and, ſays Coke, He never after made any other inſtead of it, but left his Subjects to be us'd even as the French pleas'd in their Trade to France. They rais'd the Duties on our Woollen Goods ſo high, that it imply'd a Prohibition of them, and the Engliſh loſt above a Million a Year by the French Trade. And to render his Engagement with France ſtill more ruinous and ſhameful, he ſells Dunkirk for 400,000 Pounds, immediately after the Parliament had appropriated 60,000 Pounds of the Hereditary Exciſe for maintaining the Garriſon there. Half of the Money for Dunkirk went with the Princeſs Henrietta Maria to the Duke of Orleans in Marriage, and 'tis ſuppos'd the reſt was divided among the King and his Miniſters; at leaſt the People was ſo jealous of it, that the magnificent Palace which the Chancellor Hyde built afterwards, was from thence call'd Dunkirk-Houſe.

Ruinous Trade with France.

Sells Dunkirk.

Such were the Beginnings of King Charles's Adminiſtration, with reſpect both to Foreigners and his own Subjects; and it mends not during the whole Continuance of it. A.D.1660

Among other Ambaſſadors came Count Brahée from the King of Sweden, at whoſe Entry happen'd a very dangerous Conteſt and Fray between the Ambaſſadors of Spain and France for Precedence. 'Twas not by Accident, but a determin'd prepar'd Buſineſs. Both Spaniſh and French Ambaſſadors being to ſend their Coaches to meet Count Brahée, Ambaſſador from Sweden, on the Day of his Entry, the Ambaſſadors of Spain and France foreſeeing the Conteſt, each of them took ſuch Meaſures as he thought fit to procure the Advantage to his Side. The Baron de Batteville, Ambaſſador from Spain, ſent for ſome Soldiers from Flanders, and made ſure of ſeveral Engliſh. Inſtead of Traces, he caus'd Iron Chains of a moderate Thickneſs to be cover'd with Leather, that they might not be liable to be cut. The Count d'Eſtrades, the French Ambaſſador, had re-inforc'd his Equipage a little; but not expecting Things wou'd come to ſuch Extremities, he had not taken all the Precaution which might have protected him from the Violence of others. Spaniſh and French Miniſters quarrel.

The Duke of York having Information that a Diſpute was intended, caus'd a Troop of Horſe and three Companies of Foot to be drawn out on Tower-Hill, where the Coaches were to meet thoſe of the Swediſh Ambaſſador; but the Officers having no Orders to meddle in the Quarrel of the Ambaſſadors, all they cou'd do was to be Spectators of the Fight and Confuſion. Some of the French Ambaſſador's Coach-Horſes were kill'd, as well as two or three of his People. Some of the Spaniſh Ambaſſador's Train loſt alſo their Lives, but they carry'd the Day; for the Traces of D'Eſtrade's Coach being cut, it cou'd not move without Horſes. It was in Conſequence of this Diſorder, and of Count D'Eſtrade's Complaints upon it, that King Charles order'd that no Foreign Miniſters Coaches ſhou'd for the future attend at this kind of Ceremony. When the French King was inform'd of this Rencounter, he ſent Orders to the Count de Fuenſaldagne, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador at his Court, to leave Paris in twenty-four Hours, and order'd the Archbiſhop of Embrun, his Ambaſſador at Madrid, to require Satisfaction; which was given, by ordering all the Ambaſſadors of Spain not to be preſent at the Ceremonies at which thoſe of France aſſiſt.

I ſhou'd not have been ſo particular in any Account of this Scuffle, but that it is one of the moſt Military Actions in this Reign, Venner's Riſing, a Riſing or two in Scotland, and the two Dutch Wars excepted.

On the ſixth of November the Parliament met according to the former Adjournment. When the Diſbanding was debated, Mr. Prynne deſir'd the Houſe to be mindful not to do thoſe Things that might bring them together again, which brought him into Danger of a very rough Reprimand. Then Mr. Echard tells us of their Active Proceedings, as ſettling 1,200,000 Pounds per An. on his Majeſty, ordering the Bodies of Oliver Cromwel, John Bradſhaw, Henry Ireton, and Thomas Pride, to be taken out of their Graves and hang'd up at Tyburn. Do generous Enemies always do ſo by the Carcaſes of their Conquerors? They then attrainted ſome Perſons who were withdrawn out of the Kingdom, as John Liſle, Eſq; William Say, Eſq; Valentine Walton, Eſq; Col. Barkſtead, Commiſſary General Whalley, Daniel Blagrave, Eſq; Sir Michael Liveſay, Cornelius Holland, Eſq; William Cowley, Eſq; Thomas Challoner, Eſq; Miles Corbet, Eſq; Nicholas Parliament.

Mr. Prynne's Saying of the Army.

Abſent Perſons condemn'd.

A.D.1660 cholas Love, Eſq; Mr. Broughton, Mr. Dendy, Lieutenant General Ludlow, Col. Okey, Col. Goffe, Col. Dixwell, Col. Hewſon. They alſo impeach'd one Mr. William Drake, a Tradeſman of London, for writing a Book call'd The long Parliament reviv'd, and after a Seſſion of about ſeven Weeks they were diſſolv'd, December the 29th, the King having paſs'd ſeveral Bills, and heard a Speech from the Speaker of a good Length, ending thus, We muſt needs be a happy Parliament, a Reconciling and Peace-making Parliament, a Parliament propter Excellentiam, that may truly be call'd Parliamentiſſimum Parliamentum. The Speech which his Majeſty made on this Occaſion ought, ſays Echard, to be inſerted without any Abridgment; ſo I refer the Reader to his Hiſtory for it entire, and for Chancellor Hyde's in the next Page; of both which I ſhall only inſert a Paragraph or two. His Majeſty told them, "I pray let us reſolve that this be for ever "call'd the Healing, the Bleſſed Parliament; and Chancellor Hyde told them, A Party of the late disbanded Officers and Soldiers, and others, full of Diſcontent and ſeditious Purpoſes, had reſolv'd to attempt the Change of the preſent Government, and to erect a Common-wealth, in which Ludlow and other deſperate Perſons were concern'd. There does not in the whole Conduct of Ludlow's Life appear one Action, that only excepted wherein he with others became guilty of the King's Death, which does not argue a good Underſtanding, and as great Caution and Courage. It was not poſſible for ſo wiſe and intelligent a Man as he to engage with two or three Serjeants and Corporals, or with two or three broken Colonels and Captains, to overthrow the Government, and ſet up a Republick without Men, without Money, without Ships, without Arms, without Name and Intereſt; and this incredible Scandal taints the whole Speech ſo much, that I ſhall make uſe of no more of it. He was foiſted into it to prepare the Way for a Militia Act, and to render ſome ſevere Acts againſt the Presbyterians neceſſary, under Pretence of Danger.

Parliament diſſolv'd.

Plot.

On the Twenty-fourth of December dy'd the beloved Princeſs of Orange of the Small-Pox, and with much Labour and Patience we are at laſt come to the End of this Wonderful Year, as it is call'd by Echard; and we ſhall not part with it till we have remembred, as Mr. Archdeacon has done, the Beginning of the Royal Society, the chief Promoters of which were Dr. Wilkins, Dr. Wallis, Dr. Goddard, Dr. Bathurſt, Dr. Wren, Lord Brouncker, Mr. Boyle, Sir William Petty, and Mr. Rooke. But when he comes to give an Account of the Beaux Eſprits, the fine Wits of the Reſtoration Period, he omits telling us how Waller, Sprat, Dryden, South, had diſtinguiſh'd themſelves by ſuch Panegyricks upon Cromwel, that they out-did every thing which had till then been ſeen of Engliſh Poetry. Coke ſays, The Poets ſtrain'd their Wits to that Pitch to celebrate his Encomiums, that they cou'd never after arrive to it. Dr. Sprat, Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Dr. South, Canon of Chriſt-church, ſtrain'd higher than even Waller and Dryden in Praiſe of Oliver. To his Liſt of polite Writers might have been added Wilkins and Bates; and as to D'avenant and L'Eſtrange's refining and improving our Tongue, he ſhew'd his Knowledge in Language to be as imperfect as in Hiſtory. How came he to forget the immortal Milton, and the very witty Marvel? I ſuppoſe they were too Republican with him to have Politeneſs and Taſte. His Function might have led him to treat of the Manners of the Court, and then he might have told us, if he wou'd, what was the Refinement and Improvement there, as Coke does.

Beaux Eſprits.

"All ſorts of Men endeavour'd to imitate the "Luxury and Prodigality of the Court, which "ſcarce entertain'd any but upon theſe Terms. "To humour the King, the publick Theatres "were ſtuff'd with moſt obſcene Actions and "Interludes; and the more obſcene pleas'd the "King the better, who grac'd the Opening of "them with his Preſence at the firſt Notice of a "new Play." 'Twas obſerv'd and confeſs'd, that the Engliſh Gentlemen of the Cavalier Party in Cromwel's Time liv'd better under Sequeſtration, ſuch was the Sobriety and Modeſty then in Faſhion, than after they were put in full Poſſeſſion of their Eſtates, ſuch was the Luxury and Profuſion, ſuch the Lewdneſs and Extravagance that came in with the King!

What further Improvements and Refinements the Court made in Taſte and Manners, during all this Reign, will be ſeen in every Page of the Hiſtory.

We ſhall now look a little into the Affairs of Ireland and Scotland. The Earl of Orrery, ſoon after the Reſtoration, return'd to Ireland, to take Care of his Concerns there, where he underſtood a Petition was preparing by the Iriſh Papiſts to be preſented to the King for reſtoring their Eſtates. To prevent which a Counter Petition was drawn up by the Proteſtants, who choſe Deputies, of whom my Lord Orrery was chief, to appear for them at Court, as the Iriſh Papiſts had done, the Chief of whoſe Deputies was Sir Nicholas Plunket. The latter knowing the Lord Orrery to be their moſt zealous Opponent, tempted him with an Offer of 8000 Pounds down, and an Eſtate of 7000 Pounds per Annum, when their Matters were ſettled, if he wou'd be ſilent in the Buſineſs; but that not ſucceeding, a Day was appointed for a Hearing of both Sides before the King and Council. Sir Nicholas Plunket, as for the Petitioners, was order'd to be heard firſt, and he took a great deal of Pains to ſet forth the Loyalty and Sufferings of the Iriſh Catholicks under the late Uſurpers, what Loſſes they had met with by their Tranſplantation, humbly praying Relief as to their Eſtates, Liberties, &c. My Lord Orrery anſwer'd Plunket, and having congratulated his Majeſty on his Reſtoration, in the Name of all the Proteſtants in Ireland, he enlarg'd upon the Merit of their late Services, they being the firſt of all his Majeſty's Subjects who declar'd for him effectually, and invited him into his Kingdom; on which Account they might hope for as much Favour as any other, and more than thoſe who were declar'd Enemies to his late Majeſty, and to be proſecuted with Fire and Sword. Here the King was pleas'd to bear Witneſs to what Lord Orrery had ſaid of the early Appearance of the Proteſtants in Ireland for him, owning that the Earl of Orrery, in the Name, and by Commiſſion of his Proteſtant Subjects in Ireland, was the firſt of all his Subjects who invited him to that Kingdom. I obſerve, as well in Manuſcript Hiſtory as the Common Hiſtories, that every one is every where putting in for the Merit of the Reſtoration, for no other Reaſon certainly but that they may have the Reward, and the Author of the Manuſcript Memoirs of the Lord Orrery does labour this Matter in a particular Manner. His Lordſhip then repreſented to the Board, that the Engliſh in Ireland had only fought in Defence of their Lives, Eſtates, Religion and Liberties, againſt thoſe who, contrary to Law, Conſcience and Right, wou'd have diſpoil'd them of all. That the Iriſh Papiſts, after the Ceſſation of Arms, had ſent no Aſſiſtance to the late King, as they had promis'd to do, and wou'd have cut off the Marquis of Ormond, his Majeſty's Lord Lieutenant at Kilkenny, which Lord
